After the war Mr. Dickinson returned to his home in Ohio, and in 1865 he went to Leavenworth, Kansas, where he was in the employ of the Government. While thus employed he made three trips to Montana, the first one being in the spring of 1865. May 31, 1869, he started up the Missouri on the steamer Sully, to settle in Montana. When they arrived at Fort Peck they ran into low water and the boat could go no further. Some of the passengers proceeded on foot, while some remained at the Fort until teams could be procured from Fort Benton, 500 miles above,—Mr. Dickinson being with the latter. At this time the Indians were hostile and kept in the vicinity of the fort, so that when the men left the fort they did it at the risk of their lives. September 13, Mr. Dickinson decided to start before daylight, go some distance from the fort and kill some game. Accordingly, with his rifle, he started out at three o'clock in the morning. After spending the early part of the day in pursuit of game, he started back to the fort, but before he reached it he was attacked by four Indians on horseback, the result being that he killed one of the red men, drove the others away, and reached the fort with his face besmeared with blood, he having been shot in the cheek. Upon his arrival there he found the men and teams had come for the other passengers and freight. He told his story and a party at once started in pursuit of the Indians. They found the Indian he had killed and Mr. Dickinson took his scalp and gun, both of which he has to this day. Mr. Dickinson also kept the Indian pony and brought him along to Missoula. He arrived in the Bitter Root valley October 23, 1869.

In 1870 our subject opened the first photograph business in Missoula, and to him also belongs the distinction of having established the first photograph bnsiness in western Montana. In 1872 he was commissioned Postmaster of Missoula, his salary being $240 per year. He held this office through all the Republican administrations up to April, 1886, the business having grown until his salary was increased to $2,400 per year. Since then he has been engaged in the real estate and mining business. He has recently subdivided 160 acres of land near the city, and is selling the same for residence property.

Mr. Dickinson was married at Corvallis, November 5, 1871, to Miss Emma C. Slack, who was born in Baltimore, Maryland, December 4, 1838, daughter of Andrew and Mary (Ruff) Slack, of Scotch and German ancestry. They have had five children, one of whom died in infancy, and one, Lamar Fithian, in his fifth year. Those living are Harriet E., Laura E. and William O. Miss Harriet and Laura are students in the Montana University in Helena.

Politically Mr. Dickinson has been identified with the Republican party ever since it was organized. He is a worthy member of the G. A. R., T. G. M. of Montana of the I. O. O. F., and also of the A. F. & A. M., and of the A. O. U. W. The subject of this sketch taught the first school near where Hamilton, Montana, now stands (1869), and his wife, then Miss Slack, taught the first school in what is now the city of Missoula, Montana (1869), the same comprising ten students.

rendered an important decision, overruling prior decisions of the court on the same subject, and holding that appeals from the district court to the Supreme Court in cases arising under the laws of the United States must be taken and perfected according to the requirements of the civil practice act. (United States vs. McElroy, 2 Montana, 494.)

In the case of the Territory vs. Hildebrand, at the same term (2 Montana, 426), Knowles, J., rendered an important and controlling decision defining the practice in suits upon recognizances. (See also an instructive opinion by Knowles, J., in Territory vs. Corbett, 3 Montana, 50.)

On the 26th day of July, 1866, a little more than two years after the organization of Montana as a Territory, Congress passed an act declaring the mineral lands of the public domain free and open to exploration and occupation, subject to such regulations as might be prescribed by law, and subject also to the local rules and customs of miners in the several mining districts, so far as not in conflict with the laws of the United States.

Before the passage of this act of Congress, and before the public mineral lands had been opened to exploration and purchase, the first Legislative Assembly of Montana, on the 26th day of December, 1864, passed "an act relating to the discovery of gold and silver quartz leads, lodes or ledges, and of the manner of their location." This act was an outgrowth of the rules and regulations of the miners in the mining

FRANK E. CURTIS, of Butte City, Montana, was born at De Ruyter, New York, January 26, 1833. His parents moved to Fayetteville when he was yet a babe, where he lived until manhood, receiving his education at the public schools and academy. He then served an apprenticeship with David Graham, and learned the trade of carriage making. In 1855 he started for the West, stopping first at Kalamazoo, Michigan, from there went to Chicago, where he worked at his trade for one dollar a day, thence to St. Paul, Minnesota, and worked on a contract at making cutters and light sleighs until he had saved $200 (as he had not drawn his wages). When the firm failed and he lost all his wages, he started with a party for Pembina, on the Red river of the North, where he remained for two years, and then returned to St. Paul. In the spring of 1862 Mr. Curtis started with a party overland from St. Paul to Salmon river, Idaho, their train consisting of ox teams, with seventy-two men and a boy. They hired half breed Indians to guide them across the country by Devil's lake and through what is now northern Montana to Warm Springs in Deer Lodge valley, where their party disbanded, some going one way and some another. This was the train that preceded the Fisk train about one month, the latter following their trail most of the way, accompanied by United States soldiers, and they then claimed to be the first to cross by the northern route.

Mr. Curtis and a small party went to Grasshopper creek (then eastern Idaho), now Bannack City, the first gold camp in Montana, where they arrived in October. He has resided continuously in Montana since 1862. In 1866 he engaged in the stock business on Beaverhead, in which he is still engaged on the Bear Paw range in northern Montana. In the fall of 1870 he removed to Jefferson valley, in Madison county, where he still has a hay ranch. In 1883 Mr. Curtis removed to Butte, and has since resided there, engaged in the grocery business, under the firm name of Tebo & Curtis, at 356 East Park street.

Frank E. Curtis was married to Emma Whitcomb (better known as Emma Zoller, that being the name of her adopted parents), at Bannack City, Montana, October 8, 1864, by Rev. George G. Smith, the first ordained Presbyterian minister in Montana. Nine children were the issue of this marriage, four of whom are still living,—Leonard W., aged twenty-five years; Orlena N., twenty-one years; Fay H., nineteen years; and Bertie May, fifteen years.

HON. ROBERT G. HUMBER, of Deer Lodge, Montana, came to the Territory in 1865, and since that time has in various ways been identified with its interests. Of his life we make record as follows:

Robert G. Humber was born in Stanford, Lincoln county, Kentucky, March 25, 1841, and is of English descent. His ancestors emigrated to this country and settled in Virginia previous to the Revolution, and were participants in the great struggle for independence. His grandfather, Charles Humber, was born near Richmond, Virginia, and his wife, nee Martha Coles, was also a Virginian. Her brother was at one time Mayor of Richmond. Charles Humber and his wife had a large family, their son Newmeris, born at Crab Orchard, Kentucky, in 1812, being the father of our subject. The latter's mother, whose maiden name was Martha Forbes, was a native of Winchester, Kentucky. When Robert G. was small the family removed to Missouri. In 1856 they went from there to Leavenworth county, Kansas, where the father owned 1,600 acres of land, a most beautiful place, and where he and his family resided for a period of thirteen districts and was really the basis and foundation of the act of Congress aforesaid, and provided that the discoverer of a lead, lode or ledge, should be entitled to one claim thereon,—200 feet in length along the vein, by right of discovery, and one claim by pre-emption, together with all its dips, spurs and angles, and fifty feet on either side of the same, for working purposes, Under this act of the Territorial Legislature. and before its enactment, under the rules and regulations of the miners, many discoveries had been made and claims located which were being worked and mined. These claims were recognized as property, some of them of great value, and they were bought, sold and transferred as other real estate.

Prior to the year 1866, the policy of the government had been not to part with its title or to open the mineral lands to exploration or purchase; but the extensive and rich discoveries of the precious metals in the Rocky mountain region had caused that country to be occupied, and men were exploring, making discoveries, locating claims, erecting mills and mining, buying and selling, in the same manner as if they had been the absolute owners of the soil. The people had taken possession of the country, and though in fact trespassers upon these public mineral lands, the Government did not object, but rather encouraged their occupation.

This condition of things caused the Government to change its policy and to open its minyears. He came to Montana in 1874 and settled in Deer Lodge, and here he resided up to the time of his death, which occurred February 13, 1888. Nearly the whole of his life he was an active member of the Christian Church, being a pillar in the church at the various places where he lived. He was in politics a Democrat, and during the war he served as a member of the Kansas Legislature, he and six other Democrats of that State being called the "Apostles of Democracy;" but, while he was a stanch Democrat and a Southern man, he was in favor of the Union and strongly opposed to the Civil war. His whole life was one of purity and integrity, and his many sterling qualities won for him hosts of friends. His wife died in 1877. She was the personification of all that is lovely in woman.

Robert G. is the only child of this worthy couple. He was educated at Columbia, Missouri, and was in his last year at college when the great Civil war broke out. He entered the Confederate army, and for three years served in Missouri, Arkansas and Texas. In Missouri he was captured by the Union forces and was paroled on his word of honor that he would not again take up arms against the Government. After this he turned his attention to freighting, his father furnishing him an outfit, and he freighted to Denver, Colorado, until the spring of 1865. At that time he was married. Soon after his marriage he started with his bride for Montana, making the long journey across the plains with an ox team, and traveling with a train composed of about sixty wagons, a number of the emigrant party being relatives of theirs. They started on the 28th of May and reached their destination on the 20th of September. Mr. Humber brought with him a drove of cattle, and upon his arrival here he located at Race Track creek, in Deer Lodge valley, on a farm of 160 acres; and at first, in addition to his farming and stock-raising, he engaged in freighting to Helena and other points in Montana. In 1867 he returned to the States, and in 1874 brought his father and all the family out with him. From that time until 1880 he carried on a prosperous freighting business.

In 1880 Mr. Humber was elected a member of the Twelfth Montana Legislative Assembly. The following year Silver Bow county was formed and he was elected Treasurer of Deer Lodge county, in which capacity he served two terms. In 1889 he was again nominated and elected to the Montana Legislature. This time he was the acting Speaker of the House, and while filling that important position the fairness of his rulings and the competency he displayed won for him not only the approbation of his friends but also that of his political opponents, the latter tendering him a vote of thanks.

Mr. Humber is still engaged in farming, but now has a delightful home in Deer Lodge, where he and his family reside.

He married, in Atchison, Kansas, Miss Mary E. Williams, a native of Madison county, Kentucky. Mrs. Humber is a relative of Henry Clay, Thomas Benton and General Shelby, and her family on both sides were prominent Southerners. Her maternal grandfather was killed at the battle of Raisin River, while fighting gallantly under General Harrison. He was a Captain, under the immediate command of General Winchester. He was wounded and was obliged to surrender, being promised safety, but being killed by the Indians. Mrs. Humber's paternal grandfather was also an officer in the same army,—a Colonel.

Mr. and Mrs. Humber have six children, namely: Mary Bryan, wife of D. S. Fotheringham; Mattie Gano, wife of Hon. Edward Scharnikow, resides in a beautiful home eral lands to exploration and purchase, and also to enable those who had already made discoveries and located claims to acquire title to their property. The situation was similar to that where towns and cities grew up on the public lands, as they did in all the mining regions, and Congress had to provide the means by which the occupants and claimants might obtain title to their lots.

The act of Congress of July, 1870, also recognized the miners' rules and regulations and provided for acquiring title to placer mining claims. Up to that date the chief business of the Territory had been placer mining, and the most important litigation had relation to that kind of mining and to water for that purpose.

There was litigation concerning the discovery and location of quartz-lode claims, but the cost of transporting the heavy machinery necessary for that kind of mining overland, for long distances, by ox and mule teams, in the absence of railroads, caused quartz mining to take a secondary place so long as the placers afforded opportunity for profitable mining.

But though the conditions continued unfavorable, the new system concerning the discovery, location, representation and obtaining patents for quartz-lode mining claims, inaugurated by the act of Congress of May 10, 1872, gave an impetus to that kind of mining before unknown.

It was an untried system and the task was imposed upon the judges and lawyers of the mining regions to so interpret and expound the act as to carry into effect the intention of Con-adjoining her father's residence; and Robert Hart, Jessie Lee, Lillian Henley and Rollyn Raymond, at home.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Humber are members of the Christian Church.

HIRAM M. THOMAS, one of the most successful farmers in Flint Creek valley, has been a resident of Montana since 1865.

He was born near Niles, Michigan, October 11, 1838, and is of Scotch and Welsh extraction. His father, Ezekiel Thomas, was born in Ireland, in 1806, and his mother, nee Mary McCartney, was born in Ohio, and her mother, a native of America, was of German descent. After their marriage, his parents removed to Indiana, where they took claim to a tract of land and which they sold after having made some improvements upon it. From there they removed to Fillmore county, Minnesota, where the father resided up to the time of his death, which occurred in 1890, in his eighty-fourth year. His first wife died at the age of thirty-five, leaving six children, of whom only three are now living, and was afterward married again.

Hiram M. was the fourth born in his father's family. He was reared in Minnesota, receiving his education in the district schools, and remaining at home until he was twenty years of age. He then started across the plains to make his fortune and a home in the far West. Leaving Minnesota on the 20th of April, he was five months and a half on the journey, traveling with a horse team and continuing on until he reached southern Oregon. There he mined for two years. Afterward he was engaged in mining in Idaho. He was at the Florence diggings in 1862–3, and was also for a time in Placer county, California. In 1865, as above stated, he came to Montana, making the journey here with pack animals. Up to this time he had made but little money. He was, however, rich in experience. He first located in the Blackfoot country, where he mined two seasons for wages, at $6 per day, and saved all he could. From there he came to Pioneer, and became interested in placer mining, remaining at Pioneer until 1870, and making some money there. He then came to his present location and took claim to a tract of land and engaged in raising cattle and horses. Prosperity attended his efforts, and as the years passed by he added to his original tract, and at this writing his farm comprises 1,100 acres. In 1886 he built a nice residence on his property. From time to time he has made other valuable improvements here, and to-day his farm is one of the finest in the State. Seeing the need of keeping a better grade of horses than were being raised here, he purchased blooded trotting horses, and later Norman Percheron and Clydesdale stock, and in this way has done much to improve the grade of horses in this part of the country. He was the owner of "Live Oak" for a number of years, and finally sold him; he afterward was sold for $3,000. This horse was the sire of many valuable horses.

Mr. Thomas was married February 5, 1868, to Miss Anna Mariah Williams, a native of England. She came to America with her parents when she was eighteen months old. Mr. and Mrs. Thomas have had three children, namely: Ella, now Mrs. Solan M. Hughes; Mary Elizabeth, who died in childhood; and George W., who is attending college.

In his political views, Mr. Thomas is a Republican. He is a member of the A. O. U. W. A man of honest industry and sterling integrity, he is every way deserving of the success which has crowned his efforts in this fertile valley.

gress in enacting it, and to stimulate this new industry in the country to which the law was applicable.

Montana is situate in the midst of that country, in the very heart of the mineral region, and no State or Territory has done more, by the decisions of its courts, to build up and to perfect this system of mining law.

Like any other system of law, written down in the form of a statute, this mining act of May, 1872, was but the framework of the system, a foundation upon which the courts were to build in adjudicating rights arising under the statute.

It would be better in every statute to provide for every possible case to arise under it; but, as this would require infinite vision, no such statute will ever be enacted, and time and experience only can bring to light the complications and questions to arise. And so, the mining law under this statute, has been a growth, every decision adding to the structure; and in this work the courts of Montana have done and are doing their full share. In the beginning there were no precedents: every question was new and every decision a pioneer.

What is a discovery, and when sufficient to authorize the location of a mining claim on a vein or lode? What is the apex of a lode, and of what consequence is it? How must the claim be marked or designated on the surface of the ground? What kind of a title is acquired by a valid location? What are the consequences of making a location that does not extend along

JESSE HASTON.—On the corner of Eighth and Palmer streets, Miles City, Montana, is the beautiful and commodious residence of one of the leading cattle men of Custer county, Jesse Haston. His home is surrounded with a beautiful and well-kept lawn. He is one of the leading Democrats of the Jeffersonian school, and in 1892 was the regular nominee of the Democratic party on the State ticket for State Treasurer, and shared the fate of the entire ticket, which was defeated by a very small majority.

He was born at Glasgow, Howard county, Missouri, in 1841, a son of Jesse and Elizabeth Haston. His father was a well-to-do farmer who removed from east Tennessee to Missouri in 1818, when the people of that State had still to live in forts to protect themselves from the Indians.

Jesse grew up on his father's farm, being educated at the common schools and at Central College, Fayette, Mo. When of age he still remained on the old farm for a number of years, but later he engaged in purchasing and shipping tobaccco; but, not being very stout physically and having had financial reverses, he determined to try his fortune in the West; so, with poor health and as little money as health, in the year 1879 he turned his steps westward, and on the first day of August of that year, at Camp Sheridan, Nebraska, he entered the employment of the Niobrara Cattle Company as a "cow-boy" and the "tender-foot" of the outfit and, by hard work and always being faithful to the trusts confided to him, in a few years, having passed through all the phases of cow-boy life and the cattle business, he became manager of the company. In 1890, at Holden, Missouri, he was married to Miss Ida McMelan, who was born in Toronto, Canada, and came with her parents to this country when a child. She is a member of the Presbyterian Church. They have two bright little girls: Jessie May and Katharyn Seymour.

Mr. Haston is a man who takes a deep interest in all matters of a public nature that are for the good of the community in which he lives, and is ever ready to do his part as a good citizen or neighbor.

JOHN R. GERDTS came to Montana in 1868, and is now one of the well-known and highly respected citizens of Deer Lodge.

He was born in Germany, March 29, 1838; was educated in his native land and there learned the carpenter's trade; and in 1858, when only eighteen years of age, set sail for America in the ship Othella, making the voyage in fifty-eight days, and landing in safety at New York city—a stranger in a strange land and not knowing a word of the language of the country to which he had come to make his home. His first work here was in a grocery store, at $4 per month, and he remained thus employed fourteen months. Then he went to New Orleans, where he secured work at his trade on Rebel gun boats, at $2 per day, and remained there until the war began. He made several trips at sea, and, learning that the Rio Grande was a good place for carpenters, he went there and remained until after the death of President Lincoln. He then took passage to New York, where he remained until he had spent all his money, and he then shipped as carpenter on a steamer bound for New Orleans, from which port he subsequently made several sea voyages.

In 1866 Mrs. Gerdts crossed the ocean and joined him at New Orleans, where they were married on Christmas Day of that year, the marriage ceremony being performed in South Church. Two months later they removed to the vein or lode? When do the side lines of a location become the end lines (which must be parallel and vertical, drawn downward,) whereby the locator or owner is prohibited from following his vein or lode outside of his side lines? For what length of time does representation protect a claim? How are the rights of adjoining and conflicting claimants and locators to be adjusted.

All of these and many other questions of the most complicated and intricate character have arisen under the statute, and new questions are constantly coming before the courts for adjudication.

On a mountain side, or in a tract of country filled with quartz veins and lodes, running parallel, crossing, intersecting, how are the rights of adjoining owners of these mining claims to be adjusted and determined, when there is nothing on the surface to indicate the apex of the vein or its pitch, or course? There is nothing more difficult or requiring more skill and knowledge of law, geology and engineering to properly determine and adjudicate than these underground lawsuits.

There is no such thing as learning the habits of quartz veins, lodes or ledges. Their language admits of no absolute interpretation; they exist only where they can be actually seen; each one has its own dip and angle, its own foot and hanging walls; some are true fissure veins and some pinch out and disappear; some are rich in places, without cause or provocation, and in other places barren and worthless with as little Shreveport, where they made their home until, on account of her failing health, they sought a change of climate and came to Montana. They started north on the 1st of May, 1868, from St. Louis, made the journey up the Missouri river to Fort Peck, and from that place was a month in making the trip with ox teams to Fort Benton. They continued on to Helena, where he was employed in work at his trade, at $6 per day. The next sping he started for the Cedar Creek stampede, but met people returning who told him not to go; and for two seasons he remained near Pike's Peak.

In 1870 they took claim to 160 acres of land at the mouth of Rock creek, near where Garrison now is. Here they built a home and made improvements and later sold out at a profit. Then they went three-quarters of a mile west of their first claim and took up another 160 acres, and began again the work of improving a farm. They lived in a stable here a year before they built their house. In 1877 he took 300 head of cattle to the Black Hills. She accompanied him and drove the team all the way, the journey requiring four months' time. The snow was deep, the Nez Perces Indians were on the war path, and the trip was attended with many hardships and dangers; but they reached their destination in safety and sold their stock for a price that gave them their first real start in money-making. In the spring they returned to their farm and he made another similar trip, while Mrs. Gerdts went back to Germany and brought her aged mother to this country. Her mother filed claim to 160 acres adjoining theirs, and lived with them up to the time of her death. They resided on their land until the building of the Northern Pacific railroad, when they sold out to the railroad company for $3,000, Mrs. Gerdts retaining some town lots which she still holds. It was expected that a junction and a town would be built there, but that was not accomplished. After the sale of the farm they purchased eighty acres four miles below it, and again began the work of improving and developing. To this eighty acres they have since added until they now have 720 acres, a choice and valuable property. Here they raised poultry and vegetables, and made money. Mr. Gerdts has for years been interested in Shropshire sheep, now having between eleven and twelve thousand head in his flock. He has also given special attention to the raising of horses and Polled Angus and Holstein cattle.

Mr. Gerdts has forty-five acres of placer mining ground, and at one time, during the years 1876 and 1877, took out considerable gold.

In 1891 this pioneer couple retired from their farm and removed to a pleasant home in Deer Lodge, where they have since resided. Since their removal to town, Mr. Gerdts has owned and conducted a cash grocery, doing a successful business.

Both are members of the Lutheran Church.

THOMAS A. GRIGG, M. D., of Butte City, Montana, is a member of the regular school of practice and makes a specialty of treating diseases of the eye, ear, nose and chest.

He was born on Prince Edward Island, Canada, February 15, 1862, son of Dr. William Grigg and Willann nee Daugherty. The senior Dr. Grigg was a native of England, was educated in London, and in 1826 came to America, locating in Canada, where he practiced his profession, and where he was also interested in shipbuilding and mercantile pursuits. He was thrice married. By his first wife he had nine children, and by the second wife two, the subject of our sketch being his youngest child. He attained an advanced age, being eighty-one at the reason; and with none of them can anything be taken for granted.

This is the kind of property, having the same elements of doubt and uncertainty as a game of chance, upon which and for the adjudication of rights concerning which, the system of mining law was constructed.

It is sufficiently difficult to settle rights on top of the earth and in broad daylight, but when we go down into the earth, into shafts, tunnels and stopes, and one set of skilled experts and engineers make beautiful and elaborate maps and diagrams of the underground workings and geography, and testify that the apex of a vein is in the claim of the plaintiff; and another set of engineers and geologists, equally expert and skilled, testify exactly to the contrary, and that the apex is in the claim of defendants, is it any wonder that the jury, after groping in the dark for perhaps a month, following the witnesses through the tunnels, down shafts and into the stopes, and listening to learned and contradictory theories concerning geology, fissures, the various kinds of rocks, their ages and what they are supposed to signify, is utterly bewildered and still in the dark?

This kind of cases involves only questions of fact; but the perplexing, difficult thing is to get at the real truth. Other cases involve questions of law arising upon the mining statute; and these at least have the benefit of daylight.

The following decisions are of public interest and importance, because they have relation to the greatest industry of Montana, and point time of death, in 1881. His second wife passed away at the age of fifty-six years. She was a member of the Episcopal Church. He, too, was reared in that faith, but later in life became a Methodist.

Thomas A. received a high-school education in his native place and studied medicine under the instructions of his father. He then entered the Medical Department of the University of Pennsylvania, where in due time he graduated with honor. While in college he won the high esteem of his professors and brought with him from there several very creditable testimonies as to his character and scholarship. After this he took post-graduate studies in the specialties named and has diplomas for all of them. He began the practice of his profession at Mahanoy City, Pennsylvania, and during the five years he remained there he built up a large and lucrative practice. Too close application to business, however, impaired his health and he was advised by Dr. Pepper, of Philadelphia, to seek rest and change of climate in Washington. He accordingly directed his course westward. After six months spent in Washington he concluded to locate in Montana, and on the 15th of October, 1892, took up his abode in Butte City and resumed practice. He has since met with most flattering success in his specialties. He has nice office rooms and all the modern appliances for the treatment of diseases of the eye, ear, nose and chest, and here he greatly enjoys his practice, not so much because it brings him wealth but because he is by it enabled to render such benefit to suffering humanity.

Having inherited means from his father, Dr. Grigg made investments in real estate in Washington while he was there, and since locating in Butte City he has bought property in this flourishing town. He has also invested in several valuable gold mines, among which are the Grand Republic, the Gold Bug, the Queen, the King, and others.

Dr. Grigg was married in 1888 to Miss Joanna S. Miller, a native of his own town, and a daughter of Mr. John Miller, a shipbuilder. They have three children, Elmer Roy, Leon Allison and Joanna Ethel. The family residence is at 815 West Broadway. Mrs. Grigg is a member of the Presbyterian Church.

In fraternal organizations, Dr. Grigg takes an active interest and is a member of several. He has a membership in the Alumni Society of the University of Pennsylvania, the Schuylkill County Medical Society, the State Medical Society of Pennsylvania, and the Silver Bow County and Montana State Medical societies. He has also passed all the chairs in the I. O. O. F.; is Council Commander of the Woodmen; and since 1886 has been a Master Mason.

Adolph La Salle, of Helena, came to Montana in 1866, and as one of her pioneer settlers is entitled to biographical mention in this work.

Mr. La Salle was born in Canada, near the city of Montreal, September 16, 1844. He is of French descent, his ancestors being among the first settlers in Canada. He is a direct descendant of La Salle, who explored the Ohio and traversed its territory in 1679, and who in 1680, in company with Father Hennepin, explored Minnesota by way of the Mississippi river as far north as St. Anthony's Falls, near the present city of Minneapolis. The Mississippi was revisited by La Salle in 1682, when he explored it to its mouth and took possession of the surrounding tributaries and country in the name of France, and gave it the name of Louisiana. In 1685, under the leadership of La Salle, the first French settlement was out how mining claims under the act of Congress of May, 1872, may be located, represented, worked and owned. This business is still in its infancy, and prospecting, locating, representing and working mines in Montana will continue far into the future, and every case that throws any light on the subject is important.

In the case of Hirbour vs. Reeding, 3 Montana, 15, Blake, J., speaking for the Supreme Court, decided that a verbal contract of copartnership entered into in April, 1873, "for the purpose of prospecting for, locating, recording, pre-empting, developing and mining quartz lodes and other mining property," is valid and not within the statute of frauds of the Territory. (See Southmayd vs. Southmayd, 4 Montana, 100; and Harris vs. Lloyd, 11 id., 390.)

Unpatented mining claims, being exempt from taxation under the laws of the Territory, the question came up in the case of The Hope Mining Company vs. Kennon, Treasurer (3 Montana, 35), whether or not the product of such claims was also exempt, and the court held, by Wade, C. J., that the exemption from taxation of unpatented claims does not exempt the product of the mine from taxation.

The case of Belk vs. Meagher, et al. (3 Montana, 65), has been an important and controlling case ever since its decision, as to the title acquired by a valid location of a mining claim under the act of May, 1872, how such title is kept alive, and the consequences of a failure to represent the claim. Development has shown a vein or lode of great value, which was claimed made in Texas. After seeing the colony in a thriving condition, this indefatigable explorer retraced his course and sailed up the great river he knew so well, crossed the St. Lawrence into Canada, and settled down in the town of St. Michael D'Yamaska, in the province of Quebec. The older of two sons, Adolph La Salle was reared on his father's farm, was educated in private schools, and when in his sixteenth year left home and went to Illinois, where he had an uncle who was engaged in the manufacture of brooms, and by whom he was employed for wages. He was at work for his uncle when the civil war broke out. In December, 1861, he enlisted in Company B, Ninth Illinois Cavalry. He fought under Sherman in the Third Brigade, Sixteenth Army Corps, and participated in numerous engagements. The most of the time he served as chief bugler. After his three years' term of enlistment expired, he re-enlisted and remained in the service until the war closed, being mustered out in October, 1865.

The war over, Mr. La Salle returned to Henry county, Illinois, and in March, 1866, went to St. Joseph, Missouri, thence to Nebraska, and from there across the plains to Salt Lake City. The company with which he traveled left St. Joseph on the 15th of March and arrived at Salt Lake City on the 3rd of July. On the 4th of July they started for Helena, arriving at their destination on the 17th of the same month, and camped on what is now the Lenox addition. After resting a few days, Mr. La Salle went down in the valley and was employed by Phillip Miller. Later he worked in the Union mine. In May, 1867, the Idaho excitement induced him to try his luck in the mines there, and for some time he was engaged in mining on Salmon river. Not meeting with success, however, he returned to Helena, and worked at mining, receiving $4 per day. By saving his money during the summer, he was enabled in the fall to purchase an interest in the lime business, and remained in that until 1869. In the meantime he had purchased in the Prickly Pear valley, six miles from Helena, a farm of 160 acres. In 1869 he sold his lime business and moved to his farm, to the improvement of which he devoted his energies and prosperity attended his earnest efforts. In 1872 he purchased 160 acres of adjoining land. On this tract, one of the finest farms in the valley, he has since been engaged in agricultural pursuits, his chief crops being hay, oats and potatoes; he is also engaged in the extensive rearing of horses and cattle. His land is supplied with an abundance of water for irrigation and pasture. Mr. La Salle has also purchased property in the city of Helena and erected a fine brick residence thereon, his time being divided between his home in the valley and his residence in the city.

April 29, 1880, Mr. La Salle was married to Miss Cora Jane Richard, a native of Massachusetts and a daughter of Nelson Richard. They have had three children, two of whom, a son and daughter, died at the ages of eight and four respectively. Mary Frances is the name of their living child.

Politically, Mr. La Salle is a Republican, and fraternally he is an Odd Fellow. He is also a member of good standing in the Grand Army of the Republic.

JUDGE DAVID M. DURFEE, senior member of the prominent law firm of Durfee & Brown, Phillipsburg, Montana, is well known throughout the State, and it is with pleasure that we present the following sketch of his life in this work:

Judge Durfee was born in Schenectady county, New York, July 22, 1855. He is descended from Scotch-Irish by the plaintiff by virtue of discovery or location by his grantors, and the defendants had re-located, or, in the language of the country, had "jumped" the claim as upon a failure to represent.

The questions presented were new and the arguments of council (E. W. Toole, J. F. Forbis, A. E. Mayhew, and Sharpe & Napton representing the plaintiffs, and W. W. Dixon and J. C. Robinson the defendants) were able and interesting.

The court, by Wade, C. J., held that the valid location of a mining claim under the act of May, 1872, carried with it a grant of the claim located from the Government to the person making the location, citing the case of Smith vs. Robinson (1 Montana, 414) before mentioned, together with the right to the exclusive possession and enjoyment of the claim located; that if there is a failure to represent the claim the title is gone and the claim becomes again subject to location; that a person making a location has one whole year in which to do the representation work and that there can be no forfeiture until the full time has expired; that if a claim is represented on the 30th day of December, 1877, such representation would save a forfeiture for that year and would secure the party in his title until the 30th day of December, 1878; that the Government, having granted a mining claim to one person by virtue of his making a valid location thereof, cannot, while that grant is kept alive by representation, grant the same ground or claim to ancestors who were early settlers in Rhode Island, his forefathers being prominent in Colonial times as well as later in the history of this country. His great-grandfather, Isaac Durfee, joined the Continental army and rendered his country valuable service as Captain of one of the volunteer companies during the whole of the Revolutionary struggle. His home was in Washington county, New York, and his son, Abram, born there in 1775, was the Judge's grandfather. Abram Durfee married Mahetable Potter, who was descended from an old Quaker family. One branch of her family, the Granvilles, took a prominent part in the struggle for independence. This worthy couple became the parents of ten children, all of whom reached maturity. The father was a farmer, a prominent Mason, and a Universalist. He reached the advanced age of eighty-six years. His wife passed away in her seventieth year. Their son, David Potter Durfee, was born in Duanesburg, Schenectady county, New York, in 1812, and in his occupation, his fraternal relations and his religious belief, he followed in the footsteps of his father. His wife, Caroline, also a native of Schenectady county, was born in 1818, she being of German origin. Her great-grandfather was an officer in Queen Anne's army. One of her uncles, because of the prominent part he took against the English Government, was declared an outlaw and a reward of one hundred pounds sterling was offered for his arrest. David P. and Caroline Durfee had nine children, our subject being the eighth-born and one of the six who are still living. The father lived to the age of seventy-six years, and the mother was in her sixty-first year at the time of her death. She held to the faith of the Presbyterian Church.

Judge Durfee was reared on his father's farm. His early education was received in the public schools, and he took a finishing course in the Schoharie Academy. When he was twenty-two he began the study of law in the office of N. P. Hinman, in Albany, where he remained one year. After this he went to Somerset county, Maryland, and taught two years, in the meantime continuing his law studies in the office of Levin T. Waters, of Princess Anne, Maryland. In the winter of 1882 he was admitted to practice by the Court of Appeals, in Annapolis. He then came to Montana, where he continued teaching school two years longer, thus paving his way to professional success. In 1884 he was the Democratic candidate for Judge of Probate, but was defeated by Mr. Oren Emerson. Two years later, in the fall of 1886, he was nominated and elected County Attorney of Deer Lodge county. In the summer of 1889 he was nominated and elected a member of the Territorial Convention, which convention completed the present Constitution of Montana; and in the fall of that same year he was elected Judge of the Third Judicial District, in which capacity he served for three years, his decisions being rendered with the utmost fairness and very few of them being reversed by the higher courts. Upon the expiration of his term as Judge he resumed the practice of law at Phillipsburg, and, under the firm name of Durfee & Brown, has conducted a successful business.

Since taking up his residence in Phillipsburg, the Judge has become interested in mining operations, being one of the partners in the Sunrise Mining Company. This company has valuable gold-mining property. He has also invested in real estate. He owns 160 acres of land near the town, which is improved with good residence, any other person; and that mere possession, not based upon a valid location, would not prevent a valid location under the law.

This case and the principles of law laid down in its decision were approved and affirmed on appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States in an able and instructive opinion by Chief Justice Waite. (104 U. S., 279.)

In the case of Meyendorff et al. vs. Frohner et al. (3 Montana, 282), the court, by Knowles, J., among other important questions, decided that a party in possession of mining ground under a title subsequently determined in court to be invalid, might, without fraud, relocate such ground and thereafter perfect such title in accordance with law.

In the case of Gonu vs. Russell (3 Montana, 538) the court, by Blake, J., held that the appellant could not make a valid location of a quartz-lode mining claim until he had marked the boundaries so that they could be readily traced by means of stakes, natural objects or any other certain means, and that the resumption of labor, in good faith by the respondent, before the appellant perfected his location, rendered null and void the prior acts of the appellant. (See Honaker vs. Martin, 11 Montana, 91; Metcalf vs. Prescott, 10 id., 283; and Dillon vs. Bayliss, 11 id., 171.)

The first three volumes of Montana Supreme Court Reports contain many important decisions other than those concerning placer and quartz etc., and where he resides with his family.

He was married February 1, 1888, by Cardinal Gibbons, to Miss Emily J. Irving, a native of Baltimore, Maryland. They have three children, Eulalie, Thomas I. and Adelaide.

The Judge and his family are active members of the Catholic Church in Phillipsburg, and now are among its strongest supporters. Fraternally, he is a K. of P.; politically, a Democrat. During the twelve years of his residence in Montana Judge Durfee has made a wide acquaintance over the State, his public life bringing him into contact with many of her leading citizens; and wherever he is known he commands the highest respect.

N. S. Snyder, M. D.—Prominent among the members of the medical profession of Montana, is Dr. Nicholas S. Snyder, of Anaconda.

The Doctor is a Kentuckian. He was born in Carrollton, Carroll county, July 21, 1847, son of James S. and Annie (Hubbell) Snyder, father a native of Virginia, and mother a native of Kentucky. James S. Snyder was for a number of years a successful business man of Louisville. He died in 1889, in his sixty-fifth year. His widow survives him and is now sixty-five years old. Their seven children are all living, our subject being the oldest.

Dr. Snyder was educated in Kentucky, Georgia and Tennessee. In 1864 he enlisted in the Confederate army as a cavalryman, under General Forrest, and served in Alabama and Georgia, participating in much hard riding and fighting; escaped wounds and capture, and was mustered out in Alabama, in April, 1865. After the war had ended he attended school two years and then read medicine in the office of Dr. William F. Miller, of Louisville, Kentucky, after which he attended the Louisville Medical College and graduated in 1874. He began his professional career there, and afterward practiced in Colorado and Nevada up to 1884, at which time he came to Montana.

It was in 1886 that Dr. Snyder began his practice at Anaconda. Here he soon secured a large and lucrative practice and here he has since resided. Soon after his arrival in Anaconda he built the Anaconda Hospital and ran the same successfully until 1889, at which time the Sisters started St. Ann's Hospital. He then became their physician and converted his own hospital into the Commercial Hotel. Besides this property Dr. Snyder has also made investments in other city real estate, all of which are growing in value.

He was married in 1888 to Miss Lizzie Irvine, the first white child born in Butte City, and the daughter of Caleb E. Irvine, a Montana pioneer. Her untimely death occurred September 15, 1889, when she gave birth to their child, Eness Ewing; and the loss of his charming young wife was a source of great bereavement to the Doctor.

In politics, Dr. Snyder has been a life-long Democrat. Fraternally, he is a Mason. He takes high rank both as a member of his profession and as one of the leading citizens of Deer Lodge county.

Christian Yegen.—Among the foremost merchants of Billings and Yellowstone county is the firm of P. Yegen & Company. Christian Yegen was born in Switzerland November, 1857, and came to America in 1879, first commencing business at Bismarck, Dakota. He came to Billings in the spring of 1882 and at once set up a small business in which he has prospered exceedingly. Christian was married last winter and elected a member of the City Council in the spring, so he has more reason to rustle than ever before. The firm have the largest store building in the city, all on the ground floor being occupied by their department store. A number of clerks are employed, and Yegen & Company are credited with mining claims and water rights, and these volumes are of great interest and importance, because they cover the period of the foundation and the first growth of Montana jurisprudence. By this time many precedents had been established in the new field of litigation and the bewilderment of novel questions in a new country was disappearing.

CHAPTER XXIV.

THE FIRST FEDERAL SURVEYORS—FIRST PUBLIC BUILDINGS—GOVERNOR ASHLEY, OF OHIO—GOVERNOR POTTS, OF OHIO—THE TERRITORIAL CAPITAL—POLITICAL CONTENTIONS—THE CATHOLICS IN MONTANA—THE THREE GOOD FATHERS—CHURCH HISTORY.

IT reads oddly that this boundless agricultural empire should have been left without even an attempt at federal surveys till late in 1867. The base line was initiated by the first surveyor-general, Solomon Merideth, on the top of a limestone promontory between Willow creek and Jefferson river, and twelve miles from the three forks of the Missouri river, described by Capt. Clarke, in 1804, as being so exactly alike that it was impossible to say which was the real Missouri. Oregon had been allowed, under General Lane, to establish her base line of federal surveys near the mouth of the Oregon or Columbia river. This was carried up the river to the fertile valleys of the Willamette, Umpqua and Rogue rivers, which were separated into townships and sections and subdivided as the progress of civilization demanded. Later on, when that broad district east of the Oregon Sierras demanded attention, a meridian line was carried across these mountains. But Montana was given the distinction of a new base line entirely; although the survey from the outer limit of Washington Territory to the first lines of Montana was far from impossible.

Up to this time no farmer or stock-grower doing the most extensive general merchandise business in the city. Christian has interested himself thoroughly in all schemes to attract outside trade to Billings and was chief promoter of the Billings Wagon Bridge Company, subscribing liberally to that enterprise. He is among our most thrifty citizens and a merchant who sells goods and keeps his debts paid off.

PETER YEGEN.—The subject of this sketch, who is now the head of the substantial mercantile firm of P. Yegen & Company, was born in Switzerland, in the month of August, 1860. He came to America twenty years later, joining his brother at Bismarck, and with him came to Billings. These two young foreigners have worked together a dozen years and have prospered, the firm being rated as guilt edge throughout the country. Peter Yegen is a quiet, unobtrusive gentleman whose own business and home are all that he cares to interfere with. He is married and has several children, and lives close to his business. During the financial depression of last winter P. Yegan & Company weathered the storm with colors flying, and in the spring commenced work on a large addition to their store building, which will certainly cost $10,000. The brothers are enterprising in many ways and liberal in all public charities.

CHARLES H. WILLIAMS, who is prominently identified with the sheep industry in Deer Lodge valley, Deer Lodge county, Montana, dates his birth in Appanoose county, Iowa, September 28, 1856.

Zadok Williams, his father, was born in Vermont, February 2, 1825, his father being of German and his mother of French descent. He married Miss A. E. Jackson, a native of Cleveland, Ohio, her father being a cousin of the noted American soldier and patriot, General Andrew Jackson. After their marriage they were for a time residents of Sheboygan, Wisconsin, and he cleared up a farm out of the timber there. In 1854 they sold out and removed to Iowa, and from there they subsequently went to Selma, Kansas, where he still resides. They had five children, of whom only two are now living, Charles H. being the second born.

could guess where would run the lines by which he must bound his possessions. The old Spanish laws of California followed natural lines, as a rule, and the bed of a stream or the crest of a hill marked the confines of a grantee's broad dominion. The law of Congress giving each man and his wife a section of land in Oregon allowed the pioneer to locate without regard to future federal lines or to points of the compass. But the settler of Montana had no such favors shown him. He had to wait for the lines to be run, to see his new home cut to pieces and then adjust himself accordingly.

The surveys, even at this late date, went forward but slowly, and discontent and loss in the end resulted to the unhappy home-maker. It seemed impossible to convince Congress that "any good thing could come out of Nazareth."

Petty politicians at the federal capital seemed unwilling to distinguish disloyalty to the dominant party from disloyalty to the Union. The small sum of $40,000 had been given by Congress in 1866 to build a place for penitents, and in 1870 the penitentiary was begun. It was completed at the end of a year, at a cost of about $50,000. Granville Stuart was one of the commissioners of the prison, and W. F. Wheeler superintendent, both conspicuous for good in the history of Montana.

Through all these years partisan papers teem

Charles H. Williams was educated in the normal school at Kirksville, Missouri, and for a number of years was a popular and successful teacher in Iowa. While engaged in teaching he was also interested in farming operations there.

In 1882, accompanied by his wife and child, he made the overland journey to Montana, traveling with his own carriage and horses. His mother and his wife's people, the whole Davis family, came at the same time. They were seventy-nine days in making the journey, and now look back upon the trip as a prolonged picnic, in which they hunted and fished to their hearts' content, nothing occurring to mar its pleasure.

Upon his arrival in Montana, Mr. Williams came direct to Deer Lodge and purchased his present farm of 160 acres, and at once engaged in the sheep business. In this he has been greatly prospered. His partner, H. B. Davis, his brother-in-law, soon joined him here, and they have since added to his original purchase of land until now they have 2,000 acres. They cut 250 tons of hay and raise 2,500 bushels of grain annually, and they now have about 6,500 sheep. They have imported Shropshire rams direct from England, and they raise some pure-blooded Shropshires for sale. The most of their sheep, however, are Shropshire crossed with grade Merino.

On their land is a valuable stone quarry, from which they are now furnishing stone for the building of the wall around the State Penitentiary at Deer Lodge. This stone is an excellent quality of sandstone, and they have an inexhaustible quantity.

Since locating here, Mr. Williams has built the nice residence he and his family occupy. He was married in Missouri, March 6, 1880, to Miss Allie Davis, a native of Missouri. At the time they came to Montana they had one child, Henry Lee, and since then three children have been added to their family—Bessie, Earl D. and Ray.

In his political affiliations Mr. Williams is a Democrat.

HON. THOMAS CORBET MARSHALL, a prominent member of the bar of Montana, residing at Missoula, is a son of Judge Charles S. Marshall, a member of a prominent old Southern family. Further mention of his distinguished father will be found elsewhere in this work.

Thomas C. Marshall was born in Paducah, Kentucky, December 14, 1851, the third in the family. He was reared and educated in his native town, and took a law course in the Kentucky University, at Louisville, where he graduated in March, 1875. Previous to his graduation he had spent two years in the office with his father and brother-in-law, and soon after leaving college he began the practice of his profession in Ballard county, Kentucky, and practiced there and in McCracken county until he was elected Judge of the former county in the fall of 1879. At the end of his term he declined to be a candidate for a second time, and in 1883 came direct to Missoula, Montana, where he formed a law partnership with Judge Woody, under the firm name of Woody & Marshall. They did a successful business until 1887, at which time the partnership was dissolved. Mr. Marshall then became the lawyer of the Missoula Mercantile Company, the First National Bank of Missoula, and the Big Blackfoot Milling Company, by all of which he is retained as counsel and all of which are doing a very extensive business. In addition to this he conducts a general law practice. Since June, 1893, he has been a member of the firm of Marshall, Francis & Corbett, which was organized at that time. Mr. Francis is attorney for the Northern Pacific Railroad Company for a portion of Montana and Idaho, and Mr. Corbett has recently come to this State from Kentucky. The firm of Marshall, Francis & Corbett, although recently organized, has gained the reputation of being one of the strongest law firms in the State.

Mr. Marshall is interested in various business enterprises. He is a director of the First National Bank of Missoula and vice-president of the South Missoula Land with extravagant accusations against the dominant local party, and the words "jobbery" and "bribery" are not infrequent in their columns. There are also grave charges of extravagance, county debts, and so on. But when we take into account the cost of living, the long distances to be traversed in serving legal process, the peril and the precautions all the time necessary to be assumed, we can see how some of the new counties came very honestly to have heavy obligations.

A pretty clear idea of the political complexion of Montana at this period may be formed by noting that the fifth legislature assumed form and had but one Republican. As if eager to antagonize this condition of things, Mr. Ashley of Ohio, a pronounced "fire-eater," had been sent out as Governor. The results required no prophet. Antagonisms, bitterness, bad blood and bad legislation followed or rather were perpetuated, and the legislature of Montana once more became an illegal body. At least so Congress declared it to be. But all these legal or illegal questions and the history of them are left to an abler pen than mine, that of Chief Justice Wade, under the head of Bench and Bar, and I pass on to the material progress of the great commonwealth.

At the fifth general election 10,901 votes were cast. The next governor sent out from Company. On his farm near Missoula he is giving considerable attention to the raising of Jersey cattle and fine trotting horses, some of the latter having made famous records. From his professional duties Mr. Marshall turns to his ranch for recreation, and in his fine stock takes a pardonable pride.

Politically, he has been a stanch Democrat all his life. In the fall of 1886 he was elected by his party as a member of the Legislature of Montana, and served during the regular session and also in the extending session of 1887. While a member of that body he had the honor of being chairman of the Judiciary Committee.

June 12, 1878, Mr. Marshall married Miss Millie T. Jenkins, a native of Ballard county, Kentucky, and a daughter of Dr. Thomas J. Jenkins, a prominent physician of that State. Mr. and Mrs. Marshall have four children, Anna J., Meriam, Emily and Charles S.

Fraternally, Mr. Marshall is identified with the A. O. U. W., K. of P., K. of H., and F. & A. M.

James Davidson, a rancher on Pumpkin creek, has a half section there of fine land, which is irrigated from the creek. It is sixty-five miles south of Miles City, in Custer county. He owns a water right to a never-failing stream. He produces corn to perfection, cuts about three tons of hay to the acre, principally blue-joint, and takes pride in his beautiful meadow and valuable improvements, which have cost him $3,000. He has a sheep house 50 x 100 feet, suitable for both sheep and cattle. His ranch, with its improvements, he values at $6,000, but does not wish to sell at that price. He is a well-informed, energetic young man, and has made rapid progress in business since locating in Montana.

He was born in Heber City, Utah, January 3, 1864, a son of William and Grace Davidson, natives of Scotland, who came to America by way of Panama, in 1849, and up the Mississippi river to St. Louis, and thence across the plains to Utah in 1850, using oxen as draft animals to their wagon. His parents are now engaged in farming and stock-raising in southern Idaho.

James, our subject, was educated at the common school and is still a student, keeping himself well informed on general topics of interest: has even made considerable progress in acquiring a knowledge of the German language. He came to Montana in 1881, and for a time engaged in hunting buffalo, at that time a profitable occupation. Later he employed himself in herding cattle for E. H. Johnson, and has been in the live-stock business ever since. In 1885, in connection with two others, he entered the sheep industry, starting in the early winter of 1886-'87 with 7,900 head of sheep, and coming out in the spring with 3,500. This would have discouraged the average young man, but his confidence in the future caused him to continue in the business. He has now 3,500 sheep of his own, besides a ranch, of which he feels justly proud, as it has a bountiful water supply, a fertile soil and a climate unsurpassed for health.

Hon. Frank Showers, a law practitioner in Boulder, is of German extraction, his ancestors having emigrated to America early in the history of Pennsylvania. The grandfather, Abraham Showers, was born in that State, but afterward resided in Maryland, Virginia and Ohio, his death occurring in the latter State. He was an honest and industrious farmer. His son, Andrew Showers, was born in Virginia in 1818, and removed with his father to Champaign county, Ohio, in 1832, where they were among the pioneer settlers. Although only fourteen years of age, Andrew assisted his father in clearing and improving their new farm. He was there married to Miss Mary Slifer, a native of Maryland, and they had five children. The parents still reside on their farm in Ohio, the father aged seventy-five years. He enjoys the respect and esteem of his neighbors, many of whom have known him since he was a boy.

Frank Showers, their second child and eldest son, was

Ohio was Gen. B. F. Potts, and the petty war between the executive and his legislature went on somewhat as before. But whatever interest may have centered about these petty struggles at that time have perished, and dismal is the reading of the story of such persistent little brawls in this great and growing land. The universal verdict was, is and will be, that Montana has been cursed by place-hunters and politicians from the date of her name and baptism. Let them pass into obscurity. Where there is so much that is good and great continually before us, why burthen the page with even a catalogue of their names.

At the seventh general election in Montana the first Republican delegate, William H. Claggett, was sent to congress, through defections in the opposite party. He did great service by having the Indians removed from Bitter-root valley to their reservation and exchanging the Judith basin with the Crow Indians for their claim to the Yellowstone. He was not a politician or a "tender-foot," having been long in Nevada, where he learned the needs of the much-neglected pioneers; but by the time of the next election the disaffected had been herded in the opposite party and he was not returned.

From the records of the upper branch of the legislature it seems that Montana early became born in Champaign county, Ohio, August 5, 1855, and was early inured to farm labor, attending school during the winter months. He afterward entered the Swedenborgian College, where he graduated in 1876. He then read law in Dayton, Ohio, with the firm of Houk & McMahon, was admitted to the bar in 1879, and then practiced his profession for ten years in Springfield. On account of ill health he came to Montana in 1889, was admitted to practice in this State in the fall of that year, and entered into a law partnership with George D. Greene at Boulder. Mr. Showers has always been an adherent to the principles of the Democratic party, and was the choice of his party, also the Populists' party, for District Judge, having been elected to that important office November 8, 1892. He is now serving as District Judge of the Fifth District, comprising the counties of Beaver Head, Jefferson and Madison. Judge Showers is possessed of an easy and prepossessing manner, is endowed with a fine, thoughtful and judicial mind, and has acquired a thorough knowledge of the law.

In 1878, in Urbana, Ohio, he was united in marriage with Louisa Cralle, a native of Virginia, and a daughter of Richard Cralle, of French extraction, but the family have long been residents of Virginia. Our subject and wife have one daughter, Mabel, who was born in 1881. They have a pleasant home in Boulder, and have made many warm friends in their community.

HON. J. B. LOSEE, a prominent business man and enterprising citizen of Anaconda, Montana, was born in Genesee county, New York, August 26, 1849. He is a descendant of French ancestors who were early settlers in Canada. His father, Dr. James Losee, was born in New York State and was married to Elizabeth Mathews, also a native of New York State. They spent their lives in Genesee county, where he was a successful practicing physician for many years, his death occurring there in the seventy-second year of his age. His widow still survives him, and is now (1894) eighty years of age. They had nine children, of whom only four are living.

Judson B., the subject of our sketch, is the youngest of the family. He was educated in the public schools, and when his older brothers enlisted in the service of their country, in 1861, the work of a man devolved upon him, at the early age of thirteen years. Soon afterward he began to do for himself as a clerk in a store, and followed that occupation for ten years.

In 1878 Mr. Losee came up the Missouri river to Fort Benton, reaching that historical town on June 11. He clerked two years for Raleigh & Clark in Helena, and then, in partnership with A. G. Clark, Jr., opened a store at Glendale, and did a successful business there for several years. After severing his connection with Mr. Clark Mr. Losee formed a partnership with Charles Armstrong, and they did a banking and mercantile business there for a number of years, and also had branch stores at Hecla, Lyon and Twin Bridges. In 1886 they sold out their business in Glendale to the H. M. & B. Co., and built his present brick block in Anaconda. This building is 25x120 feet, is located at 110 Main street, one of the best business locations in the city, and is stocked with a fine assortment of dry goods, boots and shoes and gentlemen's furnishing goods; and here Mr. Losee has since been doing an extensive retail business. In 1888 he took in as partner Mr. Maxwell, who had been his bookkeeper at Glendale for seven years, and the firm name has since been Losee & Maxwell.

Mr. Losee was married in 1869 to Miss Alice Flagg, a native of Kalamazoo, Michigan, and daughter of Mr. Isaac Flagg of that city. They have three children, Gracie, Bessie and Harry.

Politically, Mr. Losee is a Republican. In 1892 he was elected to represent Beaver Head and Deer Lodge counties in the State Legislature, which term of office has not yet expired. While in the Legislature, he has m dissatisfied with the location of her capital at Virginia City and a bill to remove it to Deer Lodge was introduced into that body in 1868. This was not formally reported, but still the question was agitated from one session to another and finally voted upon in 1872, but to no purpose. Two years later a vote was taken to remove it to Helena, which prevailed. We read in the journals of that day much that, if true, is to the discredit of the parties concerned; but let it be taken into consideration that the really bright newspapers of the State were at that time far from all the great world centers of excitement and probably made the most of all such things as this moving of the capital, as they certainly did in politics,—mountains out of molehills.

Of these bright papers, dead and living, I have a list of seventy-two; and even yet the list is not complete, for I miss the newspaper which said to another newspaper in response to its advice to boil the water of a certain mining town, "Boil it? better fry it!"

The first of this astonishingly long list was the weekly Montana Post, Virginia City, August, 1864, edited by an Englishman; next the weekly Montana Democrat, same place, November, 1865, and edited by Bruce and Wilson, Americans: the third was the Tri-Weekly Republican, at Helena, the first there. The Herald, Helena, September, 1866, was the first Republican newspaper in Montana.

The first public school opened in Helena, late in 1867, and was taught by William I.

many friends, and has been an active and successful worker. In many of the public enterprises of Anaconda he has been active and helpful. He was one of the organizers of the Standard Fire Brick Company, and like most of the successful business men of Montana Mr. Losee has invested in mines and has a number of mining interests which will ultimately prove valuable. He is vice-president of the Red Lyon Mining Company.

Fraternally, Mr. Losee is indentified with the Masonic order.

ALEXANDER MCKAY, one of Virginia City's earliest and most respected pioneer miners and citizens, was born in Glasglow, Scotland, May 15, 1832. His remote ancestors were Highlanders, but later generations of the family lived in the lowlands of Scotland. He was reared and educated in his native town, and there learned the trade of plasterer, at which he worked in that city until 1854.

In 1854 Mr. McKay came to the United States. He landed in New York city and worked there, in Canada, and in the Southern States, and was in Kansas during the troublous days immediately preceding the Civil war. In 1860 we find him en route to Colorado, crossing the plains with oxen. He spent two years at Denver, then a small town, and also for a while was at California Gulch. When gold was discovered at Bannack and the news spread over the country, he, in company with about 130 men, started with horse teams and thirty-two wagons for Bannack, marking out their own road and fording the streams and rivers.

Arriving at Bannack they found the mining camp a scene of great activity. Mr. McKay mined there until the discovery of gold at Alder Gulch, to which place he directed his steps in July, 1863, finding that camp also full of miners bent on securing the precious metal. He paid $500 for a fourth interest in a claim and worked hard until winter set in, during that time taking out $3,000. Then on account of the scarcity of water, he sold out, receiving $750 for his share. Since that time a deal of gold has been taken from the claim. In July, 1864, he came to Bevin's Gulch and purchased 200 feet of land for $500, and here he became permanently located, succeeding well and from time to time adding to his claim. Now his claim extends for a length of two miles, and in its operation he employs usually about fifteen men. He has invested largely in lands, owns a comfortable home in Virginia City, and loans his surplus funds.

Mr. McKay was married in Kansas, in 1860, to Miss Caroline Hanson, a native of Germany. She has been with him in all his meanderings and has proved herself a true and faithful helpmate. They have two daughters: Flora, the elder, was born on the plains, between Denver and California Gulch, in the spring of 1861, and is now the wife of Dr. C. A. McNulty. The other daughter, Mary, was born in Virginia City on the last day of 1863. She is the wife of R. H. Herhold.

Personally, Mr. McKay is an intelligent and pleasing gentleman, standing high in the esteem of his fellow citizens. He has been a Republican ever since that party was organized.

EDMOND HAMEL, deceased, one of the representative early settlers of Montana, and one of the late proprietors of the Western Hotel, was born in Canada West, January 19, 1840, and is of French descent. His ancestors located in Canada in an early day, where the father of our subject, Francis Hamel, was born. He married Miss Delarde Perron, and they had eight children, seven of whom are living. The mother died at the age of thirty-eight years; and the father, who now resides with Mr.

Marshall and Mrs. R. M. Forby, and the first church bell was heard there during the following year. Of course preaching had been had years before; in fact, there were already several churches; but the clear, exhilarating cheer of the church bell had not been heard till two young ladies raised the funds for it by going around among the miners and merchants. But the first Protestant sermon ever preached in old Montana was delivered by a colored man, an immigrant who had crossed the plains by way of Salt Lake to Bannack, where this first sermon was delivered, in the winter of the first discovery of gold, 1862. The name of this good man can not be recalled, but he was a Methodist.

Let it be borne always in mind, however, that the Catholics had been preaching to the Indians under the lead of Father De Smet and other good men for many decades before this date, and they were the first now to come forward to comfort the sick and dying, whether Catholic or Protestant. Being first on the ground they, of course, built the first churches in almost all the crowded camps.

Of the three wonderful men who gave long lives of toil and patient endeavor in the hope of taming the wild red men of Montana, I choose to make mention of the one who had least to say for himself, Anthony Ravalli. Father De Smet left us many full pages, dying at last with friends in St. Louis; Father Broulette wrote amply in Latin, and died in Washington, at the home of his old friend, Ben Haliday, once of Montana; but this one of the three good fathers fell in Montana.

Hamel, has reached the age of eighty-two years. Edward Hamel was reared to manhood in his native country, where he learned the blacksmith's trade. From 1856 to 1859 he worked at his trade in Burlington, Vermont, and then went to San Francisco, and next to Calaveras county, where he was engaged in repairing miners' tools. After two years spent at that occupation he went to Virginia City, Nevada, and was the discoverer of the Austin mine from which he afterward took out many thousand dollars he finally sold the property for $10,000. Next he spent a year and a half in Canada, then came up the Missouri river to Fort Benton, Montana, worked at his trade six months in Helena, next went to Deer Lodge, later to Alder Gulch, and in 1869 came to Frenchtown. In company with Theodore Bedard, he opened a shop in this city; but as soon as gold was discovered at Cedar creek he went to that place, where he mined with his usual success. In 1870 he came again to Frenchtown and engaged with his former partner in the stock business, in which they continued until Mr. Hamel's death, which occurred June 23, 1894, from pneumonia. Although he suffered much he never complained. He received the last rites of the Catholic Church. He and Mr. Bedard invested in farm land until they owned together 3,000 acres, and were also owners of the gristmill and hotel in Frenchtown. In 1887 they came into possession of a flock of sheep, and continued in the business of sheep-rearing, giving one share to J. Joiner of Dupuyer, Choteau county.

Mr. Hamel was married March 8, 1883, to Miss Melvina Bergearon, of French extraction, and they had five children, Alberto, Evon, Florence, Edmond and a babe yet unnamed.

Politically Mr. Hamel was formerly a Democrat, but he more recently began to act with the "People's" party. The family are members of the Catholic Church, and are highly respected by the community in which they reside. Mr. Hamel was well known to be a sincere and upright gentleman, whose influence was always for good.

IRA A. LEIGHTON, a successful medical practitioner of Boulder, and physician of the Boulder Hot Springs, was born in Maine, March 8, 1858. His ancestors were English people, who came to Massachusetts prior to the Revolutionary war. His grandfather, George B. Leighton, was born in that State, was one of the prominent citizens of his community, and lived to the age of 106 years. The Doctor's father, Ira Leighton, the eldest son of his father's family, was also born in Massachusetts, in 1845. He was married in 1866 to Miss Eunice Tibbets, a native of Maine, and they had eight sons. The parents have resided for many years in Pittsfield, Maine.

Ira A. Leighton, their youngest child, graduated at the West Brook Seminary in 1880. He afterward read medicine with Dr. W. S. Howe, an allopathic physician of Lewiston, Maine, next attended the Michigan University at Ann Arbor, took both regular and homœopathic lectures, and graduated at the homœopathic department in 1885. While at Ann Arbor, Mr. Leighton was invited to accept the position of physician of the Boulder Hot Springs, and since coming to Montana he has met with the most flattering success, being highly spoken of both as a gentleman and physician. The springs have gained a wide and favorable reputation on account of its valuable medical properties, and many remarkable cures have been performed in severe cases of rheumatism, kidney dis-

Anthony Ravalli was an Italian, born at Ferrara, May 16, 1812. He entered, November 12, 1827, at the age of fifteen, the Society of Jesus. After his noviceship, he devoted himself, for several years, to the study of belles-lettres, philosophy, chemistry, mathematics, and the natural sciences. He then passed to impart to others the knowledge in which he had perfected himself, and taught for a time in Turin, Piedmont and in other parts of Italy. Later on he completed his course of divinity and was raised to the priesthood, and after a third year of noviceship, as customary in the Society of Jesus, took his last vows in religion, April 21, 1844. With a longing for the Indian missions from the beginning of his religious life, Father Ravalli, whilst preparing for the sacred ministry, sought also to store himself with every useful knowledge that would render him more efficient in the double object of christianizing and civilizing the savage; and to the study of philosophical and theological books he added the study of medicine, under some of the ablest physicians of Rome; and, making himself an apprentice also in the artist's studio and mechanic's shop, he could handle with considerable skill the chisel and brush of the artist as well as the tools and implements of almost every trade.

The pioneer of christianity and civilization in what is now Montana, Father P. DeSmet, in his second trip to this country had permanently established, in 1841, a Jesuit mission amongst the Flathead Indians, in the Bitter Root valley, and the following year had returned to Europe to raise means and laborers to help him cultivate the large and promising field now open in the very heart of the Rocky mountains.

Father Ravalli was amongst the first who joined Father DeSmet's little band of apostolic heroes. Taking leave of his parents, whom he was never to see again, and bidding forever farewell to his native land in the summer of 1843, he repaired to Flushing, Holland, whence in the month of December, of the same year, with Father DeSmet in the lead, he and F. F. Vercruysse, Accotti, Nobili, and Bro. Francis Huybrechts, sailed for their distant mission.

eases, various skin diseases, etc. The Doctor is an enthusiast in regard to the wonderful efficiency of the springs.

Dr. Leighton married Miss Cora M. Hartell, a native of Kansas City, and they reside in a pleasant cottage at the Hot Springs. In political matters, the Doctor affiliates with the Republican party, and for the past seven years has held the position of County Physician of Jefferson county. In his social relations, he is a member of the Masonic fraternity.

COLONEL JAMES KING, one of Montana's earliest pioneers and one of her most successful and respected citizens, is a native of Morrisburg, Canada, where he was reared and educated. In 1851 he settled in Chicago, where he was for a time paymaster for the Illinois Central Railroad while it was building its line to Kankakee. After this he entered the employ of the wholesale dry-goods firm of Mills & Company, Chicago, with which he remained until 1858, becoming thoroughly acquainted with the wholesale business. Severing his connection with that firm, he engaged in business on his own account in Galena, Illinois, where he continued successfully until 1862, when he removed to Montana.

Upon coming to Montana, Mr. King brought with him a stock of goods, making the journey up the Missouri river as far as Milk river, and from there transferring to Fort Benton with mule teams and wagons. There was then a camp of about forty people at Prickly Pear (now Montana City), and there Mr. King opened some of his goods and conducted a store for about two months. Then he moved to Deer Lodge. He built the first store in Deer Lodge, and under the firm name of King & Gillette he engaged in business. January 1, 1863, Mr. King hired a half-breed to pilot him to Salt Lake City, and from there by stage he returned East. In the meantime they had removed their store to Bannack City. He purchased goods in the East and in the spring returned to Montana and started a store at Virginia City, the first in that place. The boat on which he brought his goods came no further up the river than Snake Point, and Mr. King took a contract to bring all its cargo to Virginia City, at thirty-five cents per pound. He continued this freighting in addition to his mercantile business for a number of years, and did a very large and paying business in both. In 1865 he opened his mercantile establishment in Helena, and for many years he was one of the largest and most successful wholesale dealers in general merchandise in Montana. In the winter of 1864–5 he returned East again, buying goods and brought back a large stock in the spring.

From his first arrival in Montana Mr. King became one of the most prominent factors in her development. He built the toll road from Virginia City to Helena and also the toll road to Prickly Pear cañon, the length of the latter being sixteen miles and costing $60,000 in gold. These roads were a great necessity and proved of inestimable value at that time. He obtained his charter from the first Legislature assembled at Bannack City. The toll on the road for the round trip with oxen and wagon was $15, and the road paid $35,000 in one season. After keeping up the Virginia City road until 1867 or '68, he sold it for $25,000.

It was with the rush in the summer of 1865 that Mr. King came to Helena. In a short time a thriving little town was started, and from the very first Mr. King has been identified with its development. He built the first business block in the city, opposite where the Cosmopol

In the spring of 1845 Father Ravalli was sent amongst the Kalispels, where he learned the wonderful secret of living without the necessaries of life, as good Father Hœcken had been doing all along for about a year before. The fathers' bill of fare was principally roots and berries, and that year's crop having failed they had little of either.

Father Ravalli employed himself for several months in teaching, through an interpreter, the Indians, baptizing their children and such adults as were sufficiently instructed, attending the sick, and assisting Father Hœcken in the construction of a chapel and a poor shelter.

In September he was ordered to Colville to build a chapel and open a mission amongst the Colville Indians, whence, however, scarcely a month after, he was recalled and sent to St. Mary's to replace Father Zerbinati, who had died there during the summer.

St. Mary's was the mission amongst the Flatheads that had been established in 1841. It was located a short distance from where Stevensville now is, on the right bank of the St. Mary's known now as the Bitter Root river, just between the present mission buildings and old Fort Owen. It is here that the first attempt at agriculture was made in what is now the State of Montana, and here was raised, in 1842, by the Jesuit Fathers, from seed brought over from Colville by Father DeSmet, the first wheat and potato crop, to the great surprise and delight of the natives, who now saw for the first time the way and advantage of tilling the soil.

Though from this on there had been wheat at the mission, there was no bread, except that which could be made by pounding the wheat on a stone or in a mortar. Father Ravalli's ingenuity and mechanical skill soon found the way out of the difficulty, and in a comparatively short time he had all built, rigged up and running by water a miniature mill, the first flour mill in the country. Bread was here now a tangible reality as well as an associated idea with wheat and wheat-raising for the Indians and the Fathers too.

Father Ravalli built here also the first saw-itan Hotel now stands. As the place improved he became largely interested in real estate and also in placer mining, and in 1872 he retired from the mercantile business in order to give his attention to his other varied interests. In Confederate Gulch he has for many years conducted large placer mining operations. In the early days his firm employed as many as fifty men, paying $8 a day for eight hours' work. In this way they spent $125,000 in getting to bed rock. They had for some time a five-foot flume and later a seven-foot one. Their ground and improvements cost in the neighborhood of $290,000. These mines have been operated for many years and are still yielding large quantities of gold.

Mr. King also has large land and water interests in Montana, he being president of the Castle Land Company Their town site is in Meagher county and is adjacent to a large number of valuable mines that are in active operation. Here the company are making many improvements, putting in water works and electric lights and all other modern improvements. The town has now about 2,000 inhabitants. Railroads are being built to it, and with the present outlook it promises to be the Leadville of Montana. He is also interested in various other corporations. Mr. King was instrumental in establishing the first mail route in the Territory of Montana; he helped to organize and was the first president of the Montana Fair Association; and he was also one of the founders of the first library in Helena, out of which has grown the present extensive Helena Public Library.

In 1858 Mr. King was married to Miss Eliza M. Lunn, a native of Illinois. Her father, William Lunn, was born in England. Mr. and Mrs. King have four children, namely; Walter J. Warren C., Benjamin E. and Laura B. Mrs. King died, in Chicago, in 1876, survived by her husband and children.

Mr. King voted for John C. Fremont for President, and has ever since been identified with the Republican party, having rendered the party much valued service. He has always declined office, but during the administration of Governor Green Clay Smith he was commissioned Colonel and served as such on the Governor's staff. He belongs to the order of the Elks, and while not a member of any church he attends the Unitarian service.

Thomas Cruse, president and founder of the Thomas Cruse Savings Bank of Helena, and one of Montana's best citizens, is a native of the Emerald Isle. He was born in county Cavan, in 1836, a son of Irish parents. In the private schools of his native country he received his education, and in 1856, at the age of twenty, he emigrated to the United States, landing at New York. He remained in that city until 1863, when he directed his course toward California, making the journey by way of the Isthmus of Panama and in due time landing at San Francisco. Until the summer of 1866 his time was divided between California, Nevada and Idaho.

In 1866 Mr. Cruse came to Montana, and at first was engaged in prospecting at Virginia City. The following year he came to Helena, but soon afterward went to Trinity and engaged in placer mining and prospecting for quartz mines. For some years he was thus occupied. In April, 1876, he discovered the famous Drum Lummon mine, and continued its development, taking out considerable gold, the mine being a success from the start. In 1882 he sold it for a million and a half dollars, retaining one-sixth interest in it. Since then it has been further developed and is to-day one of Montana's famous and best-paying mill; four wagon tires welded together furnishing the crank, and a fifth one, with plenty of filing and hammering, the saw.

He remained here at St. Mary's a companion to Father Mengarini, from the fall of 1845 to the fall of 1850.

The Fathers' manner of living, in the main, was like the Indians, their ordinary fare being roots, berries, dried buffalo meat with its tallow, and game when they could get it. As to fish, the river flowing by, a fine, beautiful stream, whose waters are clear as crystal, and were then alive with mountain trout, supplied them in abundance. They had enough to eat, but isolation and continual dangers on every side rendered their life far from pleasant. Their mail was brought to them once a year, or rather, they had to go for it themselves as far as Fort Vancouver, when once a year, with an escort of Indians and a few pack animals they would go for their mass wine and what little other provisions they were in absolute need of. And these they were not even then sure to get. For three years Father Ravalli received not one single letter, and twice in five years the Indians carrying the goods were attacked by hostile bands, wounded and robbed of all they had.

Nor was it safer at the mission than on the road. Both the Bannacks and the Blackfeet, then two powerful nations, were mortal enemies of the Flatheads, whose country they would raid time and again, band after band running off ponies and murdering some of the Flathead nation almost every other day. It was not safe for the Fathers to venture even a short distance from the stockade they had built for self-protection. The valley was then covered with thick, high underbrush, and there the Blackfoot or Bannack robber would lurk, hide and lay in ambush for days biding his chance to come out, steal and murder and then run off, if he could, with the scalp or ponies of some Flathead. The Fathers from the stockade, late every night, would fire off a couple of shots in the air, as a make-believe to the robbers prowling about, that within there was somebody on the watch and always on the alert to give the alarm.

It happened by this time that a Blackfoot mines. Mr. Cruse has all these years continued his mining enterprises and owns several valuable properties, among which may be mentioned the Old Blue Cloud, which Mr. Cruse thinks will equal or surpass the Drum Lummon, and also owns the North Star, which is an extension of the Drum Lummon mine.

Besides his mining operations, Mr. Cruse has also of recent years turned his attention to other enterprises. In 1887 he established his own bank, the Thomas Cruse Savings Bank of Helena, the first savings bank organized in Montana. From its beginning it proved a success and is now one of the most prosperous financial institutions of its kind in Montana. Mr. Cruse is also the owner of one of the largest sheep and cattle ranches in the State.

He was married in 1886 to Miss Margaret Carter, who died in December of that year, leaving an infant daughter, Mary. He resides with his little girl in their pleasant home in Helena.

Mr. Cruse has been an ardent Democrat all his life, and is a devout member of the Catholic Church. He has the highest confidence and good will of his fellow citizens. He is a man of too much solid sense to be injured by his prosperity, and he understands making a laudable and judicious use of the things of this world which it has been his good fortune to acquire.

THE THOMAS CRUSE SAVINGS BANK, of Helena, is one of Montana's most solid financial institutions. It was founded by Mr. Thomas Cruse in 1887, with a capital of $100,000, its organization dating prior to any other savings bank in the State. Its officers are as follows: Thomas Cruse, president; Frank H. Cruse, vice-president; W. J. Sweeny, treasurer; and W. J. Cook, assistant treasurer. The bank has constantly grown in favor ever since it was founded, and has met with marked success. It has a very large deposit account, and in addition to its large savings business also does general banking and makes a specialty of handling State, county, city and school bonds and warrants, for which they pay the highest cash price.

JOHN J. ELLIS, one of the County Commissioners of Cascade county, and a Montana pioneer of 1864, now residing at Great Falls, is a native of Illinois, born in Summer Hill, February 5, 1846.

He comes of English ancestors who settled in America previous to the Revolution. Daniel Ellis, his father, was born in Massachusetts in the year 1800. He married Miss Jane Hazleton, a native of England, in 1834. After his marriage he emigrated to the then new State of Illinois, took up land from the Government and improved the same and made it his home for the rest of his life. He died in 1845. His good wife survives him and is now eighty years of age. John J. was the fourth born in their family of seven children. He was reared on their frontier farm, having limited opportunities for an education, and consequently got what he has learned in the dear school of experience.

When he was sixteen years of age, Mr. Ellis started for Montana. He drove an ox team across the plains and was four months in making the journey to Virginia City, where he arrived in the fall of 1864. At first he mined a little, but soon engaged in hauling freight between Virginia City and Salt Lake, and continued in this business for six years, during this time visiting nearly every mining camp in the Territory and camping out most of the time. A part of his time he had Government contracts, taking supplies to Fort Shaw. In 1880 he retired from freighting and turned his attention to stock-raising in the thus hiding in the brush was captured by the Flatheads. They took him to their camp and after a short consultation amongst themselves shot him. There was at the same time in the camp another Blackfoot, who had received the hospitality of the Flathead nation. Afraid now himself of his own life, he at once started off on a run to get away, and, by thus falling into suspicion with the Flatheads, was shot at and wounded, and three days after died, instructed and baptized by Father Ravalli.

The killing of these two Indians, particularly of the latter, who was a favorite with his tribe, was soon to be avenged by the Blackfoot nation, who, mixing up in the affair also the Fathers, resolved to come in force and kill as many Flatheads as they could and also the "Black Robes" that were amongst them. It was in September, and the Flatheads had started off on their annual buffalo hunt, leaving behind only one old man, two boys who were staying with the Fathers, some old women and a few children—all helpless and defenceless. These, every evening, would move in with their lodges and pass the night within the stockade for protection. Father Mengarini had gone to the Cœur d'Alene mission to consult with the general superior, and at St. Mary's there was only Father Ravalli left with Brother Claessens, who is still living and is now stationed at St. Peter's mission.

Early in the morning, September 12th, a Blackfoot yell from outside the stockade rent the air around as well as the ears of those who were within, and Father Ravalli, the Brother and the rest now expected every moment to be attacked, killed and scalped every one. But the Blackfeet not knowing how many there might be inside, did not dare to come to an attack. One of the two boys mentioned above, and who was helping the Fathers in the kitchen, ventured out of the enclosure and fell dead as soon as he was spied. He was the only one killed, and soon after the Blackfeet left without doing further damage than driving off all the horses that were on the place.

To-day, we here mention it in passing, and as a contrast, Blackfeet and Flatheads send their children together to the Fathers' school at St. Ignatius mission.

Amongst all these dangers the Fathers kept on cheerfully in their good work of improving

Sun River country. He has since been largely engaged in raising cattle and sheep, at which he has been very successful, having owned as high as 2,000 head of cattle and 12,000 sheep. He has been the owner of about 3,000 acres of land besides considerable real estate in Great Falls, and has built in Great Falls a very fine brick residence, which he and his family occupy. He is also a stockholder in the Montana Brewing Company, of which he is president. This company have a large and valuable plant, are running night and day, and make a choice article of beer, for which they have a ready sale. Mr. Ellis was one of the organizers and is a director of the Cascade Bank.

Mr. Ellis was married in 1869 to Miss Ida A. Sykes, a native of Missouri, and the daughter of Mr. H. E. Sykes, a Montana pioneer. Mr. and Mrs. Ellis have three children, all born in Montana, namely: Charles J., Alice A. and Laura E.

Mr. Ellis has always been a stanch Republican. In Lewis and Clarke county he served two terms as County Commissioner, and after locating in Great Falls he was in 1892 elected County Commissioner of Cascade county, in which position he is now serving, and is doing his best to conduct the affairs of his county with the same economy and good judgment with which he has always managed his own business. Fraternally, he is an Odd Fellow. He is one of the many men who came to Montana without means in the pioneer days and who have by their own unaided efforts accumulated a good property and at the same time have aided in the improvement and development of the State.

HON. PARIS GIBSON, the founder of Great Falls and one of the most prominent citizens of Montana, capable, farseeing and enterprising, is a native of the State of Maine, born at Brownfield, Oxford county, July 1, 1830. On his father's side he is of Scottish ancestry, while his mother's ancestry were from England.

Timothy Gibson, his grandfather, came from England to the colonies and was a soldier in the English army in the Colonial-French war. Joseph Howard, maternal grandfather of the subject of this sketch, fought in the Revolutionary army for independence, taking part in the battle at Saratoga and the surrender of Burgoyne. Abel Gibson, our subject's father, was born in the State of New Hampshire, married Miss Ann Howard, a native of Maine, and was a farmer and lumberman. He reared to years of maturity seven children, and died in his sixty-second year; his wife lived to be nearly ninety years of age. Of this family, however, only three of the daughters and the subject of this sketch are now living.

Mr. Gibson was educated at Bowdoin College, Maine, and graduated in the class of 1851. Soon afterward he was elected a Representative from his county to the Legislature. After this, his father having died, he returned to the old home and for a number of years conducted the farm.

In 1858 he set his face toward the West, locating in Minneapolis, Minnesota, then a village of but a few hundred people. In connection with William W. Eastman he built the first flouring mill of that city (the Cataract Mill), and afterward built and operated the North Star Woolen Mills, which became noted for the excellence of spiritually and temporally the condition of the Indian children, whose good will, docility and affection were to the Fathers a sufficient compensation, and all they expected here below, for all their toils and hardships. But even in this the Fathers were sorely tried.

A band of woolfers and trappers, whose only religion was whisky and women, when winter was about to set in, would flock to the mission from the woods, and under the pretext that they had come to attend to their religious duties, expected and claimed to be supported at the hands of the Fathers. On not receiving all they wanted or craved for, they went to work to poison the minds of the Indians and set them up and turn them against the Fathers. They knew the language, being married to Indian women and went around speaking against the missionaries, inventing vile, nasty stories and circulating them amongst the Indians. The mischief was soon done, and the Flatheads, who had been thus far so willing, so docile and so affectionate toward the Fathers, became careless, indifferent, insolent and pretentious to a degree, that from this on, all the exertions of the missionaries in behalf of the Indians availed little or nothing.

Consequently, with this and what was said above, all the particulars of which are from notes in Father Ravalli's own hand, in the fall of 1850 St. Mary's was temporarily abandoned, and Father Ravalli was then transferred to the Cœur d'Alene mission, of which shortly after he became superior. Here he planned and built the large and bold chapel that, like a spell of fairyland in the midst of dense, interminable forests, has filled many a gold-seeker with surprise and unwonted emotion.

* * * * *

In the fall of 1860, the mission was temporarily closed, and Father Ravalli was then assigned to Santa Clara, California, where for a time he filled the important office of Master of Novices.

But the land of fruit and flowers had no charms for Father Ravalli, and, returning in 1863 to Montana, was first stationed at St. Ignatius mission, whence, in August, 1864, he their products. Mr. Gibson met with business reverses during the panic of 1873, and in 1879 he came to Montana, locating at Fort Benton. He engaged in the sheep business that year, being interested with Henry Macdonald in one of the first flocks of sheep driven into northern Montana. He has since been engaged, to a greater or less extent, in this business, and no man in Montana has done more to promote the welfare of the flockmaster and advance this industry, which has grown to be one of prime importance in the State.

In 1882 he first saw the falls of the Missouri river and examined into the resources of the surrounding region. He was deeply impressed with the advantages of the situation, with its unlimited water power, inexhaustible measures of coal and vast extent of agricultural and grazing lands, and from that moment set for himself the task of founding and building a city at the cataracts of the Missouri. In November, 1882, he laid his plans before James J. Hill, of St. Paul, who readily joined interest with him in the enterprise. Two years were spent in acquiring title to townsite and coal lands, and it was not until 1884 that the foundation of the new town was laid, although in the correct sense, its start was not made until 1887, when the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railroad, now the Great Northern, was completed to that point. Since that time Great Falls has made marvelous progress, and is now a city of 12,000 people. With the exception of the Niagara Falls, it has the greatest water power in the United States. It has already large smelters, refineries and flouring mills, and the day seems near at hand when it will be the leading industrial city of the Northwest.

Mr. Gibson has been connected with the affairs of Great Falls since the town had its beginning, having been actively engaged in real-estate business, stock-growing, mining, etc. He is the promoter of the public-park system of Great Falls, which has no equal in the Northwest between Minneapolis and Portland. He has given a great deal of his time to the general development of the coal, iron and agricultural interests in the Great Falls region.

It is much in Mr. Gibson's favor to be able to say that, while he has had so much to do with the founding of the city of Great Falls and the advancement of her interests to the present time, he has made such a record that he has the esteem and confidence of his fellow citizens, and all joinin speaking of him in the highsst terms of commendation.

Mr. Gibson has always been a conscientious adherent of the Democratic party. In 1889 his fellow citizens elected him a member of the State Constitutional Convention which formed the present admirable State Constitution of Montana. He was also elected a member of the first State Senate of Montana, in which position he served most creditably to himself and his constituents; and it may be said to his credit that, though defeated in the measure, he was a strong advocate of the consolidation of all the State institutions of higher education into one, to be called the University of Montana. Mr. Gibson is convinced of the correctness of his position on this question of such vast educational interest to the people of the State, and is pleased to go on the record as its advocate.

JOHN LARSON, of Marysville, Montana, was born in Denmark, June 14, 1840. He was raised to manhood in his native place, but in 1863 came to America, landing in Quebec. He afterward went to Racine, where he passed to St. Peter's mission amongst the Blackfeet Indians. Here he was when the memorable stampede to the Sun river country imaginary gold diggings occurred. It was during a bitter, intensely cold winter, and many brave but unfortunate fellow had ears, nose, hands or feet frozen. Father Ravalli threw the mission buildings open to all, and with his kind attention and medical skill rendered services that were never forgotten. In the spring of 1866 Father Ravalli moved across the range to the west side and was stationed for a time at Hell Gate, near Missoula, amongst the whites. This was what may be called the gold-diggings period of Montana, and Father Ravalli had now begun to do for the white man what he had done all along and never ceased to do for the Indian. He went around from one place to another, attending the sick and ministering to the spiritual wants of both the sick and the healthy. This double work of mercy, now begun at Hell Gate, and continued in all along in after years till he was able to move about, won to Father Ravalli the esteem and love of every miner, viz.: of all the whites in the country, for all then in Montana were, or had been miners.

In the fall of 1866 St. Mary's mission was re-opened and one year after Father Ravalli, leaving Hell Gate, had his home again where he had lived in 1845, at dear old St. Mary's, as he would always call it. Here we may say, he had opened his missionary life and hither he had now come to close it.

His last illness was a long and trying one, and he lay four years a helpless and patient victim to intense, unmitigated suffering. But the angels had now come, at last, to take Father Ravalli to his rest on their feast day, and he peacefully passed away on the 2nd instant, in his seventy-third year of age, fifty-seven years a Jesuit and forty years a missionary in the Rocky mountains.

In his ways, manners and life he was as simple as a child. Intensely affectionate, he was no less demonstrative than sincere and constant in his affection. To a pious lady of distinction who had asked him whether, during the many learned the cooper's trade. Being imbued with the spirit of adventure, and hearing of the gold discoveries in Idaho, he started for that country, crossing the plains on the Bozeman route. They were not disturbed by the Indians, but saw much of their work along the way, the company having buried eight men that had been murdered at different places. Some had been partly buried, but had been dug up by the coyotes. Mr. Larson mined at Virginia City for a time, receiving $7 per day. During the Silver Bow stampede he went to that place and took a claim, but his work there proved unsuccessful. He spent three years in German Gulch, Deer Lodge county, where he was successful in placer mining; next he went to Blackfoot City during the excitement there, and in 1879 came to Marysville. The city at that time contained only the log hut of Thomas Cruse. Mr. Larson had a team of horses and a wagon, and immediately engaged in teaming for the Penobscot mine. He also spent four years at the same occupation for the Drum Lummon mine. He now owns about thirty head of large Norman Percheron horses, and is engaged in hauling for the Bald Butte Milling Company, in which he is very successful. Mr. Larson also owns an interest in the South Drum Lummon, and in the Cruse Mountain Consolidated Company, both located on Cruse Hill. In 1883 he built his first cabin in Marysville, and in 1887 erected his present residence on the same lot.

December 24, 1887, our subject was united in marriage with Miss Kate W. Constan, a native of Hasting, Minnesota. They have had three children: John H., Annie K. and George H. Mr. Larson is a charter member of the I. O. O. F. at Marysville, is Past Master of the A. O. U. W. of this city, and is a member of the Society of Montana Pioneers. In political matters he is identified with the Republican party. He has made what he now owns by hard work and economy, and is ranked among the worthy and reliable citizens of Marysville.

WILLIAM O'BRIEN, one of the enterprising business men of Sheridan, Montana, was born in Washington county, New York, January 20, 1856. He is of old Irish ancestry, his father being Michael O'Brien, a native of the Emerald Isle, who emigrated to the United States when a young man, as early as 1830. Michael O'Brien settled in Washington county, New York, where he was subsequently married to Miss Ellen Ryan, also a native of Ireland. They purchased land in Washington county, where they were successfully engaged in farming and where they reared a family of three children. Mrs. O'Brien still resides at the old homestead, her husband having died in 1859.

William O'Brien is now the only one left of the three. In 1877, on attaining his majority, he decided to seek his fortune in the far West, and accordingly came overland to Montana, making the journey in company with two other yonng men. This was just after the Custer massacré. Many of the Indians were on the war path, and traveling through their country at that time was extremely hazardous, especially for small parties. They traveled in a wagon until they reached the Red Cloud Agency, when they purchased ponies which they rode the rest of the way. After several encounters with the Indians and numerous hairbreadth escapes, they reached their destination in safety. For two years Mr. O'Brien was employed at farm work, receiving his board and $40 per month. In 1881 he established himself in business in Sheridan, the little building he at first occupied being years he had lived in the Rocky mountains, he had not felt some desire to see once more his native country and father and mother. "Yes," he replied; "and I could have had that pleasure; but then," continued he, "the sacrifice would not have been complete," and lowering his head over his breast broke out into tears and sobs like a child.

From his obituary I have gotten much that is of interest in the early church history of Montana, which might well fill a volume of itself. The one laudable thing in the lives of these pious men, next to their continual desire to lead holy lives and help their fellowmen forward, was their extreme modesty. Father Broulette was at the head of the convent school at Vancouver in 1858–9, and as I was teaching near there I was admitted to him once each week, so that he could help me along in my Latin. It was his own offer. He did not try to make me a Catholic, but he did try hard to make me a man. He had crossed and re-crossed the Rocky mountains long before any of the great traders and explorers now famous in song and story, but was as modest as one of his seminary girls in speaking of it. I know well that he was one of those who, with the vicar of the archbishop of Quebec cathedral, celebrated the holy sacrifice of mass on the summit of the Rocky mountains in Montana late in the year 1838.

only 16 x 20 feet, but he met with prosperity from the start, and in 1883 purchased his present property which he has since greatly improved, now having a good business place and enjoying the good will and patronage of the best people in the valley. He has built a good residence in Sheridan, and in the course of his business career has invested in mines and mining.

Mr. O'Brien returned to New York in 1879, and was married to Miss Mary Dooley, one of his old schoolmates. They have three children: Anna M., born in New York: Mary E. and Leah Rosalie.

Politically, Mr. O'Brien is a Democrat. He was elected one of the first Aldermen of Sheridan, and is now serving as one of its School Trustees. He is a member of the A. O. U. W., and is Past Master of the lodge at Sheridan. During the whole of his residence at this place he has taken a lively interest in all the affairs of the town, and has ever been ready to aid in its growth and improvement.

HENRY HARMON CLARK, one of Montana's esteemed pioneers of 1864, and one of the founders of the town of East Helena, was born in Granville, Hampden county, Massachusetts February 5, 1824. His father, Henry Clark, was born at the same place in 1794. He married Irene Strong, also born in the same town in 1796, and they had six daughters and two sons, four of whom still survive. The father was a man of honor and respectability, was a Selectman of his town for many years, and was a member of the State Legislature. The parents lived and died in their native town, the father in 1859, and the mother in 1874.

Henry Harmon Clark, the second child in order of birth, assisted his father on the farm, and attended the public schools. In early life he began working at the carpenter's trade, and followed that occupation for a number of years. In 1850, full of the spirit of adventure, he made the voyage to California by way of the Isthmus, mined for two and a half years on the North Yuba river, and earned about $10 a day while in that State, his largest day's earnings having been $112 in gold dust. In 1853 Mr. Clark returned to his native town; and the residence he built at that time still continues to be one of the best in the place. Soon after his marriage he moved to Independence, Iowa, where he was engaged in farming and stock-raising until 1864, and in that year crossed the plains to Montana. After arriving in this State he began mining at Big Indian, but, not meeting with the same success as in California, he abandoned that occupation and embarked in agricultural pursuits. He first took a meadow ranch of 160 acres in Prickly Pear valley, to which he afterward added eighty acres, and in 1867 he was joined by his wife and two children,—James S., and Jennie R. The latter is now the wife of Frank Donaldson, and resides near her parents. After residing on his ranch eight years, Mr. Clark bought the Prickly Pear Hotel, now in East Helena. While engaged in running the hotel, he became the owner of 160 acres of land, and in 1888 joined Mr. Riggs in the platting of East Helena. He now resides on a farm of ninety acres, where he is engaged in the raising of vegetables and small fruits, and also has 480 acres adjoining this place. Mr. Clark rents his valley farm and is now practically retired from active business.

Mr. and Mrs. Clark have had three children born in Montana. The eldest, Minnie L., is now Mrs. John W. Dudley, and resides in Bismarck, North Dakota. Nettie Irene died at the age of three years, and Noble Henry departed this life in his eleventh year. The latter died of congestion of the brain, having been sick only four days. He was a brilliant young scholar. In political matters, Mr. Clark has been a life-long Democrat. He has served his county as Commissioner four years, was School Trustee at East Helena a number of years, held the office of Register of Elections, and has the honor of being the first Postmaster of East Helena. Mrs. Clark is

CHAPTER XXV.

THE GEOLOGICAL AND SCIENTIFIC SURVEYS OF MONTANA—THE YELLOWSTONE PARK—ARE THE GREAT GEYSERS NEW OR OLD?

THE ponderous reports, covering a dozen years, of Dr. Hayden, so long at the head of our geological surveys, are gold mines of information. Every bird, beast, fruit, flower, whether of sea, river or lake or dry land, that is or ever had been in Montana, is set down here with such precision of detail that I despair of doing anything nearly equal in this department, and shall leave these things as they came from this learned man's pen in an abbreviated and carefully digested appendix.

The official history of the establishment and maintenance of a national park at the headwaters of the Yellowstone river is given in the second volume of his Surveys, under date of 1883:

OFFICE OF THE UNITED STATES
GEOLOGICAL AND GEOGRAPHICAL SURVEY OF THE TERRITORIES,
Washington, D. C., February 1, 1883.

SIR: In presenting what may be regarded as a very complete report on the Yellowstone National Park it may be proper to preface it with a brief history of its inception, at least so far as it relates to this survey.

The first exploraation of the region in which the park is now located, by the survey under my charge, was made during the season of 1871. It was continued under more favorable auspices in 1872. Prior to that time no regular scientific examination had been made, but several private parties had visited it. In the Annual Report for 1871 I gave a brief sketch of their explorations.

In 1869 Messrs. Cook and Folsom, of Montana, ascended the valley of the Yellowstone river to the lake, and thence over the divide a member of the Presbyterian Church. The family have the good wishes and esteem of the entire community.

JOHN A. LANDRAM, Treasurer of Ravalli county, Montana, was born in Pike county, Missouri, February 11, 1842, and is a descendant of Highland Scotch ancestors. The Landrams settled in Kentucky previous to the Revolutionary war, and were prominently identified with the early history of that State, some of the family having fought for independence. A. D. Landram, the father of John A., was born in Kentucky, as was also our subject's mother, whose maiden name was Ann Lindsey. The Lindseys settled in Kentucky about the time the Landrams did. Their family was represented in the Revolution, the war of 1812 and the great Civil war. During the last named struggle there was nearly a regiment of the relatives engaged in the conflict, some on one side and some on the other. A. D. Landram was a merchant and a minister in the Missionary Baptist Church. He removed to Missouri about the year 1839, where he resided up to the time of his death, which occurred in 1861, in the fifty-eighth year of his age. His good wife passed away in 1865, in her sixty-fifth year. Four of their five children are now living, John A. being the youngest of the family.

John A. Landram was reared to manhood in Missouri. In the spring of 1861 he enlisted in the Windsor Guards of the Confederate army, and for a time was on duty as one of General Price's body guards. Later he was in an independent battalion and served in the Second Missouri Cavalry. During the last two years of the war he was in Wood's Battalion. His first battle was that of Cold Camp, after which followed the numerous other engagements in which he participated, among them being those at Wilson's creek, Fort Scott and Dry Wood creek. About this time, receiving news of his father's death, he was permitted to go home and settle up affairs there. In December, 1861, he returned to the army, and his next engagement was during the retreat from Springfield to Elkhorn and the fight that occurred at the latter place. He was then sent to join Beauregard's forces at Corinth, Mississippi, was in numerous engagements in Mississippi, spent most of the winter of 1862-3 in Jackson, and in the spring of 1863 joined the forces that operated on the west side of the Mississippi. He was in the raid with General Price in the fall of 1864, and participated in every battle that General Price was in during the war, except at Lexington and Booneville. At Otterville, Missouri, he was captured, but made his escape in a few hours and returned to his command.

into the geyser basin of the Madison river. They made no special report of this trip. A second party, under General Washburn, surveyor-general of Montana, penetrated to this region in the summer of 1870. He was accompanied by N. P. Langford and Lieutenant G. C. Doane of the United States Army. Both these gentlemen gave to the world most interesting accounts of the wonders of this region, which excited much attention.

A rapid reconnaissance of the Yellowstone district was made by Colonel J. W. Barlow, United States Engineers, during the summer of 1871, and an interesting report was published the following spring.

The results of the surveys under my charge during the years 1871 and 1872 were published in the form of two annual reports with illustrations and maps. Though the maps were not based upon a careful triangulation, and were not, therefore, entirely accurate, they were a great advance upon any work which had been performed previously in this region.

The exploration of the Yellowstone region, in 1871, together with the reports upon it, excited so much attention throughout the country that Congress, during the session of 1871 and 1872, became very much interested in its preservation. Numerous articles, which were published by the periodical press, aided very much to increase this interest among the people. So far as is now known, the idea of setting apart a large tract about the sources of the Yellowstone river as a national park, originated with the writer.

Montana holds, and must through all time hold, the keys to Yellowstone Park, although men may, at favored seasons of the year, climb over the walls instead of passing up the Yellowstone river through the one entrance gate. Here is what the very first official explorer says of the difficulties attending the approach from the south:

"Beyond these [referring to Pryor's river, Clark's Fork, Big Rosebud, and Beaver river]

After the war he became engaged in contract work on the Missouri Pacific Railroad. He helped to build the first dwelling house in Sedalia, Missouri, and worked in the car shops at that place for two years. In 1875 he came to Montana and for two years ran a sawmill. Then he took claim to 160 acres of Government land, located seven and a half miles north of Stevensville, to which he soon afterward added until he became the owner of 320 acres. On this property he lived and prospered until 1888, at which time he removed to Stevensville in order to give his children the advantage of better educational facilities.

Mr. Landram was married in 1869, to Miss Hollie Emmett, a native of Virginia and a descendant of an old Virginia family. They have two children, Eva and Etta.

All his life Mr. Landram has been a supporter of the Democratic party. In 1888 he was elected a Justice of the Peace, and upon the formation of the new county of Ravalli he received the appointment from the State Legislature as Treasurer of this county, in which capacity he is now (1893) serving most efficiently. He has passed all the chairs in both branches of the I. O. O. F., and has represented his lodge in the Grand Lodge of the State. He is also a Past Master of the A. O. U. W.

Ever since coming to Montana Mr. Landram has been thoroughly identified with all its interests. When the Nez Perces Indians made a raid upon the settlers of the Bitter Root valley, Mr. Landram was prompt in organizing a company, of which he was elected Captain, and with it marched against the hostiles He is a citizen of the highest integrity, and enjoys to the fullest extent the confidence and esteem of all who know him.

FRANCIS M. DURFEE, a respected Montana pioneer of 1864, now residing at Phillipsburg, was born in Schoharie county, New York, September 15, 1839.

Mr. Durfee is the eldest of his father's family and is a brother of Judge David M. Durfee, of Phillipsburg, and of whom prominent mention is made elsewhere in this work. For a history of the family the reader is referred to the sketch of Judge Durfee.

Francis M. was reared in Schenectady county, New York, receiving his education in the public schools, and when he started out in life for himself it was as a farm hand. In 1863 he made the journey from Leavenworth, Kansas, to St. Joseph, Missouri, with oxen, and from there across the plains to Denver he traveled with mules. That fall and winter he worked in the Bobtail mine, and the following May (1864) started for Montana He was at Julesburg at the time of the big flood, and he aided in the boating of wagons across the river. Then with an ambulance he went to Fort Laramie, and from there, with Henry Colvin, he continued the journey to Bannack. At Bannack he leased ground and mined, but without success, and from mining he turned his attention to cutting cord-wood. He was among the number that went to the Big Hole excitement. In the spring of 1865 he returned to Helena, and shortly afterward went to Blackfoot, where, with Mr. J. Myres, he was engaged in stripping placer mines, continuing thus occupied until July 4. At this time he was the victim of mountain fever and came near dying, but finally rallied, and when sufficiently recovered returned to Helena and secured employment. A little later he purchased an interest in a sawmill on the Prickly Pear river. In 1867, about the time Phillipsburg got its is the valley of the upper Yellowstone, which is as yet a terra incognita. My expedition passed entirely around, but could not penetrate it. My intention was to enter it from the head of Wind river, but the basaltic ridge previously spoken of intercepted our route and prohibited the attempt. After this obstacle had thus forced us over on the western slope of the Rocky mountains, an effort was made to recross and reach the district in question; but although it was June, the immense body of snow baffled all our exertions, and we were compelled to content ourselves with listening to marvelous tales of burning plains, immense lakes, and boiling springs, without being able to verify these wonders. I know of but two white men who claim to have ever visited this part of the Yellowstone valley—James Bridger and Robert Meldrum. The narratives of both these men are very remarkable, and Bridger, in one of his recitals, described an immense boiling spring that is a perfect counterpart of the geysers of Iceland. As he is uneducated, and had probably never heard of the existence of such natural marvels elsewhere, I have little doubt that he spoke of that which he had actually seen."—Captain Reynolds' Report on Expedition up the Yellowstone River; page 10.

Dr. Hayden says this is the first official mention ever made of Yellowstone Park. Captain John Mullen says, in his report on the military wagon road: "As early as the winter of 1853, which I spent in these mountains, my attention was called to the mild open region lying between the Deer Lodge valley and Fort Laramie. * * * Upon investigating the peculiarities of the country I learned from the Indians, and afterward confirmed by my own explorations, the fact of the existence of an infinite number of hot springs at the headwaters of the Missouri, Columbia, and Yellowstone rivers, and that hot geysers, similar to first start, Mr. Durfee came to the town. Soon afterward he became interested in the Apache Hill, and spent all he had made in trying to develop it, helping to sink a a shaft 130 feet deep and make a tunnel 300 feet long, all of which proved a failure, as they did not find paying ore. In the spring of 1870 Mr. Durfee returned to Helena, and from that time until the spring of 1875 he ran his sawmill there. He then moved it to Rock creek, eighteen miles west of Phillipsburg, where he continued to make lumber until 1882. He then took claim to a tract of land a mile and a quarter east of Phillipsburg, this claim comprising 180 acres. Soon afterward he added to it another 160 acres, and three years later purchased 320 acres more, making in all 560 acres, a splendid farm which he still owns and occupies. A portion of this land is well adapted for hay, and on the rest of it he raises grain. This year, 1894, he raised 1,800 bushels of grain, and his farm annually brings him between five and six thousand dollars.

Mr. Durfee has invested most of his surplus funds in mining enterprises, and now has several valuable claims, both silver and gold. In 1889 he organized the Sunrise Mining and Milling Company, of which he is president and a large stockholder. This company has a 100 horsepower and a ten-stamp mill, and expects soon to put in ten stamps more, the property being located six miles west of Stone Station. The Sunrise mine is now producing about $6,000 per month.

The year before he located his present ranch, Mr. Durfee returned East, and February 28, 1882, was married to Miss Eva Rohrback, a native of Ohio and of German descent. Bringing his bride back with him to Montana, he settled on the farm where he has since resided and which he has improved with a comfortable and attractive residence, and here he and his family have everything that goes to make life happy. His children, Marion C. and Ruby, are both attending school.

Mr. Durfee is a member of the Masonic fraternity, and affiliates with the Republican party. The success he has attained in life, as briefly outlined in this sketch, is ample evidence of his business ability, his perseverance, and his faith in the State of his adoption

DAVID M. DUNGLEBERG, one of the prosperous farmers of Hell Gate valley, Granite county, Montana, has been identified with this State since 1862. Of his life we make the following record:

Mr. Dungleberg's ancestors originated in Germany and some of them were among the early settlers of Pennsylvania. His grandfather, Joseph Dungleberg, served in the Continental Army during the Revolutionary war, and the father of David M., also named Joseph, was born in Northumberland county, Pennsylvania, in 1806. The mother of our subject, whose maiden name was Mary Maleck, was also a native of Pennsylvania and was of German descent. Joseph and Mary Dungleberg had a family of seven children, David M. being next to the oldest and one of the four who are now living. The father died in the seventy-fifth year of his age, and the mother when she was sixty-six, both passing away at the old home where they had spent the whole of their married life. They were members of the Lutheran Church and were respected and esteemed by all who knew them.

David M. Dungleberg was born on his father's farm February 4, 1839, and was reared a farmer boy, attending the district school in winter, and remaining at home until he was nineteen. At that youthful but ambitious age he bade adieu to his home and friends in Pennsylvania and those of California, existed at the head of the Yellowstone; that this line of hot springs was traced to the Big Horn."

Dr. Hayden, in tracing the earliest traditions touching this marvelous region, says:

"John Colter, or Coulter, was probably the first white man who ever saw any of the springs or geysers of this wonderful region. He was connected with Lewis and Clarke's expedition, and on their return, in 1806, left the expedition to go back to the headwaters of the Missouri to trap and hunt. After a narrow escape from the Blackfeet Indians, he lived for some time with the Bannack Inidans, who ranged through the country in which the park is located. In 1810 he returned to St. Louis and told wonderful tales of the region, which were not believed. 'Coulter's Hell' was the term afterwards applied to the region. * * *

"As far back as 1844, James Bridger, one of the best and most noted of Rocky mountain guides, is said to have described some of the wonderful springs and geysers, but his stories were supposed to be made out of the whole cloth, and although it is said he endeavored to get some of the western newspaper men to publish some of his tales, they were so marvelous that no one would do it.*

"In 1863 a party of prospectors, of which Capt. Walter W. De Lacey was one, ascended the Snake river, and from Shoshone lake (which was named De Lacey's lake afterward by General Meredith, surveyor-general of Montana) crossed to the lower geyser basin, one branch of the party having visited the springs and geysers of the Shoshone geyser basin. No description of the Shoshone geysers was published by them. Captain DeLacey, writing of started West, his objective point being Kansas. In Kansas he rented a farm and remained one year. This was in 1859. In 1860 he went to Pike's Peak. Soon afterward we find him engaged in mining in California Gulch, now Leadville, where he worked for wages two years, and from whence he drove an ox team to Montana in 1862. At Bannack he leased ground and mined a short time and afterward was engaged in whipsawing lumber. In the fall of 1863 he went to Alder Gulch, where he mined successfully till the following year and while there he took out about $5,000, fully half of which he saved. He then went to British Columbia to the Kootenai excitement. There he purchased a claim, which, however, proved to be of little value, and he soon returned to Montana. At this time he settled on 320 acres of land at the place where he now resides, and to it he has since added, now having 480 acres of choice farming land. Here he has built a comfortable residence and has made various other improvements, and to-day is ranked with the most prosperous farmers of this part of the county. He has all these years given considerable attention to the raising of cattle and horses. At one time he had 500 head of cattle.

In 1885 Mr. Dungleberg and Colonel Morse built a flouring mill at New Chicago, which has proved of great value to this vicinity. Mr. Dungleberg is also engaged in quartz mining. He discovered several claims in the mountains, from one of which $20,000 has been mined. He also has a gold mine at the head of Gold creek.

Mr. Dungleberg was married in 1876 to Miss Josephine Hanley, a native of Pennsylvania. They have two children, Frank H. and Cora.

Our subject is a Republican and takes laudable interest in public affairs, but has always declined office.

PROF. J. BRUCE SIMPSON, formerly principal of St. Peter's School, Helena, Montana, is a native of Edinburg, Scotland, born January 11, 1860. His ancestors were lowlanders of Scotland, and he was the only child of James and Helen (Bruce) Simpson, his mother being a descendant of one of Scotland's most famous chieftains. James Simpson served in the British Navy in the Crimean war, and in 1862 died from the effect of exposure incurred during his service. Eight years later his widow died, the subject of our sketch thus being left an orphan at the early age of ten years. For some time he made his home with an uncle.

Professor Simpson was educated at Stewart's College in Edinburg, and was so proficient in his studies that in 1876 he, among 1,500 boys, was the recipient of a gold medal. Then he entered the University of Edinburg where he soon attained high standing, taking the first class prizes in Latin and Greek and receiving a gold medal for his proficiency in rhetoric and English literature. In 1880 he graduated with the degree of M. A. Following his graduation, he for a time taught in Scotland and Norfolk, England, and later in Stewart's College, where he was employed until 1887. That year he came to Helena. He spent one year in the office of the the lower geyser basin in the paper by him published in the 'Contributions to the Historical Society of Montana,' says they reached the valley on the 9th of September, 1863."

My own personal knowledge of at least some portion of Yellowstone Park began in 1861, as before said; but when with my father on Bear river between Fort Hall and Salt Lake at a place then known as Steamboat Spring, in 1852, a trapper told us that there were thousands of such springs at the head of the Yellowstone, and that the Indians there used stone knives and axes. We had Lewis and Clarke's as well as some of Fremont's journals, and not finding any of these hot springs and geysers mentioned in their pages, we paid little attention to the old man's tale, and I should have forgotten it but for the story about stone knives and axes. And here let me introduce an idea which, so far as I can find out from books, is new. I believe that these geysers are growing,—growing gradually, in splendor and force and area. I hesitate to urge this on any one, but I can almost say I know it to be true.

A man in his early years sees things at their best and biggest, and they lose nothing in his memory as time rolls on; but it is a fact that these wonders were twice as wonderful to me nearly thirty years later when I was sent there to report for the New York Independent. From the edition of that paper for September 26, 1889, I extract a portion of one of my reports, as follows:

Half a day on down the eastern slope of the Rocky mountains, through grassy valleys, over willow-lined creeks, under great basalt and granite and sandstone bluffs, and we pull up at Surveyor General, and in 1888 was elected principal of St. Peter's School, in which position he did excellent work for five years, having terminated his connection with the school within the year 1893. One of his pupils, Lewis Davis, passed the Yale preliminary examination at the age of sixteen years.

In 1891 Professor Simpson was happily married to Miss Mary Faut, a native of Helena and the only child of J. J. Faut, one of Montana's respected pioneers. The Professor and his wife have one child, Ruth, and their pleasant home is located on the West Side, on Clark street.

While Professor Simpson affiliates with the Democrtic party, he is very liberal and independent in his political views. As he was in his school days an exceptionally bright student, so in his mature life is he an enthusiastic educator. He is a lover of sublime scenery, and in this has gratified his taste by making many tours in the Yellowstone Park. He has taken many fine photographs of that wild and picturesque country. Genial and affiable, he and his young wife have made many warm friends in Helena.

THE C & D MINE, located in the mountains a mile and a half from the village of Elkhorn, Jefferson county, was discovered in 1885, by Frank Crum and William Dunston. In 1886 they sold the claim to A. G. Clarke, Charles A. Clarke and E. Toole, of Helena, and R. T. Woliston, of Elkhorn. Three years afterward this firm sold a three-fourths interest in the mine to Messrs. A. J. Seligman, J. T. Murphy, O. R. Allen and others, for $75,000. Since that time 20,000 tons of ore have been taken out, and they are now shipping to the East Helena smelter from sixty to one hundred tons of ore per day. It averages from one to two ounces of gold per ton to fifteen ounces of silver, and about ten per cent lead. In 1887 the company built a smelter at this place. They are now about 300 feet in the mountain, and there is now in sight about 20,000 tons of ore. They have a hoist in a tunnel 400 feet long, out of which the ore is run on cars, thus requiring but little machinery or power. About forty men are given employment in the mine. This is a most valuable and promising property, and its present owners, who are men of the highest integrity and business ability, are fortunate in the possession of the C & D mine.

R. T. WOLISTON, part owner of the C & D mine, and assayer and chemist for the company, was born in Ohio, January 24, 1847. His grandfather, Joshua Woliston, was born in Scotland, came to the United States when a young man, and was a soldier in the war of 1812. He married a Miss Nunnemaker, and they had five children, of whom John, the father of our subject, was the eldest child. He was born in 1820, and married Miss Amanda Troxell, a member of an old Maryland family.

R. T. Woliston, the eldest of six children in the above family, three now living, received his education at Wittenberg College, Ohio, after which he began fitting himself for a mining engineer. For a time he was engaged in making steam pumps and machinery. In 1876 he located in Colorado, where he began building and operating silver-lead smelters, his first work having been at Bonanza, remaining there two years. Mr. Woliston next built and conducted a smelter at Galena, Colorado, followed the same occupation in the Carbonate Camp in the Black Hills two years, built and conducted a smelter at Neihart, Montana, one year, operated works six months Livingstone. Here nearly everybody gets out to take the sixty-mile railroad to the ten-mile stage line that lands you in the great National Yellowstone Park.

"What is the fare for the round trip?" I ask of the red-headed runner for the Yellowstone railroad and stage line.

"Forty dollars and five days."

It sounded a little too much like "ten days or twenty dollars," which I used to hear when trying to practice law in the police court of San Francisco, and I didn't like it.

But my dislike was not shared by others at all. A large party from Alaska, a big crowd of big English noblemen, besides a crowd of commoners, like myself, all hastily paid their money and took seats in the crowded cars for the National Park.

As for myself I hired a horse, telegraphed ahead to a half-way station for a fresh animal to be held in waiting; and at eleven A. M., without arms or equipments, I swung in the saddle and set off at a hard gallop for "the greatest show on earth."

It was a rather reckless undertaking, for I did not know the road, after nearly thirty years; storms were brewing; rivers to cross; bad bridges; lots of things, indeed, rose up before me as I plunged on ten, twenty, thirty miles, and began to grow weary, thirsty. Then the sun was so hot that the rain falling from a sudden thunder-storm almost blistered my hands, so hot were the first great drops.

But it would be a digression from the line of these letters to continue this. Suffice it to say now that I got there in one day, by using three horses, the third horse having been made necessary by my mistaking a lumber road, and thus losing fifteen miles. I spent one day in being driven about the park; and then I rode back in one day, thus "doing" the National Park in grand style in three days. My entire expenses amounted to $28.50 only, thus making a saving of two days and about one-third the money cost.

But the satisfaction of having done that which the management, and every one else along the road, told me could not be done, was the best of it all. I simply demonstrated that a man, without guide, arms or equipments of any kind, at Toston, this State, conducted a stamp mill at Diamond City six months, and in 1886 came to Elkhorn. After arriving in this place Mr. Woliston built and operated a smelter two years, and during that time he brought the smelter he owned in Colorado to this State, which he exchanged for an interest in the C & D mine. He also was superintendent of the Dunston and Queen mines, one of which is located near the C & D mine, and both are believed to be very valuable. Mr. Woliston has done much assaying for his own and other mines, has a fine laboratory, has examined mines for prominent capitalists from Mexico to Canada, and by long experience has acquired the reputation of being a most practical mining expert. He has been a member of the American Institute of Mining Engineers for seven years, is a charter member of the I. O. O. F. at Elkhorn, and has the honor of being the first Noble Grand of that order.

In 1889, in Idaho, our subject was united in marriage with his cousin, Miss Bruce Zacharias, of French extraction. They have one son, John, a native of Elkhorn. Mr. Woliston was identified with the Democratic party for many years, but has recently taken an active part in the People's party.

THE PHILLIPSBURG IRON WORKS, at Phillipsburg, Montana, were established in 1887 by Bowen Brothers & Thompson. This institution immediately took rank with the leading enterprises of this part of the country, and from the time of its establishment up to the present it has done a large and increasing business. The extensive buildings of the company are fitted up with all the appliances and machinery necessary for the manufacture of everything in their line, covering a wide range of work, and including the building and repairing of mills and a general iron business. In 1890 this enterprising firm put in the electric-light plant of the city of Phillipsburg, at a cost to them of $18,000. They subsequently sold it to an Eastern firm, by whom it is now operated.

The Messrs. Frederick and William Bowen are natives of South Wales. They emigrated to America in 1865, and first located in Akron, Ohio. Some years later they went to Cleveland, where they were employed in the Variety Iron Works five years. In 1884 they came from Cleveland to Butte City, Montana, where for two years they were with the Butte Iron Works. In 1887, as above stated, they became associated with Mr. Thompson in their present enterprise. The Bowen Brothers are both men of families, and have erected handsome brick residences in Phillipsburg, where they stand high in social and business circles.

Mr. Ezra R. Thompson, the other member of the firm, is a native of Ohio, born November 24, 1857, the son of an intelligent farmer of that State. He came west as far as Kansas in 1884, and the following year came on to Butte City, Montana, where he met the gentlemen with whom he has since been in partnership. Mr. Thompson has charge of the pattern-making, while the Messrs. Bowen are expert iron workers. Like his partners, Mr. Thompson has shown his public spirit by building an elegant residence in the city in which he is located, their homes being situated on an eminence and commanding a magnificent view of the town and surrounding country. Mr. Thompson is unmarried.

can get off the train, hire a horse and ride to the National Park, hunt and fish by the way, study nature and enjoy himself with impunity and with perfect security, and so ride back again and ask no odds of any one.

True, we might not have found the best of and largest geysers in our brief visit of 1861; still it is incredible that such intrepid men as Mullen and Stevens, West Point men, learned, equipped with arms and implements, in the pay and employ of the Government, ambitious of honorable distinction, should not have looked into this thing, since it lay almost in their road, as well as in their line of duty.

There was a broad, open plain, the prettiest pasture lands ever seen, up the Yellowstone from the military road to within hearing distance of the geysers and only a day's ride from the road.

Again, Lewis and Clarke wintered within a few hundred miles of Yellowstone Park in 1804, right among Indians of that region, and all Indians know all things about their own and all neighboring countries. These men passed down the Yellowstone a year or so later, Indians with them all the time. They had learned all about the great falls of the Missouri long before leaving Washington, and were eager to see and describe them; but not one hint about the "Fire Hole" is to be found in all their pages. DR. H. DERBY PICKMAN, the leading physician of Dillon, Montana, was born in Salem, Massachusetts, September 28, 1844.

The Pickmans originated in Bristol England, but have been residents of Salem since 1662, at which time Benjamin Pickman settled there with the Massachusetts Bay colony. For many years his descendants were prominent merchants of Salem. On his paternal side the Doctor traces his ancestry back to Willoughby de Eresby, an old Norman baron, who came with the conqueror; also on his mother's side to the Prendrills, one of whom was noted in English history for having hidden King Charles in the oak tree, for which they were granted an annuity which is still paid to members of the family. Emily Woodville (the fair maid of Kent) was a direct descendant of Willoughby de Eresby, and it is in direct line from her, by her first marriage, that the branch of the Pickman family to which our subject belongs claim their descent. Her first husband was Sir John Grey, and her second was Edward IV. The arms of the Pickman family are described briefly as follows: Gules—two battle-axes in saltire, or cantoned by four martlets argent; crest, hand grasping battle-ax.

Great-grandfather Pickman had gone to England on business and was there when the war of the Revolution began, and being a Loyalist he could not return to his family in Salem until the war was over. Several of the family, however, served in the war on the Colonial side. When the Louisburg expedition was started great-great-grandfather Benjamin Pickman, then a Judge and prominent business man of Salem, subscribed ten thousand pounds sterling toward paying the expenses of the expedition. As history tells us, the town was captured from the French. In gratitude for his magnificent subscription the Colonial government of Massachusetts Bay presented Judge Pickman with a large silver mantiff, which has been handed down from father to son and which is now owned by Dr. Pickman. It is about eighteen inches high and has on one side the arms of the family and on the other the following inscription: "Presented to Benjamin Pickman for valued services rendered in the capture of Louisburg, 1749." The Doctor also has a silver pitcher which was presented to his uncle after the war of 1812 by the New England Guards. The Doctor's uncle, Benjamin Pickman, was a prominent statesman and member of the Massachusetts Senate.

Francis Willoughby Pickman, the father of our subject, was born in Salem, Massachusetts, May 15, 1804. He married Elizabeth Walker, a native of Nova Scotia and daughter of Colonel William Walker of the English army. They had ten children, of whom four are still living. He died in the eighty-fourth year of his age and she passed away in her sixty-sixth year.

Dr. Pickman is the ninth generation of his family born in this country. He received his education in his native city, graduating in its high school in 1861. In August of the following year he enlisted in Company A, Fiftieth Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry, and served under General Banks in the New Orleans expedition. After having served three months over his term of enlistment, he was mustered out and returned to his home broken in health. Upon his recovery he again enlisted. Two of his brothers were also in the service.

At the close of the war he turned his attention to the study of medicine and subsequently entered the medical department of Harvard College, where he graduated with honor July 15, 1868. Then he practiced a year at the public general hospital at St. John's, New Brunswick, and from there went to Lake Superior and was employed as physician for the Bay Furnace Company until the failure of Jay Cooke, which took place in 1876. After that the Doctor came West to Utah and Idaho and in the fall of 1883 took up his abode at Dillon, Montana, where he has since conducted a successful practice.

H. D. Pierson M.D.

Historical Society of Montana, previously quoted, says he did not see the "Fire Hole," but heard about it when in that region fifty years before. So I can but conclude that the hot springs and geysers have grown greatly in importance and splendor within this century, whatever they may do in the next.

When I was sent to the Yellowstone Park by the J. Dewing Company, publishers of Picturesque California and Rocky Mountain Scenery, the year after I had been there for the Independent, I left the railroad and took horse and rode up the Yellowstone, trying to follow our old ways of 1861, so as to see the same things, if I could, and satisfy at least myself as to whether or not the springs, in thirty-two years, had increased in volume and importance. Truly, it seemed to me that they had doubled then and there. All this I set down in detail for my employers; but they would have none of it, but kindly told me that I had better leave matters of science to men of science. Doubtless so, and I leave the subject, content with having only mentioned the idea here. In the course of time, who cares to will gather up evidence of the fact, and it will be found that I do not mistake.

A careful reading of the great work of Dr. Hayden, as touching the Yellowstone and other geysers, in quest of evidence as to whether these of the Yellowstone Park may be increasing or diminishing, yields but vague results, as follows:

EVIDENCE OF INCREASE.

"The south base group is the one first met with, and includes fifteen springs. On the map

When he arrived here there were no other physicians in the town, but some have died and others have moved away, and he is now the oldest resident physician in the town.

Dr. Pickman was married in 1882, on the 15th of May, to Miss Virginia L. Palmer, a native of Michigan and daughter of Hon. Charles H. Palmer of Pontiac, Michigan.

Politically the Doctor is a Republican. He was elected a member of the Montana Legislature in 1888, and he has the honor of having introduced the bill which is now the medical law of the State of Montana. He received from Governor White the position of Brigadier General and Surgeon General of Montana and Governor Rickards honored him with the same appointment. He is a prominent and active member of the State Medical Association. In Masonic circles he is also prominent, being a Knight Templar and a Captain General of the order.

Dr. Pickman has during the decade he has resided in Dillon accumulated a competency. He has stock in copper mines in Idaho and at Butte City, and in Dillon is the owner of valuable property. He built the brick block known as the Bee Hive, and has also erected a number of dwellings, among which is the comfortable home in which he and his family reside.

SOPHRONI MARCHESSEAU, one of Butte City's prominent men, is eminently deserving of the name of pioneer. There is probably not another man in the city, or, indeed, in the State, who has seen more of pioneer life than has he, and his reminiscences of the early mining days on the Pacific coast and all over the Northwest are most interesting. A detailed account of his journeys across the continent and of his experience as he worked in the mines and went from camp to camp, would fill a volume of no small proportions. It is a matter of regret that want of space permits us to publish only an abridged account of his life.

Sophroni Marcheseau was born in L'Acadie, St. John's county, province of Quebec, Canada, September 23, 1828, son of Francis and Sophia (Richards) Marches-eau, both natives of Canada and of French descent. The father was a farmer. He died in the forty-sixth years of his age, and the mother passed away in her sixty-seventh year. Sophroni was the fourth born in their family of ten children, and he and his sister Henrietta are the only ones of the number who are living. This sister is now the widow of a Mr. Trahan, and resides in Central Falls, Rhode Island.

Mr. Marchesseau received his education in the public schools of his native town, and after leaving school was for a time employed as clerk in a general merchandise store. Then he went to Burlington, Vermont. About the time he reached his majority, news of the discovery of gold in California spread all over the country, and in every vicinity parties were being made up to start for the Pacific coast, some going around the Horn, others by way of the Isthmus, and many making the long and tedious journey overland. Young Marchesseau and two of his brothers were victims of this California gold fever, they, in company with eight others, making the trip across the plains. They left St. John's April 11, 1850, and traveled by rail and the lakes and rivers to St. Louis, where they were delayed a short time. At Independence, Missouri, published in the report of 1872 only seven or eight of the springs of this group are indicated." —Page 280.

"In St. Domingo * * the earthquake of 1770 caused hot springs to break out where no water previously existed; but they afterward ceased to flow."—Page 328.

As you will see, I have not been able to find much evidence either way on the point in question, but that little is mostly in the negative. The writer compares localities, deciding, on account of the chimney-like deposits, that Iceland is the youngest and Yellowstone the oldest of the three great glacier fields of the world, but says that because it is so recent a discovery, "no data of value can be presented bearing upon the question of change in the temperature of its hot springs." He says also (page 417): "It has been noticed that geysers occur where the intensity of volcanic action is decreasing."

EVIDENCE OF DECREASE.

"This has probably been a strong spouter, but now erupts only at long intervals, if at all." —Page 266.

"Several mounds indicate the former positions of geysers of considerable size.* * The deposits are now rapidly disintegrating."—Page 301.

"Some of them have not been seen in action, but are placed in the list because the forms of their basins or bowls * * indicate them to be geysers."—Page 303.

"Olafron and Povelsen, in 1772, and Henderson, in 1815, described these springs—Iceland—as * * of great activity; but Baring-Gould, in 1863, speaks of them as having diminished greatly, both in numbers and activity." —Page 305.

Let me take a few concluding paragraphs from the work I was sent to do on the ground, and pass on, pausing only to say that the publishers of that finest illustrated work ever issued on that subject not only entirely sup-they purchased mules and other necessaries for their outfit, and proceeded westward, each man armed with a flint-lock musket and a bayonet. At Westport they were joined by a party of Santa Fe merchants, and on the first of June they all struck out together across the great plains. After months of tiresome travel, varied with amusing and sometimes sad and startling incidents, they finally landed in California. They saw many Indians, especially while traveling through the Sioux country, but were not molested by them. Indeed, these Indians never gave Frenchmen any trouble, and as Mr. Marchesseau and his party were aware of the fact, they talked French to the red men. At Salt Lake the party rested three weeks, the Mormons treating them with utmost kindness and offering every inducement for them to remain there, But California was their objective point, and even the promise of Mormon wives was not a sufficient inducement for them to linger at Salt Lake.

Arrived in the Golden State, they mined first at Lock town, near Mud Springs, in El Dorado county. They had taken rockers with them, and, while all they knew about placer mining they had been told, they went to work in earnest, and the first day's work resulted in $25 to each man. They remained there all winter and the eleven men made an average of $100 per day. The following spring they went to the diggings on the Yuba river. The Fraser river excitement in 1858 took no less than 18,000 men from California to that region, and Mr. Marchesseau was among the number. He made the trip from San Francisco to Victoria, from there across the Gulf of Georgia and thence up the Fraser river. Without stopping to detail the various incidents of this trip, we pass on to the fact that while there was a wealth of gold in the mines the provisions were high, and indeed almost impossible to obtain, and many of the miners did not remain, choosing rather to leave the gold than to face starvation. Mr. Marchesseau returned with others to San Francisco. He continued mining in California until 1863, when, after an absence of fourteen years, he made a visit to his old home in Canada, the return trip being made by way of the Nicaragua route. In the meantime many of his old friends had died, and it was with sadness that he marked the many changes made during his sojourn in the West. After a visit with his mother, his sisters and one brother, he again turned his face westward.

In the spring of 1865 Mr. Marchesseau started for Montana. He came up the Missouri river to Fort Benton, and thence by wagon to Helena. At the mouth of the Marias the Indians had killed some wood choppers, and there was great excitement among the travelers, but the red men let them alone and they reached Helena in safety on the fifth of July, 1865. Mr. Marchesseau at once engaged in mining, and he still owns mining stock. First he mined at Dry Gulch and on Indian Creek, and after that was engaged by the New York Mining & Exploring Company, at $10 per day. Professor Hodge was superintendent of the White Latch Union, and Mr. Marchesseau was overseer for a year. After that he bought a stock of goods in Helena and came to Butte City to start a little store. This was in 1866. Butte City was then a little mining camp, and its miners were working with rockers and sluices. He continued in business here until 1868, when water became scarce and mining almost ceased, and he then removed his goods to French Gulch and subsequently to Bitter Root, Missoula county.

pressed my idea about the increasing splendor of the springs, but took such liberties with my work as to almost make the contrary appear. And then there was also a change of dates, but this, of course, was accidental.

"A list of these wondrous and mighty bursts of water, known as the geysers, hot and cold, clean and unclean, colored and colorless, would weary the most patient mind and make but a dreary catalogue and guide-book. The best that can be done here is to mass the whole and try to contemplate and comprehend the effect of this continuous and majestic spectacle on the soul of man. However, we may venture to set down the magnitude, date of operation, duration and so on of one of the largest of these utterers from the earth, as this is so recent that it has not yet found its way into the earlier guide-books. Here's a memorandum handed me by one of the men whose duty it is to daily observe and report on such phenomena. The geyser referred to is called the Excelsior, and is located midway between the upper and lower geyser basin: 'Began operation March, 1888, with eruption every minute and a half, the interval increasing up to every two and a half hours as late as November, 1888, ceasing before the opening of 1889. At each eruption, immediately preceding was an upheaval of some fifty feet high, followed by the one great explosion in which the water was thrown two hundred and fifty to three hundred feet, and frequently hurling stone one foot in diameter five hundred feet from the crater. Seven years before, in 1881, it behaved the same.' 'The number of springs,' says Lieutenant Doane in his report, is not less than fifteen hundred. They all vary in time, force, deposit, and color of water. * * * Taken as an aggregate, the Fire-hole Basin surpasses all the other great wonders of the continent. It produces an effect on the beholder that is utterly staggering and overpowering. During the night we were often awakened by the hissing of steam and the roar of waters as the geysers spouted forth in the darkness. A constant rumbling as of ma-

In 1875, when the quartz mines of Butte began to be operated, Mr. Marchesseau returned to this place and resumed business. At that time all goods had to be hauled here by wagon, and the price of freight was from twelve and a half to fifteen cents per pound. His store was located on Main street, on the site of his present brick block. He continued in active and prosperous business until 1883, when he sold out to Messrs. L. W. Foster and L. R. Mallet. Since then he has been practically retired, the looking after his interest and his rents being sufficient to occupy his time. It was in 1890 that he built the Beaver Block, a handsome structure, 74 x 81 feet, with three stories and a basement. The first floor is used as business rooms, the corner being occupied by the Silver Bow National Bank, and the upper rooms are elegantly equipped and utilized as a hotel. Here, surrounded with al that wealth can procure, and happy in the possession of hosts of friends, this worthy pioneer finds the rest to which he is so justly entitled.

JOHN L. SWEENEY, Missoula, is ranked with the Montana pioneers of 1864. Following is a brief record of his life:

John L. Sweeney was born in Canton, Ohio, January 23, 1821. His grandfather, John Sweeney, was born in county Roscommon, Ireland, and when a young man emigrated to the United States, landing here just at the close of the Revolutionary period. He and three of his sons fought in the war of 1812. He died in his sixtieth year. In his family were five sons and one daughter. One of these sons, Murry Connor Sweeney, our subject's father, was born in Albany, New York, January 24, 1793, and August 13, 1818, was married to Miss Susan Myres, a native of Pennsylvania, born in 1790, a descendant of Pennsylvania-Dutch ancestry. At the time of their marriage she was a widow with one child and he was a widower. They became the parents of four daughters and one son, the son being the subject of our sketch. They removed to Canton, Ohio, soon after they were married, and there he worked at his trade, that of hatter, until 1848, when they went to Madison, Wisconsin. He died in Madison, aged seventy-seven years, his wife having preceded him to the other world, her death occurring at Galena, Illinois, in her sixty-fourth year.

John L. Sweeney was the second born in their family. He was reared in Ohio, receiving only a limited education, and early in life working for his father at the hatter's trade. Later he learned the trades of chairmaker and painter. He was married at Canton, Ohio, September 22, 1842, to Miss Henrietta Kaley, and they continued their residence in Ohio for a number of years. They had eight children there, four only of whom are now living.

In 1864 Mr. Sweeney crossed the plains to Montana, landing at Virginia City on the third of August. He was engaged in mining at Alder gulch until 1868, when he returned to his family, and after a short visit with them ceme back to Montana. Again he engaged in mining, this time on the bar opposite Virginia City. He helped to bring water to the bar, and afterward in six weeks he and two others took out $10,000. Then he invested in the Pine Grove Flume Company. In this company he was interested with five others, and together they worked twelve years, taking out a great deal of money. The cost of operating their mine, however, was so great that their profits did not amount to much.

In 1870 Mr. Sweeney and her four children came out to Montana and settled at Deer Lodge, Mr. Sweeney, in the chinery filled the air, which was damp and warm throughout the night.'

"Colonel Barlow, who discovered and named the Comet geyser, says: 'A roar was heard on a hillside a hundred yards distant, and rushing on we saw water rising to a surpassing height. I approached nearer; a sudden rush of steam drove me back, following which the water was impelled upward and upward and upward, till it seemed to have lost the controlling force of gravity. The roar was like the sound of a tornado. This geyser played to the height of over two hundred feet. It began at five o'clock in the afternoon and continued for twenty minutes.'

"Bayard Taylor, that truthful and conservative traveler, whose records all men respect, says: 'Set like a gem in the center of this snow-rimmed crown of the continent, is the loveliest body of fresh water on the globe; its dark blue surface at an elevation greater than that of the highest clouds and higher than the loftiest mountains of the East. * * * The curious, the beautiful, the wonderful. * * * A museum of unparalleled and incomparable works.'

"The soul seeks eagerly to know whence? Why? Here, where the highest mountains of the continent are piled and lapped and crossed and intertwined, where the surface of the earth ought to be the most solid and impenetrable; here, where surely the earth's crust is thickest, we find the fire bursting through and blazing through and blazing to the stars. Here, where the everlasting snows should cool the ardor and impatience of the earth, we find her most ardent and impatient. Here, where are the loftiest and highest mountain tops, in defiance of that law which says the waters shall seek their level, we find these awful fountains bursting even meantime, having opened a furniture business there; but she was destined not to enjoy her new home long, for her death occurred May 15, 1873. Of her children we record that Frances Emogene is the widow of Charles Thourglaman, and is a resident of Butte City, Montana; Susan Lavina is the wife of Dr. O. B. Whitford, a prominent physician of Butte City; and the two sons, Louis Connor and George Lewellan, are working a placer mine of their father's.

In 1874, the year following his wife's death, Mr. Sweeney removed to Silver Lake and engaged in placer and quartz mining. There he worked hard for four years and sank all his money. In 1878 he came to Missoula, and again established himself in the furniture business, manufacturing the furniture he sold, and doing an extensive business, and soon he was again on the road to prosperity. He was the first man to manufacture furniture in Missoula. When the railroad was completed he shipped some furniture from the East, and he also engaged in the undertaking business. In 1879 he sold a half interest in his establishment to Thomas Williams, subsequently sold the other half to Mr. Flyn, and has since been retired. During his residence in Missoula he has built four houses besides his warehouse, one of which is the commodious and substantial brick residence in which he and his wife reside, his second marriage occurring July 18, 1882. Mrs. Sweeney's maiden name was Eliza Jane Rogers, but at the time of her marriage to Mr. Sweeney she was a widow and had two children. She was born August 18, 1829.

Mr. Sweeney is a member of the Montana Pioneer Society and of the Masonic fraternity, having been made a Mason in Canton, Ohio, in 1844. He affiliates with the Democratic party, but during his busy life has given little attention to political matters. While he has met with misfortune in various ways, he has in the main had a successful life, and is now ranked with the worthy pioneers of the State of his adoption.

HON. RICHARD OWEN HICKMAN, Montana's State Land Commissioner and ex-Treasurer of the Territory, is classed with the Montana pioneers of 1864.

He was born in Shelby county, Kentucky, November 1, 1831. The progenitor of the family in America, an Episcopal minister, and a native of England, came to this country early in the history of the Colonies and settled in the Old Dominion. James Hickman, our subject's grandfather, was a patriot soldier in the Revolutionary war, served all through that long struggle, and after the war reared a family of ten children. He lived to be ninety years of age. In his family of nine sons and one daughter, William, the third born, became the father of Richard O. William Hickman's birth occurred in Virginia, September 1, 1790. In 1810 he went to Shelby county, Kentucky, where he was subsequently married to Miss Mary Cardwell, a native of Virginia, and two years younger than himself. They continued to reside in Kentucky until 1833, when they removed to Illinois, where Mr. Hickman took claim to Government land and where he resided up to the time of his death. He died at Springfield in 1874. With the early history of Illinois he was prominently identified. He served as a member of the State Legislature, and for several years was a Judge of Sangamon county. For sixty-five years he was a worthy member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. His good wife died in 1835, soon after their removal to Illinois. In their family were eight children, the subject of this sketch being the seventh born and one of the six who are still living.

The earliest recollections of Richard O. Hickman are of his life on his father's frontier farm in Illinois, he being about two years old at the time of their removal there. On that farm he was reared. He went to school in the primitive log schoolhouse near his home, but for the most part his youthful days were spent in farm work. When he grew older he took a course in Esterbrook's above the clouds. Here, in defiance of an eternal enmity, we find water and fire woven and wound together, warp of fire and woof of water, woof of water and warp of fire, till a great broad blanket of green is woven and spread above the battling seas of fire and flood for man safely to walk upon.

"'Why? What is your theory of it all?' I asked this of some learned men who had been sent out from England to observe and report to their Government. 'We had a theory when we came,' observed the leader, gravely; 'we have none now.'

"And I admit that I heard that confession from the lips of one of the ablest of living men with satisfaction. In an age of universal measurement and data, and explanation and theory, when men do all things, and learn all things, and theorize on all things, leaving nothing at all to God, I am glad to find that mystery and majesty still have stout embattlement on our mountain-tops together.

"Let deep mystery and unapproachable majesty and impenetrable confusion and fierce contention hold carnival here under this eternal canopy of earth-born clouds, till man is willing to admit that there is surely a Builder beyond his utmost measurement, and data, and leveling down.

"Let poetry have some place here; some one last battlement of rally. The railroads have enough. Spare this one spot of this vast continent. Draw around this one last shrine, O, my sombre Druid woods! Keep your plumed regiments forever, fir and pine and cedar tree and tamarack, in dense array; mountains of granite, hurl men back who would come here faithless! Fire and flood, divinities of these deeps, speak, speak with your two thousand burning tongues from your fearful eminence, and declare to man that he is not yet God!"

high school, in Springfield. In this and in the dear school of experience he was educated.

In April, 1852, young Hickman severed home ties, and, as a member of a party of thirty-two men, started overland for California. They left Independence on the fifth of May, and after the usual experience on the plains, arrived at Nevada City on the seventeenth of August. He began placer mining on the South Yuba river, twelve miles below Navada City, and after a fall's work found himself the possessor of $2,500. He continued mining several years, at different places in California, with varied success. While mining ten miles below Downieville, in Jim Crow cañon, he found a piece of gold that weighed thirteen ounces. He was in California eleven years, a part of the time trading in miners' supplies. At Orleans flat he invested in a quartz mine and lost heavily. He and his partners had expended their money and were $18,000 in debt. Their creditors allowed them $11,000 for the mine, and two of the company paid the rest, Mr. Hickman paying $6,000. At this time a friend of his, a banker, backed him for $1,600 to buy an express route from Nevada City to Eureka. On this route he carried the mails and freighted, and in two years made money enough to pay all his debts. In 1863, on account of ill health, he sold out, receiving $2,500 for his business, and returned to his home in Illinois, making the journey by way of the Isthmus. He remained in Illinois during the winter and until the month of March, and finding his health but little improved he decided to cross the plains again, and accordingly started for St. Joseph, Missouri.

Upon his arrival at St. Joseph, Mr. Hickman found a party preparing for a journey to Montana. He joined them. He purchased three wagons and twelve yoke of oxen, loaded his wagons with miners' supplies, and in due time landed safe at Alder Gulch. There he disposed of his goods at a fair profit, and returned to Illinois in order to vote for Abraham Lincoln as President, Mr. Hickman's health in the meantime having greatly improved. In April, 1865, he again purchased an outfit at St. Joseph, Missouri, and started for Montana, this time coming by way of Bitter creek and Soda Springs, arriving at Virginia City, September 16. Here he disposed of his goods and wagons, left his cattle in charge of a man who was to fatten them, and on the 28th of November started on horseback for Walla Walla, thence on to Portland, where he took steamer for San Francisco. Much of the route then traveled by him is the one over which the Northern Pacific now runs. At that time there was only a ranch house on the site of the present thriving city of Spokane. He made the trip through this country with a view to buying cattle. Upon his arrival in San Francisco he purchased a stock of wines, liquors and tobacco, shipped the same to Los Angeles, there loaded his goods on wagons, and started overland for Montana, expecting to reach his destination by the first of May. On account of various delays, however, it was not until the 8th of June that the journey was completed, and at this time merchandise had begun to arrive by steamer from St. Louis to Fort Benton. His freights were thirty-one cents per pound in gold dust, and the freights by steamer were twelve cents per pound in greenbacks. The difference was so great that he met with a loss. The man with whom he had left his cattle had sold them, taken the money and skipped the country.

After these misfortunes Mr. Hickman engaged in freighting. Later he started a store at Silver Bow, but also continued freighting, hauling goods both for himself and for other parties. In 1868 he turned his attention to the dairy business at Alder Gulch, also to buying and selling cattle, and in this business he has been engaged more or less ever since. For some time he was a stockholder in various mines, but sold his mining

PROGRESSIVE MONTANA—SOME POLITICAL HISTORY—MANY LAWS AND MANY LEGISLATORS—GOVERNOR POTTS AND REFORMS—NEW RAILROADS AND NEW GOVERNORS—IMPORTANT PUBLICATIONS.

WILLIAM H. CLAGGETT, the Republican delegate to Congress, was succeeded by Martin Maginnis. That this was a good and capable man is evidenced by the fact that he succeeded himself continuously for ten years,—a record almost without a parallel in the history of Territories.

The messages of Governor Potts teem with paternal interest in his people, whom he governed long and, as a rule, well; for he was Governor of Montana for fourteen years. His most notable acts were the calling of extra sessions of the Legislature. The first proclamation for an extra session was dated March, 1873, the legislative body to meet in April. The purpose of this is hardly clear, and in now looking over the records of those days the reader cannot help recalling again the remark of Buckle, who said; "The best legislative enactment that could be made would be an enactment repealing all enactments," so confusing and contrary and idle do they now seem. The one thing notable during this session was the approved bill enabling counties to subscribe to the capital stock of incoming railroads.

In the autumn of 1873 Montana lost what may be termed her "first citizen," James Stuart, who died at Fort Peck, in the forty-second year of his age. His brave young life is the heart of Montana's early history.

To him reference was made as follows, in the Daily Rocky Mountain Gazette, of Helena, Montana, under date of October 8, 1873:

"Mr. A. J. Simmons was yesterday in receipt stock advantageously and invested more largely in lands. He now has a stock ranch of 1,200 acres in Madison county, where, besides his large herds of cattle, he is also raising grain, hay and vegetables. He was among the first to introduce into Montana thoroughbred shorthorn cattle.

Mr. Hickman has affiliated with the Republican party ever since it was organized. In 1869 he was elected a member of the Legislative Assembly of Montana, that body being composed of thirty-nine members, of whom he and two others were the only Republicans. In 1871, when the Territorial Treasurer defaulted, Governor Potts appointed Mr. Hickman to take charge of the office and straighten out its affairs, and for four years he served as Treasurer of the Territory. The capital was then at Virginia city. When it was removed to Helena he resigned his office. Afterward he held several minor offices from time to time up to 1876, when he was elected a delegate to the National Republican convention held at Cincinnati. In that convention he aided in putting General Hayes in nomination for President. In the fall of 1876 he was elected a member of the Tenth Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Montana and served two years, strongly opposing all the subsidy bills that were introduced. In 1878 he was nominated by his party for member of the Legislative Council, ran as an anti-subsidy candidate, was elected, and served one term in which he rendered efficient service to the Territory. He also served in the special session following. In this session a bill came up which exempted railroads from taxation, and which would have become a law had not Mr. Hickman and five other members gone to Fort Benton, leaving the Council without a quorum, and in this way defeating the measure. In 1882 he was again elected to the Legislative Council, and again in 1886, the latter year being elected President of the Council, in which capacity he also served in the extra session that was called in September, 1887. In 1889 he was elected a member of the Constitutional Convention that formulated the constitution for the new State, and in October of that year was of a telegraphic dispatch from Sun river, signed by Granville Stuart, and stating that his brother, James Stuart, had died on the 30th ultimo.

"Mr. Stuart was a native of West Virginia, and a member of a well-known and honorable family. He was educated for the medical profession. Being imbued with a taste for adventure, and a decided bent for Western exploration, which was developed at an early age by reading the explorations of Lewis and Clarke, Bonneville, and others, he, in company with his brother, left Iowa shortly after the discovery of gold in California. In 1857, James Stuart, Granville Stuart, and Reece Anderson left California to return to the States. Granville was taken sick in Malad valley, and the party wintered in that vicinity, and turned out to make a living as traders and mountaineers. They remained until 1858, having in the meantime prospected for gold, and found as high as ten cents to the pan, on what is now Gold creek, in Deer Lodge county. In 1858, the Stuart brothers returned to Ft. Bridger, but in 1860 came back to Montana, and engaged in trading and prospecting, and discovered gold at several points in the Deer Lodge basin; and, with Anderson and others, established a trading-post on Cottonwood creek, near the site of the present town of Deer Lodge. In 1862, the Stuart brothers, by their letters to friends in Colorado, induced a considerable number of parties to start for this vicinity, who arrived at Deer Dodge about the middle of June, and prospected Pike's Peak and Pioneer gulches. Later in the same year, the Bannack mines were discovered by parties who had turned aside from the Salmon river stampede to join the prospectors who were camped near Deer Lodge. The discovery of Alder was made the next year, and since that time the history of the Territory is well known. * * *

"The deceased was a man of fine intellectual capacities, extensive reading and close observation. He was of quiet disposition, but deter-elected State Treasurer, thus having the honor of being the first State Treasurer of Montana. In this latter office he served until January, 1893, and would, no doubt, have been re-elected but for a clause in the State constitution forbidding a second term in succession. February 11, 1893, he received the appointment of State Land Agent from Governor Rickards, in which office he is now rendering efficient service.

Mr. Hickman was married August 8, 1872, at Indianapolis, Indiana, to Miss Maggie Perrill, a native of Chillicothe, Ohio, and a descendant of an old Virginia family. They have two daughters: Gertrude and Reta, both at home with their parents.

Mr. Hickman joined the I. O. O. F., Forest City Lodge, No. 32, in California in 1855, has held nearly all the chairs in the order, and is now a member of Virginia City Lodge, No. 7. He was made a Master Mason in Quitman Lodge, No. 88, at Orleans, California, in 1858, and is now Past Grand Master of the Grand Lodge of Montana, Past High Priest of the Grand Chapter and Grand Treasurer of the Grand Commandery. He is a member of the Pioneer Society of Madison county and also of the State Pioneer Society. In every walk of life he has made a worthy and upright record, and is most worthy of the high esteem in which he is held by the people of Montana.

JOSEPH FAUL, proprietor of the Anaconda Brewery, Anaconda, Montana, was born in Munich, Bavaria, Germany, June 13, 1857.

His early education was obtained in his native land. At the age of nine years he began working in a brewery, and to this business his whole life has been devoted, his success in this line being well known. In 1883 he emigrated to America, landing in New York city. After working in a brewery in New York for three years, he went to California and entered the employ of the celebrated Bacca Brewing Company of San Francisco, with which he remained until 1888. That year he came to Montana and identified himself with Anaconda. Here, with his own hands, he erected a log building and in it established himself in the brewing business, his efforts being attended with prosperity from the first. The product of his brewery is of a superior quality and finds a ready market in Anaconda and vicinity.

A brief glance at the life of this successful brewer shows him to be the possessor of that thrift and enterprise so characteristic of his countrymen. He is a member of the A. O. U. W., and has the good will of a large circle of friends in Montana.

mined and indomitable character, and never shrank from danger or fatigue in carrying out his purposes.

"Granville and Thomas Stuart, A. J. Simmons, Inspector Daniels, Capt. Dan. W. Buck, W. B. Judd, J. X. Biedler, John Cochran, George W. Boyd, Jno. G. McLean, and Abel Farwell started on their tedious journey of 500 miles to Deer Lodge, where he had requested to be buried by the Masonic lodge, of which he was a member. The journey occupied twelve days, seven of them being through the Sioux country. It is related, as an instance not unworthy of note, that at one point in the journey sixty Sioux warriors suddenly appeared on the edge of a ravine close to them, and, recognizing Agent Simmons, approached and inquired the meaning of the procession. On learning the coffin contained the body of Po-te-has-ka (the Long Beard), each Indian dropped his head, clasped his hands, and pressed them upon his mouth in their expressive sign language that a friend was dead. Arriving at Helena, the body was deposited during the stay in the Masonic lodge, and on Tuesday evening reached Deer Lodge, where it was placed under a guard of honor in the Masonic lodge, and remained until the hour of the funeral, which had been designated for 2 P. M. Wednesday."

The governor's message to the eighth legislature, February, 1874, is, like the former ones, paternal in the extreme and very outspoken against extravagance. The earliest legislative body had voted to its members as well as to high federal officers other pay than that promised by Congress in payment to Territorial public servants. Governor Potts stands credited with having had a law in Congress forbidding this extra pay, and it is, indeed, greatly to his credit. Yet it cannot be maintained that Montana Territory was ever at all extravagant. On the contrary, she was extremely economical in a comparative view.

Take Arizona, for example. Her debt to-

ANGUS MCINTYRE, who is found among the respected business men of Phillipsburg, and who is also ranked with the pioneers with the State, forms the subject of this article.

Mr. McIntyre was born in Canada, February 18, 1838. His father, William McIntyre, a native of the Highlands of Scotland, emigrated to Canada in 1820 and settled in Glengarry county, where he was subsequently married to Miss Jennie Monroe, also a native of the Highlands of Scotland. He cleared up a farm and made a good home and there he and his wife reared their family of four sons and two daughters, and on the old home place the venerable father is still residing. The mother passed away in 1880.

Angus McIntyre was the first born in his father's family. He was reared on the farm and educated in the public schools, attending school during the winter months, and in 1863 he left his Canadian home en route for California, making the journey by way of the Isthmus of Panama. Upon his arrival in the Golden State, he located in Plumas county, where he engaged in furnishing wood to the John Blood mill, employing a number of men to cut and deliver the wood. He continued in this business about sixteen months and made some money. We next find him in Nevada, where he was for a year engaged in sawmilling. In the spring of 1866 he came to Montana. He and a partner sold goods for a short time in Silver City, Idaho, and July 3, 1866, landed in Helena. He bought ground in the gulch and mined and did well, remaining there until the spring of the following year. He then removed to Henderson, in Deer Lodge county, where he purchased a claim and continued his mining operations six years, in that time taking out considerable gold. In the fall of 1874 he came to Phillipsburg and opened a store, having as his partner Mr. James Davidson. They did a prosperous general merchandise business for one year. At the end of that time he erected the first brick building in the town, 26 x 50 feet, in which he opened a billiard hall and saloon. Mr. McIntyre disposed of his interest in this establishment in 1884, and at that time, in partnership with J. A. Mathews, started a large hardware business. They built a fine brick store and filled it with a large stock and at once launched out into a prosperous business, continuing the same until 1892, when they sold out to the J. M. Merrel Company, a large general merchandise concern. Mr. McIntyre has since remained with this company, having charge of the hardware department.

He was married, April 20, 1882, to Miss Emily Stewart, a native of his own county in Canada. She, too, is of Scotch descent. They have two children, Mary Willie and Archie Alexander.

day is more than $300,000. Montana's debt was never, at any time, one-tenth that, and yet she fought more battles, suffered more loss and bore more extra burdens, from first to last, than ever did any other half-dozen Territories.

I have already spoken of the first very important publication from the summit of the shining mountains, Montana As It Is, in 1865–6. Exactly a decade later came the second and still more extended publication replete with early data: The Historical Society of Montana: 360 pages.

About this time there was talk in Helena of a board of trade, which was organized and in full operation the year following, 1874. The membership of the board for the year 1890 embraced 136 of the citizens of Helena, representing more than ten millions of dollars.

At the next Legislature, 1876, there were present commissioners from the approaching Northern Pacific Railroad. The hearts of the people went out to the road that was coming up the path trodden by Lewis and Clarke in their search for the overland commercial way to India, lured by the old "Northwest passage" idea, and the credit of the Territory to the extent of $300,000 was pledged toward its support. There was also the other railroad coming in from Corinne on the Central Pacific. The president of the Utah Northern now proposed to Governor Potts to extend his railroad lines to the Montana line in the year 1879 and to pierce Montana to the extent of 125 miles in the year following, conditioned only by the stipulation that his road should not be taxed for fifteen years. The Governor called an extra session in July and in a lengthy message laid the proposition before his Legislature. It was not accepted. It was not entertained because it was clear that the small consideration asked by President Sidney Dillon of the Utah Northern would have little weight, whether given by Montana or withheld. If it was to be built it would be done nearly as well without this little the first City Council of Phillipsburg, and ever since he has been a resident of this place he has taken a deep interest in its educational affairs, for some years serving as School Trustee. His parents both being Presbyterians, he was reared in that faith and he and his family now attend the Presbyterian Church, not, however, being members.

EDWARD HAYES, a Montana pioneer of 1865, but now deceased, was born in Ireland, in 1835. When only seven years of age he was brought by his parents to America, locating on a farm in McHenry county, Illinois, where he was raised to manhood. He was married in Warren county, Illinois, in March, 1865, to Miss Elizabeth Speaks, who was born in that State in 1837, a daughter of Martin and Sarah Speaks. April 17, 1865, the young couple started with ox teams on the long journey across the plains to Montana. They decided to spend the winter in Stockton, Utah, and in the following spring continued the journey to Washington Gulch, Montana, where Mr. Hayes mined for one year, frequently taking out two ounces of gold in a day. While there they also conducted a boarding-house and saloon, receiving as high as $1 a meal. In 1869 they purchased land in Bitter Root valley, but Mr. Hayes afterward sold his right to that land and homesteaded 160 acres, where he resided until his death, June 11, 1887, and on which his widow is still living. At that time the Bitter Root river, which passes the farm, was unusually high, and had washed away the bridge. The only means of crossing was then by ferrying, and while taking two men across in a small boat it was overturned, and Mr. Hayes and another gentleman was drowned. He was a member of the Catholic Church, and in political matters was indentified with the Democratic party.

Mr. and Mrs. Hayes had four children, namely: Edward S. (who resides near the old place), William J., Mary A., and Matthew Charles. Mrs. Hayes was raised in the Presbyterian faith, but her children are members of the Catholic Church.

DR. A. H. MITCHELL, Deer Lodge, Montana.—Among the prominent historical characters of this State, there are none who have occupied a position of greater importance and activity within the movements of Montana than has Dr. A. H. Mitchell, of Deer Lodge county.

The Doctor was born in Jefferson county, Kentucky, October 27, 1831. His father was a prominent lawyer of Louisville at that time, a Virginian of the old school. The early boyhood of our subject was spent at the University of Virginia, being four years in the preparatory department. While in his junior year, being of an adventurous disposition, he ran away from school and joined a regiment, going to the Mexican war under Colonel Humphrey Marshall. His father, learning of this exemption from taxation as with it. The only possible advantage to the Territory attainable would be brevity of time. But as the Northern Pacific was pushing its way across the plains of Dakota with incredible speed the Utah Northern must and would and did push on for the heart of Montana as well. This, the first railroad in Montana, crossed the line in 1880; and in 1881 entered the capital.

At the meeting of the twelfth Legislature there seems to have been a sort of "taking of stock," if the expression may be allowed. It was a cause of great rejoicing all over the land, this railroad to the capital. Old men had long waited for it, young men were made glad. Now and for the first time, too, they would see "The States." The population was tipping the beam at 50,000. The Northern Pacific road was almost within hearing; the schools were prosperous, having the California school system, and laws, and coming to be second only to that great State so celebrated for its schools. The counties were still in debt, it is true, some of them heavily, but the credit of the Territory was almost at par; the debt had almost entirely disappeared.

The thirteenth Legislature found money in the Territorial treasury, a very notable thing truly in the annals of Territories. The assessed property was set at about $40,000,000. To those who fancy this a lawless land at that time is submitted the list of penitents convicted and under restraint at this date, January, 1883: just threescore; the number of insane, half a score less.

Governor Potts was now retired, perhaps at his own wish, having served more than a dozen years as Governor of Montana; a good certificate. One Crosby took his place on the calendar of events and was followed in a few days by B. Platte Carpenter. Of course these two last named Governors had little or no opportunity to do much, whatever may have been their ambition or ability.

This year, 1885–6, twenty years after the escapade, had him sent home in a few months, and put him to studying medicine in Louisville, where he attended a course of lectures at the Jefferson College, and finally graduated in the medical department of the University of New York city, in 1852.

At this time his father was conducting a sugar plantation on the Brazos river, thirty-five miles from Galveston, Texas. The California mining excitement coming on about this time, young Mitchell started for the West, visiting for a short time his father's plantation. Proceeding westward, he lingered for a year in Mexico, and finally landed at San Francisco, in the autumn of 1853. There he entered into an active speculative career, engaging in mining in various parts of the State, in addition to his practice as a physician; and he soon became also actively interested in the political movements of the times, and in 1857 was elected to the State Legislature. In 1859 he was re-elected as the joint Representative from Tulare and Fresno counties; and during all this time he continued his mining and speculating interests. He also operated a large ranch, in connection with Jasper Harold, buying and selling large herds of cattle throughout the mining districts. His partner is still in California, being at this time a prominent banker at Visalia, having sold his cattle interests some time since for over $1,000,000.

Dr. Mitchell, after selling his interest in the cattle business, went to Fraser river, British Columbia, the source of the gold excitement of the time; but, finding the prospects there unsatisfactory, he returned to California, but he at length located at Aurora, Nevada, where he again embarked in the practice of medicine, and soon drifted again into mining speculation, in which he was very successful. He was one of the original discoverers of a rich mine at Esmeralda, where he operated until 1863, amassing a considerable fortune, when he went to Austin, same State, and thence to Idaho City, Idaho. Not finding matters satisfactory here, he went to Oregon and on to the Kootenai district in British Columbia, which at that time was a flourishing camp. He soon obtained a mining claim on a creek not far from Galbraith's ferry, some miles north of what is now Bonner's ferry. The placers here were phenomenally rich, and Dr. Mitchell took out of his claim some $20,000 of gold dust in three months; and with this stake he returned to San Francisco to spend the winter.

In May, 1865, he returned to the diggings; and while on a prospecting trip he fell in with a Jesuit priest and some Indians, who reported some very rich placers in the Blackfoot country. He therefore accompanied them across the mountains, arriving at McClellan's Gulch, in Deer Lodge county, September 9, 1865; but he proceeded on to first history of Montana by Granville Stuart, and ten years after the second historical publication, came M. A. Leeson's History of Montana, a perfect storehouse of statistics, historical incident, pioneer lore, and sparkling literature. It was cast in a broad and massive mould, like the great land and incomparable men and age of which it treats, being quite as broad and ponderous in make-up as Webster's Unabridged,—1,367 pages, illustrated. It is not only a splendid and enduring monument to its makers, but it testifies, as nothing else could, to the culture and generosity of the Montanese. The editor modestly disclaims perfection, but the book is as reliable as such a massive work under the direction of one mind can be made. Napoleon is said to have asserted that history is fiction agreed to; but this is only fictitiously true. We all disagree more or less concerning the history of our own time, while, as events retire into the past, we all agree more or less to the accepted record; as in the distance, a mountain takes contour and color which we do not appreciate close at hand.

At the end of the fourteenth regular session of the Legislature, and for the first time in more than two decades, a man who made his home in Montana was appointed Governor. It seems incredible and will read strangely enough as long as the history of Montana is read, that here, where an executive head was so much needed in managing Indians, miners, immigrants, all sorts of men and strange situations, enterprises and cross purposes, from the very first, only politicians,—and politicians who knew almost nothing about these people and situations to begin with,—were sent out to govern Montana. But this new Governor, S. T. Hauser, 1885, had been here from the first and knew well all these things that he had to deal Helena, where he engaged again in the practice of medicine. In 1866 he located at the town of Blackfoot permanently.

In 1868 he was elected to the Territorial Council from Missoula and Deer Lodge counties. In 1869 he was appointed by the President as the commissioner to build the penitentiary at Deer Lodge, and he moved there that year, since which time he has made that place his residence. In 1871 he was again elected to the Territorial Council, of which he was elected president. In the winter of 1872 he was elected to the Legislature, and in 1875 again to the Council, and serving again as president of that body. He was re-elected to this body in 1877, 1879 and 1883; in 1877 he was again president of the Council.

In 1885 he was chairman of the Democratic Territorial Central Committee; in 1888 he was named and elected by the convention as a member of the Democratic National Committee, and while serving in that capacity he was appointed a member of the committee to notify Mr. Cleveland of his nomination.

In 1877 he and Dr. Charles F. Mussigbrod was awarded the contract for the care, medication and maintenance of the insane of the State, which contract they have ever since retained. In 1877, also, during the Nez Perces war, he was appointed by Governor Potts as Surgeon General of the State militia; and, after the battle of Big Hole, General Gibbon appointed him Surgeon in charge of the wounded, the regular surgeon having become detached from his regiments. These wounded were brought to Deer Lodge and cared for at the asylum. The buildings of this institution are located fifteen miles south of Deer Lodge, and are owned by him and Dr. Charles Mussigbrod. They furnish large and commodious quarters for the State's insane.

During the past eight years, in addition to his many duties as the physician of the asylum, Dr. Mitchell has continued to be an active speculator in the mining interests of the State, in both gold and silver properties. He is a large stockholder in, and a director of, the Royal mine, near Deer Lodge, one of the richest gold-producers in the State.

In November, 1871, the Doctor married Miss Mary Ellen Irvine, a daughter of Colonel Thomas H. Irvine, of Richmond, Kentucky. The Doctor and his wife have had four sons and a daughter, all of whom are living excepting one son, who died whilst attending the university at Chicago, Illinois, at the age of nineteen years, of typhoid fever.

Thus it will be seen that the career of Dr. Mitchell has been one marked with activity and experience extending over a period of twenty-nine years within the State of Montana. The events of this time have constituted the early history of the State; and as an active participant in the exciting and interesting movements of this long period, Dr. Mitchell has become a historical feature of the commonwealth. He has been an active and zealous worker in every department of public enterprise, and at present is an efficient champion of the State's varied interests.

with. The President who appointed him did him some little honor; he did more honor to the Territory, but most of all did he honor himself in breaking this custom, which had almost become a law by usage, of appointing some political stranger or personal friend to go three thousand miles away and govern Montana. Of course no blame attaches to those who accepted the high places. Who of us all could or would have refused to be so honored? The blame is at the fountain head.

Political lines have dragged us right along through this dreary list of Governors and Legislatures farther than desired, but there was no resting place or cutting off of the catalogue. Now that it is done with up to this date we must hasten to turn about and take up the story of the Indians where we left it in the early seventies.

That ever restless and stormy man, Sitting Bull, could not be induced to remain at the reservation. He wanted to roam the Black Hills, Big Horn, Rosebud and, indeed, all places, this way or that, as the wind blows. The Government had made treaties with the Crow Indians by which we assumed the responsibilitiy of protecting them from their fierce, traditional foe, the Sioux. Sitting Bull could not be made to understand why he should not kill Crow Indians as of old. He said he would not kill white people, but he would continue to kill Crows, and he could not see what right the Government had to interfere. The fact is, his heart was cruel and bitter toward the white man, and if he did not with his own hand continue to kill white people, he allowed the young men who came out in thousands from the reservations to do so. As pointed out before, these murders were without end, apparently, and without purpose. And now, at last, the Government decided to take extreme measures.

Although throughout his career he has ever been a consistent Democrat, because of the recent antagonistic position of President Cleveland toward the interests of the Northwest, and her principal products of silver and wool, he has become an advocate of the Populist movement within his State. The antagonism which has engendered much feeling throughout the Northwest between the mining operators and the administration may be justly credited with the formation of the new party within the State, which is now championed by Dr. Mitchell. He is owner and manager of the Northwest, the Populist newspaper of his district, which organ he is conducting in the interests of the Populist campaign. The two political parties within the State of Montana, while endeavoring to bring harmony out of the chaotic condition into which they have drifted, may find it necessary to adopt a popular movement and indorse a new standard of party principles in order to hold together the property interests and influences which dictate the wishes of the people of the State. It is more than probable that the unlaying vestments of the future will fall upon those whose efforts in the past shall have won for them already the esteem and confidence of the people of the State; and the new movement can select no better man to plead their cause in any capacity than Dr. A. H. Mitchell, the subject of our sketch.

He is still an active worker, young in appearance and vitality, and a genial and popular citizen with a large and influential circle of acquaintances and friends throughout the State.

JOHN V. PETRITZ, one of the successful business men of Anaconda, was born in Austria, May 18, 1852, educated in his native country, and began life for himself in a small notion business. In 1873 he emigrated to America, believing that in this land of the free there were better opportunities for acquiring a competency than in the old world.

Landing in New York January 16, 1873, he directed his course to Chicago, where he spent the winter. He began his business career at Freeport, Illinois, peddling notions with a horse and wagon, and continued in that way for some time, making a little money. In 1879 a spirit of emigration led him still further West, and he took up his abode in Montana. At Butte City he secured a clerkship in the establishment of Schmidt & Gamer, then the owners of the Centennial Brewery, and in time he became a half owner of a beer depot at Glendale, where he continued a year or so, until the camp went down. Then he returned to Butte City and soon afterward opened a saloon at Walkerville, in connection with which he also ran a billiard hall and made money. When the Utah & Northern Railroad reached Butte City he started a saloon and hotel at South Butte, and in 1883, when Anaconda sprang into

CHAPTER XXVII.

A Bloody Spot in Montana—The War with the Sioux—General Crook's Battle on the Rosebud—General Custer's Last Campaign—Colonel Custer—Lieutenants Calhoun and Crittenden.

THE first two of the four disastrous battles with the savages on this continent were fought by foreign-born generals; the last was led by an American, born of American parents.

"Who would have thought it? Oh, who would have thought it?" moaned the brave first officer, Gen. Braddock, to the last hour of the few days that he survived Braddock's defeat. Gen. St. Clair was a Scottish nobleman, whom Washington trusted because he thought him cool-headed and careful. "I told him to be careful. Oh, I told him to be careful, and now he has made hundreds of widows and orphans," cried Washington, when told of St. Clair's defeat. This general long survived his defeat and died in poverty and obscurity.

I am loath to celebrate war or warriors. In all I have written in song or story I have always left these thrilling themes to others, adhering to the teaching of my Quaker father, who spent a long lifetime among wild men, yet never knew, would never even consent to learn, how to load or fire a gun. But Custer gave his life to Montana. Saber in hand he poured out his blood on her soil, and his story is her story. Because of this, and partly because the man has been misunderstood and much abused, I wanted to detail what little I know of his last battle; and you will pardon me if I call attention to the man rather than to the soldier; for his life was as gentle and pure as his death was brave and glorious.

He was born in Harrison county, Ohio, near existence, he came to this place with a load of goods, set up a tent and was on hand to sell to the crowd that attended the sale of lots, which occurred June 26, 1883. He sold from his tent for a month and then moved into one of the buildings that had been put up on Main street. He had the agency for the centennial beer, and did both a wholesale and retail business until 1886, when he turned his attention to wholesaling exclusively, meeting with great financial success. In 1893 he built his present fine brick block on Main street. It is 50x100 feet, has two stories and a basement, and is furnished with all the latest improvements, including steam heat, electric light, etc. The first floor contains three store rooms, and the upper rooms are used for office purposes. The whole building is richly furnished and is a valuable addition to the business blocks of the city.

Mr. Petritz still owns his first store in Anaconda, which is located on the corner of Commercial avenue and Hickory streets, and he has built a nice residence on West Park avenue, where he resides with his family. On October 11, 1894, he bought a half interest in the Anaconda Brewery, now known as Anaconda Brewing Company. The product of their brewery is of a superior quality, and finds a ready market in Anaconda and vicinity. Mr. Petritz is the manager.

Mr. Petritz was married July 1, 1882, in Butte City, to Miss Louisa S. Kloefel, a native of the State of Wisconsin. They have eight children, of whom six are living, namely: Frank J., William E., Genevieve S., Madaline J., John G. and Louis J.

In politics, Mr. Petritz affiliates with the Democratic party. He is a member of St. Peter and St. Paul Society, the A. O. U. W., the National Union and the Young Men's Institute.

Hon. James McDonel, another one of the early pioneers of Montana, and a man who has been for a number of years a prominent factor in the town of Phillipsburg, was born in Wisconsin, January 3, 1843.

Mr. McDonel is of Irish extraction. His father, Edward McDonel, was born on the Emerald Isle, and emi-the Pennsylvania line. Captain Whitaker in his elaborate and appreciative Life of Custer (Life of General George A. Custer, by Frederick Whitaker; p. 3) tells us that he descended from one of the Hesssian soldiers surrendered by Cornwallis to Washington at Yorktown; and that the name was then spelled Küster. Be this as it may, our work keeps us mainly within the lines of Montana. Yet he was no stranger here. He had battled for this land long and bravely before this last campaign, and knew the Yellowstone, Little Missouri, Big Horn and Little Horn rivers as if he had been born and reared on their wild banks.

President Grant, having done his best to turn the care and guardianship of the Indians over to the officers of the regular army, seems to have been finally disgusted with his failure to do so and left things all at loose ends, and the Indian agents grew more greedy than ever. One of his cabinet officers, Belknap, was detected in trading Indian agencies to adventurers for profit. It was a dreadful humiliation to Grant. He hoped, it would seem, that his officers of the army would sympathize with his misfortune. But, when Custer, a favorite, told of having seen in private hands some sacks of grain which bore the brand of an agency, and was summoned to Washington from the front to testify before the Congressional Investigating Committee, the president would not see him. He went so far as to allow his Secretary of War to forbid his joining his regiment in the great campaign against Sitting Bull, which had been all winter in preparation. At the end of the unhappy Belknap affair he had set out for the upper Missouri, where his wife was and where his regiment waited, but the Secretary of War stopped grated from there to America, bringing with him his wife and two children, and locating in Grant county, Wisconsin. Wisconsin was then on the frontier. There he cleared up a farm and spent the rest of his life, his death occurring in 1861. His widow survived him till 1887, being eighty years of age at the time of her death. Both were devout members of the Catholic Church and their lives were characterized by honesty, industry and simplicity. They had five children, James M. being the third born. All are living except one, Edward. He enlisted in the Union army, was wounded in the battle of Chickamauga, was taken prisoner, and died in Libby prison.

The subject of our sketch was reared on his father's farm and received his education in the primitive log schoolhouse near his home, and when he started out to do for himself he worked for wages as a farm hand. In 1864 he formed one of a large company that crossed the plains with mule teams to the far West, Nevada being their objective point, which they reached in safety. This journey was to him a delightful one. Game of all kinds was plenty and the novelty of the trip suited exactly his adventurous young spirit. After his arrival in Nevada he worked in the mines for wages eight months. At the end of that time he directed his course toward Montana, coming by way of Salt Lake. He traveled by stage until after passing Ogden. There, on account of the deep snow, they were obliged to lay over a week. Thence they continued their journey by stage, but in rather unpleasant and unromantic manner. At the latter place the United States mail was tied up in a cowhide and dragged through the snow by a mule, and the passengers followed behind on foot, over the rugged mountain ranges and pleasant valleys, where the beautiful snow lay on an average about four feet deep; and in due time Mr. McDonel and party reached Virginia City, arriving in March 1865. Here he at once secured work in the mines at $5 per day, and continued thus employed until June. He afterward mined at Blackfoot and Jefferson Gulch, but without success at either place. Next we find him at McClellan Gulch, where again he worked for wages, receiving $7 per day at this place. He, however, was not satisfied to continue long as a wage worker and the following spring we find him out on a prospecting tour. Finally he returned to Blackfoot City and purchased a claim on Carpenter's Bar, where he and two others took out $2,000 in two months. After this he and two partners went to Deer Lodge river and built a toll bridge near Gold creek, the bridge costing about $2,000. The first five weeks the toll received at the bridge amounted to $1,500. They all retained their interest in this bridge for five years, and after that Mr. McDonel was its sole owner for two years longer. At the end of this time he removed to Pioneer and purchased placer-mining ground, but the expense of operating his mines was so great that they did not pay. His next move was to Pike's Peak. After working for wages there four months, he purchased an interest in a livery stable, in which he continued until the camp went down. During that time he made some money. Then he returned to Pioneer, where he conducted a livery business for six years. In 1879 he came to Phillipsburg and here for five years longer he was in the

him. Custer appealed to the president. His letter goes right to the heart and shows the man. Terry's postcript to his letter shows also something of his faith in Custer's capacity as a soldier. The two epistles, which are reproduced in this connection, had the desired effect, and Custer took the field with his regiment in due time.

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF DAKOTA,
SAINT PAUL, MINN., May 6th, 1876.

Adjutant General,

Division of Missouri, Chicago.

I forward the following:—

To HIS EXCELLENCY THE PRESIDENT (through Military Channels):

I have seen your order, transmitted through the general of the army, directing that I be not permitted to accompany the expedition about to move against hostile Indians. As my entire regiment forms a part of the proposed expedition, and as I am the senior officer of the regiment on duty in this department, I respectfully but most earnestly request that while not allowed to go in command of the expedition, I may be permitted to serve with my regiment in the field.

I appeal to you as a soldier to spare me the humiliation of seeing my regiment march to meet the enemy, and I not to share its dangers.

(Signed) G. A. CUSTER, Bvt. Maj. Genl. U. S. Army.

In forwarding the above, I wish to say expressly, that I have no desire whatever to question the orders of the President, or of my military superiors. Whether Lieut. Col. Custer shall be permitted to accompany my column or not, I shall go in command of it.

I do not know the reasons upon which the orders already given rest; but if those reasons do not forbid it, Lieut. Col. Custer's services would be very valuable with his command.

(Signed) TERRY,
Commanding Department.

livery business, selling out at the end of that time. We next find him at Granite. He platted that town, sold town lots, erected the first business house in the place, and in various ways aided in its growth and development. For two years he was in the saloon business there. Although he prospered financially at Granite, he was obliged on account of failing health to seek a change of location. Accordingly he came back to Phillipsburg. Here he continued in the saloon business six months longer. Then he sold out and from that date up to the present time he has been engaged in real-estate business, ranching and stock-raising. He owns 320 acres of fine farming land within half a mile of Phillipsburg, and he also owns city property and a number of valuable mining claims.

Of recent years Mr. McDonel has been prominently connected with public affairs. He affiliates with the Democrat party and has been chosen to fill various positions of prominence and trust. He served two terms as Justice of the Peace and two terms as Mayor of Phillipsburg, and in 1892 was elected to represent Deer Lodge county in the State Legislature. He introduced the bill creating the county of Granite. As a member of this honorable body he rendered efficient service in bringing about the organization of Granite county, and he also took an active part in the passage of the "anti-scalper" bill, which was intended to prevent the public from being defrauded by irresponsible railroad ticket-scalpers. He also took an active part in the passage of all bills locating the several State institutions, such as the State School of Mines, State University, State Normal School, Orphans' Asylum, School for the Deaf and Dumb and State Reform School.

S. V. KEMPER, another one of Butte City's enterprising and successful men, has by his own pluck and energy won his way to the front. He is truly a self-made man, and is eminently deserving of some personal mention in this work, devoted to a portrayal of the lives of Montana's representative men. A sketch of his life is as follows:

S. V. Kemper was born in St. Joseph, Missouri, June 21, 1855. His ancestors were of German origin, and may be traced back 269 years to Johann Kemper of Münsen, a village in Siegen in the province of Westphalia about sixty miles southeast of Cologne, in Germany. Some of them settled in Fauquier county, Virginia, about the year 1714. They were substantial planters. Several of the family participated in the Revolutionary war, and one of them subsequently became Governor of Virginia. Grandfather William Kemper was born in Virginia, and was there married to a Miss Rogers, of Scotch descent. They removed to Kentucky at an early day and were among the pioneer planters of that State. He was a Baptist of the strictest kind, lived an honorable and upright life, and died at the advanced age of eighty-four years. He and his good wife reared a family of eleven children, of whom Thompson Kemper, the father of our subject, was born in Kentucky in 1806. Thompson Kemper was married in Virginia in 1845 to Miss Lucy Ann Smiley, a native of Nelson county, that State. Her people had long been residents of the Old Dominion, her father being of Irish descent and her mother of Scotch. Thompson Kemper and his wife had three sons and a daughter, and all the sons, James W., Edward W. and Simeon Vandeventer, are now residents of Butte City. The mother has been a Methodist from her girlhood

The Indians,—poor deluded children! one cannot help pitying them at this time—had been greatly wronged previously, as the Belknap investigation showed; but their present wrong grew from themselves, their weakness and their foolish following of their demons or prophets. Sitting Bull, as we have seen, had massed his forces, as the spring and summer came on, at the mouth of the Yellowstone, on the tributaries of the Big Horn river, in what is now Custer county. General Crook, coming up from Fort Fetterman, had been handling him roughly, as was his habit when sent on such work. But he remained only one day on the victorious field and then returned to his base of supplies. The date of Crook's victory and the fatal day when Custer and his comrades fell are only a few days apart; and the two battle-grounds are almost within "a stone's throw," so to speak, of one another. Crook, owing to a milder climate on his side of the mountains, had set out from Fort Fetterman, in Wyoming, March 1st, while Terry and Custer took up their march from Fort Lincoln, Dakota, later. Crook had a force of seven hundred men, sixty wagons and four hundred pack mules. With his usual modesty he says but little, although he destroyed an Indian town, filled with supplies and munitions of war after beating the Indians in battle. The fight lasted five hours. Crook had four killed and many wounded. He burned one hundred and twenty-five lodges.

days. Some time after marriage the father joined the same church, of which he remained a consistent member the rest of his life, filling various official positions, such as Class-leader, Sunday-school Superintendent, etc. Early in his life he had been a teacher. In 1871 he came with his family to Montana, where he resided until the time of his death in 1891. The mother is still living, now in her seventy-fourth year.

S. V. Kemper received very limited educational advantages in his youth, but he has all his life been a student and has acquired a broad knowledge of men and affairs. He has collected a valuable library, and even now takes delight in belonging to a select literary club. While he is well posted on general topics, he has made a specialty of mathematics, ethics and the philosophy of theology. He has led an exemplary life and takes pride in his reputation as a man of good moral character.

Mr. Kemper was sixteen at the time his father moved to Montana. They came by rail to Corinne and thence by wagon to Radersburg, near which place they took claim to a tract of land, and tried hard for five years to make a living by farming. It was up-hill work, however, for the grasshoppers destroyed their crops for three successive years and they were at their wits' end to know what it was best to do. S. V. worked out for wages, shearing sheep, mining and doing carpenter work; but there was not much money in this, and he was on the alert for something better.

About this time the subject of this sketch became convinced that Butte City had in store for it an era of great prosperity, and he accordingly came hither in 1877 and purchased forty acres of land near the town and started a market garden. Soon the rest of the family joined him here, and they carried on the business quite successfully for five years. The smoke from many smelters of the town interfered with their industry, and the rapid growth of the place induced them to subdivide their land and put it on the market as the Kemper addition. From this start he launched out extensively into the real-estate business, rapidly acquired property, and soon took rank with the most enterprising and influential men of the city. Later, in partnership with Mr. Lawlor, he platted the Lawlor & Kemper addition on the west side of the city. They paid $17,000 for eight acres, and the first year sold enough lots to pay for the whole tract and still had $30,000 worth of property left. He and his brother had the good fortune to locate the famous Ground Squirrel mine, which they subseqnently sold for $230,000.

In 1889 Mr. Kemper took an active part in the organization of the Citizens' Building and Loan Association, the first association of the kind in the city, and is now secretary of the State League of Local Building and Loan Associations, and a member of the Executive Committee of the United States League of Building and Loan Associations. In 1891 he was active in securing the organization of the State Savings Bank of Butte City, in which institution he is a stockholder and director. In 1892 he organized the Brownfield-Canty Carpet Company, which does a large wholesale and retail carpet trade in Butte City. Mr. Kemper is president of this company. Since 1891, however, he has been practically retired from active business. He still has large holdings in Butte City, among which is the business block adjoining the library building and numerous residences in various parts of the city. He is one of the owners of the Silver Bow raisin vineyard in Tulare county, California, and is secretary of this company.

Mr. Kemper was married November 19, 1880, to Miss Sallie B. Shields, of Highland, Kansas, and they have

His letter touching this matter is as follows:

FORT RENO, March 22.

We cut loose from the wagon train on the 17th inst., and scouted the Tongue and Rosebud rivers until satisfied that there were no Indians upon them; then struck across the country toward Powder river. General Reynolds, with part of the command, was pushed forward on a trail leading to the village of Crazy Horse, near the mouth of Little Powder river. This he attacked and destroyed on the 17th inst., finding it a perfect magazine of ammunition, war material and general supplies. Crazy Horse had with him the northern Cheyennes and some of the Minneconjous, probably in all one-half of the Indians off the reservation. Every evidence was found to prove these Indians in copartnership with those at the Red Cloud and Spotted Tail agencies, and that the proceeds of their raids upon the settlements had been taken to those agencies, and supplies brought out in return. In this connection I would again urgently recommend the immediate transfer of the Indians of those agencies to the Missouri river. I am satisfied that, if Sitting Bull is on this side of the Yellowstone, he is camped at the mouth of Powder river. We experienced severe weather during our absence from the wagon train, snow falling every day but one, and the mercurial thermometer on several occasions failing to register. GEORGE CROOK, Brigadier-General.

As usual, there was a great difference of opinion as to the strength of the Indians. Crook, after this battle with Crazy Horse in March, put the Indians far below the estimated number. They had been reported as twenty thousand strong. He cut this estimate down to about two thousand, which, as nearly as can be found out, was not far wrong. It may here be stated that the number of Indians is, though not always intentionally, greatly exaggerated.

Crook retraced his steps and rested at Fort Fetterman till May, when with a force of about 500 children as follows: William Arthur, Mary Blain, Sarah Virginia and Helen Elizabeth. Mrs. Kemper is a member of the Presbyterian Church. The family residence is on West Copper street in the Lawlor and Kemper addition, one of the beautiful residence portions of the city.

Politically, Mr. Kemper is an independent Democrat, and fraternally is identified with the A. O. U. W. and a P. O. S. of A.

WILLIAM E. BANCROFT, a veteran of the civil war, and now Commander of the Frederick Winthrop Post, G. A R., Missoula, dates his arrival in Montana in 1867. Of his life we make record as follows:

William E. Bancroft was born in Hartford, Connecticut, December 9, 1838. His father, James M. Bancroft, a native of Massachusetts, was born in 1812; his mother whose maiden name was Catharine Chappin, was born in Westfield, Massachusetts. In 1839 his parents removed to New Hampshire, where the father spent the greater part of his life. He lived to be sixty-two years of age. By occupation he was a farmer and blacksmith. His first wife, the mother of William E., had three children, her death occurring when our subject was three years old. By his second wife Mr. Bancroft had four children.

William E. Bancroft was reared in New Hampshire, and had attained his twenty-second year when the civil war burst upon the country. April 22, 1861, in response to President Lincoln's call for volunteers, he enlisted in the First New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry; May 22, he enlisted in Company F, Second New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry. In his regiment he was promoted as Sergeant and served in it until April 27, 1864, at which time he was commissioned Second Lieutenant of the First United States Volunteer Infantry. In July of that year he was promoted to First Lieutenant, and in this office he served until the close of the war, his discharge being at Leavenworth, Kansas, November 25, 1865. He participated in both the battles of Bull Run, the battles of Fair Oaks, Malvern Hill, Williamsburg, Gettysburg, and many minor engagements. In the second fight at Bull Run he was wounded in the neck, and from the effect of the injury thus sustained he was in the hospital at Washington five months.

The war over, Mr. Bancroft returned to his home in New Hampshire, and the following spring came west as far as Atchison, Kansas, where he remained until July, 1866. He then started across the plains with a mule outfit. While on the plains he and his party had all their mules stolen by the Indians. With the aid of Government mules they continued their way to Fort Beaufort, where they purchased cattle, and in that way completed their journey to Salt Lake City. At the latter place they spent the winter of 1866–7, and in the spring they came on to Helena, arriving here in July. Mr. Bancroft mined at Canyon creek and on the Missouri river until December, 1869, but did not meet with flattering success, and from there came to Cedar creek in Missoula county. Upon his arrival in Missoula county, he and his two companions had only a dollar in money and their provisions were nearly exhausted. It was with difficulty that they got through the winter. In March they secured a contract to build a log cabin for a Frenchman, and while they were at work on it Mr. Bancroft became snow-blind. It was a month before he recovered his sight. While he he came back, and on the 15th of June was near the scene of his battle in March. General Gibbon was also coming from Fort Ellis; so that Montana soil felt the tread at this one time of the best part of our army, and all trending to this one center, Sitting Bull's camps on the Rosebud and Big Horn rivers. The total force of the three converging columns was about three thousand, men and officers. Did the deluded Indians number more? I think not so many.

On the seventh of June General Crook fought Sitting Bull, as said before, a stone's throw from where Custer fell. He beat the Indians badly, as usual, and, after resting a short time on the field of battle, turned back to his base of supplies, having made forced marches with but four days' rations and none too many rounds of ammunition, in order to speedily meet the enemy.

Meantime, Gibbon and Terry and Custer were down the Rosebud, while Crook was battling with Sitting Bull on the head of the same little tributary of the Yellowstone.

After the consultation of Gibbon, Terry and Custer, and not yet having had communication with Crook, it was determined to advance at once up the Rosebud. Crook was supposed to be two hard days' march, or about eighty miles, distant. But Sitting Bull with all his force was immediately between him and Terry, Custer and Gibbon. At this point Terry sent the subjoined communication to Sheridan:

"No Indians have been met with as yet, but traces of a large and recent camp have been discovered twenty or thirty miles up the Rosebud. Gibbon's column will move this morning on the north side of the Yellowstone for the mouth of the Big Horn, where it will be ferried across by the supply steamer, and whence it will proceed to the mouth of the Little Horn, and so on. Custer will go up the Rosebud to-morrow with was recovering, one of the other men got sick, so the two came together to Missoula where they could be more comfortable. During their absence the third man, while still working away on the house, fell from one of the logs and broke his leg. The partnership was thus dissolved. When Mr. Bancroft got able he worked for wages. For a time he was employed on a farm which then included the lots he now owns and the ground where the court-house stands. There were then only a few houses in the town. After working out by the month for a few years, he engaged in the livery business where the Florence Hotel now stands, and there he did a successful business until the railroad was built. He was also for some time interested in a sawmill on the Rattlesnake river. In 1886 he purchased a wood-saw outfit, with steam power, the first outfit of this kind in Missoula, and in this business he has continued up to the present time, sawing the greater part of the wood used for fuel in the city. He built the residence he owns and occupies, and besides this owns several other pieces of property in Missoula.

During his residence in Missoula Mr. Bancroft has met all his obligations honorably. He has always been a straight out-and-out Democrat, has served his party well, and has been its choice for Assessor of Missoula county and Marshal of the city of Missoula, in both of which positions he performed his duty with the strictest fidelity. While a soldier in the army, in Maryland, in 1864, he was made a Master Mason, is also an Odd Fellow, and has served officially in both the orders, having represented the I. O. O. F., in the Grand Lodge several times.

GEORGE CLINTON SWALLOW, M. D., LL. D., of Helena, was born in Buckfield, Oxford county, Maine, in 1817. Among the ancient families of Normandy was that of Sevalliou, some of whom emigrated to New Orleans, while others went to England with William the Conqueror. In that country the name was changed to Swallow. Some of this branch of the family emigrated to New England in an early day, settling in Massachusetts and New Hampshire.

Larned Swallow, the father of the subject of this sketch, was an early settler in Maine, where he cultivated a farm and ran a shop in which he manufactured axes, plows and rifles, besides doing the ordinary work of such shops. In this shop was manufactured the first cast-steel rifle ever made, a breech-loader, on which Hall's patent was obtained. This rifle was adopted by the Government and manufactured at Harper's Ferry for the army. He was often invited to assist in moulding the affairs of the young State. With other commissioners, he was appointed by the President of the United States to run and establish the northern boundary of the State of Maine.

Dr. G. C. Swallow was an early, active and successful worker in the shop and on the farm, where many improvements over ordinary farming, such as irrigation and deep plowing, were adopted. Here he developed a fine physical structure and superior intellectual faculties. Just at this time men were beginning to unfold the long history of the earth as found in its rock record. George looked at the grand mountain ranges of his native State his whole regiment, and thence to the headwaters of the Little Horn, thence down the Little Horn."

It should be mentioned that Reno had been scouting and had found a big trail on the Rosebud.

Custer marched up the Rosebud on June 22d, under the following orders, and it is pleasant to see how entirely he was trusted by his superior officers. All seemed to confide in his discretion and coolness as in his courage:

Lieut. Col. Custer, Seventh Cavalry:

COLONEL:—The Brigadier-General Commanding directs that as soon as your regiment can be made ready for the march you proceed up the Rosebud in pursuit of the Indians whose trail was discovered by Major Reno a few days since. It is, of course, impossible to give any definite instructions in regard to this movement, and, were it not impossible to do so, the Department Commander places too much confidence in your zeal, energy and ability to wish to impose upon you precise orders which might hamper your action when nearly in contact with the enemy. He will, however, indicate to you his own views of what your action should be, and he desires that you should conform to them unless you shall see sufficient reason for departing from them. He thinks that you should proceed up the Rosebud until you ascertain definitely the direction in which the trail above spoken of leads. Should it be found, as it appears to be almost certain that it will be found, to turn toward the Little Big Horn, he thinks that you should still proceed southward, perhaps, as far as the headwaters of the Tongue, and then turn toward the Little Big Horn, feeling constantly, however, to your left so as to preclude the possibility of the escape of the Indians to the south or southeast by passing around your left flank. The column of Colonel Gibbon is now in motion for the mouth of the Big Horn. As soon as it reaches that point it will cross the Yellowstone and move up at least as far as the parks of the Big and Little Big Horn. Of course its future movements must be controlled by circumstances as they arise; but it is hoped and resolved that he would read their secrets and develop their treasures. In his experiments in the shop and on the farm many questions arose involving the principles of physics, chemistry and geology. These sciences, which he most desired to pursue, could be reached only in the senior year at our colleges. Between him and that coveted time were five long years of study upon mathematics, Latin, Greek, French and other subjects, of the value of which at that time, he could form no proper estimate. Nevertheless he resolved to pay the price, hardship though it seemed to him then. These five years of training and mental discipline gave a breadth and grasp to his intellect which otherwise it never would have received. Here was a fearful struggle of six years' study for a young man without money, save what he earned in teaching or in the shop.

At sixteen he became a teacher, and his success gave him the highest wages paid in the public schools of Maine and Massachusetts, where he was called to the most difficult schools. At the forge or in the schoolroom, whichever paid the best, he earned the money for the collegiate course. He graduated at Bowdoin College with high honors in 1843. Immediately he was made lecturer on botany and he delivered the first course on that science ever given in his alma mater to the senior class.

Soon afterward he was elected principal of the Hampden Academy, of which the Hon. Hannibal Hamlin was then the president of the board of trustees. Hamlin sympathized with Mr. Swallow in the desire to have one school where men could study science without going through a full collegiate course. By the aid of the Hon. Elijah Hamlin, then in the Senate, the State made a grant of lands to endow the School of Agricultural Science, in 1848, the first in New England if not in the country.

In 1850 Dr. Charles T. Jackson, then eminent among geologists, was making a geological survey of the south shore of Lake Superior for the United States. He invited Professor Swallow to assist him in that work. Some Government changes prevented a continuation of this survey; and about this time, too, Professor Swallow was invited to take charge of the Agricultural School of New York, but he chose the chair of geology and chemistry in the University of Missouri; and, as he examined the rich and varied resources of that State and saw the great need of a better communication among her farmers and horticulturists, in 1852 he published an exhaustive address to the people of Missouri, which led to the establishment of the agricultural associations of St. Louis and Boone counties, quickly followed by similar organizations in various parts of the State. As a result of his persistent labors in this direction, and in response to a memorial from his pen, the Legislature and the curators of the university, in 1858, located the State Agricultural College with the State University.

In 1853 Professor Swallow was appointed State Geologist by Governor Sterling Price, which position he held for eight years and until he was driven from the field by the late war. A more lengthy notice than the limits of this work will allow would be necessary to do justice to the extent and value of his long labors in this extensive that the Indians, if upon the Little Big Horn, may be so nearly inclosed by two columns that their escape will be impossible. The Department Commander desires that on your way up the Rosebud you should thoroughly examine the upper part of Tulloch's creek, and that you should endeavor to send a scout through to Colonel Gibbon's column with information of the result of your examination. The lower part of this creek will be examined by a detachment from Colonel Gibbon's command. The supply steamer will be pushed up the Big Horn as far as the forks of the river are found to be navigable for that space, and the Department Commander, who will accompany the column of Colonel Gibbon, desires you to report to him there not later than the expiration of the time for which your troops are rationed, unless in the meantime you receive further orders.

Respectfully, etc.,

E. W. SMITH, Captain 18th Infantry.
Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.

As bearing on the movements of the forces, here appear extracts from Major Reno's reports:

"As we approached a deserted village, in which was standing one tepee, about 11 A. M., Custer motioned me to cross to him, which I did, and moved nearer to his column, until about 12:30 A. M., when Lieutenant Cook, adjutant, came to me and said the village was only two miles ahead and running away. To 'move forward at as rapid gait as I thought prudent and to charge afterward, and the whole outfit would support me;' I think those were his exact words. I at once took a fast trot, and moved down about two miles, when I came to a ford of the river. I crossed immediately, and halted about ten minutes or less, to gather the batallion, sending word to Custer that I had everything in front of me, and that they were strong.

"I deployed, and with the Ree scouts on my left, charged down the valley, driving the Indians with great ease for about two and a half miles. I however soon saw that I was being drawn into some trap, as they certainly would fight harder, and especially as we were nearing their village, which was still standing; besides, I could not field. Suffice it to say that upon entering this work he called around him a corps of assistants of such signal ability as were rarely or never engaged at the same time in a similar work. Among them the names of Shumard and Lytton and Norwood stand pre-eminent. In 1855 his first report was given to the world; and so great was the interest awakened by this report, and so important were his contributions to geological science regarded, that he was elected a member of the leading scientific associations of America and Europe. His announcement of the discovery of Permian rocks in America was new and startling to the geologists of both hemispheres. It provoked much discussion and was finally settled in the geological department of the American Association for the Advancement of Science, after a full discussion by the geologists of both continents, at the Baltimore meeting. Professor Swallow was then chairman of the geological department of this association.

In 1865 the Professor was appointed to make a geological survey of Kansas, as preliminary to the railroad system of that State then to be inaugurated by a Congressional grant of land. His report gave a detailed description of the rocks of eastern Kansas, including the Permian and Carboniferous systems.

In 1870 the curriculum of the University of Missouri was greatly enlarged, embracing the departments of law, medicine and agriculture, and Professor Swallow was elected to the Chair of Agriculture and Geology; and soon afterward he was placed at the head of the department and made Dean of the College of Agriculture, which position he held for twelve years.

As a recognition of his valuable services and his contributions to knowledge, foreign societies have presented him rare and costly scientific works. He has also received the highest diploma in medicine and the honorary degree of LL. D., while, by means of his reports, the large and rich mineral fields of southwest Missouri and southeastern Kansas, and the vast coal fields in northwest Missouri, eastern Kansas and southern Iowa, were brought to the notice of the world, thereby hastening the development of the exhaustless treasures of these regions.

In the Agricultural College, of which he was Dean, the sons of the farmers of the Mississipi valley were educated to become centers of influence for good in their widely separated homes. To the early toilers in the wide field of agricultural education, of whom Dr. Swallow is an honored representative, will belong in a good degree the eternal honor of devising and putting in successful operation those means and influences which are molding into goodly shape the progress and civilization of the commonwealth.

Dr. Swallow was one of a company who built at Argenta the first smelting and cupel furnaces in Montana, and the first silver mill in the State, at Phillipsburg. In 1867 he erected a twenty-four-stamp mill, adapted to both silver and gold, which is still running, at Butte. Since 1882 he has, as mining expert, brought out many mining properties, all of which proved satisfactory to the purchasers. Governor Leslie appointed Dr. Swallow Mine Inspector. His two reports show a wonderful development of mineral wealth in Montana.

In 1844 Dr. Swallow was married to Martha A. Hill, daughter of Rev. David Hill, of the Virginia Methodist Conference, Though raised in her father's faith, when see Custer, or any other support, and at the same time the very earth seemed to grow Indians, and they were running toward me in swarms, and from all directions. I saw I must defend myself, and give up the attack mounted. This I did, taking possession of a point of woods, and which furnished, near its edge, a shelter for the horses; dismounted and fought them on foot, making headway through the wood. I soon found myself in the near vicinity of the village, saw that I was fighting odds of at least five to one, and that my only hope was to get out of the wood, where I would soon have been surrounded, and gain some high ground. I accomplished this by mounting and charging the Indians between me and the bluffs, on the opposite side of the river. In this charge, First Lieutenant Donald McIntosh, Second Lieutenant Ben H. Hodgson, Seventh Cavalry, and A. A. Surg. J. M. De Wolf, were killed. I succeeded in reaching the top of the bluff, with a loss of three officers and twenty-nine enlisted men killed, and seven men wounded. Almost at the same time I reached the top, mounted men were seen coming toward us, and it proved to be Colonel Benteen's battalion, Companies H, D, and K; we joined forces, and in a short time the pack train came up. As senior, my command was then companies A, B, C, D, G, H, K and M, about 380 men, and the following officers: Captains Benteen, Weir, French and McDougall; First Lieutenants Godfrey, Mathey, and Gibson; Second Lieutenants Edgerly, Wallace, Varnum, and Hare; A. A. Surg. Porter. First Lieutenant De Rudio was in the dismounted fight in the woods, but having some trouble with his horse, did not join the command in the charge out, and hiding himself in the woods, joined the command after nightfall of the 26th.

"Still hearing nothing of Custer, and with this reinforcement, I moved down the river in the direction of the village, keeping on the bluffs. We had heard firing in that direction, she united her destinies with the man of her choice she joined the Presbyterian Church, of which he has been an Elder. They have but one child, a charming daughter, possessing rare gifts and accomplishments, who is now the wife of Col. A. M. Woodfolk, a distinguished lawyer of Chicago.

How much Dr. Swallow is indebted for his position and success in life to the devotion and rare good judgment of his beloved wife, no one knows so well as himself. Of the generous hospitality of that home, in which she has been the perpetual sunlight, the writer of this sketch knows from an experience of many years. In March, 1894, the Presbyterian Church of Helena celebrated the golden wedding of Dr. and Mrs. Swallow, in which event the church and people of the city greatly honored the aged couple.

ABNER ADAMS, one of the highly respected early pioneers of Montana, resides in the Prickly Pear valley, six miles northeast of Helena. The facts in regard to his life and ancestry, as gleaned for publication, are as follows:

Abner Adams was born in Otsego county, New York May 12, 1829. He traces his ancestry back to English people who were among the earliest settlers of America. His great-grandfather Adams fought in the Revolutionary war. The Adamses had a farm in the town of Harwicks, where several generations of the family were born, lived and died, the land passing from one generation to the next. The name Abner was also handed down from father to son, from great-grandfather Abner Adams on down to the subject of our sketch. On this farm grandfather Abner Adams was born, resided sixty-eight years, and died, and his son Abner was also born there and also lived to be sixty-eight. The mother of our subject, whose maiden name was Diana Latin, was a native of Connecticut. She was the mother of five sons and one daughter, the subject of our sketch being next to the oldest, and one of the four who are still living. The mother died at the age of forty-five years. Both parents were members of the Episcopal Church, and were people of high standing in the community.

When the subject of our sketch was four years old his parents removed to Cattaraugus county, New York, where they remained fourteen years, and from whence they removed to Janesville, Wisconsin. At Janesville his early manhood was spent, and there in 1854 he was married to Arabelle Wheeler, a native of Connecticut. After their marriage they settled on a farm, on which they resided until 1857, when they sold out and moved to Iowa. In Iowa Mr. Adams was engaged in farming ten years. He was a bricklayer by trade, and in addition to his farming operations he also did considerable building in Iowa.

In 1867, with his wife and two children, Ella M. and Emma, Mr. Adams came up the Missouri river to Montana. They first settled on Ten Mile river, near Holter's mill, and until the following spring he worked at his trade. Then he came to the Prickly Pear valley, and here he has ever since resided. The land in this valley was then all unsurveyed. He bought a squatter's right to 160 acres, for which he paid $700, and later paid $1,000 for another 160 acres. In 1885 he sold half of his land for $3,000, and it has since become worth much more than that. In 1882 he built the comfortable brick residence in which he now resides. While he has devoted much of his energies to the improvement of his land, he has also given much of his time to work at his trade, many of the buildings in Helena being the result of his handiwork.

Mrs. Adams died of apoplexy in 1884, aged sixty years, and after remaining single seven years Mr. Adams and knew it could only be Custer. I moved to the summit of the highest bluff, but seeing and hearing nothing, sent Captain Weir with his company to open communication with the other command. He soon sent back word by Lieutenant Hare that he could go no farther, and that the Indians were getting around him; at this time he was keeping up a heavy fire from the skirmish line. I at once turned everything back to the first position I had taken on the bluff, and which seemed to me the best. I dismounted the men, had the mules and horses of the pack train driven together in a depression, put the men on the crests of the hills making the depression, and had hardly done so when I was furiously attacked; this was about 6 P. M.; we held our ground, with the loss of eighteen enlisted men killed and forty-six wounded, until the attack ceased, about 9 P. M."

Here is Major Reno's report, or so much of it as applies directly to the approaching battle:

HEADQUARTERS, SEVENTH CAVALRY,
CAMP ON YELLOWSTONE RIVER, July 5, 1876.

Captain E. W. Smith,
A. D. C. and A. A. A. G.:

The command of the regiment having devolved upon me, as the senior surviving officer from the battle of June 25th and 26th, between the Seventh Cavalry and Sitting Bull's band of hostile Sioux, on the Little Big Horn river, I have the honor to submit the following report of its operations from the time of leaving the main column until the command was united in the vicinity of the Indian village.

The regiment left the camp at the mouth of the Rosebud river, after passing in review before the Department Commander, under command of Brevet Major-General G. A. Custer, Lieutenant-Colonel, on the afternoon of the 22d of June, and marched up the Rosebud twelve miles, and encamped. 23d.—Marched up the Rosebud, passing many old Indian camps, and was married, April 20, 1891, to Mrs. Marguerite Machen, a native of Wilkes Barre, Pennsylvania. Her father, Jonas Hartzell, died in Pennsylvania, and soon afterward her widowed mother removed to Edgerton, Rock county, Wisconsin, in 1855. Both were members of the Presbyterian Church. Her mother took charge of the property, and reared her family of three daughters and two sons. Mrs. Hartzell was a descendant of the distinguished family of Downings, of London, England, from which Downing street in London took its name. She proved herself not only a kind and loving mother, but also a successful financier. At the time of her death, which occurred in 1886, in her sixty-seventh year, she was the owner of four good farms, and left one to each of her surviving children. Mrs. Adams was the youngest of the family. She still owns her valuable farm in Wisconsin. By her first husband she had one son, George Grant, who died in infancy; and one daughter, Blanche, who is now the wife of S. T. Clark, a son of Rev. Robert Clark, and a Mason in good standing. Mr. and Mrs. Clark have two children—Clifton and Percy.

Mr. Adams has been a Master Mason since 1864.

ALONZO H. FOSTER, a Montana pioneer of 1863, was born at Smithport, McKean county, Pennsylvania, September 27, 1835, of English descent. His ancestors date their arrival in America at the landing of the Mayflower at Plymouth Rock. Three brothers of that name landed here at that early date, all of whom became prominent in the early history of the settlement, and also aided in fighting the battles for independence during the Revolutionary struggle. The father of our subject, Daniel Foster, was born in New Jersey, in 1796. He married Miss Asha A. Smith, who was born in New York, in 1806, and they had nine children, five sons and four daughters, of whom five are now living. The father was a carpenter and millwright, and his business caused him to remove and reside in Pennsylvania, Indiana and Ohio. But during his later life he returned to Pennsylvania, and died in 1862, his wife surviving him seven years. They were consistent members of the Methodist Church for many years.

Alonzo H. Foster, the fourth child in order of birth in the above family, was principally educated at the Bethlehem Academy, and when a young man taught school during the winters, and worked at the carpenter trade in the summer. At the age of eighteen years he bought his time of his father, agreeing to clear twelve acres of land, the cost of which amounted to $200. Mr. Foster hired the work done with the money he received from teaching and the carpenter work. In 1860 the Pike's Peak discoveries took him across the plains to that country, where he mined for wages until February, 1863. April 27, of that year, he came to Bannack, Montana, worked for wages until gold was discovered at Alder Gulch, and then bought an interest in Nos. 19 and 21 at that place, where he worked until the following November, realizing about $4,000. Mr. Foster then returned home to visit his people, brought his own team and stock of goods to Montana, after his arrival here was engaged in freighting during the remainder of the season, in the fall sold his outfit and conducted a livery stable at Virginia City eight years, was then engaged in running a fast freight line between Glendale and Virginia City; later he owned a stage line between Melrose and Glendale, and during that time also conducted a transfer business. In 1885 Mr. Foster came to the Boulder valley, and conducted a stage line from Boulder to Elkhorn, also freighted from Jefferson to Elkhorn, carrying supplies for the Elkhorn Mining Company. He also hauled machinery and large quantities of salt, and continued in that business until the railroad was completed to Elkhorn. He next turned his attention to mining, purchasing a two-thirds interest in following a very large lodge pole trail, but not fresh, making thirty-three miles. 24th.—The march was continued up the Rosebud, the trail and signs freshening with every mile until we had made twenty-eight miles, and we then encamped and waited for information from the scouts. At 9:25, P. M., Custer called the officers together and informed us that beyond a doubt the village was in the valley of the Little Big Horn, and that to reach it, it was necessary to cross the divide between Rosebud and Little Big Horn; and it would be impossible to do so, in the daytime, without discovering our march to the Indians; that we would prepare to move at 11 P. M. This was done, the line of march turning from the Rosebud to the right, up one of its branches, which headed near the summit of the divide.

About 2 A. M. of the 25th, the scouts told him he could not cross the divide before daylight. We then made coffee and rested for three hours, at the expiration of which time the march was resumed, the divide crossed, and about 8 A. M. the command was in the valley of one of the branches of the Little Big Horn. By this time Indians had been seen, and it was certain that we could not surprise them, and it was determined to move at once to the attack.

Previous to this no division of the regiment had been made since the order was issued, on the Yellowstone, annulling wing and battalion organizations. General Custer informed me he would assign commands on the march. I was ordered by Lieutenant W. W. Cook, adjutant, to assume command of Companies M, A and G; Captain Benteen, of Companies H, D and K; Custer retaining C, E, F, I and L, under his immediate command, and Company B, Captain McDougall, in rear of pack train. I assumed command of the companies assigned to me, and without any definite orders moved forward with the rest of the column, and well to its left. I saw Benteen moving further to the left, and as they passed, he told me he had orders to move well to the left, and sweep everything before him.

the Monarch Iron Mine and the Montana Central Iron Mine, but afterward sold a half of his interest to Butte parties. Mr. Foster still retains a one-third interest in these mines, and is their manager. They have the best iron in the State, large quantities of which is used by the smelters for flux, and they also send the product to Great Falls and East Helena. Mr. Foster is also interested in various other valuable mining properties, among them being the Silver Bow mine, which will ultimately bring large returns when developed. He has bought property and built a good residence in Boulder, where the family now reside.

Our subject was united in marriage with Miss Mary E. Beard, a native of Nebraska, but a Montana pioneer of 1864. To this union have been born three children,—Frank, who died during the year of his birth; Emma, deceased at the age of four months; and Alonzo, born May 23, 1883, is still living. In his social relations, Mr. Foster is a member of the A. O. U. W. In political matters he allies himself with the Republican party, and has served his county as Commissioner. He is a man of integrity, and a worthy representative of the Montana pioneers of 1863.

DR. JOHN W. GUNN, prominent in the medical profession of Butte City, was born in the city of Philadelphia, on the 17th of March, 1856, of English parentage, his father, John Gunn, having been born in that country, and married there to Miss Caroline Barham, a native of the city of London. Soon after their marriage they emigrated to America and settled in the city of Philadelphia. In 1861 they removed to Salt Lake City, where they have since resided. Mr. Gunn is a gardener and employs a number of men beautifying the grounds of the residents of that beautiful city. He has had five sons and four daughters, of whom only three survive; but both the parents are living. Mrs. Gunn is an Episcopalian in her religious belief, while her husband is liberal.

The subject of this sketch, their eldest child, received his education in St. Mark's Episcopal School, and afterward was employed with the firm of Godbe & Company, druggists. In 1875 he went to Tybo, Nevada, where he was engaged in the drug and general merchandise business, and in the meantime read medicine under Dr. J. S. Hammond, now of Butte. In 1882 he entered Cooper Medical College in San Francisco, where he graduated November 1, 1884. After practicing a short time in Salt Lake City and in Nevada, he came, in 1887, to Butte, where he at once established himself in the practice of his profession, and, being both capable and worthy, soon secured a good number of patrons, and his practice has been increasing to the present time. In 1892 he received the appointment of Health Officer, in which position he is now serving his third term. Under his administration good sanitary measures have been adopted, and the condition and health of the city is good. Personally, the Doctor is a gentleman pleasing in manner, and professionally he is thorough, painstaking and reliable. He was secretary of the Medical Association of Montana from August, 1888, to February, 1892, and President of the Silver Bow County Medical Society from May, 1891, to May, 1892. He is Past Noble Grand of the I. O. O. F. of Butte, and Past Grand Medical Examiner of the A. O. U. W., Secretary of the National Union and a member of order of Maccabees. In politics he is a Republican.

In Tybo, Nevada, Dr. Gunn was married to Miss Jessie Clayton, the daughter of Prof. Clayton, mining expert, who was accidently killed at the Coeur d'Alene. Dr. and Mrs. Gunn have the following children: John W., Jr.; Nelson T., Winfield H. and Lois C.; besides Clayton and Jessie L., who are deceased.

Custer had cut his force into three parts. Benteen says Reno had orders to sweep everything before him, to the left. Reno was to drive right at the enemy; Custer, it would seem, meant to head him off afterward. Reno had flushed him. It is plain that Custer not only laid his plans well to win the fight, but to gather the fruit of it and at once.

From the position in which the dead were found it is also clear that, having found themselves entirely outnumbered and beyond the reach of help, they took position as best they could in a sort of triangle on the rough, hot hillside and stood there ready to die in battle harness. Custer's brother, Colonel Tom. Custer, held one corner of the triangle, and down nearest the river, his brother-in-law, Calhoun, another, while the General held the higher ground, so as to see and direct the battle to the end. The men fell almost in line. The officers, Calhoun and Crittenden, fell in their places, as if on parade.

When I appealed to the father of young Crittenden some years after for any facts he could give, he told over and over, in a sad, quiet way, how his boy had fallen in battle line, just as if on parade at West Point; but that was all he knew. That was all that any one had to tell of that bravest battle that has been fought since Thermopylæ.

Let us make a few selections from Custer's letters and little paragraphs that show how gentle was his brave soul, and close the chapter; for this is sacred ground and we must proceed

HON. T. E. COLLINS, one of the most prominent citizens of Montana, residing at Great Falls, has been a resident of this State ever since 1864, and is one of her most widely known and influential business men and statesmen.

He is a native of county Cork, Ireland, born April 25, 1854, of Irish ancestry as far back as traceable. John Collins, his father, was born in Ireland and was married there to Miss Julia Holland, a native of the same county. They had two children,—Timothy Edward and Jeremiah. The latter is now Receiver of the United States Land Office at Helena. In 1852 the family emigrated to America, settling at Wabash, Indiana, where Mr. Collins was engaged in railroading and finally died, in 1863, in the fifty-fifth year of his age. His wife had died some years previously, in the forty-eighth year of her age.

Mr. T. E. Collins, the elder son, was eight years old when the family came to this country, and he was educated in the public schools of Wabash, Indiana, graduating at the high school there in 1859. When he started out in the world to earn his own livelihood, the first four years were spent in school teaching. In 1864, becoming impressed with the possibilities afforded in Montana for the accumulation of wealth, he crossed the plains to the then wild country, with a company of twenty men, who had twelve wagons, drawn by oxen. The Indians being very hostile that year, attacked the party in large numbers on Platte river, during the night; but the emigrants, anticipating such an event, were prepared for them and succeeded in repulsing them at every charge, with a result to themselves of only one wounded. The hostility of the Indians, however, caused the emigrants to change their course to Denver, where Mr. Collins remained two months, prospecting.

He left that city in July and came to Bannack, and thence to Virginia City, and engaged in mining in the gulch near Nevada City, meeting with only moderate success. In the spring he went to Last Chance, and worked for $6 a day in Grizzly Gulch. After remaining there a season he went to Confederate Gulch, where he was one of the discoverers of the Upper District, and had several claims, and took out considerable gold, that being the richest mining district ever discovered in Montana, not less than $10,000,000 in gold-dust being taken out there within a distance of half a mile. Mr. Collins, having become an expert miner, was paid as high as $1 an hour for drifting. After making a great deal of money there he engaged in a mining speculation at the lower end of the gulch, putting in a flume, which, however, proved a failure, and he thereby "dropped" a large portion of what he had accumulated.

In 1869 he was elected, on the Democratic ticket, a member of the Lower House of the Territorial Legislature, and in 1872 to the Senate. After serving a term he was re-elected. During his three years of public service he demonstrated to his constituents, the citizens of Gallatin and Meagher counties, that he was a capable and efficient representative and legislator. In 1872 he was admitted to the bar as an advocate, and for a time practiced law. Being elected County Clerk of Meagher county, he filled that office in a most satisfactory manner for four successive terms, by re-election. He was Probate Judge until 1880, meanwhile practicing law, and then he resigned his public positions there in order to go to Fort Benton and organize the Bank of North Montana, in partnership with L. H. Hershfield and Charles E. Duer. The banking business continued there in that form till 1889, when the institution was made a national bank.

silently across it. If those who stood nearest the dead knew nothing, why should I presume to know or say more?

And who was to blame? I blame no one; but look at this from Mrs. Custer:

"With my husband's departure my last happy days in garrison were ended, as a premonition of disaster that I had never known before weighed me down. I could not shake off the baleful influence of depressing thoughts. This presentiment and suspense, such as I had never known, made me selfish, and I shut into my own heart the most uncontrollable anxiety, and could lighten no one else's burden. The occupations of other summers could not even give temporary interest.

"We heard constantly at the fort of the disaffection of the young Indians of the reservation, and of their joining the hostiles. We knew, for we had seen for ourselves, how admirably they were equipped. We even saw on a steamer touching at our landing its freight of Springfield rifles piled up on the decks en route for the Indians up the river. There was unquestionable proof that they came into the trading-posts far above us and bought them, while our own brave Seventh Cavalry troopers were sent out with only the short-range carbines that grew foul after the second firing."—From "Boots and Saddles," by Mrs. Custer.

I merely call attention to the last line, from which it seems that Congress arms the Indians with better pieces than the soldiers.

Another thing: you cannot send men hundreds of miles in the saddle, over rough roads, especially recruits, and have any fight left in them. A man new to the saddle grows stiff as a stick, spiritless, dogged and dull. The only way is to keep mounted police among those restless red men, such as are along the border

While at Fort Benton he was elected a member of the Legislative Council of the Territory, and also a member of the Constitutional Convention of 1884.

At the inception of the founding of the city of Great Falls, Mr. Collins became identified with it, building the first house on Center avenue, and also the first brick business building in the city; and he has since erected other buildings. He came here to reside in 1887. In connection with Colonel Broadwater, L. G. Phelps, A. E. Dickerman, C. M. Webster and others, he organized the First National Bank of Great Falls, when Colonel Broadwater was elected president. In October, 1887, Mr. Collins was elected president, and had the responsibility of its management until 1893, and he is still connected with the bank.

While in the Legislature, in 1887, he introduced a bill to organize the county of Cascade (of which Great Falls is the county seat), which met with strong opposition, but he championed its cause with so great ability that all opposition was overcome, and its organization perfected. In both the Constitutional conventions held in the Territory he had the honor of being chairman of the committee on finance, and he was active and efficient in the deliberations of those two important conventions. His best powers and thorough knowledge of the Territory and her needs were brought to bear upon the formation of Montana's most admirable State constitution. In 1892 he was chosen by the Democratic party to stand at the head of their ticket as their nominee for Governor of the State, and in this capacity he made an enthusiastic and powerful campaign, failing of election by a few hundred votes.

Mr. Collins has continued his mining interests to the present time. He owns and is developing mines at Neihart and Baker, and he has various other mining interests. He was one of the first to engage in the sheep industry in the Territory. For years he was connected with the Severance Company, owning large flocks of sheep, and demonstrating Montana's possibilities in this direction.

Mr. Collins is an active member of the Masonic fraternity and of the order of Knights of Pythias. Politically he has always been a decided Democrat, giving much of his attention to the maintenance of his party during the whole of the history of the Territory and State, attending the conventions of his party, and giving his time and influence to the cause. Thus he has been a potent factor in the councils of his party and in the affairs of his State.

In 1874 Mr. Collins was married to Miss Lovina A. Higgins, daughter of Jonas Higgins, who was a pioneer merchant of Diamond City and one of the locators of White Sulphur Springs. Mrs. Collins is a native of Wisconsin, and came to Montana in 1873. They have four children: Mabel H., Lottie H., Walter E. and Timothy E., Jr. Mr. Collins has built a substantial and commodious residence on a beautiful site on the West Side, commanding a fine view of the city and surrounding country. He and his family are held in high esteem by the citizens of Great Falls and vicinity.

ANGUS A. MCDONALD, a Montana pioneer of 1864 and now one of the prominent business men of Phillipsburg, is a native of Glengarry county, Canada, born near Alexander, August 15, 1844.

Mr. McDonald's great-grandfather, John McDonald, was born in the Highlands of Scotland and was a descendant of the noted McDonalds of that country. At an early of the British Possessions. This would be cheapest, since Congress constantly insists on saving money,—aye, infinitely cheaper in the end! The final Indian battle has not been fought. We love and are learning peace. They love and are continuously learning war. The four great Indian battles have all been in the North. The Indians in the enervating South may keep the peace; but these of the North were born to war, and to war they will devote themselves to the end. I repeat it: the great Indian battle is still to be fought; and it will be fought in or near Montana!

Custer was all man, all soldier, and a hard student and a hard worker in all ways. See what rides he could take, fifty miles in a day, and crossing rivers dozens of times, yet feeling fresh, as in the morning:

"I suggested to General Terry to send out a strong scouting-party up the river to find out all that could be ascertained. He left the matter to me, and I took four companies of cavalry and a part of the scouts, and at five o'clock we were off. The valley of the river averages about one mile in width, hemmed in on both sides by impassable Bad Lands. The river crooked beyond description.

"To shorten the story, we marched the fifty miles and got back before dark, having settled the question beyond a doubt that all stories about large bodies of Indians being here are the merest bosh. None have been here for six months, not even a small hunting-party. We took pack-mules with us to carry feed for the horses. When we lunched, all the officers got together and we had a jolly time.

"Only think! we found the Little Missouri river so crooked and the Bad Lands so impassable that in marching fifty miles to-day we forded the river thirty-four times. The bottom is quicksand. Many of the horses went down, day he emigrated with his family to the new world and settled in Glengarry county, Canada. He was a farmer and lumber dealer and lived to the advanced age of ninety-nine years. Both he and his wife were devout Catholics and in that faith they reared their family. They had five sons and three daughters. Four of their sons, John, Phineas, Malcum and Archie, were prominent members of the Hudson Bay Fur Company, and one of these four, Archie, was the grandfather of our subject. Archie McDonald was a boy when he came with his parents to America. He spent his life in Canada and he and his wife reared four sons and two daughters, and he, too, lived to a good old age. His son, Angus, our subject's father, was born at the old home place, in Glengarry county, in 1810. He and his wife, whose maiden name was Christie McDonald, but who was not related to him, had four children, three sons and a daughter, all of whom are living except the latter. His wife died at the age of forty-six years, and he lived to be seventy-six.

Angus A was their second-born. He spent the first eighteen years of his life at his native place. Then he went to Ohio, where he had charge of a number of men, grading and making excavations for the line of the Great Western Railroad. Later he was engaged in the same business in Pennsylvania, remaining with the company until the road was completed. In March, 1864, he went to St. Paul, Minnesota, and purchased an ox-team outfit and on the 15th of the following month started across the plains for the far West. The train with which he traveled was composed of 350 men and as many wagons, and the company was under command of Captain Townsend. This journey progressed in safety until the 5th of May, when they were attacked by a large number of Cheyenne Indians. The assault was made at seven o'clock in the morning and lasted till half past four in the afternoon. The result was four whites killed and one wounded, and sixteen Indians killed and about thirty-four wounded, the red men withdrawing fully satisfied that they could not capture the train. Without further molestation the emigrant party continued on their way, and on the 15th of August landed at Alder Gulch.

At the time of his arrival in Montana Mr. McDonald's worldly goods consisted of four working cattle and a wagon and $30 in currency, worth fifty cents on the dollar. He purchased a claim in Bevin's Gulch, but the ground had been worked over and he lost all he had put into it. After this he turned his attention to hauling lumber and teaming, which he continued until winter set in. He then went to Silver Bow, where he was for a time engaged in contracting and building, putting up a number of log houses, and making some money. Then he went on a prospecting tour to the Bitter Root mountains, carrying his provisions and blankets on his back, but did not discover the yellow treasure for which he sought. In June, 1865, he went to German Gulch, where he and his partners had a claim and where he took charge of the work, taking out $5,000 in three months. We next find him at French gulch, where, after four months of hard work, they lost $3,000. The following winter Mr. McDonald spent at Deer Lodge, and in the spring went to Reynolds City, in Bear Gulch, and purchased lots and built houses, buying and selling property there and again making some money. He then embarked in another mining enterprise and again sank about $3,000, after which he went to Harver Gulch and lost still more money. Returning to Beaver Gulch, he purchased mining ground, and the two years following he and his partners operated their mine and took out frequently tumbling their riders into the water; but all were in good spirits, and every one laughed at every one else's mishaps.

"General Terry just left my tent a few moments since, and when I asked him not to be in a hurry, he said, 'Oh, I'll leave you, for you must be tired and want to go to bed.' I did not tell him that I was going to write to you before I slept.

"Bloody Knife looks on in wonder at me because I never get tired, and says no other man could ride all night and never sleep. I know I shall sleep soundly when I do lie down; but actually I feel no more fatigued now than I did before mounting my horse this morning."—Custer, to his wife, in Mrs. Custer's "Boots and Saddles," page 306.

As for the man's heart, hear this from a letter to his parents, which I copy from Whitaker's "Life of Custer:"

"You do yourself injustice when you say you did but little for me. You may forget it, but I never can. There is not a day but I think with deep gratitude of the many sacrifices, the love and devotion you and mother have constantly bestowed upon me. You could not have done more for me than you have. A fortune would be nothing to me with what I am indebted to you for. I never wanted for anything necessary, and if you did not give me a fortune in money, you did what was infinitely better. You and mother instilled into my mind correct principles of industry and honesty, self-reliance; I was taught the distinction between wrong and right; I was taught the value of temperate habits; and I now look back to my childhood and the days spent under the home roof as a period of the purest happiness; and I feel thankful for such noble parents. I know but few, if any, boys are so blessed as I have been, by having such kind, self-sacrificing parents to train and guide them as I have had. I know I might heap millions of dollars at your feet, and still the debt of gratitude on my part would be undiminished.".

about $10,000. Mr. McDonald then bought seventy-five head of cattle, paying from $40 to $50 per head, and took them to the Willow creek ranch, seven miles above where New Chicago is now located. There he engaged in farming and stock raising and dealing in cattle, and in five years of close application to business he made about $15,000.

In August, 1875, Mr. McDonald came to Phillipsburg and opened a meat market, which he conducted successfully for eleven years, and he has ever since made Phillipsburg his home, thoroughly identified with its interests and doing everything in its power to promote its welfare. After he closed out his meat market he again turned his attention to mining. For three years he was one of the owners and operators of the West Granite mine. They did considerable work on it without making it pay. It has, however, since become very valuable. Mr. McDonald is also interested in the Iron Mountain, a mine which has paid over $500,000. He is also an owner in the Diamond Hill, another valuable property. Mr. McDonald still continues his stock-raising, and at this writing is the owner of 2,500 acres of ranch land. Besides this he owns a large amount of real estate in Phillipsburg, having an interest in the Pardee and McDonald addition to the city. He built his residence in Phillipsburg and has also erected numerous other buildings, among which is the block occupied by the Miners and Merchants' National Bank and the Opera House. On this block and the fixtures of the opera house he has expended a large amount of money. No town of its size can boast of a finer opera house than can Phillipsburg, this delightful resort being a credit alike to the city and to its builder. He was one of the organizers of the Miners and Merchants' National Bank of Phillipsburg, of which he has since been president, and which has already attained a prominence among the financial institutions of the county.

Mr. McDonald was married in 1886 to Miss Susie Hogan, a native of the State of Iowa.

In his political affiliations Mr. McDonald is Democratic. He has rendered his county efficient service as one of her Commissioners. He and his fellow officers found the county without funds, and so ably did they manage its affairs that at the expiration of their term they left $140,000 in the treasury.

GEORGE KIRBY, one of the enterprising and successful business men of Marysville, was born at Eagle Harbor, Michigan, June 30, 1853, a son of William and Dora (Tracy) Kirby, natives of Ireland. Soon after their marriage the parents came to America, locating at Copper Harbor, Michigan, where they remained for many years. The father was a farmer and miner by occupation. His death occurred in 1880, and his wife survived him only two years.

George Kirby, the fourth of six children, was reared to manhood in the Lake Superior country, received a good public-school education, and began learning the blacksmith's trade when only fifteen years of age. His first work was in the mining camps of Michigan, where he remained until 1878, worked at the Penobscot and Belmont mines, Montana, from that time until 1880, and in the latter year came to Marysville. Mr. Kirby's first work in this city was for Thomas Cruse, as blacksmith for the great Drum Lummon mine. In 1883 he opened a blacksmith shop in this city, and by promptness, good workmanship and liberality has acquired the good will of the

Mrs. Custer says: "Boots and Saddles," page 143:

"It was a surprise to me that after the life of excitement my husband had led he should grow more domestic in his tastes. His daily life was very simple. He rarely left home except to hunt, and was scarcely once a year in the sut ler's store, where the officers congregated to play billiards and cards. If the days were too stormy or too cold for hunting, as they often were for a week or more at a time, he wrote and studied for hours every day.

"The hardest trial of my husband's life was parting with his mother. Such partings were the only occasions when I ever saw him lose entire control of himself, and I always looked forward to the hour of their separation with dread.

"For hours before we started I have seen him follow his mother about, whispering some comforting word to her; or, opening the closed door of her own room, where, womanlike, she fought out her grief alone, sit beside her as long as he could endure it."

Here is what she says of the Sunday afternoon on which the battle was fought, while with her friends far away from the scene of conflict:

"On Sunday afternoon, the 25th of June, our little group of saddened women, borne down with one common weight of anxiety, sought solace in gathering together in our house. We tried to find some slight surcease from trouble in the old hymns: some of them dated back to our childhood's days, when our mothers rocked us to sleep to their soothing strains. I remempeople of Marysville and vicinity. He is now the leading blacksmith of the city. He has invested in property in this city, has built a shop and good residence, and is considered one of Marysville's most reliable citizens.

November 1, 1880, Mr. Kirby was united in marriage with Miss Kate Harrington, a native of Michigan, and a daughter of Jeremiah Harrington, one of the pioneer settlers of northern Michigan. Our subject and wife have had six children, all born in Marysville, namely: Veronica Maud, George Francis, William Mark, Richard, Robert and Nellie. The eldest daughter was the second girl baby born in Marysville, and the eldest son has the honor of being the first male child born in the city. The family are worthy members of the Catholic Church. In his social relations, Mr. Kirby is a charter member of the I. O. O. F., in which he holds an office. He affiliates with the Democratic party, but votes for the man rather than the party.

SPENCER JOHNSON, one of the prominent farmers of Deer Lodge valley and a Montana pioneer of 1864, was born near Lebanon, Boone county, Indiana, June 27, 1831.

Mr. Johnson traces his ancestry back to Ireland, his great-great-grandfather, the progenitor of the family in America, having been born on the Emerald Isle. Alexander Johnson, the father of our subject, was born in Kentucky and was there married to Miss Sarah Allen, a native of that State. Soon after their marriage they removed to Indiana and settled on a frontier farm which they cleared up and improved and where they resided for a number of years. The father moved to Iowa in 1847, where he died in the sixty-fourth year of his age. The mother lived to be eighty-nine years old. They were the parents of eleven children, of whom five are still living, Spencer being next to the youngest of the family.

Spencer Johnson received most of his education in the State of Iowa, and there he began life on his own account at the age of twenty years, taking up a farm in Benton county. He was married in Iowa, February 7, 1856, to Miss Helen J. Blakely, a native of New York and a daughter of Carlos W. Blakely, who was of English descent.

In 1864 Mr. and Mrs. Spencer crossed the plains to Montana, traveling with mule teams and coming in company with thirteen other persons, and their journey being unattended with accident, and, upon the whole, a most enjoyable one. They started out on the 28th of March, and it was not until the 21st of June that they reached Virginia City.

Upon his arrival in Montana Mr. Johnson first engaged in mining, working by the day; but, being stricken with mountain fever, he resolved to quit mining. That same year he came to his present location in Deer Lodge valley. Here he at once engaged in the dairy business, selling his product to the miners, receiving $1.50 per pound for butter and $1 per gallon for milk. In August, 1867, they went to Phillipsburg and boarded the men who built the first mill at that place, remaining there until 1869. They spent three seasons at Gold Creek, making butter and raising stock, and each winter bringing their stock to Deer Lodge valley. In 1871, in October, Mr. Johnson purchased 160 acres of his present farm, paying a squatter $600 for his claim. Here he has since carried on stock-raising successfully, keeping horses, cattle and sheep, his horses being the Norman-Percheron breed and always selling for handsome prices. To his original tract of land he has since added until now he has 520 acres, and here in this charming valley he has a pleasant home and is surrounded with all the comforts of life.

ber the grief with which one fair young wife threw herself on the carpet and pillowed her head in the lap of a tender friend. Another sat dejected at the piano, and struck soft chords that melted into the notes of the voices. All were absorbed in the same thoughts, and their eyes were filled with far-away visions and longings. Indescribable yearning for the absent and untold terror for their safety engrossed each heart. The words of the hymn,

'E'en though a cross it be,
Nearer my God, to Thee,' came forth with almost a sob from every throat.

"At that very hour the fears that our tortured minds had portrayed in imagination were realities, and the souls of those we thought upon were ascending to meet their Maker.

"On the 5th of July—for it took that time for the news to come—the sun rose on a beautiful world, but with its earliest beams came the first knell of disaster. A steamer came down the river bearing the wounded from the battle of the Little Big Horn, of Sunday, June 25th. This battle wrecked the lives of twenty-six women at Fort Lincoln, and orphaned children of officers and soldiers joined their cry to that of their bereaved mothers.

"From that time the life went out of the hearts of the 'women who weep,' and God asked them to walk on alone and in the shadow."

And here is General Custer's last letter:

"June 22,—11 A. M.

"I have but a few moments to write, as we move at twelve, and I have my hands full of

The good wife who crossed the plains with him in 1864 has shared his joys and sorrows all these years and is still by his side, enjoying with him their present prosperity. Their children, three in number, all died in infancy, and they are now rearing a motherless little boy.

Mr. Johnson's political views are in harmony with the principles advocated by the Republican party. He, however, gives little attention to politics, his own private affairs claiming all his time.

CHARLES S. WARREN, one of the most enterprising citizens of Butte City, has resided in Montana since 1866, and been identified with the growth and development of this commonwealth from the first.

He was born in Utica, La Salle county, Illinois, November 20, 1847, of ancestry traceable back to England, whose arrival in America was on the second voyage of the Mayflower.

He received his education in the country schools. When he was fourteen years of age the great Civil war came on, and, filled with the patriotism and military ardor of his ancestry, enlisted as a private in the Forty-seventh Illinois Infantry, and served in the Army of the Cumberland, and was with Wilson at the last battle of the war and then the capture of Jefferson Davis. January 24, 1866, he was discharged at Savannah, Georgia, as First Sergeant, after the surrender. He with his company had been on garrison duty there and in South Carolina and Florida.

Returning home, February 15, 1866, he rested until April 10, when he started West, coming to St. Joseph, Missouri, and for $25 a month and board he drove a bull team across the plains, arriving in Virginia City August 20, 1866. He was then paid in greenbacks, which, however, at that time were worth only half their face value.

He then packed his blankets all over the Territory, and August 24, 1866, he camped under a wagon where the Herald office in Helena now stands. Next he packed his blankets by way of Deer Lodge valley to French Gulch, where he engaged in placer mining. It had become a question of work or starve. He followed mining for about four years with the usual miners' luck, sometimes "in it" and sometimes not.

In 1873 Mr. Warren was elected the Sheriff of Deer Lodge county, as a Republican, and when his term of office expired he was "broke" and borrowed the $15 with which he came to Butte.

He located various mines, among them the Lexington, which he sold to Judge Davis for $50, and the Judge sold it for $1,500,000! He was one of the owners of the Gagnon, fought it through the courts and finally lost it, and since then it has yielded over $2,000,000 in dividends. There have been other and similar instances in his history.

He was in the Nez Perces war in 1877, being Adjutant of the Montana Battalion. He was the first Police Magistrate of the city of Butte, having also a considerable amount of work to do in the political line. Being once a candidate for the office of Mayor, he was defeated by a combination of boodle, poor whisky and (he thinks) poor judgment. He was elected a member of the Constitutional Convention which formed the present constitution of the State of Montana, and was one of the committee appointed by the convention to issue an address to the people of the State relative to the constitution. He was a member of the National Republican committee, which resulted in the election of Benjamin Harrison as President of the United States.

preparations for the scout. . . . Do not be anxious about me. You will be surprised to know how closely I obey your instructions about keeping with the column. I hope to have a good report to send you by the next mail. . . . A success will start us all towards Lincoln. . . .

"I send you an extract from General Terry's official order, knowing how keenly you appreciate words of commendation and confidence, such as the following: 'It is of course impossible to give you any definite instructions in regard to this movement; and were it not impossible to do so, the Department Commander places too much confidence in your zeal, energy and ability to wish to impose upon you precise orders, which might hamper your action when nearly in contact with the enemy.'"

Custer and I were much together his last winter in New York and I there learned to love him as a man. Incidental to this last winter in the national metropolis, the following, from Whitaker's Life of Custer, is apropos:

"A distinguished gentleman whose Friday evenings at his home on Fifth avenue were regarded as happy privileges for the best minds of the metropolis, extended to the General hospitality and advantages which were eagerly accepted and as earnestly enjoyed. Here, where the flame of thought was of the loftiest character, Custer would sit, an attentive and admiring listener, drinking from the rich fountain of instruction."

Says the late Lawrence Barrett:

"His career may be thus briefly given: He

For some years General Warren has been in Company with Hon. Lee Mantle in dealing in real estate and mining property. They are largely interested in the new gold camp at Basin, and they have interests in every county in the State.

General Warren is a thirty-second degree Mason, Past Chancelor Commander of the K. of P., Past Noble Grand of the I. O. O. F., and Past Post Commander of Lincoln Post, No. 2, G. A. R., Past Department Commander of the G. A. R., Department of Montana; also a member of the B. P. O. E., and Past Worshipful Master of Butte Lodge No. 22, F. & A. M.

General Warren was married in 1872 to Miss Mittie Avery, a native of the State of Maine, and they have had five children, of whom only two are living. One of these, Wesley, is a civil engineer, a graduate of the Peekskill Military Academy and a sophomore at Cornell University, New York. The daughter, Mary Alice, is at school at St. Mary's Episcopal Convent in New York city.

GEORGE W. MORSE, a Montana pioneer of 1862, now a prominent mining man and farmer, was born in the State of Maine, December 2, 1838.

"Colonel" Morse, as he is familiarly called, is descended from Scotch ancestors. His father was born in England, the son of Scotch parents, and upon coming to America he settled in Maine. During the greater part of his life he was a sea captain, his family residing in the town of Whitefield. The maiden name of our subject's mother was Mary A. Norris. She was a descendant of the Hiltons, early settlers in the colonies and participants in the great struggle for independence. They had six children, of whom five are living, George W. being their third born. Captain Morse died in 1865, at the age of sixty-eight years, and his wife survived him some years, she being eighty-two at the time of death. He was a member of the Baptist Church, while she was a Methodist. Both were devoted Christians and were held in high esteem for their many sterling qualities of mind and heart.

Colonel Morse spent the first nineteen years of his life in his native State. Then, in 1855, he went to the Territory of Minnesota, where he was engaged in lumbering for three years. From there he went south to New Orleans, and the following year was employed in building bridges on the Vicksburg & Texas railroad. In 1859 he joined a company bound for Pike's Peak, and while en route they had several skirmishes with the Indians, but succeeded in making the journey in safety. He mined there for a time, then went to Salmon river at the time of the excitement at that place, and from Salmon river came to Montana, landing here on the 4th of July, 1862. He prospected during the summer, and in the fall went to Boise Basin, where he mined and had a pack train of mules and horses, meeting with success, and remained there until 1865. The Indians, however, were very troublesome, and in the winter of 1863 they stole his pack animals. In 1865 he returned to Bear Gulch, Montana, and engaged in prospecting again, and soon afterward was the discoverer of the Bilk Gulch, giving it this name in order to keep prospectors away so that he and his friends could form such a mining camp as they liked. The discovery proved a rich one and they took ont a great deal of gold. Provisions were high, however, and a great amount of money was required to operate the mine. The price of a pick at that time was $15, and a shovel cost $12. The Colonel still continues his placer mining, and he now has valuable mines at Deep Gulch and Elk creek. He has handled a grea was born in obscurity; he rose to eminence; denied social advantages in his youth, his untiring industry supplied them; the obstacles to his advancement became the stepping-stones to his fortunes; free to choose for good or evil, he chose rightly; truth was his striking characteristic; he was fitted to command, for he had learned to obey; his acts found their severest critic in his own breast; he was a good son, a good brother, a good and affectionate husband, a Christian soldier, a steadfast friend. Entering the army a cadet in early youth, he became a General while still on the threshold of manhood; with ability undenied, with valor proved on many a hard-fought field, he acquired the affection of the nation; and he died in action at the age of thirty-seven; died as he would have wished to die, no lingering disease preying upon that iron frame. At the head of his command the messenger of death awaited him; from the field of battle where he had so often 'directed the storm,' his gallant spirit took its flight. Cut off from aid, abandoned in the midst of incredible odds, waving aloft the sabre which had won him victory so often; the pride and glory of his comrades, the noble Custer fell, bequeathing to the nation his sword, to his comrades an example, to his friends a memory, and to his beloved one a hero's name."

He was truly a gentle man, the Chevalier Bayard of America. May Montana cherish his memory to the end, and may her youth emulate the lone boy-hero's example in peace and in war.

deal of gold during the past three decades, and all the time the expense of carrying on operations has been heavy. In the early mining days he paid from $6 to $7 per day for men, and the present price is $3.50.

From time to time he has made investments in land, and at this writing he is the owner of 2,300 acres in Flint Creek valley, well improved with good buildings, etc. He gives special attention to stock raising, keeping Durham and Hereford cattle and Morgan horses. While he spends much of his time on his ranch, his home is in Deer Lodge, having built a residence here and moved his family to it in order to secure the educational advantages of the city.

Colonel Morse was married February 26, 1877, to Miss Nettie J. Milliken, a native of Ellsworth, Maine, and daughter of Edwin E. Milliken, of that State. They have two sons, George Allen and Avrell Phillip.

Since 1868 the Colonel has been a Mason. He belongs to the blue lodge, royal arch, commandery and Shrine. Politically, his views are in harmony with the principles of the Republican party, and he has rendered efficient service in various public capacities. For eight years he served as County Commissioner. In 1892 he was one of the State Electors. An active, enterprising citizen, prosperous in his various undertakings, and well known and highly esteemed he is justly ranked with the leading men of his county.

W. C. Bradshaw, one of the representative business men of Phillipsburg, Montana, has been identified with the interests of the town for the past seventeen years.

Mr. Bradshaw is a native of the State of Indiana, born October 27, 1849, descended from English ancestors who were early settlers of the South and prominently connected with its early history. His father, Thomas Bradshaw, was born in Mercer county, Kentucky, and his mother, whose maiden name was Nancy Daly, was a native of Tennessee. They had three sons and two daughters, W. C. being the third born in the family.

W. C. Bradshaw was reared on a farm in Indiana, received a district-school education, and when he was nineteen year of age began the battle of life on his own account. His first occupation was that of stock dealer. He bought and sold stock in Illinois during the war, selling large numbers of horses and mules to the Government and carrying on his operations successfully. He continued in the stock business until 1870, at which time he came to Montana, making the journey by rail to Sioux City and thence up the Missouri river to Fort Benton. Upon his arrival in Montana, he first located at Pioneer, where he mined and did fairly well. He purchased the Square Gulch claim, used the hydraulic process, and in two seasons took out about $7,500 above expenses, after which he sold his claim for $5,500. In 1874 he went to Alaska in search of gold, but was unsuccessful and from there directed his course to California, where he spent the winter, in the spring returning to Montana. He again mined at Pioneer for about a year. Then in the fall of 1877 he came to Phillipsburg. Here he formed a partnership with Mr. Angus McDonel, in a meat market and butcher business, and they conducted the same up to 1880, doing a successful business. They then dissolved and Colonel George W. Morse became associated with Mr. Bradshaw, the two continuing in business successfully for ten years longer, after which they sold out. Mr. Bradshaw has since speculated in real estate and mines, and at this writing owns some valuable property in Phillipsburg.

He was married in January, 1878, to Miss Margaret Sulivan, a native of Ireland, and they have two children,

CHAPTER XXVIII.

MONTANA INDIANS—THE INDIAN AS A WHITE MAN—SITTING BULL DRIVEN OUT OF MONTANA—CHIEF JOSEPH'S FLIGHT ACROSS MONTANA—DEATH OF SITTING BULL.

FROM THE DEATH OF CUSTER TO THE DEATH OF SITTING BULL.

IT is proper here to turn back a decade and take up the history of the Indian. The people of Montana are pleased to date "the end of all our Indian troubles" from the fall of Custer in 1876. The death of Custer meant the destruction of Sitting Bull, sooner or later, along with all those who followed this wild and dauntless leader. A direct and resolute policy was demanded by the whole people of the republic, and sentiment had to give place to sense at last, elsewhere, as it had from the first in Montana. And from that date the Indians of the State can begin to reckon their prosperity and advancement. Lewis and Clarke found the Indians west of the Rocky mountains naked, hungry and miserable in the extreme; and they were not nearly so numerous as now. They ate so much dirt and sand with their roots and fish that they became almost entirely toothless, even before middle age. They were so filthy and so weak physically that many lost their eye-sight at an early age, and all were more or less afflicted with sore eyes. Next to something to eat the greatest boon they craved of these first reliable American explorers was a little eye-water. Of course those who ate meat and inhabited the eastern slope of the Shining mountains were not so utterly depraved; but the root and fish eaters, from summit to sea, were a dreadful lot, seen in any light in which you may choose to look at them.

No man can follow the history of the Indi-both born in Phillipsburg,—Joseph C. and Arthur L.

Mr. Bradshaw was made a Master Mason in Flint Creek Lodge, No. 11, at Phillipsburg, and he is also a member of the A. O. U. W. Politically, he is identified with the Republican party.

JOHN R. LATIMER, one of the most successful farmers of Grass valley, Missoula county, came to Montana in 1865.

He is a native of Summit county, Ohio, born August 25, 1843. His father was a Vermont Yankee, and his mother's maiden name was Radabaugh, and her grandparents came from Switzerland and settled in Pennsylvania, the Latimers having come here from England at an early day. When the subject of this sketch was two years old his father died, and at that early age he was placed in the care of David Boughman, a Pennsylvania Dutchman, by whom he was reared. His youth was spent in farm work with a few months' attendance each year at the district school. When fourteen years of age he began life for himself, working on the farm in Ohio, at $6 per month, and doing a man's work. After two years spent there he came west to Lee county, Iowa, a year later removed to Bloomfield, Davis county, same State, and continued at farm work for eighteen months.

Still imbued with the spirit of emigration, we find him in 1863 en route to the far West. He drove a horse team for his passage across the plains to Walla Walla, and landed at his destination after being on the road five months and meeting with many hardships and narrow escapes. Upon his arrival in Walla Walla he experienced what it was to be short of "grub," but he got a rancher to try him as a work hand, and so well suited was the ranchman that he hired Mr. Latimer at $75 per month. From there he went to the Blue mountains, where for two months he was engaged in splitting rails. He rented a farm on shares during 1864. In 1865 we find him in the mining districts of British Columbia, where he mined and prospected until he was again "broke." From there he came back to the Blackfoot country, near Helena, prospected for a short time, and in the fall of that year came to his present location. His first work here was in the sawmill of Worden & Company. This was an upright ans of Montana from this early date and the time of Ross Cox on the upper Columbia up to the present, without the conviction that the Indian ought to be profoundly thankful for the coming of the white man and for his own conquest, whether on the one side of the mountains or the other.

Granville Stuart, the most reliable historian of this region, says the comparatively happy condition of the Montana Indian entirely uproots a "time-honored lie."

To return to Sitting Bull: immediately after the death of Custer, Sheridan, at the head of the War Department, sapped the force of every fort in the Union and fought the wily warrior the season through: a sort of running fight, in which the great chief always avoided open battle. In October General Miles managed to engage and drive Sitting Bull across the Missouri, killing some Indians, capturing two thousand men, women and children, and destroying much stores. His few remaining warriors, scattered and beaten, lost heart and skulked back as best they could to the reservations or to their old haunts in the mountains; while Sitting Bull, with a small following, crossed over into the British Possessions. Meantime the Cheyennes, with General Crook in their rear, confronted Miles as he turned about from pursuit of the Sioux. He fought and vanquished Crazy Horse, as the year drew to a close, on the Rosebud.

saw, was run day and night, and its output was about 600 feet of lumber every twenty-four hours. Here Mr. Latimer continued until the freeze, when he secured a job of splitting 5,000 rails. Having completed his contract and received his payment therefor, he traded a saddle horse for a claim to a ranch. This was in the spring of 1866. He worked for another man at $40 per month, and spent all his leisure time in work on his own claim, getting an acre of it plowed and planted to vegetables. But his vegetables were all destroyed by the crickets. This misfortune somewhat discouraged him. He continued working for wages until the fall of that year, at which time he took claim to another tract of land, three miles above his present location. He and a Mr. Clemmens were partners in their ranching operations for three years, at the end of which time Mr. Latimer found himself $300 poorer than when he began. In the summer of 1869 he started a butcher shop at Moose Creek, Idaho, where he was very successful, clearing $2,000 in a year. With this amount he returned to his former location and here purchased 160 acres of land, the property upon which he now resides. From that time up to the present his career has been a successful one. To his original 160 acres he has added from time to time, until he is now the owner of 2,200 acres. He has given considerable attention to the raising of fine stock, Shorthorn cattle and Percheron horses, having imported from the East to Missoula county the first full-blood Percheron horses and Shorthorn cattle. He raises immense crops of timothy and clover hay, about 800 tons annually, and receives an average price of $10 per ton at his ranch. In addition to his farming operations he is also interested in mines. He followed grain threshing for twelve seasons, being a pioneer in that business. He also owned and operated the first portable sawmill in Missoula valley.

Mr. Latimer was married in 1873 to Miss Eliza Bills, a native of Fort Shepherd, Washington. They have had ten children, of whom six are living: Thomas died when four years old; Mary Jane, at the age of three months; and Alice and Clarisa, twins, died in their fourth year. Their surviving children are: Frank, Ralph, Harvey, John R., Jr., Lavina and Julia Mamie.

Mr. Latimer is Past Master of the Masonic lodge at Missoula. Politically he is a Republican He has served for twenty years as a member of the School Board, and has also served as a member of the Board of County Commissioners.

MILTON P. CHAFFIN, a respected Montana pioneer of 1864, and now a retired farmer of Corvallis, was born in Tennessee, March 6, 1830, a son of Boalim and Nancy Williams (Roberts) Chaffin. The parents were married in Jackson county, Tennessee, and had nine children, of whom four are now living. In 1840 the family moved to Missouri, where the mother died in 1863, and soon afterward the father, accompanied by his sons and two daughters, crossed the plains to Montana. His death occurred the following year, at East Bannack.

Milton P. Chaffin crossed the plains with ox teams in 1864, spending four months on the road, and came direct to where Corvallis now stands. At that time there were only about six white children in the county of Missoula, but it was thickly settled with Indians of the Flathead tribe, and the Nez Perces and other tribes also frequently passed through the county. Mr. Chaffin has frequently seen caravans two miles in length moving through this locality. He secured 160 acres of land from the Government, built a small log cabin without a floor, and subsisted on potatoes and beef. The first year he sowed twelve acres to wheat and potatoes, and sold the former at $6 per bushel and the latter at five cents a pound. In that

An Indian ceases, or begins to cease being an Indian, only when he gives up his superstitious belief in the ghost dancers, or dreamers. The chief who wishes to go to war uses the dreamer or prophet, as Tecumseh used his brother. So long as an Indian believes in the dreamer he listens to his chief. The fame of Sitting Bull now, at the death of Custer, set chief Joseph of the Nez Percé tribe wild for the warpath. I say this advisedly. The Indian world is a world within itself. Their traditions, their laws, their inherent love of war, and their helplessness in protrected war and their childish thoughtlessness of results,—these things are theirs. We do not comprehend them. Had there been no Sitting Bull to destroy Custer, there never would have been any Chief Joseph fighting his way across Montana.

Chief Joseph had no more cause for war then than he had at any time since he became chief. This he, in substance, answered to General O. O. Howard, the wise, christian gentleman and old soldier who was the soul of the commission sent to treat with him before his outbreak in Idaho, which led to his exodus through Montana. He even consented to getting his people together within thirty days and making no more trouble. He used the thirty days of grace in loading his guns and listening to sino-hal-la, dreamer. On the last day of grace his butcheries began, to the north of Mount Idaho; then the White Bird battle, in which nearly half the company early day Mr. Chaffin paid $66.50 for 100 pounds of sugar, and his first flour cost him thirty cents a pound. In 1866 he went to the mines on Flint Creek, in Deer Lodge county, soon afterward purchased teams and began freighting from Helena to all the mining camps in the county, and five years afterward embarked in the stock business. In 1879 he turned his attention to the sheep industry, and continued in that for eight years, often owning as many as 7,000 sheep at one time, and during that time also owned a farm of 480 acres. In 1888 Mr. Chaffin sold his land and stock, and purchased property in Corvallis, on which he has built a good and commodious dwelling.

Mr. Chaffin was married early in life, and raised an intelligent family of sons and daughters. January 23, 1882, he was united in marriage with Miss Emma J. Hunt, a daughter of Elijah Hunt. Our subject and wife are worthy members of the Christian Church at Corvallis, aided materially in building the beautiful church edifice, and have been active and efficient helpers in extending the religious interests in their community. Mr. Chaffin has been a Republican since the organization of the party. He is a good representative of the Montana pioneer of 1864, has secured a competency by his own efforts, and is widely and favorably known.

THE GAFFENY MERCANTILE COMPANY, of Boulder is the leading and largest mercantile house in Jefferson county. The company was organized and began business under its present name January 1, 1891, by Messrs. W. B. Gaffeney, J. C. Berendes & John McDonald. Previous to that time the business had been purchased by Mr. Gaffeny from T. F. Murray in October, 1887, and had been successfully conducted by that gentleman up to the time of the organization of the present company.

Mr. Gaffeny is a native of Rochester, New York, and also learned the mercantile business in that city. He came to Montana in 1870, entering the store of his uncle, Owen Gaffeny, at Gaffeny Station, Madison county, and for a time also had charge of the Jefferson Mining company, at Quartz Hill, Beaver Head county. He was afterward engaged in business at Dutch Flat, next at Melrose, and closed his interests at the latter place to buy the store at Boulder, which was located in a small building fifty feet deep. As the business increased under his successful management the store proved too small, and they accordingly built the First National Bank block and the adjoining store, which is a brick structure 150 feet deep. They keep a large stock of general merchandise, their business methods are liberal and honorable, and they have a large trade in Boulder, also extending thirty miles in the surrounding country.

Mr. Berendes, the second member of the company, has had a long and successful business experience. In addition to his mercantile interests, he is also cashier of the First National Bank.

Mr. McDonald, the third member of the company and its secretary, was born in New York, and learned the mercantile business at the Settlers' store at Camp Douglas, Utah, in 1862. He had made the trip to California in 1854, where he followed mining for several years, or until the great Civil war commenced. In 1861 he enlisted in Company G, Third Regiment California Volunteer Infantry, was principally engaged in guarding the emigrants on the plains and in keeping the Indians in check, was promoted to the position of First Sergeant Major, and was mustered out of service in October, 1864. In 1866 Mr. McDonald came from Utah to Montana, where he afterward found employment in the mercantile store of Mr. Gaffeny, and is now a stockholder and secretary of the Gaffeny Mercantile Company. The of soldiers under one of Howard's captains fell. Finally, after much brilliant maneuvering and many sharp skirmishes, Howard fought him on the banks of Clearwater river. Joseph was badly beaten, losing twenty-three killed and twice as many wounded, while Howard lost but three killed; and pushed the pursuit into Montana.

No one can say with what fighting force Joseph entered Montana on the last of July, but it could not have been great. Indeed, it was much larger some days than others. Indians are very mercurial; a trifling thing persuades these strange and wandering children, when on the war-path, to come and go as the winds come and go. He had many women and children with him. His fighting force was anywhere between three and five hundred. Howard followed with 700, and Joseph was met in Montana by Gibbon with what force he could afford from the single regiment then in Montana. He attacked him in camp on August 9th, and a long and bloody battle followed. The Indians retreated, leaving eighty-nine dead. Gibbon lost twenty-nine killed and had forty wounded, and was burying his dead when Howard, in hot pursuit, came up. Joseph, it would seem, was influenced by his dreamer, in his movements, for he retreated to Idaho for a brief time, set his face this way and then that company are large stockholders in the First National Bank, of which Mr. Gaffeny was the first president, and served in that capacity for several years. They are also interested in mines and mining. The members of this firm are competent, enterprising and reliable business men, and by good judgment and close attention to business have been eminently successful. In his social relations, Mr. McDonald is a charter member and Secretary of the Masonic lodge at Boulder.

WILLIAM FRANKLIN PIPER, one of the successful mining men of Pioneer, Montana, was born in Ohio, September 4, 1839.

Mr. Piper is of German origin. His people, however, have long been residents of America, his great-grandfather Piper having served in the Continental army during the war for independence. Grandfather John Piper was born in 1786, served through the war of 1812, and lived to be over ninety-seven, his exact age at time of death being ninety-seven years, three months and twelve days. He reared a family of ten children, his second child, John, being the father of our subject. This John Piper was born in Juniata county, Pennsylvania, in 1818, and his first wife, whose maiden name was Catharine Resler, was born in 1819. She died, leaving six children, of whom William Franklin is the eldest. The father died in 1892, at the age of seventy-four years. He had two other wives. The second wife had one child, and the third had six children.

William F. Piper was reared near Wooster, in Wayne county, Ohio. When he was eleven years old he began to earn his own living by working for his board and clothes. He worked in this way and attended the district school in winter up to the time the civil war broke out. Then, young as he was, his patriotic nature was fired with enthusiasm and he went forth to defend the same flag under which his grandsires had served. The date of his enlistment was September 7, 1861, and as a member of Company C, Sixteenth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, he went to the front. At the battle of Cumberland Gap he was taken prisoner. Four months later he was exchanged and joined his regiment, and was under General Grant at the capture of Vicksburg. He was in the following battles: Thompson Hill, Raymond, Champion Hill and Big Black, for fifteen days being constantly under fire. He was then with the forces that were sent to watch General Johnston on the Big Black. After the capture of Vicksburg he was one of the party that followed Johnston to Jackson and retook the place and destroyed it. He was also in the Banks campaign on Red river, after which he was in camp on the Mississippi river. His term of service covered a period of three years and two months. He was then honorably discharged. The bursting of a shell near his head, while engaged in the assault upon Vicksburg, affected his hearing, but this was the only injury he sustained.

After his return from the army, Mr. Piper was for one year engaged in work at the cooper's trade in Ohio. In 1867 he started for Montana, making the journey by rail to St. Louis, and from there coming up the Missouri river to Fort Benton. This trip up the river was made on the steamer St. Johns, the time required being sixty-one days. From Fort Benton he came across the country to Helena, arriving there fourteen days later. He remained at Helena five months, and during that time helped to put up the White Latch quartz mill, and also the Blue Cloud. He then crossed the divide of the Rocky mountains and went to Phillipsburg. That was in November. In June of the following year he first landed at Pioneer. The winter of 1869 and summer of 1870 he spent at Cedar Creek, and in the fall of 1870 he settled permanently at Pioneer. Here for nearly a quarter of a century he has been engaged in placer-mining. His first move was to purchase a piece of mining land. On it he sank all his money, and soon found himself $2,000 in debt. After way, and not until after two months of marching and countermarching did he seem quite determined where to go or what to do. True, this may have been strategy, the old Roman method of war, and much has been written to prove Joseph a great general. But the facts do not accord him any degree of greatness above that of great courage, authority, energy and endurance. As for his skill in escaping capture so long, it must be remembered that he was all the time on his boyhood's play ground; and the disaster to Custer was not to be forgotten in a single year by his pursuers.

Finally, Sherman, who chanced to be in Montana, threw Miles in his way as he neared the British line, and on the last of September a four days' battle was fought on the north side of Bear Paw mountain, at the end of which, Joseph, after losing twenty-five killed and twice as many wounded, surrendered to General Howard, who came up at the close. Miles lost twenty-three killed and had forty four wounded, and had the honor, through the generous courtesy of Howard, of receiving the white flag of surrender from the hands of Joseph. The deluded followers of the foolish Indian were mostly removed to the Indian Territory; but he was sent to Washington and lionized.

that he was in the employ of the old Pioneer Company for ten years, paying up all his indebtedness and accumulating some money. Then in 1884 he and four others bought out the old company, water rights and all, and they have since mined the property successfully.

March 29, 1867, Mr. Piper married Miss Mary E. Horn, a native of Ohio, and they have four children, all natives of Montana, namely: Bessie Agnes, Lydia Pearl, David Guye and Blanche May. He owns one of the pleasant homes of Pioneer.

Mr. Piper's political associations are with the Republican party.

DR. EMIL HENKE, late of Missoula, was for many years one of her honored citizens.

He was born near Berlin, Germany, June 15, 1837, son of Judge Earnest Ludwick Henke, a native of Germany, and by profession a lawyer. Judge Henke took a deep interest in the education of his son. The Doctor's uncle was president of the Berlin University, and in this institution our subject was placed and had every advantage, chemistry and medicine being his specialties. Having completed his studies in the university, Dr. Henke came to America in 1861, settled in New York city and there practiced his profession in the hospitals, continuing in New York until 1869, with the exception of one year spent in Williamsburg, New Jersey.

In 1869 Dr. Henke came to Montana, his first location in the Territory being at Virginia City, where, with Dr. Reins, he was interested in mining, and also conducted a drug business. In 1870 he came to Missoula, bringing his stock of drugs with him, and opening his business on Main street. At that time there were two other stores on Main street, Mr. Worden's general merchandise store and the hardware store of Mr. Reinhard. In the drug business Dr. Henke was in partnership with Mr. Ross, the firm name being Henke & Ross. At length the Doctor disposed of his interest in the drug business in order to give more of his attention to the practice of medicine. He conducted a successful practice here until 1880. During that time he practiced all over the city, and also went for miles into the surrounding country, traveling both day and night, through storm and sunshine, and when called to see a sick or injured person never stopping to consider the question of pay, remuneration always being a second consideration with the kind-hearted Doctor. In 1880 Dr. Henke disposed of all his property in Missoula except his home, and he and his family went East to Pennsylvania. Subsequently they went to Tennessee, expecting to make their home in that State; but their eldest child, Earnest, took sick and died there, and after this bereavement they decided to return to Missoula. Here he again engaged in the drug business, opening the City Drug Store, on Higgins avenue, with Mr. Wilson Moore as his partner. He continued his interest in this establishment until 1886. He had also resumed the practice of his profession upon his return to Missoula, and this he conducted up to within a few weeks of his death. During his professional career he secured a good name and won many warm friends.

Dr. Henke was married in 1872 to Miss Sarah C. Swaney, a native of Ohio and a daughter of Thomas Swaney. Her father was born in Virginia, but had removed to Ohio and was engaged in farming there. Mrs. Henke's sister, Mrs. William Kennedy, was the first white woman at Great Falls. In 1868 Mrs. Henke came up the Missouri river to see her sister, landing at her destination after being three months en route. She and sister at one time did not see a white woman for three months. She was in Helena when there were not to exceed thirty-five families in the town, and when she first came to Missoula there were only twenty families here. She became the mother of three children: Earnest, who died in Tennessee, and Walter and Alfred. Mrs. Henke is a lady of intelligence and refinement, and is an esteemed member of the Presbyterian Church. The Doctor was reared in the Lutheran faith. His death occurred March 10, 1890.

This Indian had led Howard a race and chase of 1,600 miles, he had cost the regular army more than a hundred lives and the civil State as many more, to say nothing of the butcheries and the prodigious bill of costs; he had wrecked the fortunes of his best followers, and all without reason or excuse, so far as we can see, except that he wanted to imitate Sitting Bull. He had great advantages even from his birth, and his small tribe always had good missionaries and gentle teachers from our first advent among them. It is claimed that the very first printing press west of the Rocky mountains was set up here by the beloved missionary, the late Reverend Dr. Spaulding.

When I first saw these people, in 1852, they were no longer "blanket Indians," but were dressed better than the whites, as a rule, and they claimed to be Boston "til-a-e-ums" (white people). But they were not Boston people; for they still had their smo-hal-la.

Meantime seven commissioners went to Sitting Bull in Canada, but were treated with disdain, and the Sioux war in Montana still went on. In May, 1878, Sitting Bull sent to ask of General Miles permission to return and live in peace if he could keep his horse and gun. A few months later he asked General Sheridan for terms on which he could return, as the Canadian Government did not care to be any longer responsible for him or his depredations. Finally, after six years, Sitting Bull came back to the United States, still proud and imperious but almost destitute of followers or influence.

Hon. John W. Power, of the firm of the T. C. Power & Brother Company, of Fort Benton, is one of the most widely known and highly esteemed pioneers and business men of the city.

He was born in Dubuque, Iowa, April 6, 1844, of Irish ancestry. His father, Michael Power, emigrated from the mother country when a boy, settling at St. Louis, Missouri; he moved to Iowa and was married at Peru, that State, to Miss Catharine McHeer, a native of the State of Pennsylvania and also of Irish ancestry, who had long resided in America. He was for years a successful merchant, and both himself and wife were faithful adherents of the Catholic Church. He died at the age of fifty years, and she at the age of seventy-six. Their children, four in number, are all living. Senator T. C. Power was their eldest child.

John W. Power, the second child, was educated in the public schools and at Sinsinawa Mound College, Wisconsin. June 11, 1867, is the date of his arrival in Montana, from Sioux City, Iowa, coming by steamboat and bringing with him a stock of goods with which to engage in trade with the Indians and miners. In 1871 he formed the partnership with his brother, T. C. Power, which has since continued. Their business became very extensive and lucrative, having thirteen establishments on the north border of the United States and two on the Canada side of the line. They purchased all kinds of furs from the Indians, paying them in trinkets, blankets and supplies. Buffalo robes cost about $2 each. By the year 1875 the business had grown to such magnitude that the purchase of buffalo robes amounted to 36,000. They sold their furs in New York and Chicago, where also they obtained the commodities which they exchanged among the Indians for their furs and buffalo robes.

After the destruction of all the buffalo the trade went down, and the company continued in general merchandising, both wholesale and retail, selling large quantities of goods to the miners and stockmen of the country contiguous to the store at Fort Benton.

In 1879 Mr. Power became one of the organizers of the First National Bank of Fort Benton, and in 1887 the Stockmen's National Bank, with $100,000 capital stock. He has been president of the latter institution ever since its organization. He is also one of the organizers of, and a stockholder in, the American National Bank at Helena, of which Hon. T. C. Power is president; and they are also interested in the Bank of Fergus County; and they were the organizers of the Bismarck Bank of North Dakota.

For a number of years the citizens of Fort Benton and the surrounding country suffered much inconvenience for the lack of a bridge across the Missouri river at this town, and it was finally decided to build it by private enterprise; and Mr. Power has been an active factor in that movement, aiding in the organization of the company and taking his full share of the stock in it; and thus he aided in building the splendid iron draw-bridge that now spans the Missouri, at a cost of $68,000. The Power Brothers were also prominent, in connection with the I. C. Baker Company, in establishing and building a line of steamers on the Missouri below Fort Benton; and above town they were the owners of nine steamers. In some instances these steamers go as far down the river as St. Louis. They still have two steamers plying below Bismarck, but the advent of the railroad has to a large extent superseded steamboating. They are also largely interested in cattle and sheep-raising, and in mining in various localities in the State,—Fort Benton, Helena and

The Indians all along the line had progressed in every way, but he was still the same absolute savage. He had now been a famous warrior for nearly twenty years, having fought Sully in the Black Hills in 1863-4 with marked success, and it was not in his nature to remain idle or without influence, even though that influence should be exerted only for evil. He was kept as a sort of State prisoner at Standing Rock agency, and generally as a sort of priest or dreamer, rather, than as an armed warrior now, and slowly but surely began to gather strength and influence.

The one best thing that marked the vigorous policy and the giving place to sense for sentiment, was the appointing of Indians to take care of Indians. Some of them had long since served in the regular army, indifferently well, but it was not till 1877 that the experiment of appointing Indian policemen to guard Indians and watch ill disposed whites was seriously considered. From the report of the United States Commissioner of Indian affairs for 1880 it appears to have been a success from the first:

The practicability of employing an Indian police to maintain order upon an Indian reservation is no longer a matter of question. In less than three years the system has been put in operation at forty agencies, and the total force now numbers 162 officers and 653 privates. Special reports as to the character and efficiency of the services rendered by the police have recently been called for from its agents by this bureau, and those reports bear uniform testimony to the value and reliability of the police service, and to the fact that its maintenance, which was at first undertaken as an experiment, is now looked upon as a necessity.

other towns. Also they have extensive real-estate interests, have erected a large number of valuable buildings, and have a large proportion of the stock of the firm of Wackerlin & Company, in the hardware business at Fort Benton, who also have a large branch establishment at Neihart.

Both the Power brothers are prominent, active Republicans. T. C. is now United States Senator, and John W. was elected to the State Senate in 1890, and is now serving in that office, giving his constituents and his State the full benefit of his large business ability, in a very unassuming and business-like manner. He is enterprising and liberal in all the enterprises intended to build up his town and county. He is quiet in his manner, easy of approach, and, notwithstanding his business career has been attended with striking success, he never indulges in anything that would resemble display. He resides in a very modest but commodious cottage near his store at Fort Benton. He is an exemplary member of the Catholic Church, rendering his church valuable aid in all its enterprises.

Mr. Power was married, in 1883, to Miss Nellie T. Kelly, a native of St. Louis and the daughter of M. L. Kelly of that city. Their married life was a most happy one for five years, when, seven days after the birth of their first-born, her death occurred. This bereavement was a most sad one to the husband and her many friends, and Mr. Power has since remained single. Their little son, named John Merlin, is alive and doing well.

WILLIAM ALBRECHT, although a young man, is nevertheless the pioneer furniture merchant of Great Falls and one of her most enterprising citizens.

He is a native of Germany, born December 12, 1863, son of Frederick A. and Sophia (Schmidt) Albrecht. His father was a merchant in that country and his grandfather Burgomaster of Rothenburg. The subject of our sketch was educated in his native land and was there engaged in the manufacture of furniture.

Learning that the United States afforded superior advantages for an ambitious and enterprising young man to attain success, he decided to cast his lot in this country, and accordingly came hither, in 1882. His first location was at Detroit, Michigan, where he was for six months employed as bookkeeper. From there he went to Minneapolis, where he was employed by a firm engaged in the manufacture of billiard tables and bank furniture, and where he remained four years. After severing his connection with that firm, he traveled all over the Pacific coast and the Northwest, looking for a location in which to open business on his own account, and finally gave Great Falls the preference. That was in 1886 and this town was then in its infancy. Mr. Albrecht established his business at his present location, 111 Central avenue, beginning with a stock that cost him $1,000 in the East and almost that much more to freight it out here. From that small beginning his business has made rapid strides and has kept pace with the growth of the town. In 1887, finding that his business had increased to such an extent that a larger building was neccessary for its accommodation, he erected his fine brick block, 25 x 150 feet, and the three floors of this building are now stocked to their fullest capacity with furniture, carpets and upholstering goods. This building was planned by him and is a model one in every respect. Mr. Albrecht now employs six men in his establishment, and not only does a large retail business but also has a wholesale trade that extends throughout the northern part of the State.

"Among the 32,286 Sioux who are gathered at eleven agencies—nine in Dakota, one in Montana and one in Nebraska—peace and good order have prevailed throughout the year. At Santee, Sisseton and Devil's Lake agencies self-support is nearly reached, the proportion of the subsistence for those Indians which is derived from the issue of Government rations being 35, 20 and 25 per cent., respectively. They are located in severalty, live in houses, wear citizen's dress, send their children to school, own farming implements and stock, and their crops during the past year will average ten bushels of wheat, five bushels of corn, and sixteen bushels of vegetables to each member of the tribe. With such crops, which would furnish ample support for a white man, even a partial issue of rations would seem to be unnecessary, but allowance must be made for Indian appetite and Indian improvidence, and also for what the Indian would consider unjust discrimination on the part of the Government, should their Great Father, while issuing rations to his wild and indolent children, entirely withhold them from those who are industriously endeavoring, in every way, to comply with his wishes. Moreover, their surplus crops are largely invested in the purchase of farming implements, cattle, and

He is a member of the Knights of Pythias and of the Turn-Verein, and in politics is a Democrat. ALEXANDER GRAHAM, bookkeeper in the First National Bank of Billings, was born in the island of Islay, Argyle, Scotland, in 1850, oldest son of Walter and Elizabeth (McTavish) Graham. The father, formerly a prominent farmer and distiller, but now retired, is still living, aged eighty-three years. He raised eight children, two sons and six daughters, but four of the latter are now deceased.

Alexander Graham received a good business education in the schools of his native land. He afterward spent nine years in the counting-house of Richardson & Company, wholesale sugar merchants and ship owners on the Clyde. At the age of thirty years Alexander came to the United States, and while surveying the field of opportunities engaged in various occupations in Yellowstone county, Montana. He became identified with the First National Bank of this city in June, 1890. In 1892 he erected his handsome residence on Twenty-ninth street and Fourth avenue, which is one of the most beautiful and comfortable homes in the city.

In April, 1888, Mr. Graham was united in marriage with Mary E. Bailey, a daughter of S. J. and Alice (Gentholts) Bailey, whose father is a contractor and builder in Billings. Our subject and wife have two children,—Walter R. and Neil B. In his social relations, Mr. Graham is a member of Rathbone Lodge, K. of P., of Billings, in which order he is also Master at Arms of the Grand Lodge of Montana; and he has also been Treasurer of the Billings Division, No. 8, Uniformed Rank of the order, and Secretary of the Yellowstone Fair Association. Politically, he is a stanch and active Republican. Mrs. Graham is a member of the Episcopal Church.

HON. JOSEPH KITHCART CLARK, superintendent of the Moulton Mining Company, Butte, Montana, was born in Fayette county, Pennsylvania, February 2, 1842.

Mr. Clark is a son of John and Mary (Andrews) Clark, both natives of Fayette county, Pennsylvania. The father of John Clark, whose name was also John, was a native of county Tyrone, Ireland, who emigrated to this country and settled in Pennsylvania soon after the Revolutionary war. He married a Miss Reed, of Chester county, Pennsylvania, whose parents were also from the north of Ireland. The maternal grandparents of our subject, William and Sarah Andrews, likewise came from county Tyrone, Ireland, to western Pennsylvania, the time of their arrival in this country being in the early part of the present century. Sarah Andrews' maiden name was Kithcart. She was a descendant of the Cathcart family who were originally Huguenots, and the name became changed to Kithcart by an error made by a register in the transfer of a tract of land. The Cathcart family emigrated from France to Scotland at an early period and later moved to the north of Ireland. Subsequently they emigrated to the United States, and different branches of the family settled in New York and Pennsylvania. The parents of Mr. Clark were married in Pennsylvania, and resided there until 1856. That year they removed to Van Buren county, Iowa, where John Clark died in 1873, at the age of seventy-six years. In religious belief he was a Presbyterian, and for forty years was an Elder in the Church. Mrs. Clark now lives in Los Angeles, California, and is nearly eighty-one years of age. They had eleven children, seven of whom are living, viz.: William A., Joseph K., Elizabeth Abascal, Mary M. Miller, James Ross, Anna B. and Ella E. The deceased are John Reed, George, Sarah Boner and Margaret.

The boyhood of Joseph K. was passed in a manner common with farmer lads, the public schools affording him means of education. He resided on the farm with his parents in Iowa until he was twenty. Then, in 1862, rounds of the Government buildings at intervals of fifteen or thirty minutes, which precludes the possibility of Government supplies being surreptitiously made way with.

"The police force have rendered varied and valuable and important sevice during the past year. Over thirty white men have been arrested by them: some renegades from justice from other States and Territories, and who have been turned over to the proper officials on their arrival for them; some for stealing Indian horses, introducing liquors on the reservation, trading for annuity-goods, larceny, &c., crimes against the United States statutes, and who, after a hearing before Chief Clerk Alder, who is a United States commissioner, have been committed, and have answered for their offenses before the United States court at Deadwood, Dakota. Still others have been arrested for intoxication and minor offenses, infractions of agency regulations, and, having been convicted before an improvised police court, have been fined or imprisoned temporarily in the agency guard-house.

"In addition the police have rendered valuable general service in caring for Government property, Indian stock, preventing introduction of liquor, &c., and arresting returning 'Sitting Bull' Indians, and preventing the departure north of ambitious young bucks from the agency, should they feel so inclined."

"Owing to jealousy and prejudices among the different bands and tribes of Indians and mixed bloods on this reservation, our court of Indian

In 1869 Alexander Mitchell and his two brothers crossed the plains with ox teams, spending three and a half months on the road. They came direct to the land on which they have since resided. Mr. Mitchell has added to his original purchase until he now owns a valuable farm of 400 acres, and is engaged in general farming and stock-raising. During the Indian war of 1877, he and his brother Campbell enlisted under General Gibbons, and took part in the battle of Big Hole on August 9, in which many of the whites were killed or wounded. Mr. Mitchell escaped without a scratch, but his brother was killed. The volunteers purchased their own equipments. Mr. Mitchell received $7 from the Government for services rendered during that struggle.

January 6, 1884, he was united in marriage with Miss Nannie Summers, a native of Missouri and a daughter of Henry L. Summers, a native of Kentucky, whose wife, Mary O., was a native of Tennessee. Mr. and Mrs. Mitchell have two sons,—Henry Clay and Samuel Oscar. Mrs. Mitchell is a member of the Christian Church. Socially, Mr. Mitchell is a member of the Masonic order at Stevensville, and in political matters affiliates with the Republican party.

MORGAN EVANS, one of the representative farmers of Deer Lodge valley, has been identified with Montana since 1864. As one of her respected citizens he is entitled to some personal mention in this work, and a resume of his life is as follows;

Morgan Evans was born in South Wales, on the last day of June, 1833, was reared and educated in his native land and there learned the trade of shoemaker. He was married in 1854 to Miss Ann Evans, a native of his own country, and, although having the same name not being related to him. In 1856 they took passage for America, and after a voyage of seven weeks landed at Boston, whence they at once directed their course to Salt Lake.

Upon his arrival in Utah, Mr. Evans took claim to a tract of land, and there carried on farming and worked at his trade until 1864. That year the gold excitement in Montana drew him hither. For some time he was engaged in freighting between Salt Lake City and Virginia City, a business which at that time paid well. He made four of these trips in 1864. He had several wagons, with three yoke of oxen to each wagon, and each trip required about six weeks. On each wagon he hauled from 4,000 to 6,000 pounds and received ten cents per pound for hauling, thus making from $1,500 to $1,600 per trip.

In 1865 Mr. Evans brought his family to Deer Lodge valley, took claim to a tract of land, and settled down to stockraising, his earnest efforts being attended with success. His herd of cattle increased until at one time he had 800 head. He also raised Hambletonian trotting horses, raising some which attained a record of 2:21 and 2:26. His present ranch comprises about 1,000 acres and is located four miles east of Anaconda. Here he raises large quantities of hay and grain. He has built a nice residence and otherwise improved his property and he and his family are surrounded with all the comforts of life. He also has property in Anaconda, having there erected several buildings, which he rents.

Mr. and Mrs. Evans have nine children, namely: Gwenllian, who married David Evans and has five children; Sarah Ann, who is the wife of John Nelson and has two children; Margaret, wife of Morgan Thomas; Annie, married Benjamin Phillips, had one son, and is now deceased; Rachel, widow of Joseph Thomas, has two children; and Mary, William, Kattie, David and John M. at home.

offenses and our police force are neither efficient nor worthy of any particular praise in discharging their duties. The Indians of Charlot's band of Bitter Root Flatheads removed here are the hardest to control. Raised among the whites in Bitter Root valley, and, the young men with no restraint upon them, lounging around saloons in various villages of the valley, upon coming to the reservation they thought they could carouse and dance as they did there. Some of the leaders of this band openly avow that they are opposed to having a court of Indian offenses, or police to enforce the regulations governing the reserve, and that on an Indian reservation the Indians should be free from the white men's laws. If the Indian dances are permitted here, the consequence will be demoralization to a great extent. I have taken a determined stand against those dances and expect the Department to sustain my efforts."—Report of Flathead Agency.

"In a communication dated February 4, 1880, I had the honor to call the attention of the Commissioner to certain information which I was in receipt of, indicating a disposition on the part of Sitting Bull and his followers to come to an amicable arrangement with the United States Government, and also asking permission to visit him by authority. In reply thereto I was ordered to abstain from any communication with him, as the Government did not wish to make any terms. Of course that ended the matter; but I am convinced that at that time a lasting treaty could have been

In his political affiliations, Mr. Evans is a stanch Republican. He has rendered efficient service as County Commissioner, filling that important position for a period of twelve years. Few men are better known or more highly respected in Deer Lodge county than is Morgan Evans.

DR. EDGAR I. FLETCHER, of Boulder, was born in Vermont, March 29, 1853. The first of the family in this country, Thomas Fletcher, came from England to Lowell, Massachusetts, in 1850, bringing with him a patent from the king of England to a large tract of land. He became one of the prominent early settlers of that locality. The family in this country now number about 15,000. The father of our subject, Edward Fletcher, was born in Grand Isle county, Vermont, January 6, 1819. He married Eliza M. Landon, a native also of that county, and they had ten children, of whom eight are still living. The mother died at the age of sixty-four years, and the father survived until seventy-two years of age. Mr. Fletcher was an honest, upright man and was a great inventor. He had the credit of being the first inventor of the self-regulating windmills, also invented the first iron water wheels, similar to the turbine wheel of the present day; but like many inventors, never realized much profit from these valuable inventions. The family for many generations have been members of the Congregational Church.

Edgar J., the fifth child in order of birth in his father's family, received his education in the public schools of his native State. He read and practiced medicine with his elder brother, afterward graduated in the medical department of the State University, at Burlington, and in 1879 began the practice of his profession in Dutchess county, New York. Two years later he became imbued with the idea of coming to Montana, and arriving in this State engaged in raising horses, which at that time afforded large returns. He followed that occupation in Jefferson county, and later added a sawmill to his other business interests. In 1884 Mr. Fletcher was elected County Superintendent of Schools by the Republican party. In 1888 he resumed the practice of medicine in Boulder, and in 1891, seeing the need of a hospital in this city, he erected a good brick structure on three acres of ground near the courthouse. He has all the necessary appliances for the care of the sick, and also gives the bichloride-of-gold treatment for inebriates and those afflicted with the opium and tobacco habits. Dr. Fletcher is now beautifying the grounds about the premises, and the property is a credit to the city of Boulder. In addition to his medical practice he served for a time as physician to the Board of Health of Jefferson county.

The Doctor was married September 18, 1884, to Miss Emma H. Robinson, a native also of Vermont, and a daughter of Henry Robinson. To this union have been born four children, one of whom, Ruth, died at the age of four years. Those living are: Buel M., Wallace R. and Clara. Mr. and Mrs. Fletcher were formerly Congregationalists, but there being no church of that denomination in Boulder, they united with the Presbyterian Church after coming to this city, and are active workers in advancing religious sentiment in their community. The Doctor has served as an Elder in the church, and also aided in the erection of a creditable brick edifice. He is thoroughly informed in the practice of his profession and takes a deep interest in alleviating the sufferings of the afflicted. He is highly deserving of the patronage he has secured, as well of the high esteem in which he is held in Jefferson county.

made. Subsequently Sitting Bull sent me, in token of friendship, a pipe and hatchet, which were to be given me in case terms could be made; otherwise to be returned."—Report of Pine Ridge Agency, 1880.

"When I took charge of the agency, July 7, 1879, I found a police force of ten men at Wolf Point, but at Poplar river the Yanctons refused to allow their men to go into such an organization, saying that they had their soldiers in the camp and did not want any others; but I at once went to work and organized a force out of such men as I could get, and put them on duty whenever needed; but they were not very effective, as they were afraid of the camp. The chiefs, seeing I was determined in the matter, at the end of two months came to me and offered to fill up the force of twenty with their best men, each chief furnishing an equal quota. I accepted their proposition, and on the 1st of October reorganized out of part of the men the chiefs selected, and retaining those of the old who had proved faithful. The man I selected as captain, 'Stab Plenty,' was considered the bravest and also one of the wildest Indians in the camp, the year before stopping the laborers in the field from working; but ever since accepting the position, he has been faithful and obedient in every particular, trying to live and act like a white man, and I cannot speak too highly in his praise. November 29, 1879, the honorable Commissioner of Indian Affairs forwarded a telegram saying that if any Sitting Bull Indians came to the agency they must be

CHARLES SPEAR, Chairman of the Board of County Commissioners of Yellowstone county, also a member of the grocery firm of Donavan & Spear, at Billings, is another instance of capacity well applied, and his well directed efforts are bringing him both prominence and profit.

He was born in Atchison county, Missouri, in 1860, a son of Willis and Jane (Ferguson) Spear. The father is a lineal descendant of Richard Clark, who came to America on the Mayflower, and is of German, Scotch, and Welsh ancestry. He was formerly a prominent farmer and stock-raiser in Missouri, but now resides in Wyoming. He served in the Federal army toward the close of the war, and his son, Wood Spear, was also a soldier in the defense of the Union.

Charles, the subject of this sketch, attended the common schools of his native State, and also spent a few months at the College of Montana, in Deer Lodge. In 1882 he was employed by the mercantile firm of the Paul Mc Cornish Company, at Junction, this State, and in 1889 came to Billings, after which the grocery firm of Donavan & Spear was organized. They have the only exclusive grocery house in the city. In addition to his other interests, Mr. Spear is a stockholder of the Basin Sheep Company, and they own 11,000 sheep. In 1889 he was elected to the office of County Commissioner, of which he has served as Chairman since 1892.

In 1886 he was united in marriage with Miss Frances Gruwell, a daughter of Oscar and Sarah (Bohannen) Gruwell. The father is County Commissioner of Yellowstone county, and is also one of the prominent sheep owners of the State. Mrs. Spear was the second white child born at Fort Benton, Montana. To this union has been born one child, Clara. Socially, Mr. Spear is a member of Ashlar Lodge, No. 29, and Chapter No. 6, Aldemar Commandery No. 5, F. & A. M., at Billings, and, politically, supports the Republican party. Mrs. Spear is is a member of the Congregational Church.

LOUIS BROWN, one of the early pioneers of Montana, was born in Quebec, Canada, March 7, 1821, and is of English descent. His grandfather, a sea captain, came from England to Canada, but was afterward lost at sea. His son, John B. Brown, the father of our subject, was born in Canada, in 1793, and was twelve years of age when his father died. At the age of twenty-two years he married Miss Rosetta May, and they had sixteen children. Six of the children were still living in 1882. The father lived to the age of eighty-eight years, and the mother attained a good old age.

Louis Brown, our subject, resided in Canada until eighteen years of age, and learned to read and write in a French school. After leaving home he went to Burlington, Vermont, where he followed farm labor, receiving only $12 per month. After his marriage they resided in Canada three years, afterward purchased land at Somerset, next sold his land at that place and moved to Chicago, worked for wages about three years in southern Indiana, and in 1859, filled with a desire for gold-hunting, he crossed the plains to Pike's Peak. In 1860 Mr. Brown returned to his home, but shortly afterward went again to the mines, secured a claim, and during the three months of his mining experience, cleared $1,000. He then erected a good, two-story dwelling, but not long afterward the mines ceased operation, the town was deserted, and he lost his entire savings. In 1863 Mr. Brown was joined by his wife who came across the plains with a freighter. Gold had just been discovered at Bannack, and they made the journey to that place with ox teams, treated as prisoners of war and surrender their arms and ponies; also, every one of them if fed must be made to earn his rations by work in some capacity for the Government. The latter part of January forty-one families came here from the north in a destitute and starving condition, who turned over their ponies and guns, and I put them on the list and reported my action February 6, 1880. From that time on to the last of April they kept coming in small parties and turning over their ponies and arms till there were 1,116 in all—109 men, 209 women, 424 boys, and 374 girls—and they had turned over forty-three ponies, forty guns, and seven revolvers. Before coming here for two or three months they had been killing and eating their ponies, and the most of them came on foot."—Report of Fort Peck Agency, 1880.

The Indians on the Blackfoot reservation, (as large as an average Eastern State), it would seem, still hunted and found the buffalo, up to the time of the report of 1880, as did also the Crows:

"The tribes belonging to this agency are the Blackfeet, Bloods and Piegans, now generally knows as Piegans, and formerly made parts of large bands that are now known as 'Northern Piegans,' which now roam north of the Canada boundary line. Their history until some few years since was one continued relation of hostility to the whites, as well as to the other Indian arriving in June, 1863, but remained only seven weeks Mr. Brown next farmed on the shares in Bitter Root valley two years; in 1865 came to Frenchtown, afterward mined at Blackfort, and then came again to this city. There was also another gentleman named Louis Brown then residing in this locality, and he was known as No. 1, and our subject No. 2. After returning to this place our subject rented the farm of Mr. Brown No. 1, but afterward purchased a fine tract of land three miles west of Frenchtown, on the Mullan road. In 1872 he sold his land and engaged in the cattle business in the Flathead country for the following three years. After returning to this city Mr. Brown bought and sold two ranches, and in 1885 purchased the section of land on which he now resides, from the railroad, paying $2 per acre.

January 5, 1851, our subject was united in marriage with Miss Rebecca Holmes, a daughter of Thomas and Lucy (Tuttle) Holmes. They have had two children:—Edward, born in 1856, and died May 7, 1890; and Joseph, who died in infancy. Mr. and Mrs. Brown are members of the Catholic Church, and aided in building the church edifice in Frenchtown. Mr. Brown is now practically retired from active life, and his large ranch is farmed on the shares.

HON. JOSEPH A. BROWNE, a respected Montana pioneer of 1862, and now a prominent citizen of Beaver Head county, is a native of Washington county, Pennsylvania, born August 1, 1831.

He is of English descent. Some of his ancestors emigrated from England to Ireland about the year 1700. His grandfather, Michael Browne, was born, reared and married on the Emerald Isle; emigrated to America before the Revolution and settled in Washington county, Pennsylvania, where he was engaged in farming and where he reared his family of eleven children. He and his good wife each lived to the advanced age of ninety-two years. They were devout Catholics.

Our subject's father, Michael Browne, was born in Washington county, Pennsylvania, in 1793. He married Miss Elizabeth Doherty, a native of the State of Maryland and a descendant of Irish ancestry. He remained at the old homestead, later came into the possession of other lands there, and until late in life continued to reside in Washington county. In 1879 he came to Montana to spend his declining years with his son, Joseph A., and here he quietly passed away, after an active and useful life. His good wife had died in Pennsylvania in 1851. Both were faithful members of the Catholic Church.

Joseph A. Browne was the third born in his father's family. He was reared on the farm and received his early education in the public schools. When he was eighteen he was sent to St. Francis College in Cambria county, Pennsylvania, and after leaving college his first work was that of bookkeeper in a railroad office. Next he was salesman and bookkeeper at Wheeling, West Virginia. Then he returned to his father's home for a short visit, and on the 14th of March, 1859, started for Pike's Peak, to which place he journeyed with ox teams and in company with fifty others. After his arrival in Colorado he prospected until his means were exhausted, when he worked in the placer mines at $2 per day. In the fall of 1859 he went to Santa Fe, New Mexico, where he spent the winter, returning in the spring to Colorado. There he failed to secure a good claim, and that same summer went back to New Mexico, where he also met with failure in his prospecting. Again he returned to Colorado. He mined for wages and prospected in Colorado until 1862, when, hearing of the discovery at Salmon river, he and his partners, W. D. Bender and Edward tribes (Sioux, Crows, Gros Ventres, etc.) on their borders. They were the dread of all their neighbors. The severe punishment inflicted some ten years ago by the military (a large band being utterly exterminated) broke down their hostility, and since that time their depredations on the property of settlers and their respect for their lives have undergone a marked change, and growing inclination has been manifested to copy white men's ways, and take such pursuits as would prepare them for the change from hunting buffalo and other game to locating, farming and raising crops. Their large numbers (over 7,500), and the inadequacy of the appropriation for their support, made, and still renders it necessary, that the donation of the Government be supplemented by hunting; but each succeeding year finds an additional number of leading men building houses and working small farms, so that the hunting camps are more and more made up of the younger men. The rapid decrease of buffalo and the fast approach of their final disappearance has its effect in their willingness to give up their nomadic habits.

"In the early part of last fall the report of buffalo in numbers caused the formation of a larger hunting camp than usual, some of those having farms joining it after the harvesting of their crops. The Indians had a fair hunt last fall and got a good many robes, but they were unable to do any winter hunting on account of the buffalo being too far south, and the deep snow which fell in November and lay till the

D. Brown, came hither. At Bannack they secured a claim which they worked until the following spring, taking out about $8,000. In a single day they took out $125. Some of the specimens they secured there at that time Mr. Browne had on exhibition at the World's Fair at Chicago. As the diggings were some distance from the water, they sacked the dirt, put the sacks on an ox hide and drew it down the steep bank to the wash. Mr. Browne got the credit of starting the first "Bull Hide" express. Many other miners adopted his plan and soon all the dirt was sent down hill in that way.

From Bannack Mr. Browne went to Argenta, and in June, 1864, located the first silver claim at that place. In the winter of 1864–5 he sold a half interest in his claim to Governor S. T. Hauser for $2,000 in currency, but took $1,000 in gold-dust. At Ophir Gulch, in Deer Lodge county, he found a valuable claim, where he and his partner mined during the spring and summer, realizing about $10,000. This place they called Nugget Gulch, on account of the many large pieces of gold they found there, one piece being valued at $90. After supposing that it was exhausted he sold out for $500. He then returned to his old home in Pennsylvania, going by way of California, and from San Francisco making the journey by water. After an absence of six months he returned to Montana, via St. Louis and the Missouri river, and continued prospecting and mining until 1870.

After Mr. Browne sold his silver mines to Mr. Hauser, the latter went East and formed the first Eastern syndicate for smelting and refining ore, and this smelter and refinery were the first in the Territory.

In 1870 Mr. Browne purchased the Big Hole toll-road and bridge, which he has since operated. He has also acquired a large ranch of over 3,000 acres, and has become one of the successful and prominent stock-raisers of his section. His cattle are a high grade of Durhams, and he breeds both Morgan and Clyde horses. Besides this he still continues his interest in mining, being the owner of the Faithful Silver mine, located in the Vipond district near Ponsonbay. This is considered a very valuable mine.

Mr. Browne was married April 9, 1872, to Miss Agnes M. Murray, a native of Pittsburg, and daughter of Bartholomew and Ellen Murray, of Pennsylvania. They have an interesting family of four children: Mary E.; Joseph A., Jr.; Fanny T.; and Francis V., and their commodious and attractive home is located in a romantic spot near the river bridge. Here, surrounded by his broad acres, Mr. Browne is "monarch of all he surveys."

He has always affiliated with the Democratic party, and has frequently been honored by his party with positions of prominence and trust. In 1869 and 1872 he was elected and served as a Representative to the Territorial Assembly, and he also served in the extra session. In 1881 he was elected a member of the Montana Council. While a member of that body he served on several important committees, and rendered valued service by aiding in procuring the passage of the bill which removed the county seat from Bannack to Dillon, the latter place being in the center of the county and a railroad town. In 1884 he was elected a member of the Territorial Convention, and was one of a committee of three to carry its proceedings to Washington, the other two gentlemen being Hon. J. K. Toole and W. A. Clark. When Hon. S. T. Hauser was made Governor of the Territory he chose Mr. Browne for one of his staff. Governor Leslie also honored him with a similar appointment, with the commission of Inspector General of the National Guards of last of March, and the result was that the entire camp had to be fed from the commissary all winter.

"This spring, as soon as the snow left and the ice went out of the river, they commenced getting venison, which, with a part ration of flour, was all they had to live on, and part of the time no flour. In May the buffalo commenced coming north, and through June and July a large part of the camp were out and had a successful hunt; but while they kill a large quantity of buffalo they never save meat enough to last them over ten days after they come in from a hunt; hence their hunting supplies only their present wants."

But we search the books in vain for reports of hunting parties in future reports. The buffalo was fast becoming a thing of the past,—and it was a good thing for the Indian, for he now began to have herds of his own.

"The only Indians within the control of this agency are under the tribal name of Crows, although there are intermarried with them, and classing themselves as such, Bannacks, Gros Ventres, Assiniboines, Piegans, Arapahoes, Blackfeet, and even their hereditary enemies, the Sioux. Many of these were captured when infants in the years of the past when the war-path was the ambition and glory of all western tribes, adopted into the Crow tribe, and have maintained their relations with it ever since. My last census, taken last February, the most complete and accurate that has probably ever been obtained, gave us as follows: Men, 957; boys, 758; women, 1,093; girls, 662. Total, 3,470.

Montana. Governors White and Toole also honored him by appointing him to the same position. During the early history of the Territory he was a member of the Vigilant Committee.

Notwithstanding the many varied experiences through which he has passed in the early settlement and development of the Territory, Mr. Browne is still a well preserved man, and it is hoped by his hosts of friends that he may live long to enjoy the prosperity which his intelligent and persistent efforts have made.

THOMAS C. PORTER, Coroner of Silver Bow county, Montana, has been identified with Montana since 1864. Few have been more intimately connected with the growth and development of Butte City than has he. Following is a brief review of his life:

Thomas C. Porter was born in London, England, February 11, 1832, son of Richard and Grace (Rocket) Porter; but, although a native of another land, he is thoroughly Americanized, he having been brought to this country in his infancy. He was reared in Gloversville, New York, and was educated in the public schools and at a branch of the State Normal School. His father being a glove manufacturer, he learned that trade of him, and followed it until 1858. About that time the family removed to Bureau county, Illinois, and there he taught school two years. In 1859 he crossed the plains to Denver, Colorado, where he had three brothers engaged in the manufacture of gloves and doing a tannery and fur business, and he became associated with them. In 1863 the two younger brothers, Henry and Charles, came to Montana. Both have since died. They were followed here in 1864 by Thomas C., who that year disposed of his interests in Colorado.

Thomas C. Porter made the journey from Denver to Salt Lake by coach, and from the latter place to Alder Gulch with mules, he being one of four men each of whom had a saddle-mule and pack-mule. The date of their arrival at Alder Gulch was February 14, 1864. Mr. Porter paid $800 for a mining claim, which proved a worthless investment. Until October of that year he manufactured gloves and also ran a tailor shop there, believing that he could make more by working at his trade than in the mines.

In October he took up his abode in Butte City, being one of its first settlers and helping to erect the first cabins of the place. Immense herds of buffalo and indeed wild game of all kinds abounded here at that time. Like most western towns, Butte City was of quick growth and it soon became necessary to organize a school district. Mr. Porter helped in its organization and was chosen Clerk of the School Board and also made one of its Directors. Something occurred to prevent the teacher's arrival on the day set to open school, and it thus happened that Mr. Porter taught the first day of school in Butte City. He also taught in the winters of 1866-7-8, at that time having about twenty-six pupils, several of them older than himself. He was also clerk of the Summit Valley Mining District (the name the camp then went by), and he became the discoverer of many valuable claims. Judge Newkirk and Joseph Ransdell were two of his partners. They mined in German Gulch two summers, taking out large quantities of gold, and at the end of the second summer sold their claim for more than it cost them and invested in a band of cattle—the largest band of cattle in Deer Lodge county. In 1867 they built the first smelter in the county, in Parrot Gulch, at a cost of between three and four thousand dollars, and ran it with horse-power; but it proved a failure. The following year the latter having cottonwood and quaking aspen, the hills and valleys all teeming with rich, nutritious grass, with an abundance of pellucid streams fresh from the eternal snows in the lofty mountain gorges, each hurrying on to join the great 'Father of Waters,'—all combine to make it one of the most beautiful as well as most valuable locations in the West.

"The Crows have from 12,000 to 14,000 mules and ponies, including some excellent American horses. A considerable number of them already own cattle. During the past season they took and traded from six to seven thousand buffalo robes, on which they realized about $4 each, with perhaps 30,000 pounds peltries, on which they realized about 20 cents per pound; and we have, say: 13,000 mules and horses, value, $200,000; 6,500 robes, value $26,000; 30,000 pounds peltries, value, 6,000; other furs, value, $2,000. Total, $234,000."—Crow Agency Report, 1880.

As we go forward we find not only the live stock of the Indians on the five reservations increasing in numbers and quality, and the acreage of tilled lands broadening, but the Indians themselves actually increasing in numbers.

It must be borne in mine that, as indicated before, the number of wild or semi-barbarous Indians was always greatly over estimated. The Indians had an interest in this, in that they could draw excessive rations by reporting exaggerated numbers; and the agents, also, too often had a selfish purpose in keeping the numerical value as great as possible. It will be remembered that the Sioux were so entirely opposed to a correct census that some of them actually went on the war-path when this was they began a second smelter, at a cost of about $5,000, but on account of financial embarrassment did not complete it. As above stated, Mr. Porter was the discoverer of numerous mining claims. He, however, sold out from time to time and never realized a great amount from any of them. Altogether he was probably interested in 150 claims, many of which became very valuable. Among them are the Parrot, Gray Eagle, Shakespeare, Mount Moriah, Magna Charta, Hard Shell and others. While his discoveries have not resulted in great wealth to him, yet he is rich in experience and in possessing the friendship of many of Montana's stanch pioneers and best men.

Mr. Porter was made a Mason in Denver in 1862, and in 1876 he helped to organize Butte Lodge, his name being on its list of charter members. He has served three terms as Master of this lodge. Politically a Republican, he was elected by that party to the position he now fills, that of County Coroner.

GEORGE WILLIAM EMIRICK, a Montana pioneer of 1862 and now a well-to-do stock farmer of the Beaver Head valley, dates his birth in Onandaga county, New York, April 3, 1827.

Mr. Emirick is of German descent. Two brothers emigrated from Germany to America previous to the Revolution. One of them served in the British army and the other on the Colonial side of the great struggle. Adam Emirick was the Continental soldier and the great-grandfather of our subject. Adam Emirick's son Adam was the father of George Emirick who was born, in New York, in 1792 and who married Miss Nancy Rose, her birth having occured in Vermont in 1801. They had a family of seven children, of whom six are living. In 1844 they emigrated to Wisconsin and settled on Bigfoot prairie, and there three years later the father died. The mother lived to be seventy-two years of age. Both were faithful members of the Methodist Episcopal Church and their lives were adorned by many Christian graces.

Their son, George William, was reared and educated in his native State, being seventeen years of age at the time he removed with his parents to Wisconsin. After the death of his father he continued at home with his mother, taking care of her and the younger children, until 1851. In 1851 he turned his attention to the lumber business on the Wisconsin river, and later he settled on a ranch. He was married in Wisconsin, in 1855, to Miss Helen Marshall, daughter of Captain Marshall, a seafaring man.

In 1860, accompanied by his wife, he crossed the plains to Colorado. At Pike's Peak he mined until 1862, meeting with only moderate success. Then he left for the Nez Perces diggings in Idaho, going in company with about twenty other miners and braving much danger from the Indians en route. In one engagement the Indians killed five of the miners, and it was only by the most dauntless bravery that the rest of the party succeeded in keeping the red men in awe of them. Mr. Emirick had left his wife in Denver, and we here state that he never afterward heard from her. Upon reaching Montana, they camped at Birch creek, and there Mr. Emirick learned from a halfbreed that gold had been discovered at Bannack, to which place he at once directed his course and where he arrived August 26, 1862. At that time there were about thirty miners in the camp. He secured a claim and took out considerable gold, continuing there until fall and accumulating about $7,000. Then he went to Virginia City and took a claim, and was there during the exciting times incident to the trial and hanging of the road agents. After this he went on a prospecting tour on the Yellowstone river with the James Stuart outfit. They made the trip to that river an first attempted. True, they based their action on a superstition that it was "bad medicine" to be so definitely numbered. But at bottom the reason was rations.

However, after anything like a correct numbering could be had we find the federal reports year after year, as a rule, when not interrupted or cut down by war or reckless acts of their own doing, giving an increase of population for each of the five Indian reservations. Nor can we help observing that the head of the bureau continually took the side of the Indians whenever they had even so much as a show of right, whether against soldiers, settlers, gold-seekers or railroads.

"In my last annual report I referred to an agreement which had been then lately entered into between Assistant Attorney-General McCammon, representing the United States, and the confederated tribes of Flathead, Kootenay and Upper Pend d'Oreilles Indians, occupying the Jocko or Flathead reservation in Montana, for the extinguishment of their title to lands of the reservation required for the purposes of the Northern Pacific Railroad, in accordance with the provisions of section 2 of the act of Congress approved July 2, 1864 (13 Stat., 365). This agreement is dated September 2, 1882, and provides for the surrender and relinquishment by the said confederated tribes to the United States of all their right, title, and interest, under treaty of July 16, 1855, in and to a strip of land 200 feet wide, extending east and west through the reservation, and containing 1,300 acres, as a right of way and road-bed for there the party divided, a part of them going to Wood river. On the Sweetwater the party again split, and from that point Mr. Emirick returned. After this he mined in British Columbia and also in the Blackfoot country in Montana, being more successful at the latter place than at the former. Taking his mining experience as a whole, his best success was at Bannack, where, with a hand-rocker, he took out in one day $270.

Upon his return from the Blackfoot country he landed in Beaver Head valley on the 27th of December, 1865, and stopped in the old cabin then called the Robbers' roost. The following year he took claim to a tract of Government land, the same on which he has since resided. For a number of years he gave his attention chiefly to the cattle business, in which he was very successful. He still raises some cattle and also horses, but his ranch is now utilized principally for the production of hay. His present residence he built in 1886. In politics he is a Democrat.

Mr. Emirick was married again in 1879, and his second wife died about a month after their marriage. In 1883 he wedded Lunia Crandall, a native of Indiana. This marriage was a most happy one. They had two children, Putman and Boss. The former died at the age of nine months and the latter is now a bright boy of eight years, his father's pride and joy, the mother having died in 1888.

DINGWALL BROS., prominent merchants of New Chicago, and also largly engaged in farming operations, came from Canada to Montana in 1868. As representative business men of their part of the State, it is appropriate that personal mention be made of them in this work, and it is with pleasure that we present the following sketch:

Dingwall Bros., William and Duncan, are natives of Canada and of Scotch extraction. Their father, John Dingwall, was born in Scotland about the year 1800, and when a young man emigrated to Canada, where he was subsequently married to Miss Catharine McGruer, a native of Canada, but of Scotch descent. They became the parents of eleven children, eight sons and three daughters, of whom nine are living. The father died at the age of seventy-four years, and the mother lived to be seventy-nine. He was Captain of militia, and both were members of the Presbyterian Church.

William Dingwall, the older of these gentlemen, was born October 14, 1843, and the date of Duncan's birth was March 31, 1847. They were reared in Canada and educated in the public schools, and in 1868 came together to Montana to make this their future home. They came up the Missouri river to Fort Benton, where they landed on the 6th of June. At the time of their arrival here they had only $45. At Helena they secured employment in a sawmill, and William continued sawing until 1871; while Duncan, after six months in the mill, went to Henderson Gulch and worked for wages at placer-mining. In 1871 they came to their present location and engaged in stock-raising. They located a farm, made some improvements upon it and then sold out, after which they purchased 320 acres, which they subsequently sold to Col. George W. Morse. Since then they have from time to time purchased other lands until now they are the owners of 1,500 acres. They have all these years been successfully engaged in raising cattle and horses. They now own imported Norman Percheron horses. In 1877 they drove 200 head of cattle to Winnipeg and sold them.

From 1873 until 1878 Mr. Duncan Dingwall worked in the store of Caplice & Smith, and in 1878 the brothers opened their present store at New Chicago, Messrs. Caplice and Smith being in partnership with them and remaining members of the firm until 1883. Since 1883 Dingwall Bros. have successfully conducted the business alone. In 1878 they built the store-room they have since occupied and where they keep a full stock of merchanwithout much success. From these causes a steady reduction of the numbers on our record has been going on.

Since the first efforts at farming and house-building were made, some six years ago, the work has made moderate but steady progress. There are now nearly 200 log cabins, substantial and comfortable, with in most cases small patches of cultivated ground attached. They are scattered over the reservation where there is tillable land. Last fall there was a fair crop of potatoes raised, and as no Indian had cellarage frost-proof, they were instructed to bring into the agency cellar a portion to be preserved for seed. This was done by some forty of them, and 138½ bushels were taken care of and distributed to them again this spring. All other Indians who had prepared ground also received seed. The Indian farms being so far apart, it was impossible to supervise and see that the seed thus given was put in the ground. An after-inspection of the farms showed that only a small part of the seed had been planted; the greater part had been eaten, as might have been expected.

There was much alarm and disturbance caused by the frequent raids made from across the line by Crees and half-breeds during the spring and summer months. As many as 200 ponies were stolen and run into Canada. In some cases pursuit was given and encounters followed, resulting in 1 Piegan killed and 2 severely wounded. The Crees are reported to have suffered greater loss. One of our Indian villages on Two-Medicine river, eight miles north of the agency, was abandoned in consequence of these raids, the Indians yet living in lodges near the agency, afraid to return to their homes and farms. Several office he still retains; he is now the senior Captain of the First Regiment and takes great pride in the fact, being in line for the Majorate. He is also a member of different lodges, such as the A. O. U. W., the Select Knights of the A. O. U. W., the National Union and the Royal Arcanum.

Captain Mueller has five children, three boys and two girls, and takes great pride in his family.

Being a business man of push and enterprise he never does things by halves; what he thinks worth doing at all he does with all his might, and of course is very popular and has hosts of friends in the State.

HON. JOSEPH A. HYDE, a citizen of Deer Lodge, Montana, and president of the First National Bank of Philipsburg, this State, is a native of Missouri, born in Savannah, May 8, 1847.

Looking back over the ancestry of Mr. Hyde, we find that his great-grandfather, John Hyde, emigrated to this country from England, at an early day and settled at Litchfield, Connecticut, and there his son Chancelor, our subject's grandfather, was born in 1765. Chancelor Hyde married Miss Polly Birdseye, of that place, and they became the parents of nine children. Some years after their marriage they removed to the town of Junius, Seneca county, New York, where he resided up to the time of his death, which occurred in the eightieth year of his age. Philo Hyde, the fifth born in his family, is the father of Joseph A., his birth occurring at Litchfield, Connecticut, March 4, 1806. He married Miss Elizabeth Clarke, a native of Terre Haute, Indiana, and they have had seven children, four of whom are living, Joseph A. being their fourth child. For many years Philo Hyde carried on the business of merchant tailor, continuing the business in Savannah, Missouri, after his removal to that place in 1846. He was for some years Postmaster of Savannah, and he and his good wife are still honored residents of that town, he having attained the advanced age of eighty-eight years.

Joseph A. Hyde attended the common schools, and when thirteen years of age began to earn his own living by working on a farm at twenty-five cents per day. In 1864 he went to Omaha and clerked in a store during the summer. The following winter he spent at his home in Missouri and remained there until March, 1866, when he shipped as a cabin boy on the steamboat Bighorn to work his passage up the Missouri to Montana.

It was on the 13th of June, 1866, that young Hyde arrived in Helena. There he at once accepted a clerkship in the store of Clarke, Conrad & Miller, the senior member of the firm, Mr. A. G. Clarke, being his uncle. Mr. Hyde remained in that position for four years. On the 13th of June, 1870, he came to Deer Lodge, and here for four years he was a clerk in the hardware store of Mr. F. B Miller. He had always made it a point to save a portion of his earnings, and with what he had accumulated he was enabled in 1874 to launch out in business for himself. With H. G. Valiton as his partner, he engaged in the livery business at Deer Lodge, which he continued until 1877. At that time he went to Butte City and entered into a partnership with D. N. Dellinger in the hardware business, in which he continued successfully until 1880. He then sold his interest to his partner and accepted the position of president of the Miner Publishing Company. In 1882 he was elected cashier of the First National Bank of Butte City, in which capacity he served for five and a half years, when, on account of failing health, he was obliged to resign and take needed rest.

In January, 1888, Mr. Hyde opened a bank in Philipsburg, which was soon afterward incorporated as the Joseph A. Hyde Banking Company. This was succeeded in 1892 by the First National Bank of Philipsburg, with a capital stock of $50,000. Mr. Hyde was elected its president and has since filled that important position, so managing its affairs that it has become an eminently sucvisits were paid us by United States soldiers who made search for these Crees, but unsuccessfully. As a result of these alarms a check was given to house building and the cultivation and extension of their farms, which will take a long time to overcome.

Early in winter, from the reports of the killing of cattle from the agency herd, a night guard was appointed, but was only useful in checking, not in preventing, the evil. A stop was put to the practice only by driving the herd near the agency and corraling them at night. The only palliation of this for this outrage was that the rations issued were not sufficient to prevent hunger. Only by this resource and the issue of the thirty tons of potatoes raised on the agency farm was fatal suffering avoided.

Two impediments to the success of Indian farming exist here: First, the inability of the Indians to break up the ground, stronger horses and more skill than they possess being necessary; second, the necessity for more supervision and instruction while, planting, caring for, and reaping crops than it is possible for the limited agency help to give. The Indian will work if shown how, and he understands the benefit resulting. His imitative power is great.

The day school has been well attended throughout the year, and fair progress was made by the pupils, the number present often being above one hundred; yet the two teachers had no trouble in keeping order, and no urging was required to keep up the numbers, as the school is popular with the children.

A boarding school was commenced in January with seventeen pupils, and continued with small alteration in number till the end of June, when a vacation was given. The benefit to the Indian children from constant attendance, and away from the dirt and evil example of lodge life, was evident in their rapid progress, especially in English speaking, as this is much discouraged by Indians amongst themselves. The invariable evening recreation indoors was to repeat over again the lessons of the schoolroom.

cessful financial institution. J. M. Merrell, of Oakland, California, is its vice-president, and James H. King is its competent cashier.

Mr. Hyde has been a large land owner in Deer Lodge county; has dealt successfully in real estate, and has erected a number of valuable buildings, among them being the Lizzie Block and the Little Joe Block of Butte City, his banking house at Philipsburg, and his palatial residence at Deer Lodge. His residence, built in 1888, occupies a valuable block on one of the best streets in the city, the grounds being spacious and attractive. On these premises he has one of the finest stables in Montana. Mr. Hyde is also interested in mines and mining.

From his successful business career, we turn to the home life of Mr. Hyde. He was married May 8, 1873, to Miss Mary Hammond, daughter of William and Jane Hammond, formerly of Wisconsin, and they have had seven children, of whom five are living, namely: Elizabeth, Joseph A., Jr., Mary H., Lucy E. and Thomas P.

Mr. Hyde has been for many years an active member of the Masonic order, having attained its thirty-second degree. He is Past Grand High Priest, Past Eminent Commander, and Past Grand Master of the Grand Lodge of Montana. In the K. of P. he is Past Chancellor, and in the I. O. O. F. is Past Grand Representative to the Sovereign Grand Lodge and Past Grand Master. Politically, he is a Democrat. His party honored him with a seat in the Territorial House and also in the Council, where he served most efficiently and to the entire satisfaction of his constitutents. Thus in business, social and political circles does he occupy a prominent position, and throughout his whole career he has established and maintained what is far better than wealth or position—a good name.

COL. JOHN J. DONNELLY, of Fort Benton, Montana, was born November 15, 1838, at Providence, Rhode Island. He was educated in the common and preparatory schools of his native city, completing his education at the College of the Holy Cross, at Worcester, Massachusetts. Later he studied law in the office of Sylvester Larned, of Detroit, Michigan, and was admitted to practice in November, 1860; but the stirring events of that period did not leave him time or opportunity to make a record at the bar.

In July, 1861, he entered the service of the United States as Captain in the Fourteenth Michigan Infantry, serving until he was mustered out, at the close of the rebellion, as Lieutenant-Colonel of Volunteers. He took part in many of the principal engagements of that great conflict, and was twice wounded,—at Corinth and Resaca. A braver soldier never drew his sword in any cause, and such is the testimonial of his superior officers and of the men who served under him.

At the close of the war Colonel Donnelly engaged in the wholesale grocery and commission business, at Savannah, Georgia, but in 1866 came North on account of the death of his wife, to whom he was married a few days before entering the service, in 1861.

Being in a reckless mood by reason of this affliction he closed out his business and drifted into the Fenian movement, which was then at its highest, becoming one of the most prominent figures in the subsequent "invasions" of Canada. In 1866 he joined Sweeney in the movement against Canada, and was in the fight in which the "Queen's Own" was worsted. Colonel Donnelly was the commander of the Fenian forces. In 1869 the next raid took place. General O'Neil was president of the organization as it then existed, and Colonel Donnelly commanding officer

The giving of the vacation was hastened by the parents of the boarding-school children, on one pretext or another, drawing them away, and the offered resignation of matron and assistant. The reasons given for their resignation were various, and not by any means satisfactory, the principal one being that "they were tired of living a civilized life, and wished to return to their old habits."

One of the most formidable difficulties in the way of the civilization of these tribes is their unreasonable heathen superstition. A house in which a death occurs must be at once abandoned, and all the deceased's effects are promptly appropriated by the surviving relatives. Until these and other practices more senseless and cruel are given up it will be impossible to abolish their nomadic habits or permanently locate them.

The police are becoming more useful as they get familiar with their duties. During the year two were discharged for disobedience. As the service is popular the best men can be had to fill the vacancies. Stricter discipline, less liberty to wander off, and more service to perform have increased the efficiency of the force.

After seeing the Indians of Montana on their slow but sure upward road, as a judge, policeman, a white man, if you please, we must pass on from this cart-load of massive tomes to a time when this new arm, the Indian police, served the country as bravely and well as ever did Saxon, pausing only to note that the location, area and even number of reservations had been, and still are, subject to some change, but always with the consent of the Indian and often to his advantage.

At each agency, where it has been found practicable to establish it, the reports of the Indian agents show that the court has been entirely successful, and in many cases eminently useful in abolishing the old heathenish customs of the troops. The battle of Pigeon Hill was the beginning and practical ending of this outbreak. Colonel Donnelly had 260 men in his command, and was able to hold his position from 9 o'clock A. M. until sundown, with 2,300 men about and opposed to him. He had twelve men killed and seventeen wounded, being himself one of the latter.

After this he drifted West and was in the Red River rebellion, in which Louis Riel was the leader of the Half Breeds. This collapsed as quickly as the other movements, and Mr. Donnelly immediately came to Montana, locating at Fort Benton in 1872, where he has since resided.

Colonel Donnelly has served Choteau county as Clerk and Recorder and Probate Judge, and was elected from that county a member of the Twelfth Territorial Legislative Assembly, being chosen Speaker of the House of Representatives. He has been engaged in the practice of the law since he located at Fort Benton, and is generally looked upon as the Nestor of the bar of northern Montana.

JAMES L GOODWIN, a prominent farmer of Deer Lodge, Montana, has resided here for thirty years. A brief sketch of his life will be of interest to many, and is as follows:

James L. Goodwin was born in the State of Missouri, March 10, 1836. His ancestors came to America during the Colonial period, coming here from England and settling in Virginia. Both his Grandfather Goodwin and his father, James B. Goodwin, were born in the Old Dominion. His mother, whose maiden name was Mildred Powell, was also a native of Virginia. In 1831 James B. Goodwin moved to Missouri and settled on what was then the frontier, where he engaged in farming. He died in Missouri, in the thirtieth year of his age, leaving a wife and five children. His widow some time later became the wife of Joshua Harrison, and during the war they removed to Illinois. Later, while on a journey to Texas, she died in Arkansas, at the age of fifty-one years.

The subject of this sketch was next to the youngest in the family, and was only three years old when his father died. His early educational advantages were limited and it may be said he picked up the education he has in the dear school of experience. When quite young he was thrown upon his own resources for a livelihood, starting out as a farm hand. The year he was eighteen he earned $75 and his board. He was married in 1859 to Miss Sarah Slocum, a native of Virginia and a daughter of Isaac Slocum of that State, he being of Scotch-Irish ancestry. Her grandfather, Robert Slocum, was a soldier in the war of 1812.

In 1864 Mr. and Mrs. Goodwin crossed the plains with ox teams to Montana, coming with a train composed of thirty people and twelve wagons. While they were in the region of the Black Hills they were constantly harassed by Indians, but finally reached their destination in safety. Upon his arrival at Cold Spring ranch, near Virginia City, Mr. Goodwin was employed to herd cattle for Thomas Gorham, who was captain of the company while they crossed the plains.

It was in February, 1865, that Mr. Goodwin came to his present location in Deer Lodge valley. Here he took claim to a tract of Government land, and is now the owner of 460 acres of fine land, well improved with good buildings, etc. For a long time they were unable to secure supplies at any place nearer than Deer Lodge. The few cattle they brought with them soon increased to a large herd.

that have been for many years resorted to, by the worst elements on the reservation, to retard the progress and advancement of the Indians to a higher standard of civilization and education. The agent of the Nez Percé agency, Idaho, says: "The court and police force have worked wonders among this tribe. Friend and foe alike of the Indians in this vicinity acknowledge the same." The agent of the Western Shoshone agency, Nevada, says: "Its existence has been a preventive to the commitment of any serious offenses coming under its purposes." The agent of the Standing Rock agency, Dakota, says: "It is growing to be an important factor in the administration of affairs at this agency. Regular semi-monthly sessions of the court are held, where all offenders are brought by the police for trial, and cases impartially decided by the court. A number of cases for violation of office rules have been tried during the year past, and the offenders punished either by fines or imprisonment in the agency guard-house, and the decisions of the judges have, in every instance, been sustained by the better class of Indians, and usually accepted by the transgressor as just and proper. The present judges are members of the police force, but the judges of this court should be independent of that body, as it places the police officers in an embarrassing position when obliged to arrest, try, and punish offenders. If there were salaries of $20 per month attached to the office of judge the best men among the Indians would be willing to serve in that capacity, as the service is becoming quite popular, and having these two branches independent of each other would add to the usefulness of both." The agent of the Siletz agency, Oregon, says: "I am well pleased with its workings. I have not had to reverse a decision made. The judges try in every case to do the right thing, tempering justice with mercy. I have every confidence in them. They solve questions oftentimes that are knotty for me."—In. Com. Rept., 1885.

While Mr. Goodwin affiliates with the Democratic party, he takes no active part in political matters. Mrs. Goodwin is a member of the Methodist Church at Deer Lodge. Both are highly esteemed in the community in which they live and are justly entitled to the success that has crowned their efforts in this fertile valley.

JOHN G. MORONY, Clerk of the Third Judicial District of Montana, is a native of this State, born May 27, 1869.

Mr. Morony, as his name would indicate, is of Irish descent. His father, Martin Morony, was born in Ireland in 1836, and emigrated to America in 1843, settling in Dubuque, Iowa, where he grew up and where he followed the trade of plasterer. During the Salmon river gold excitement he went to that country, and from there came in 1867 to Montana. His first location here was at Bear Gulch, where he engaged in placer-mining. In 1868 he returned to Hannibal, Missouri, and was married that same year to Miss Anna M. Sullivan, a native of Lowell, Massachusetts, and also of Irish descent. Immediately after their marriage Mr. Morony returned with his bride to Montana and settled at Bear Gulch. In 1870 he removed to Missoula county and purchased a farm and resided on it two years. From 1874 until 1890 he resided in Phillipsburg. In 1890 he took up his abode in Deer Lodge, and here he spent the residue of his life and died in 1892. The chief characteristics of his life were honesty and industry, and he was a devout member of the Catholic Church, as also is his good wife who survives him and who is a resident of Deer Lodge. They had six children, five of whom are living, namely: John G., whose name heads this article; Martin, of Anaconda; Daniel, in school at Helena; and Annie and Joseph, at home and attending school in Deer Lodge.

John G. Morony was born at Springtown, at the head of Bear Gulch, in Deer Lodge county, and as he was reared on the frontier his educational advantages were limited. He attended the district school a few months each year up to the time he was thirteen. Then he obtained a position in the notion store of J. W. Dawson, Postmaster of Phillipsburg, with whom he remained a year and a half. After that he was employed as bookkeeper for Caplice & Smith and later as bookkeeper in the bank of Hon. Joseph A. Hyde, continuing in the latter position two years. Then he worked in Granite for the Buskett Mercantile Co. Next he served for some time as Deputy County Clerk under J. F. Brazelton. In 1891 he was appointed Assessor of the county, and in 1892 was elected Clerk of the District Court on the Democratic ticket to the position which he is now filling.

B. F. HOOPES & SON, the leading hardware merchants of Boulder, have been identified with the history of Montana for many years. The father came to the Territory in 1865, and the son has resided here since three years of age. B. F. Hoopes, the senior member of the firm, was born in Pennsylvania, April 30, 1830. His father, David Hoopes, was born in Westchester, Chester county, that State, and afterward located where Beaver Falls now stands. He lived to the age of eighty years, and at his death left a family of eight children, five of whom still survive. He was a member of the Society of Friends.

B. F. Hoopes, his eldest son and third child, was born and raised in New Brighton, Pennsylvania, and in early life learned the miller's trade. In 1855 he went to Iowa, but after five years spent in that State returned to Pennsylvania. The great civil war broke out soon afterward, and he enlisted in a Pennsylvania cavalry company, but after six months' service as a private was transferred to the Quartermaster's department, where he had charge of the supply trains from New Orleans to Nashville. After

In the autumn of 1890 we find the once famous disturber of the peace in Montana, Sitting Bull, established at Standing Rock Agency on the Dakota side of the Missouri. He was now nearing sixty years of age and had been fully half that time a formidable leader of wild red men. He lived in two little cabins in comfort and indolence, but was no longer rich in property or influence. As observed in his return from the British Possessions, he was still a true aborigine and surperstitious as a child. Still was he dauntless in spirit, reckless of results, and fearless as a lion in the face of danger.

The agent at that place and time in his report speaks of Sitting Bull as a coward. The man who would be so mean as to turn aside in his official work to call this remarkable Indian a coward, has no right to be believed in this or in anything else; and it is some satisfaction to know that so soon as the sad affair which resulted in the death of the chief came to the ears of the president, his garrulous and mendacious offices were no longer required; but, lest I should fall into the same folly, and say more than in my line of duty here, I put entirely aside the accumulated mass of accounts, contradictory in some cases, and give only the commissioner's report of the conditions and the cause which led to the trouble.

It is something to know that this remarkable figure in the history of Montana fell not by the hands of those whom he had always counted as returning from the war, Mr. Hoopes clerked in a mercantile establishment at his home until the spring of 1865, and then came up the Missouri river to Montana. After reaching Cow Island the water was so low that the steamer could proceed no farther, and they were obliged to continue the remainder of the journey with ox teams. Mr. Hoopes was engaged in business with his brother at Virginia City until the spring of 1866, and since that time has resided in the Boulder valley. He has purchased lands from time to time to the amount of 1,120 acres, and is one of the most prominent farmers and stock raisers in the county. In May, 1890, in company with his son William Penn, he embarked in the hardware business, purchasing what was known as the pioneer hardware store of the town, and under the son's management the business has increased until they now have the largest trade in that line in the county. They deal in general hardware, agricultural implements, wagonmaker's supplies and hard and soft coal.

B. F. Hoopes was married in April, 1861, to Miss Marcella R. Foster. William P., their only child, was born in New Brighton, Pennsylvania, January 12, 1862, and was brought to Montana by his parents when three years of age. He was raised on his father's farm, attended the public schools, and also graduated at the Iowa City Academy in June, 1884. He spent the remainder of that year in traveling through the Eastern States, arriving home December 24, 1884. He remained on the farm until the spring of 1888, when he accepted the position of bookkeeper in the Jefferson County Bank, now known as the First National Bank of Boulder. After filling that position two years, Mr. Hoopes embarked in his present business.

He was married January 1, 1886, to Miss Claribel W. Rhodes, a native of Cincinnati, Ohio, and they have three sons and one daughter: Helen, Franklin M., Thomas N. and William L. Both Mr. Hoopes and his father are strong Republicans in political matters, and the latter was elected and served two years as County Assessor of Jefferson county. W. P. Hoopes is a member of the Masonic fraternity, Boulder Lodge, No. 41, in which he now holds the position of Senior Warden, and has also passed all the chairs in the K. of P.

DANIEL BERRY, a Montana pioneer of 1864, and now a prominent farmer and stock-raiser, residing at Drummond, Granite county, Montana, is a native of the State of Maine, born November 7,[4] 1843.

Mr. Berry's ancestors came to America from England and settled in Maine about the year 1700, his great-grandfather, John Berry, being the progenitor of the family in the United States. Grandfather John Berry and his son John, father of our subject, were both born in the State of Maine, the latter in the year 1800. They resided in Somerset county. The mother of our subject, whose maiden name was Nancy Carr, was also a native of that county. They had fourteen children, of whom Daniel was the eighth born, and is one of the five who are still living. The father reached the advanced age of ninety-one years, and died at the old home place, while the mother passed away in her seventy-fourth year. Both were members of the Methodist Church, and their lives were characterized by honest industry and Christian graces.

Daniel Berry grew up on his father's farm, attended the district school in winter, and when he was fifteen he began to earn his own living, his first year away from home being spent in a tannery, at $26 per month. After this he worked at ship-carpentering three years. April 25, 1864, he started for Montana, traveling by rail to St. Joseph and there securing an ox-team outfit, with which his enemies, but at the hands of his own people. For, gainsay it who will, as time goes forward he will grow taller, grander in the estimation of men, especially in the minds of imaginative red men, and it is very well for us all, especially the Indians, to know that his following was not great in the end and that he was slain by his own people.

"During the summer and fall of 1890 reports reaching this office from various sources showed that a growing excitement existed among the Indian tribes over the announcement of the advent of a so-called Indian Messiah or Christ, or Great Medicine Man of the North. The delusion finally became so widespread and well-defined as to be generally known as the 'Mes-

he continued the journey. He was one of a company of thirteen men who left St. Joseph on the 7th day of May. They were joined from time to time by other parties, and on the 16th of October landed at Virginia City. For a year and a half Mr. Berry worked at mining, at $6 per day. After that he went to Bear Gulch. There he was employed as a carpenter and builder one season, and then he bought a sawmill and made lumber for two years, finding a ready sale for his lumber at $100 per thousand feet. After this he came to his present location. Here he took claim to 160 acres of land and engaged in stock-raising and farming. His efforts were attended with success from the first, and as time passed by he was enabled to purchase adjoining land, and to-day he is the owner of a fine farm of 680 acres, well improved with good residence, other buildings, etc. He raises Shorthorn cattle, keeping about 150 head, and has also given considerable attention to the raising of fine horses. He was the owner of "Mountain Chief," a Kentucky horse that was the sire of many fine grade horses in Montana.

Mr. Berry is also engaged in quartz mining, having an interest in the Magnet Mining Company, which owns a number of rich silver mines.

In 1882 Mr. Berry was married to Miss Alice Ransford, a native of Missouri. She was a most amiable and accomplished woman, and was before her marriage a popular and successful teacher. She died April 2, 1889, leaving two children, Oral J. and Warren.

For a number of years Mr. Berry was a Democrat, but his political views are now in harmony with those advocated by the Populists. For some years past he has filled the office of Justice of the Peace. Fraternally he is identified with the A. O. U. W.

GEORGE COCKRELL, a Montana pioneer of 1862, and for many years one of the leading business men of Deer Lodge, was both in Dumfries, Virginia, May 1, 1838.

Some of Mr. Cockrell's ancestors came to this country from Scotland at an early day and settled in Virginia, the family having been residents of the Old Dominion for many years. There, in 1808, George H. Cockrell, the father of our subject, was born. He married Miss Elizabeth Duffy, also a member of an old Virginia family, her people, however, being of Irish origin. The father was a merchant for many years; was well known and highly esteemed for his many sterling qualities, and after an active and useful life passed to his reward November 6, 1856. The mother died August 7, 1846, in the thirty-fourth hear of her age. The subject of our sketch had not yet emerged from his 'teens when he was left an orphan and thrown upon his own resources for a livelihood.

In 1857, the year succeeding his father's death, he went to St. Louis in search of employment, and thence up the Missouri river to Independence. At this time Independence was the terminus of the overland mail route and principal shipping point to New Mexico and Salt Lake, and outfitting place for large numbers of California and Oregon immigrants. It was young Cockrell's intention to make his way to California and try his fortunes in the gold mines. Colonel Magraw, who had been commissioned to hunt out a shorter route to Oregon, was then making up his party, and to him Mr. Cockrell applied for employment, but was refused because the Colonel said he was too young and delicate to stand the trip. He then engaged with an overland freighter (Jim Crow Childs) to drive a team to New Mexico. Mr. Cockrell followed teaming across the plains for five years, wintering near Fort Laramie, from 1857 to 1862. He accompanied the United States troops under Colonel Alexander to Fort Bridger in 1858, and in 1861 he was employed as messenger by the overland stage company under Division Agent Jack Slade, his route being from the crossing of South Platte (Julesburg) to Sweetwater, a distance of 300 miles. In the spring of 1862 he Indians became so hostile that the company was obliged to abandon that route, after which a new one further south was used.

About this time Mr. Cockrell and two companions started for the Salmon river mines in Idaho. They traveled the old abandoned stage road, at night occupying the deserted stage stations, where they found large quantities of mail matter, which had been left there by the stage company. At Sweetwater they fell in with a company from Pike's Peak, bound for the same destination, all continuing the journey together by way of Lander's cut-off. This company numbered about eighty, and had for a guide Tim Goodale, a veteran mountaineer. When they reached Snake river they made boats of their wagon beds, and they swam their horses and cattle across, and while crossing the river in this way, one of their party, a Mr. Post, was drowned. After crossing the Snake river they followed an old Mormon trail to Fort Lemhi. At the latter place another party joined them, their numbers being thus increased to siah Craze.' Its origin is somewhat obscure, and its manifestations have varied slightly among different tribes. A few instances may be cited as representative.

"In June, 1890, through the War Department, came the account of a 'Cheyenne medicine man, Porcupine,' who claimed to have left his reservation in November, 1889, and to have traveled by command and under divine guidance in search of the Messiah to the Shoshone agency, Salt Lake City, and the Fort Hall Agency, and thence—with others who joined him at Fort Hall—to Walker River Reservation, Nevada. There 'the Christ,' who was about 300; but here greater difficulties than had yet appeared presented themselves, there being no road or trail beyond Fort Lemhi. More than half of the company turned back, hoping to find a better route, and here be it stated that they were the discoverers of gold at Bannack. About 150, however, had the courage to proceed, Mr. Cockrell being one of the number. They abandoned their wagons and packed their effects on their oxen and mules, and thus they marked out their own path and surmounted every obstacle that presented itself, finally landing in safety at old Elk City, a newly-discovered mining camp. After working in nearly all of the new mining camps of Idaho and Oregon, with varying success, we find him, in 1865, at Confederate Gulch, from which place he went on the "Sun river stampede," continuing in the mining business at Bear Gulch, Montana; Leesburg, Idaho; and Cimarron, New Mexico, until 1868, when he gave it up to engage in merchandising along the route of the Union Pacific Railroad. He was at Bear river at the time of the riot at that place, and kept in advance of the road until it was completed.

In 1869 he turned his attention to freighting, and for the next ten years we find him transporting merchandise from Corinne, Utah, and Fort Benton, to the different towns and mining camps in the Territory.

After the completion of the Utah & Northern Railroad, in 1879, he retired from the freighting business and located at Deer Lodge.

In 1884 he established himself in the farm implement, wagon, carriage and harness business, which he has since successfully conducted. He is thoroughly identified with the best interests of his city, county and State, and is deservedly ranked among their leading and most substantial citizens.

Mr. Cockrell was married in 1874 to Miss Viola M. Lish, a native of Idaho. They have two children: Mary and Moncure.

Mr. Cockrell served most efficiently for four years as County Commissioner of Deer Lodge county, and it was during his term that the indebtedness of the county was reduced nearly $100,000. He is a member of the Masonic, Pythian and A. O. U. W. societies.

THE MERCHANTS & MINERS NATIONAL BANK, of Phillipsburg, Montana, was organized June 29, 1892, as a private bank, by Messrs. A. A. McDonald, F. J. Wilson, John S. Miller and C. H. Eshbaugh. It continued in business under that organization until the 4th of February, 1893, at which time it was reorganized as the Merchants & Miners National Bank of Phillipsburg.

The officers then elected were A. A. McDonald, president; William Weinstein, vice president; C. H. Eshbaugh, cashier. Only a few months had elapsed when Mr. Weinstein was killed in a runaway accident, and July 13, 1893, Mr. F. J. Wilson was made vice president to fill the vacancy caused by Mr. Weinstein's death.

The capital stock of the bank is $50,000. A general banking buisness is done and exchange is drawn upon all the prominent cities of the United States and Europe. The officers are men of the highest integrity and reliability, and the bank does its full share of the business of Phillipsburg and the surrounding country.

WILLIAM ALLEN HENSLEY, deceased, a Montana pioneer of 1863, was born in Scott county, Kentucky, April 30, 1834, son of Lewis and Clarissa (Crawford) Hensley, both members of prominent old Virginia families and both natives of that State. Lewis Hensley was a Methodist minister. After his marriage he removed to Kentucky, where he continued in the ministry the rest of his life. He died there in the fifty-eighth year of his life. His good wife lived to be seventy-one. They had a family of nine children, William A. being the sixth born and one of the four who have joined their parents in the other world.

The subject of our sketch received his education in Williamstown College, in his native State, and, owing to the illness and death of his father, he left college three months before he would have graduated. He then taught school in Kentucky, and later followed the same profession in different parts of Missouri. While in the latter State he turned his attention to stock business, having as his partner Martin J. Clark, and dealing in cattle, horses and mules, their operations being confined chiefly to Monroe county.

In 1863 he crossed the plains to Montana, making the journey with ox teams and being attacked on the way by hostile Indians, but completing the trip in safety and landing at Alder Gulch. He engaged in merchandising for a time, then turning his attention to mining there and at other points, the last place being at German Gulch, in Deer Lodge county. Being a man of energy and ability, he prospered in all his undertakings. In 1869 he closed out his business at German Gulch for $5,000, and then purchased the farm which is now owned by his family, in Deer Lodge valley, six miles east of Anaconda. This farm comprises nine hundred and sixty acres, six hundred and forty of which are upland, the rest being rich meadow. He also invested in real estate in Butte City and built two fine brick blocks there, both of which the scarred on wrist and face, told them of his crucifixion, taught them a certain dance, counseled love and kindness for each other, and foretold that the Indian dead were to be resurrected, the youth of the good people to be renewed, the earth enlarged, etc.

"From the Tongue River Agency in Montana, came a report, made by the special agent in charge, dated August 20, 1890, that Porcupine, an Indian of that agency, had declared himself to be the new Messiah, and had found a large following ready to believe in his doctrine.

family still own; and they also have a nice brick residence in Deer Lodge City.

Mr. Hensley died January 2, 1892, of paralysis, aged fifty-eight years. He was a man of sterling integrity and had a wide acquaintance throughout Montana, where he had resided for nearly three decades, and where he was as highly esteemed as he was well known.

Of his family, we record that he was married November 10, 1868, to Miss Luvina Hancock, a native of Missouri and a daughter of Stephen K. Hancock, of that State, a descendant of one of the old Southern families. Her mother, nee Ivy Roberts, was a Kentuckian. Mr. and Mrs. Hensley had eight children, all born in Montana. One of their sons, George Emory, familiarly known as "Bee," died in Butte City when he was seventeen years old, being accidentally suffocated by gas in the hotel where he was stopping. He was a young man of bright promise, and his sudden death was a source of great bereavement to his family and many friends. The surviving children are as follows: Stephen K., William C., Claude M., Thomas H., Oleta Edmonia, Edwin E. and Rossie Evelenia.

After the death of her husband, Mrs. Hensley bravely assumed the care of the business. She built a house on the farm and moved from Deer Lodge to it, in order to be near her sons and assist them in its management. Their principal crop is hay, which annually averages about 500 tons, and which finds a ready market at Butte City and Anaconda.

Mrs. Hensley came to Montana in the spring of 1869, about a year after her marriage. She had been for some years very much troubled with asthma, but the bracing air of Montana proved a tonic, under which she speedily recovered, and she has since enjoyed excellent health. She is a member of the Methodist Church, and is a lady of culture and refinement, and she and her family have that genial hospitality which is always noticeable in the people of Southern ancestry.

HON. CHARLES H. LOUD, County Attorney of Custer county, residing at Miles City, is the most successful Prosecuting Attorney Custer county ever had. Few violators of law escape just punishment under his administration. He is active, vigilant and well informed, both in his profession and as a general business man. Ambitious and enterprising as he is, he has a bright future before him. With a continuance of industry and judicious business management in the future as in the past, both fortune and honorable fame will be his reward.

He was born in the State of Massachusetts, in November, 1858, a son of Cyrus and Betsy (Loud) Loud. His father was a prominent business man, of Scotch ancestry, and his American ancestors were early settlers in New England. Charles was educated in the public and high schools of Weymouth, Massachusetts. In 1876 he engaged in civil engineering, at the same time reading law. He entered the employ of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company as leveler with the engineer corps when that road was being constructed, and rapidly progressed, and was soon promoted assistant engineer, and later had charge of constructing ten miles of the Park branch of the road. He was with the company nearly three years, until the spring of 1883, when, having observed the promising profits of the live-stock business in the then grassy plains of Montana, he returned to his native State and interested capital in forming a company to handle live-stock in Montana. He succeeded in organizing the Hereford Cattle Company, with a capital stock of $500,000, of which he was made manager, and has filled the responsible position ever since. Their range is fifty miles south of Miles City, where they now have about 4,000 head of cattle. Their loss in the winter of 1886–7 was about seventy per cent.

Mr. Loud was admitted to the bar at Miles City, in October, 1891, and has been appointed by Governor Rickards to the position of Judge Advocate General of the State, to rank as Captain on the Governor's staff. He was elected as a Republican to the Montana constitutional convention in 1889, and the same fall elected to the lower house of the General Assembly, to represent Custer county. He served with marked ability and satisfaction to his constituency for two years. He was elected County Attorney by the Republicans in 1892. Has served as a member of the executive committee of the Montana Stock Growers' Association for three years. Is a member of the Masonic fraternity at Miles City, and has filled the Junior Warden's chair in his lodge.

He was married in December, 1886, to Miss Georgiana W. Burrell, daughter of Warren and Caroline W. (Hunt) Burrell, natives of Massachusetts. Her father was extensively engaged in the tannery business in Alabama at the beginning of the Civil war. He and wife are members of the Presbyterian Church, and he is a Trustee of that society. They are prominent in society.

THOMAS J. GALBRAITH, of the town of Boulder, Jefferson county, Montana, was born in Turbot township, Northumberland county, Pennsylvania, on the 3d of October, 1825. His parents were Scotch-Irish.

He received his education at the county schools and local academies and ended his academic education at the university at Lewisburg (now the Bucknell), Pennsyl-

Those who doubted were fearful lest their unbelief should call down upon them the curse of the 'Mighty Porcupine.' The order went forth that in order to please the Great Spirit a six days and nights' dance must be held every new moon, with the understanding that at the expiration of a certain period the Great Spirit would restore the buffalo, elk, and other game, resurrect all dead Indians, endow his believers with perpetual youth, and perform many other wonders well calculated to inflame Indian superstition. Dances, afterward known as 'ghost vania. He taught school and read law under the direction of Hon. Joshua W. Comly, of Danville, Montour county, Pennsylvania, and was admitted to the bar in September, 1852, and practiced the profession there until the spring of 1854, when he went West to the Territory of Minnesota.

At the election immediately after his admission to the bar he was elected County Surveyor, and soon was appointed County Clerk of Montour county. In Minnesota he settled in Shakopee City, Scott county, and practiced his profession, and in the fall of 1855 was elected to the House of Representatives of the Territorial Legistature. In 1857 he was elected a member of the Constitutional Convention, whereof the Democrats and the Republicans each claimed to have a majority of the members. They all met in the room of the House of Representatives and temporarily organized by electing the subject of this sketch temporary chairman, and then the "split," the Democrats going into the Senate Chamber and the Republicans remaining. Each side organized permanently and claimed to be the Constitutional Convention, and proceeded to frame a constitution, and remained in session some three months. Finally, after interviews and consultations among the members of each side, it was thought wise and proper to have such action taken as would make it possible to formulate and submit one and the same constitution to the people. To this end a resolution was prepared, providing for a joint committee of five members of each side, to formulate such constitution. Mr. Galbraith was very active and efficient in these preliminary conferences, to bring about an agreement, and he introduced the said joint resolution into the Republican side, and it was adopted, and he was appointed chairman of the Republican five. The Democratic side also adopted said resolution, and appointed five, with ex-Governor Willis A. Gorman as chairman; and these ten men, after sessions lasting over two weeks, came to an agreement, and reported to each side what was ratified, signed, submitted adopted, and is now, with some amendments, the Constitution of the State of Minnesota.

In 1860 he was elected a member of the Senate of the State of Minnesota, and served in the session of 1861, being chairman of the Committee on Federal Relations. In the spring of 1861 he was appointed, by President Lincoln, Agent of the Sioux Indians of the Mississippi, and removed to Yellow Medicine or "Pajutazee," Minnesota, that being the head-quarters of said agency.

In August, 1862, immediately upon the news of the defeat of General John Pope in Virginia, Agent Galbraith resolved to go to the war, and raised a company of recruits, and started with them to Fort Smelling, to be mustered in; and en route to St. Peter, Minnesota, was caught by a courier conveying the sad news that the Indians had broke out in rebellion, and were killing the people and devastating the country.

He immediately started back with the men and arrived at Fort Ridgely, to learn that the outbreak was simply appalling. Hundreds of fugitive people had sought the fort for refuge, a force for defense was improvised, and for some ten days the fort was besieged by the Indians. At length General Sibley, with a force of more than 1,000 men, raised the siege, and brought a letter from them, from Major Galbraith's wife, informing him of the escape and safety of herself and the children. He had parted from them at Yellow Medicine on the 16th of August, and for eleven days had known nothing about their fate, but feared the worst. Shortly after Sibley's arrival, he sent a detachment of about sixty men as a burial party, up to Redwood, the scene of the original outbreak on the 18th of August, whereof Major Galbraith was one. This party buried some 600 dead bodies, and that night (September 2d) they camped at Birch Coolie, and at the dawn of the next day found themselves environed by a war party of some 700 Indians who besieged them, until about ten o'clock on the next day, when those who were living were relieved by General Sibley. In this, known as the battle of Birch Coolie, twenty-three of the besieged party, were killed and about sixty wounded, some mortally. Major Galbraith was hit, severely, twice. After this he had to give up his intention of going South in order to look after the wreck of his agency business.

In 1863 he resumed the practice of his profession in St. Paul, Minnesota, and in 1868 he returned to Pennsylvania and attended his private affairs, and practiced his profession, until 1879, when he took a trip to Idaho, and since then he has remained in Idaho and Montana, settling permently in Montana, in October, 1884, as a lawyer.

Upon the admission of Montana as a State in 1889, he was elected to the office of District Judge of the Fifth Judicial District, composed of the counties of Beaver Head, Madison and Jefferson, and served until January 2, 1893, being the end of the term. In the fall of 1892 he was unanimously renominated, by the Republican convention, for the same place, but declined the nomination and resumed the practice. In public and private life he has been capable and honest, and in his profession able and fair. He has many warm friends both in and outside of his profession.

He was married to Miss Henrietta Garrison, at Danville, Pennsylvania, on the 5th of April, 1855, and, at once re-dances,' were enthusiastically attended, and the accompanying feasts were so associated by stockmen with the disappearance of their cattle that very strained relations resulted between the rancher and the Indian, which at one time threatened serious trouble.

"About the same time the Cheyenne and Arapaho agent in Oklahoma reported that during the autumn of 1889 and the ensuing winter rumors had reached that agency from the Shoshones of Wyoming that an Indian Messiah was located in the mountains about 200 miles north turned to Minnesota. To this union there were born eleven children,—six boys and five girls. Three of the boys died in infancy: of the eight who survive, the oldest, Jacob G., graduated at West Point in the class of 1877, and is now serving as an officer in the First United States Cavalry at Fort Bayard, New Mexico: he is married. Thomas C. is a "drummer," or traveling salesman; and the youngest, Joshua Comly Galbraith, is reading the law in his father's office: they are both unmarried. Three of the daughters are married, and two are single, living with and keeping house for their father.

As to politics, Judge Galbraith was originally a Whig, and has been a Republican ever since the organization of that party, and was of course a strong Union man during the war of the great Rebellion. His wife died in 1883, and he has remained a widower. He has been a Freemason since 1854.

William T. Allison, a member of the firm of Allison & Sherman, furniture dealers and undertakers, Phillipsburg, Montana, is one of the leading business men of the town, and as such is deserving of some personal mention in this work.

Mr. Allison was born in Delaware county, New York, November 19, 1838. He is descended from English ancestors who came to America long previous to the Revolution. His grandfather, William T. Allison, was a resident of Sing Sing, New York, and was a farmer by occupation. He reared three sons and a daughter. The latter is still living at the old home place in New York, and is now eighty-one years of age. One of the sons also survives. Both Grandfather and Grandmother Allison lived to be seventy-three years of age. Their son Jefferson was our subject's father. He was born in Sing Sing, June 14, 1816, and married Margaret Paul, a native of his own county. They spent their lives and reared their family, five sons and one daughter, in the Catskill mountains of Delaware county, New York. His wife died in the forty-third year of her age and he lived to be seventy-four. Both were members of the Methodist Church and were exemplary Christians. Her death was the result of an accident and occurred the day after Lincoln was assassinated. Their children are all living except one, Hiram, who died in the Union army during the Civil war.

William T. Allison was next to the oldest of the family. He was reared on his father's farm and educated in the district schools. In 1861 he went to Minnesota, where he worked at his trade, that of carpenter, and also did some farming. As the Civil war progressed and urgent calls were made for more troops, Mr. Allison enlisted, in 1864, in Company F, Eleventh Minnesota Volunteer Infantry, and served under General Thomas until the close of the war. He was engaged principally in skirmishing. At the close of the war he was honorably discharged and returned to Minneapolis, where he was engaged in contracting and building until 1870.

It was in 1870 that Mr. Allison came to Montana. He first located at Deer Lodge and there continued work at his trade, putting up a number of the best buildings in the town. Two years later he went to Washington Territory and engaged in placer mining in Yakima county. There he sank all his money. After that unfortunate venture he came back to Montana and this time located at New Chicago, where he built a shop and resumed work at his trade, remaining there until 1875. Since that date he has been a resident of Phillipsburg. Here for six years he did the greater part of the contracting and building in the town, at times having a large gang of men working for him. He also did a great deal of work about that time. In 1881 he formed a partnership with G. V. Sherman in furniture business, and since then theirs has been the leading furniture and undertaking house in the city; in fact, they now have the whole business of the town to themselves.

Mr. Allison was married March 2, 1887, to Miss Rebecca A. Shull, a native of Auburn, Indiana, and a daughter of Henry Shull of that State. They have two sons, Jay Henry and Herman Thomas, both born in Phillipsburg. He and his family occupy one of the most pleasant homes in the city, planned and built by him.

Fraternally, Mr. Allison is a prominent Mason, being High Priest of the Chapter and Past Master of the Blue Lodge. Both he and his wife are members of the Eastern Star. He has been a member of the Masonic order at Phillipsburg for sixteen years, and nearly all this time has filled some one of its important offices. He is also a member of the I. O. O. F. and the G. A. R., being Past Commander of the latter. In political matters he is a Republican. He was a member of the first City Council of Phillipsburg and he also had the honor of serving as Mayor of the city. He and his wife are charter members of the Episcopal Church of this place, and he is one of its trustees. Thus it will be seen that in business, political and social circles he has been a prominent factor ever since he became identified with the town, and as one of its most worthy citizens he is held in high esteem by all who know him.

Martin Barrett, a wealthy and influential farmer and stock raiser of Amesville, Montana, was born in county Mayo, Ireland, February 2, 1840, son of Thomas and Nancy (McDonald) Barrett. His father was a farmer by occupation and died when Martin was seven years of the Shoshones; that prominent medicine men had seen and held conversation with him, and had been told by him that the whites were to be removed from the country, the buffalo to come back, and the Indians to be restored to their original status. * * * In August, 1880, Agent Gallagher stated that many at the Pine Ridge Agency were crediting the report made to them in the spring that a great medicine man had appeared in Wyoming whose mission was to resurrect and rehabilitate all the departed heroes of the tribe, restore to the Indians herds old. A year later the widowed mother came with her family to America and settled in Canada, and there the subject of our sketch received a common-school education and learned the trade of tanner and currier, aiding materially in the support of the family until he was nineteen.

In the fall of 1859 young Barrett went to St. Joseph, Missouri, where he hired out at whatever he could get to do. In 1860 he began driving an ox team in a train between St. Joseph, Missouri, and Salt Lake City, Utah. The following year we find him in Colorado, in quest of gold, which, however, he did not find, and there for a time he worked for wages. In 1863 he came to Montana and, with Joseph Shineberger, located his present place on Horse prairie, where they engaged in stock raising, Mr. Shineberger also engaging in mining. By mutual consent their partnership was dissolved in 1871, Mr. Barrett becoming the sole owner of the ranch. His place is not only one of the finest in Montana, but is also one of the most fertile. It now contains 3,200 acres. Mr. Barrett keeps an average of 1,500 head of cattle and each year cuts about 1,500 tons of hay.

August 6, 1867, Mr. Barrett married Miss Alice E. Cook, a lady of culture and refinement. Their home is thoroughly Eastern in all its appointments. It contains a magnificent library, is supplied with all the leading magazines and papers, has every evidence of refined ease, and is presided over in a most graceful manner by Mrs. Barrett, both she and Mr. Barrett being the personification of hospitality.

Politically, he is a Democrat, and although he was elected and re-elected Councilman, he has ever refused public office, preferring to give his time and attention to his own affairs.

NATHAN SMITH, a well-known resident of Montana since 1867, a farmer and proprietor of the Garrison Hotel, and also Assistant Postmaster of Garrison, is a native of Pennsylvania, born May 22, 1832.

Mr. Smith is a descendent of both English and German ancestors. His parents, David and Mary (Griffan) Smith, were born in Pennsylvania and spent the whole of their lives in their native State, the father being a shoemaker and following the trade through life. They were identified with the Christian Church and were honored and respected by all who knew them. Of their family of eleven children, five sons and six daughters, eight are still living, Nathan being the fifth in order of birth. The father passed away at the age of seventy-two years and the mother at about the same age, she having preceded him at the age of sixty.

Nathan Smith was reared and educated in Bedford county, remaining there until he was twenty-three. Then, in 1855, he went to California, traveling via the Isthmus of Panama. He spent about thirteen years in California, during that time, in 1858, making a trip to the Fraser river, without success, however, and the journey being attended with great peril. Previous to that time he was engaged in mining and afterward he was employed as a clerk in a store. In 1867 he came to Montana, making the journey by water to Walla Walla and thence on horseback over the mountains to Phillipsburg, where he engaged in the shoe business and continued the same until 1869. He then purchased an interest in a gold mine on Pilgrim bar, and, with a partner, mined until 1872, taking out from sixty to seventy thousand dollars, furnishing employment for some six to twelve men. In 1872 he sold his mining interest and again turned his attention to the shoe business in Phillipsburg, where he continued until 1877. That year he bought mining ground in German Gulch, and between that time and 1879 took out about $5,000, after which he sold his interest for $1,000. He then came to Garrison.

After coming to Garrison Mr. Smith purchased 160 acres of land, and to this he has since added 120 acres more. Here he is raising wheat, oats, barley and vegetables, and also keeps some cattle. In 1889 he became the proprietor of the Garrison House. In connection with the hotel business he runs a lunch counter at the station and is meeting with success in both. He also has a store here, and, as stated at the beginning of this sketch, is Postmaster of the town. In these various enterprises he is ably assisted by his accomplished daughters.

Mr. Smith was married in 1871 to Miss Emma J. Rohm, a native of Pennsylvania, and a daughter of Jacob and Mary Rohm, of German and French descent. They lived in their native State, Pennsylvania, until their death. Mr. Rohm was a miller, owning a flouring mill and farm to the time of his death. He and his wife were highly respected Methodists, brought up a large family, one of whom, Jacob Rohm, is a minister of the gospel in Illinois, and another, James Thornton Rohm, is a physician at Redding, California. Mr. and Mrs. Smith have three daughters, all born in Montana, namely: Maude Josephine, Debora Sierra, and Alice Marion.

Mr. Smith is a member of the I. O. O. F., has passed all the chairs in the order, and is a Grand Lodge Representative. He has been a Republican all his life, but is now a Populist. For eighteen years he has served as Justice of the Peace, and since March, 1894, has been Postmaster of Garrison.

of buffalo which were to make them entirely independent of aid from the whites, and bring such confusion upon their enemies, the whites, that they would flee the country, leaving the Indians in possession of the entire Northwest for all time to come. Indians fainted during the performances which attended the recital of the wondrous things soon to come to pass, and one man died from the excitement. The effect of such meetings or dances was so demoralizing that on August 22, 1890, when about 2,000 Indians were gathered on White Clay creek, about

THOMAS JOSEPH FARRELL, a Montana pioneer of 1864, and one of the most prominent stockmen of Madison county, is a native of Ireland. He was born in county Meath, February 10, 1843, a descendant of Irish ancestors, who were mostly stock-growers. His mother died at his birth, and when he was two years old his grandmother brought him to America. When he was thirteen he began to manage for himself and was variously employed at different places until the spring of 1864, when he started from St. Louis for Montana. He drove a team and had a wagon loaded with canned fruits and other provisions, was six weeks in making the journey from St. Joseph to Salt Lake, and upon his arrival at the latter place he sold out at auction, crying the goods himself, everything he had, including his team and wagon. This was his first experience as an auctioneer.

Purchasing a prospector's outfit at Salt Lake, he started for Montana, but on the way met prospectors returning, and with them returned to southern Utah. The following winter he spent in the vicinity of Salt Lake, running a peddler's outfit, and in the spring he again started for Montana and arrived at Virginia City April 14, 1865. The price of a meal here was then in currency $2, and other things were proportionately high. After this he was for three months employed as auctioneer for Cook & Newell, at $100 per month. This ended his working for others, from that time on he being in business for himself. In those early days Virginia City was a lively mining camp. There were thousands of miners here and all kinds of business were running at full blast. On Sundays the streets of the town were full of people, and on that day Mr. Farrell had horses to sell at auction. His method was to mount the horse he had to sell, ride him out into the crowd and cry him off while sitting on his back. It was said of Mr. Farrell that he never found a horse that he could not ride. At this time James H. Mills, the pioneer newspaper man of Montana, reported the following incident for his paper:

While Mr. Farrell was intent upon the sale of his horse, a good Methodist brother (Rev. Hugh Duncan, father of the present County Clerk of Madison county) was holding a meeting in an upstairs room. Both the preacher and auctioneer were talking loud. The preacher cried, "What shall a man do to be saved?" and at that instant the voice of Mr. Farrell was heard shouting, "Buy a No. 1 California horse." Later the preacher shouted, "What shall a man give in exchange for his soul?" and the auctioneer's voice was heard ringing above the tumult of noise, "I am only offered $45: do I ear any more?"

In 1865 Mr. Farrell conceived the idea of raising fine horses, and from time to time as he got money he purchased good brood mares, and thus in a small way began the business in which he afterward became so prominent. Soon he and his partner got a ranch of 320 acres near Bozeman. Neither knew anything about farming in Montana. Instead of plowing the bench land they plowed the low land to save irrigation. The grain was slow to ripen, was caught in the frost and they lost the whole crop. The seed wheat had cost them $12.50 per bushel in gold and for the oats they paid $10 per bushel. The following year they put in eighty acres of wheat, and this time the grasshoppers took it all. Not discouraged, however, they sowed again, this time a larger crop, and to provide against the grasshoppers they put straw around the field. When they saw the clouds of grasshoppers coming they set fire to the straw, but instead of keeping them away the smoke only arrested their flight, and a third time the crop was lost. This disgusted Mr. Farrell. He and his partner dissolved, the latter taking the ranch, while for his share Mr. Farrell took two elks, three horses and a wagon and harness. He traded the elks to Colonel Foster for a horse and came to Virginia City to settle his business and leave the country.

When he reached Helena, however, he changed his plans and engaged in the auction business. There he did well, and in the fall came back to Virginia City and opened a livery business. In this he also prospered. Ere long he became the owner of town property and lands in Madison valley. He and his partner, O. B. Varney, purchased nine sections of land, have one of the finest horse ranches in the whole country, and at this writing are paying tax on 950 head of horses. Among the fine horses owned by them may be mentioned "Ben Lowman," "Dictator," "Forest" and "Gladiator." For a number of years they furnished the Government with cavalry horses. They are also largely engaged in the cattle and sheep business and have sold as high as $21,000 worth of cattle at one sale, and $6,500 worth of sheep at a time. Mr. Farrell is also largely interested in valuable mining claims.

It is a fact worthy of note here that when Mr. Farrell first arrived in Virginia City, without money or friends, he saw a poster which read, "Vote for ——— for sheriff." After reading it he said to the man with whom he was traveling, "I intend to be sheriff of this county some day myself." The prophecy came true. In 1873 he was nominated and elected to that position by the Democratic party, and as the incumbent of that office he gave eighteen miles from the agency, to hold what they called a religious dance connected with the appearance of this supernatural being, the agent instructed his Indian police to disperse them. This they were unable to do. Accompanied by about twenty police the agent himself visited the place, and on hearing of his approach most of the Indians dispersed. Several men, however, with Winchester rifles in their hands, and a good storing of cartridges belted around their waists, stood stripped for fight, prepared to die in defense of the new faith. They were finally quieted.

"But the dances continued, and October 12, 1890, Agent Royer, who had just taken charge of the agency, reported that more than half the the highest satisfaction. In the meantime he was the owner of a large freighting outfit, and did an extensive business in this line. To him belongs the credit of having made the first road to the Yellowstone Park. That was just after he had made an excursion to the park with forty-nine of the representative men of Montana. He also has the honor of having been one of the organizers of Company D, National Guards of Montana. Of this company he was at first elected First Lieutenant, but was afterward made Captain and received his commission from Governor Leslie. He has served as School Trustee and Alderman of Virginia City, and has taken an active part in the politics of the county and State, having served as Chairman of the Democratic Central Committee of Madison county and also as a member of the Democratic State Central Committee.

Mr. Farrell was married July 29, 1876, to Mrs. Margaret Conway, a native of Ireland. They have three children, all born in Virginia City, namely: Bessie Julia, July 22, 1877; George Thomas, September 21, 1879; and Thomas J., Jr., October 7, 1884. They have a very pleasant home on one of the hills overlooking the town. Mrs. Farrell is a devout member of the Catholic Church. Mr. Farrell is broad and liberal in his religious views. He is a man of bright intellect and is wide and favorably known throughout the State of which he is a respected pioneer.

MONTGOMERY H. PARKER, Prosecuting Attorney of Jefferson county, also a member of the prominent law firm of Cowan & Parker, of Boulder, was born in Kentucky, September 16, 1856, and descended from good old Revolutionary stock. His family emigrated from England to Maryland, where the grandfather of our subject, Wilson H. Parker, was born. He afterward became one of the pioneer settlers of Fayette county, Kentucky, where he owned a valuable farm. He married Miss Charlotte Ashby, a daughter of Captain John Ashby, of Virginia. They raised four sons. The mother died at the age of sixty years and the father lived to the age of seventy-five years. Montgomery Parker, the father of our subject, was born in Fayette county, Kentucky, December 16, 1821. He married Miss Nancy Hunt, a native also of that county, and a daughter of Wilson Hunt. The family are from South Carolina, and trace their ancestry to the Duke of Argyle, Scotland. Mr. and Mrs. Parker had three children. The father was a farmer by occupation, was a soldier in the Confederate army during the great Civil war. His wife was raised in the Presbyterian faith. She died at the age of twenty-nine years, and Mr. Parker survived until fifty-six years of age.

Montgomery H., the second child in order of birth in the above family, was reared to manhood in his native State. When quite young he began teaching school, and in that way earned the means to attend the Kentucky University at Lexington, graduating in the law department of that institution in 1879. In 1880 Mr. Parker located in Radersburg, then the county seat of Jefferson county, Montana, where he remained until the county seat was changed to Boulder, in 1883. In the fall of the latter year he removed to Meagher county, but in 1887 returned to Jefferson county and immediately began the practice of his profession with George F. Cowan, under the firm name of Cowan & Parker. This is one of the most prominent law firms in the county. In political matters Mr. Parker associates himself with the Democratic party, has always taken a deep interest and active part in the offices of his county, and in October, 1889, at the first election under the new State constitution of Montana, he was elected Prosecuting Attorney, in which he is now serving his second term.

Mr. Parker was married June 4, 1884, to Miss Mittie M. Kennon, a native of Ohio, and a member of one of the old and respected families of that State. Two children were born to that union—Kittie D. and Warren K. The wife and mother died December 16, 1888. June 1, 1893, in Washington, D. C., our subject was united in marriage with Miss Florence A. Watson, a daughter of Roderick D. Watson, of that city, and granddaughter of Major Watson, of Maryland. Mr. Parker was made a Mason in 1884, and is now Master of Boulder lodge, No. 41. He is also a member of the A. O. U. W.

OLIVER D. FRENCH, one of the oldest merchants of Virginia City, and a Montana pioneer of 1863, was born in Barnard, Vermont, April 13, 1824.

He is a descendant of early settlers of New England. On the maternal side his ancestry can be traced back to Roger Williams. His grandfather, Roger French, served as a soldier in the Colonial army during the Revolution, and was one of the earliest settlers of Barnard, Vermont, to which place he moved from Rhode Island, making the journey with oxen and in the winter. He was one of the hardy pioneers of Vermont. He married Achsah Toby and they became the parents of eleven children. At the time of his death he was eighty-two years old. His wife's death occurred two years before his. Their son, Indians had already joined the dancing, and when requested to stop would strip themselves ready for fight; that the police had lost control, and if his endeavors to induce the chiefs to suppress the craze should be unavailing, he hoped for a hearty coöperation in invoking military aid to maintain order.

"About the same time the Cheyenne river agent reported that Big Foot's band were much excited about the coming of a 'Messiah,' were holding 'ghost dances,' and, armed with Winchester rifles and of very threatening temper, were beyond police control. A similar condition of affairs existed among the Rosebud Sioux.

Harrison French, the father of our subject, was born at Barnard, Vermont, in 1796. He married Miss Eliza Drew, a native of Woodstock, Vermont, and daughter of Dr. Stephen Drew, a descendant of an old New England family. To them were born six children, of whom five are still living. His wife died in the forty-first year of her age and he lived to be ninety-three years old. They were both Congregationalists.

Oliver D. was the second born in his father's family. He received his early education in his native town and when he was sixteen years of age went to sea. His uncles were ship owners and whalers, and on their vessels he made two voyages, which was enough to satisfy him with sea life. After this he and one of his brothers-in-law ran a grocery store in Brockport, New York, for three years, at the end of which time they closed out the business and Mr. French went to Milwaukee, where he was in the flour and feed business a few years. In 1859 he crossed the plains with oxen to Pike's Peak. Arrived there, he engaged in mining for others, and, later, for himself, principally placer mining.

In 1863, hearing of the discovery of gold at Alder Gulch, he journeyed hither with a mule team, arriving in November and finding hundreds of miners at work. In company with three others, he purchased a claim, and after they had improved it and taken out some gold they sold it for $4,000. He then went to Salt Lake, fitted up a freighting team and purchased and hauled flour and provisions to Virginia City. In this business he continued successfully for two years, at one time selling flour for $100 per sack. Although this was a money-making business it was one attended with many hardships. On one occasion Mr. French was snowed under at Snake river and his oxen died, but he purchased more, and, undismayed, proceeded.

In 1866, with J. D. Thomas as a partner, he opened a store in the gulch at Nevada. They had about $1,000 capital to begin with. After continuing there three years, they removed their stock to Virginia City, where they did business together for a number of years, after which they dissolved and divided the stock, Mr. French remaining alone in business until 1879, when he closed out. In 1880, in company with E. F. Johnson, he started the grocery business again, under the firm name of O. D. French & Company. This relation still exists and the firm is doing a prosperous business, their customers being chiefly miners.

Personally, Mr. French is a man of the highest probity of character. He has acted with the Democratic party all his life, but his extensive business affairs have given him little time for political matters.

Mr. French was married July 14, 1870, to Miss Anna Dow, of Rockford, Illinois, and they have three children: Charles D., Oliver D., Jr., and Ira H. Mrs. French died in 1878, and in 1880 Mr. French married Miss Amanda Robinson, of Chebanse, Illinois.

Miles Mix, proprietor of the European Hotel at Missoula, Montana, is one of the most obliging and competent hotel men in the city.

Mr. Mix was born in Rootstown, Portage county, Ohio, August 30, 1851, a descendant of early settlers of that State. Grandfather Mix, a native of Scotland, emigrated to this country at an early day, and died in Ohio, at the advanced age of ninety-two years. He was a member of the Presbyterian Church, was a farmer by occupation, and during the Revolutionary war rendered valued service to his adopted country, serving in the ranks of the Patriot army. His son, Samuel R. Mix, was born in Connecticut in 1812, and when he was nine years of age he removed with his father and family out to the Western Reserve, their location being at Rootstown. That was in 1821, and in Portage county Samuel R. Mix has ever since resided, now being ranked with its venerable citizens. In 1832 he married Miss Jane Case, and as the years passed by sons and daughters were born to them, ten in all, of whom only two are now living. The good wife and mother departed this life in 1862, in the fifty-second year of her age. She was a faithful member of the Methodist Church and her life was adorned by many Christian graces.

Miles Mix is the youngest in the family. His early life was spent on his father's farm, his time being divided between work on the farm and attendance at the district schools. In 1858, when seventeen years of age, he started out in life on his own account, going first to Kansas, where he secured employment at farm work. In the fall of that year he enlisted in Company D, Nineteenth Kansas Volunteer Cavalry. At this time General Custer was in command of the Seventh Cavalry. These regiments served together in the Indian Territory and northwestern Texas, their mission being to keep the Indians in subjection. Young Mix had enlisted for six months, but served two months longer, and during that time saw much of frontier life and Indian warfare. At the end of the eight months he returned to Ohio and began learning the jewelry business, at which he was engaged one year. Then on account of failing health he was obliged to seek a change of climate, and an occupation that was less con-

"Agent McLaughlin also reported from Standing Rock October 17, as follows:

"'I feel it my duty to report the present craze and nature of the excitement existing among the Sitting Bull faction of the Indians over the expected Indian millennium, the annihilation of the white man and supremacy of the Indian, which is looked for in the near future and promised by the Indian medicine men as not later than next spring, when the new grass begins to apppear, and is known among the Sioux as the 'return of the ghosts.' They are fining. Accordingly, in 1871, he went to Carthage, Missouri, where he served as Deputy Sheriff and Deputy Marshal. That part of Missouri was then infested with desperadoes, and his position was one requiring great courage and nerve, but in the performance of his duty he acquitted himself most creditably, and served there until 1875. That year he returned to Dodge City, Kansas, and took claim to a tract of Government land, twenty-eight miles southwest of the town. This land was located on a Texas cattle trail and for miles around there were no inhabitants. Here he built a house and in it he and his young wife began their married life. They had some cattle, horses, hogs and poultry, and were just getting a nice start when the Indian troubles came on, many of the settlers being murdered in their homes. Mr. Mix and his wife barely escaped with their lives, the Indians taking every thing they had.

In 1879, during the Leadville excitement, Mr. Mix went to Colorado, first to Leadville but afterward to Salida. At the latter place he engaged in the hotel business, owning and running the Mix House until 1883, and meeting with very satisfactory success. In 1884 he came to Missoula county, Montana, and settled first at Belknap, where he purchased property and built a house, and where he met with disaster in the way of fire, again losing every thing he had. In the fall of that year he came to Missoula. He did not remain here at that time, however, but went to Salt Lake City and accepted a position as guard in the penitentiary. Later he received the appointment of Deputy United States Marshal. This was during the time of the Mormon troubles. He helped to arrest many of the Mormons, his experience there being filled with many exciting incidents. After fourteen months spent in Salt Lake City, Mr. Mix returned to Missoula, and with the inrerests of this city he has since been identified. In 1885 he built the bottling works, and for a year and a half was engaged in the wholesale beer business. In 1888 he built the main portion of the European Hotel, on the corner of Woody and Spence streets, and from the first did a successful business. In 1890, his facilities being insufficient to accommodate his guests, he built a large addition to the house and made numerous improvements. The hotel is now lighted with electricity, heated by steam, and is finished and furnished throughout with all the latest modern conveniences, both Mr. Mix and his wife giving their personal attention to the management of the house and the comfort of their guests. Besides the hotel they also keep the Northern Pacific lunch counter at the depot.

Mr. Mix is identified with the Republican party and with the Masonic fraternity. Since coming to Montana he has been prospered in his undertakings, has accumulated a competency and has gained the good will and confidence of his fellow-citizens.

JUDGE DORIC G. WARNER, one of the prominent early settlers of Montana, was born in Chenango county, New York, April 29, 1827. His ancestors came from Wales during the early history of the colonies, settling at New Haven, Connecticut, where his grandfather, Richard P. Warner, was born. Religiously they were stanch Presbyterians, and one member of the family was a minister in that church. Many of the members lived to a very old age, one having reached the age of ninety-nine years: he died in 1891, of la grippe. The father of our subject, Adna Warner, was born in Connecticut, in 1797. He married Miss Lucia Carter, a native of Massachusetts, who moved to New York when a young lady, where she taught school, and was married in 1823. Six children were born to that union, all of whom are still living. The mother died at the age of eighty-six years, and the father departed this life at the age of eighty-seven years.

Judge Warner, their second child in order of birth, was reared on his father's farm in New York, attended the county schools during the winter months, and completed his education at the Oneida Seminary. He then spent two years as a clerk in a store in Mount Morris, Livingston county, New York. In 1851, by the way of the isthmus, he went to California; after landing at San Francisco went to Sacramento, and next to the placer mines below Coloma, on the south fork of the American river. Becoming satisfied that the bed of the river was very rich, sixteen men undertook to flume the river one mile, accomplishing the task at a cost of $80,000, and they took out gold very rapidly until the rainy season brought the work to a close. During that time they took out $104,000. While crossing the isthmus, Mr. Warner had an attack of the fever, from which he never fully recovered, and was advised by a physician to go East. He left California with much reluctance, and returned to his home for one year. In 1854 he accepted the position of clerk in the Chicago & Rock Island Railroad office at Chicago, and was later made station agent at the city of Henry, Marshall county, Illinois.

While at that place, September 4, 1856, Mr. Warner was united in marriage with Miss Helen J. Cook, who was born in Erie county, Pennsylvania, in 1836. Her parents afterward moved to Ohio, and in 1847 to Illinois, where they were among the early pioneers. Her father, Washington E. Cook, was for sixteen years County Clerk of Marshall county. Mr. and Mrs. Warner made their home in Illinois until 1868, but during that time spent promised by some members of the Sioux tribe, who have lately developed into medicine men, that the Great Spirit has promised them that their punishment by the dominant race has been sufficient, and that their numbers having now become so decimated will be reinforced by all Indians who are dead; that the dead are all returning to reinhabit this earth, which belongs to the Indians; that they are driving back with them, as they return, immense herds of buffalo, and elegant wild horses to have for the catching; that the Great Spirit promises them that one year in New Orleans. After the close of the late war they returned to Lacon, Illinois, where they conducted a grocery store until 1868, and in that year Mr. Warner came to Montana, leaving his wife and only surviving child with friends. He came on the Union Pacific Railroad to Cheyenne, thence by stage to Utah, and next to Helena, paying twenty-five cents per pound for his freight. After arriving in this State he opened a hotel at Jefferson Gulch, Deer Lodge county, where he was soon afterward joined by his family, then consisting of his wife and one son, Burton Cook, who now resides in Washington. The family remained at that place one year, and then conducted a hotel in the Blackfoot country one year, or until the White Pine excitement took the people from that place. Mrs. Warner then returned to the States.

Our subject came to Jefferson county, purchased a ranch at Radersburg, then the county seat of Jefferson county, pre-empted another quarter-section of land, and made many improvements on his property. He was joined by his wife and child, and they resided on the land until 1883, when the county seat was removed to Boulder. Mr. Warner was then serving as Probate Judge of the county, and accordingly came to this city, but still owns his land at Radersburg. After locating at this place the Judge purchased 200 acres of land adjoining the town on the east, afterward became owner of forty acres on the south of the town, and turned his attention to real estate and the improvement of the city. He has platted a portion of both tracts, gave the city the land on which the substantial brick schoolhouse now stands, and also owned a part of the land on which the new courthouse is located. In 1885 Mr. Warner built a good residence on his land east of the town, where he now resides. He is a large stockholder in several valuable mines near Boulder.

In his early political career Judge Warner was a Whig, but since that party went out of existence he has been allied with Democracy. While residing in Marshall county, Illinois, he was elected County Clerk, and after coming to Montana was appointed Under Sheriff of the county of Jefferson, serving in that position three years. In 1880 he was elected Probate Judge, and in 1882 was re-elected to that office. After coming to Boulder he turned his attention more closely to his real estate, but recently has been induced to serve several terms as Justice of the Peace, also as a member of the School Board. In 1848, in New York, Judge Warner was made a Master Mason in Mount Morris Lodge, No. 122; later he became a Royal Arch Mason, in Illinois, and also served as Secretary of the chapter at that place for seven years.

Mrs. Warner is still spared to her husband. Two children have been added to the family in Montana,—George E. and Lottie R. Mrs. Warner is a member of the Presbyterian Church of Boulder, and our subject was also educated in that faith. He has aided in the building of the churches and in all public enterprises of his town, has been a reliable and useful citizen of his community, and is held in high esteem by the people of Jefferson county, with which he has so long been identified.

Hon. Edward Scharnikow, a member of the State Legislature from Deer Lodge county, and a successful member of the Montana bar, is a native of New York city, the date of his birth being February 8, 1865.

His father, Edward Scharnikow, a native of Germany, emigrated to this country when a boy and settled in New York city, where he resided up to the opening of the Civil war. In August, 1861, he enlisted in the Union army and went out as a member of the Eighth New York Volunteer Infantry, serving faithfully for three years. At the end of that time he was honorably discharged and returned to his occupation, that of carriage painter. In 1864 he married Miss Catharine Gerdts, a native of Germany who had come to America when a young girl. In 1868 they removed to Margaretville, New York, where they resided up to the time of his death, which occurred July 20, 1894, at the age of sixty-two years. His wife survives, being now fifty-nine. Both being faithful members of the Lutheran Church, they reared their family in that faith. All their children, four sons, are living, the subject of this sketch being the oldest.

He received his early education in the public schools, and at the age of fourteen went to West Hoboken, New York, where he completed a high-school course. After his graduation there he became clerk in an insurance office, and later was bookkeeper for a large lumber firm at Union Hill. In the spring of 1885 he came to Deer Lodge, Montana, and for two years was bookkeeper for firms in this city. He then began the study of law in the office of J. C. Robinson, where he remained two years, at the end of which time he went East and took a course in the Albany Law School, graduating in 1890. On the 22d of January, that same year, he was admitted to the bar. He then entered into a partnership with Judge Brantly, which lasted until the Judge was elected to the bench. Since then he has conducted a successful practice alone.

In the fall of 1892 Mr. Scharnikow had the honor of being elected to represent Deer Lodge county in the State Legislature, and in that capacity is now serving.

the white man will be unable to make gunpowder in the future, and all attempts at such will be a failure, and that the gunpowder now on hand will be useless as against Indians, as it will not throw a bullet with sufficient force to pass through the skin of an Indian; that the Great Spirit had deserted the Indians for a long period, but is now with them and against the whites, and will cover the earth over with thirty feet of additional soil, well sodded and timbered, under which the whites will all be smothered; and any whites who may escape these

In April, 1892, he was also elected one of the Aldermen of Deer Lodge, and in April, 1894, was re-elected, and has served for three years as Treasurer of the city. His political affiliations are with the Democratic party. Both as a politician and lawyer he takes rank with the leading young men of the country.

Mr. Scharinkow was married June 15, 1892, to Miss Mattie G. Humber, a native of Leavenworth, Kansas, and the daughter of Robert G. Humber, a Montana pioneer and a resident of Deer Lodge.

GEORGE GREGSON, one of the proprietors of the Gregson Hot Springs, Deer Lodge county, Montana, has been a resident of Montana for three decades. A resume of his life is as follows:

George W. Gregson was born in Indiana in 1841. In 1856 he moved with his parents to Iowa, where he resided up to his coming to Montana in 1864. May 11, 1864, he and his two brothers, Eli and Jackson, and their brother-in-law, George Elliot, with several others, started on the long and tedious journey to Montana, traveling with ox teams and being four months and four days in reaching their destination. They stopped first at Alder Gulch and at once began mining, but did not meet with the success which they had anticipated. From there they went to Nelson Gulch, where they mined for wages, receiving $6 per day. In 1869 they came to their present location. These hot springs had been claimed by a man named Hulbert. He sold out to them for $60 and they took claim to 320 acres of land and in time secured title to the same. This property is now owned by George W. and Eli Gregson, who have improved it by erecting a hotel, bath house and several other buildings, and have made it a delightful resort. Among other attractions is the plunge bath. At the place where the water comes out of the ground its temperature is 175 degrees, and eggs will readily cook in it in five minutes. Analysis shows this water to contain great medical value, and people from all parts of the country come here to avail themselves of its curative properties. The Messrs. Gregson are carrying on farming operations and are also raising cattle.

Both these gentlemen are married. Mrs. Eli Gregson was formerly Miss Martha L. Higgins. They have no family.

George W. Gregson was married, in 1864, to Miss Tabitha Ashing, who died in 1877, leaving one daughter, Ida, who is now the wife of James Sanders. January 1, 1884, Mr. Gregson married Miss Sarah J. Evans, a native of Salt Lake. They have four children, namely: Grover Cleveland, Robert Lee, George W., Jr., and Myrtle; besides Adel, the eldest, who died September 11, 1885.

The Gregson brothers are dyed-in-the-wool Democrats.

They are, however, neither politicians nor office-seekers, their whole time and attention being given to their own business affairs. Both are men of the strictest integrity and are held in high esteem by the people of Deer Lodge, where they have so long resided.

JOHN E. CLOSTON, deceased, came to Montana in 1866, and was for many years a good citizen and prominent stock man of the Ruby valley. A sketch of his life is as follows:

John E. Closton was born in Haverhill, Massachusetts, March 19, 1821. His parents having removed with their family to Vermont when he was quite small, he was reared and educated in the Green Mountain State. When he reached manhood he went to Iowa, and at Des Moines was subsequently married to Miss Hattie Stevens, a native of Bangor, Maine, and a daughter of Captain Benjamin and Sally (Piper) Stevens, both of the State of Maine.

After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Closton crossed the plains with oxen to Montana. Their journey was attended with great danger in crossing the swollen streams, as well as by the savage Indians bent on murder and plunder; but they overcame every difficulty and at last reached Virginia City in safety. They brought with them a stock of goods and a number of cattle. After selling out, they kept hotel at Rochester for two years, and in 1873 came to their present location in Ruby valley. Here they had a garden spot of thirty acres, kept the stage station and built a hotel, and as the years passed by they were prospered in their undertakings. Here Mr. Closton died November 24, 1881, of black erysipelas. He had served as Justice of the Peace for a number of years, was well known throughout the country and was highly esteemed by all.

After the death of her husband, Mrs. Closton took charge of the hotel and farm, and such has been her judicious management that she has added to the property until she now has a fine farm of 400 acres. The year before Mr. Closton died they met with a loss of about $3,000. A severe cloud-burst struck their part of the valley and in a few minutes swept away much of their property. Such a thing had not been heard of before, and has not occurred since.

Previous to her marriage to Mr. Closton, Mrs. Closton had been the wife of Mr. Ordway, and by him had two daughters, Laura and Ida. When she came to Montana she left Laura with her grandparents, and brought Ida with her. Here the latter became the wife of Thomas Mahone, son of Dr. Mahone, of Iowa. Mrs. Mahone is now a widow, and she and her only son, Charles, reside with Mrs. Closton. Their home is situated about two miles south of the town of Twin Bridges.

great phenomena will become small fishes in the rivers of the country; but to bring about this happy result the Indians must do their part and become believers and thoroughly organize.

"'It would seem impossible that any person, no matter how ignorant, could be brought to believe such absurd nonsense, but as a matter of fact a great many of the Indians of this agency actually believe it, and since this new doctrine has been engrafted here from the more southern Sioux agencies, the infection has been wonderful, and so pernicious that it now includes some of the Indians who were formerly numbered with the progressive and more intelligent, and many of the very best Indians appear dazed

ROBERT FENNER, a Montana pioneer of 1863, now deceased, was born in the canton of Zurich, Switzerland, November 23, 1845. His people were Swiss vineyardists.

Mr. Fenner remained in his native land till he was eighteen years of age, at which time he emigrated to America and with an ox team came across the plains to Montana, landing at Alder Gulch. Here and in various other mining camps throughout the State he worked for wages and later on owned a claim of his own at Bear Town, where he met with fair success and where he was also for a time engaged in the restaurant business, Mr. Nissler, now of Silver Bow, being his partner in the restaurant.

Mr. Fenner was married November 28, 1871, to Miss Cathrene Hauswirth, a native of canton Bern, Switzerland, and a daughter of John Hauswirth, a Montana pioneer. She came to America in 1857, when five years of age, and was reared and educated in Wisconsin, remaining there until 1869, when she came with the rest of the family to Montana. After their marriage they settled at Top-O-Deep. The climate of that place, however, did not agree with her health, and in the fall of 1872 they removed to Deer Lodge, where he took charge of the brewing business of Mr. Valiton. In 1873 Mr. Fenner built for himself the Western Brewery, and, in partnership with Mr. Van Gundy, ran the business for a number of years finally disposing of his interest in it and removing to Butte City. At Butte City he became interested in the Sheridan mine and sank considerable of his money in its development. Part of this property is still in the family and is now regarded as being very valuable. The last two years of his residence in Butte City Mr. Fenner had charge of Mr. Nissler's brewery.

In 1883, when Anaconda was an embryo city, he came to this place and invested in property. He and his family occupied one of the first tenant houses in the town, and the date of their moving in being September 7, 1883. For two years Mr. Fenner was engaged in the saloon business here, and in 1885 he built the Anaconda Brewery, which he ran for two years. At the end of that time his brewery was destroyed by fire, the loss being about $15,000, and no insurance whatever. His next venture was to build a soda factory, which he operated successfully up to the time of his death, July 16, 1891.

Mr. Fenner was a member of the Masonic fraternity, was in politics a Democrat, and was a man of the most generous impulses, noted for his readiness to lend a helping hand to all in need.

HON. ANTON M. HOLTER.—Prominent among the names of the brave pioneers who settled Montana is found that of Hon. Anton M. Holter, personal mention of whom will be found of interest to many. A brief biography of him, as prepared for publication in this work, is as follows:

Anton M. Holter was born at Moss, a small village on the eastern shore of Christiania Fjord, Norway, June 29, 1831. His father, Foin Holter, and his mother, Berta M. (Flóxstad) Holter, were both natives of Norway. They were members of the Lutheran Church, and his father was one of the first men in Norway to engage in whale fishing. It is supposed that he was lost at sea in 1839. His wife lived to be seventy-two years of age.

Anton M. was the third born in his father's family of five children, he having two older brothers and a brother and sister younger than himself. His mother being left with small means of support, he went to live with a maternal uncle, a farmer, in whose family he was reared, and by whom he was qualified to be confirmed a member of the Lutheran Church at the age of fifteen. At this time his greatest ambition was to become a sailor. His father's fate, together with the influence of his family, however, prevented such a career. He then began to learn the trade of blacksmith, but in less than a year he abandoned it for that of carpenter, at which he worked some three years, receiving $10 per annum and board.

In his youth and early manhood Mr. Holter often cherished the idea of coming to America, hoping that he might by some chance find his father; and then, too, he thought that in America he might find wider and better opportunities for success in life without being hampered by some of the objectionable features of society which existed in the land of his nativity. These thoughts matured into plans, and April 8, 1854, he was one of a number of emigrants that sailed for Quebec, Canada, at which place they landed May 25th of the same year. These emigrants came by rail from there to the United States, and on the way met with a fearful railroad accident, in which five of their number were killed. This was his first introduction to railroad travel, and the experience was a severe one. Upon their arrival at Rock Island it was reported that some of the emigrants had been sick with cholera, and all were refused admission to any of the public houses. Mr. Holter seized his trunk, and, fighting off the quarantine officers, rushed on board a boat, not knowing which way it was going. At this time he did not know a word of English, and his situation was indeed and undecided when talking of it, their inherent superstition having been thoroughly aroused.

"'Sitting Bull is high priest and leading apostle of this latest Indian absurdity; in a word, he is the chief mischief-maker at this agency, and if he were not here, this craze, so general among the Sioux, would never have gotten a foothold at this agency. Sitting Bull is a man of low cunning, devoid of a single manly principle in his nature, or an honorable trait of character, but on the contrary is capable of instigating and inciting others (those who believe in his promise) to do any amount of a most embarrassing one. He finally succeeded in reaching Freeport, Indiana, where he had a friend and where he immediately secured employment at his trade, at $20 per month. This small sum at that time seemed big wages to him. Carefully saving his money, he speculated in town lots a little, and at the end of a year he had accumulated $300. He continued to work hard and also to speculate in real estate, and in a remarkably short time he was able to estimate his worth at $3,000. Being what he then considered rich, he began to think of returning to Norway. First, however, he wished to see more of the country: so he went to St. Louis, and there spent the winter of 1855–6, working at his trade and on the Missouri Pacific Railroad, then being built to Jefferson City. Returning to south Iowa the following spring, he remained there four years, making his headquarters at Osage. He made several journeys into western Iowa and Missouri, a country then practically in the possession of the Sioux Indians. On one of these trips he was one of the first to arrive at Spirit lake after the Indian massacre there. In 1859 he was sick nearly the entire year with malaria and brain fever. Times changed, values shrunk, and his accumulations rapidly disappeared. In the spring of 1860, having partially recovered and having paid up his bills, he joined the rush of fortune seekers en route to Pike's Peak. His brother, Martin M. Holter, joined him in Colorado, and they engaged in farming and mining with fair success.

In the fall of 1863, in company with a Mr. Evanson, Mr. Holter started with a sawmill for Virginia City, Montana, leaving Denver on the 16th of September, and arriving at Alder Gulch on the 1st of December, having experienced many difficulties in the snow and cold and having to abandon much of their freight by the wayside. They located their mill eighteen miles from Virginia City, and although they met with many difficulties in getting it in running order, they did a good business the first season. Being in want of more machinery, Mr. Evanson was sent to Colorado for it; but, instead of buying it as intended, the stories of the fabulous price of flour, nails and other supplies induced him to invest the money in those things and start back with them. On his return trip misfortune overtook him in the way of storms, and he lost much of his freight and some of his teams. Although he received a high price for his goods at Helena in the spring of 1865, the venture proved a losing one.

Soon after the incident above narrated, Mr. Holter bought out his partner and established a mill on Ten Mile creek, eight miles from Helena. His brother Martin then became a member of the firm, the name of which was A. M. Holter & Brother. In the summer of 1865 they set up the first planing-mill in Montana, which they ran in connection with the sawmill, and in 1867, in addition to these, they also opened and ran a general merchandise business. After a few years the general merchandise was discontinued, the business being changed to hardware exclusively. This was successfully continued until the spring of 1887, when Mr. Martin Holter retired from the firm and our subject organized the A. M. Holter Hardware Company, which is still in active operation, being one of the largest establishments of the kind in the city. Mr. Holter is also still engaged in the manufacture of lumber, being president of the Montana Lumber & Manufacturing Company, of Helena, and also of the Helena Lumber Company, of Great Falls. During the financial crisis of 1893, owing to the failure of Helena banks (endorsements of corporation notes to the extent of $700,000), he was, however, enabled to settle all matters so as to withdraw his assignments within a few months,—illustrating the perfect faith the business world had in his conservative, able management and thorough integrity.

Mr. Holter was one of the first to erect and experiment with ore-concentrating machinery in Montana, an industry which has grown to one of the largest and most profitable in the State, and it has been said of him by another that "he is one of those rugged, indomitable spirits to whom the coming generation inhabiting the Northwest, and especially Montana, will owe in a large degree the magnificent heritage that awaits them." He is not only capable of planning vast enterprises, but also of carrying them into effect. He is a pioneer of Helena than whom no man stands higher in the esteem of his fellow-citizens.

In politics, Mr. Holter has always been a Republican, and has the honor of being the first Republican ever elected to office in the city of Helena. Many are the positions of prominence and trust that he has creditably filled. He was elected to the Territorial Legislature in 1878, and in 1880 was elected a member of the Helena Council, of which he was chosen president. In 1889 he was elected a member of the House of Representatives of the State of Montana, in which he likewise rendered efficient service. He has served as president of the Helena Board of Trade. At the annual meeting of the Society of Pioneers of Montana, of which he has served as president, he delivered a very able and interesting address. He has made two trips to Europe, one in 1879, and the other, with his family, in 1892.

mischief. He is a coward and lacks moral courage; he will never lead where there is danger, but is an adept in influencing his ignorant henchmen and followers, and there is no knowing what he may direct them to attempt. * *

"On Thursday, the 9th instant, upon an invitation from Sitting Bull, an Indian named Kicking Bear, belonging to the Cheyenne River agency, the chief medicine man of the ghost dance among the Sioux, arrived at Sitting Bull's camp on Grand river, forty miles south of this agency, to inaugurate a ghost dance and initiate the members. Upon learning of his arrival there I sent a detachment of thirteen

Mr. Holter was married in Chicago, in 1867, to Miss Mary Pauline Loberg, a native of Norway. A record of their six children is as follows: Norman B., born in February, 1868, is a graduate of Columbia College, New York city, and is now a stockholder in the hardware business referred to; Clara M. is the wife of Percy H. Kennett, stepson of ex-Governor S. T. Hauser; Edwin O., a graduate of Yale College and student at Columbia Law School; Albert L., engaged in hardware; and Aubrey and Percy, at home. Mr. Holter built the beautiful residence in which they live, and he also erected the Holter Block, in which their hardware business is located. Mrs. Holter is an Episcopalian.

Fraternally, Mr. Holter is a Knight Templar Mason. He is a man of pleasing address and is an interesting conversationalist, his opinions always carrying weight with them. Of his life much more might be given, but enough has been said to serve as an index to his character and place him where he belongs, among the front ranks of the most prominent pioneers of Montana.

JAMES GOURLEY, who dates his arrival in Montana in 1862, and who is ranked with her successful miners, forms the subject of this article.

Mr. Gourley was born in Ireland, May 4, 1840, a descendant of Irish ancestors and the son of a farmer. In his native land he was educated and there learned the dry-goods business. He emigrated to America in 1859 and settled at Amboy, Illinois, being there in the employ of Carson, Pirie, Scott & Co., the noted Chicago wholesale house. For this firm he opened a store at Palo, and afterward one at Galena. From Galena Mr. Gourley started west, intending to go to Australia, but upon arriving in Montana and prospecting a little, he decided that he had reached a good mining country and would remain. In speaking of his early mining experience, he says that in Prickly Pear Gulch were the first mines in Montana that gold-mining paid wages. He and the men that came with him worked with pick and shovel and dug a ditch to bring water to their claim. After mining and prospecting for some time, finding a fair show of gold in various places, he finally came to Prickly Pear Gulch, making the journey on horseback. Here he found the miners working with long toms, and he put up the first set of sluice boxes. He mined right along during the summer months, and in the winter followed packing goods with pack horses, making trips from Fort Benton. In this business he was engaged during all the time that the country was infested with road agents, murder and robbery then being frequent. His packing business paid him about $600 per month, so he kept it up regardless of danger and inclement weather.

Mr. Gourley had prospected all over the country and had discovered many valuable quartz mines. He was one of the four who discovered the New World mining district, where Cook City is now located. They also prospected to the head of Stinking river. At the latter place they had an encounter with the Indians, their horses being taken from them and they themselves making a narrow escape, being two days without food before they reached the Crow agency. The new mining law was such that a certain amount of work had to be done on a claim each year in order for a man to hold it. Mr. Gourley, however, had so many claims he was unable to comply with the law.

In February, 1874, he was one of a party of 149 men who started to explore the Rose Bud country. The party was composed of the best men in the country, among them many old Indian fighters and trappers. They were well armed, having one piece of artillery and a twelve-pound howitzer. They had pack animals and twenty-two wagons. After crossing the Yellowstone they followed a trail that led in the direction of their destination, and when about eight miles out from the river a few of the men who were in advance were attacked by seventeen Sioux Indian braves. Upon seeing the large number of whites, however, the Indians withdrew to the hills, but soon with re-enforcements they again attacked the party. To give a detailed account of their repeated attacks, the bloody battles that followed, and the brave and daring adventures of the whites, would be to write a thrilling story that would fill a whole volume. Suffice is to say that during their absence of twenty days these 149 men stood off 1,500 mounted Indians and 500 Indians on foot. A braver resistance against such odds has seldom if ever been made. Thinking it best to return, the party came back, having lost only one man.

After this Mr. Gourley was engaged in sawmilling in the Gallatin valley for two years. While there he entered suit against a man for stealing logs from him. They lawed until each had spent all he had, the lawyers getting the benefit of their trouble; and having lost all his property Mr. Gourley turned his attention to mining again. In his mining operations he prospered, and has accumulated considerable property. He was nine years with A. Lamme & Company of Bozeman, and for a time was manager of the wholesale grocery house of J. T. Murphy & Company. Of later years, however, he has given all his attention to mining interests. He is a mem-policemen, including the captain and second lieutenant, to arrest and escort him from the reservation, but they returned without executing the order, both officers being in a dazed condition and fearing the powers of Kicking Bear's medicine. Several members of the force tried to induce the officers to permit them to make the arrest, but the latter would not allow it, but simply told Sitting Bull that it was the agent's orders that Kicking Bear and his six companies should leave the reservation and return to their agency. Sitting Bull was very insolent to the officers and made some threats against some members of the force, but said

JOHN JOSEPH FANT, one of Montana's brave pioneers and one of her most successful farmers, dates his birth in Warren county, Kentucky, December 24, 1838. His forefathers were Scotch people, some of his ancestors emigrating to Virginia previous to the Revolution. His grandfather, William Fant, moved from Virginia to Kentucky and settled on the frontier in Allen county, among its earliest pioneers. He and his wife were devoted members of the Baptist Church, and both lived to a ripe old age. They had a family of four sons and four daughters. Their son, William T. Fant, was born in Allen county, Kentucky, in 1805, and December 6, 1831, was married to Mary C. Perkins, who was born in Warren county, November 14, 1813, and who was also a descendant of one of the old Southern families. They became the parents of fourteen children, all of whom, except a twin, reached maturity. William T. Fant owned a large tobacco plantation, and in addition to running it also purchased and handled the tobacco raised in his vicinity. In his religious views he was a Presbyterian. For many years he was a Magistrate, and was a man of great influence in the community. His death occurred in 1872, in the sixty-seventh year of his age. His wife died in 1865, aged fifty-two years. All of their large family are now living except two.

John Joseph Fant, the fourth born in the family, was reared on his father's plantation and had only limited educational advantages, the most of his time being spent at work with the negroes, of whom they kept from fifteen to twenty on the plantation all the time. When he reached manhood he struck out to do for himself. In 1861 he made the journey from New York to San Francisco, via the isthmus of Panama, being twenty-six days en route. From San Francisco he went to Stockton, where he was employed by a livery man. It was not long after this that the Salmon river mining excitement broke out, and he engaged with a company to pack and drive mules for the privilege of going with them. After spending some days in preparation for the journey, they started up the Sacramento river to Red Bluffs and Yreka, and continued on to Jacksonville, Oregon, where they purchased their mining supplies, flour, bacon, picks, shovels and whisky; and when they left Jacksonville their company consisted of about seventy-five men and 250 mules and horses. Taking a cut-off across the mountains toward Klamath lake, they proceeded on. At the foot of the mountains, they found about 200 men waiting for them so that they could travel together and be able to defend themselves against the hostile Indians through whose country they had to travel. Although it was then the 27th of May, the tops of the mountains wore covered with snow to a great depth. Mr. Fant was detailed with others of the company to go in advance and break a road over the mountains. They took with them their rifles, blankets and three days' rations of flour and bacon, and the first night they spent on the summit of the mountain, their beds being made of pine boughs. The next night they reached Klamath lake, where they had bare ground to sleep on, and the third day they retraced their steps to the rest of the company. Then the train started out on the snow trail, 500 animals and 200 men going in single file, every five animals being followed by a man to keep them going. Mr. Fant had in his five what was called the kitchen mule, packed with a big box of tin pans and kitchen utensils. When they were near the summit a saddle horse in front of him turned to go back, ran against the kitchen mule, pushed him out of the track and he sank into a tree-top in the deep snow about twenty feet. It was with no little difficulty that they fastened ropes to this mule and pulled him out. When they reached the lake they found it long and shallow, only about three feet deep, and the Indian guide thought it best to ford it instead of going around. And in crossing the lake they experienced no little difficulty, being about a day in the water. Finally, after several days of hard travel, they reached "Lost Cabin," afterward named Independence Gulch, near the head of the John Day's river, where they started a camp. Water was scarce, cold weather came on, and they left that camp in November and went to Idaho City, being about the first to reach that place. Mr. Fant had in the meantime contracted neuralgia, which resulted in the loss of his teeth. The next morning after their arrival at Idaho City a man was murdered there in cold blood. Human life was lightly esteemed. Mr. Fant was in a mess of five, and inside of three years three out of that number were killed.

Out of the ground on which Mr. Fant established a camp, the White brothers afterward took $60,000. Mr. Fant worked for a Mr. Nutall and took out between two and three ounces of gold a day, and one day took out as high as $400. He remained there, working for wages until 1864. He had saved his earnings and had three purses full of gold dust, which he invested in a claim that the visitors would leave the following day. Upon return of the detachment to the agency on Tuesday, the 14th, I immediately sent the Lieutenant and one man back to see whether the party had left or not, and to notify Sitting Bull that his insolence and bad behavior would not be tolerated longer, and that the ghost dance must not be continued. The Lieutenant returned yesterday and reported that the party had not started back to Cheyenne before his arrival there on the 15th, but left immediately upon his ordering them to do so, and that Sitting Bull told him that he was determined to continue the ghost dance, as the Great Spirit the investment proving an unfortunate one and resulting in total loss. In the spring of 1864, he, in company with sixteen others, started for the Kootenay mines, each having a saddle and pack animal. They arrived at Virginia City, June 1, 1864, where they sojourned a week, the place being then full of emigrants. Then they continued on their journey to the Kootenay mines, and after they had traveled about about 300 miles Mr. Fant decided to turn back to Alder Gulch, Virginia City, Montana. Accordingly, with his horse, blankets, rifle, a piece of bacon and some flour, he started back through the Blackfoot country by the way of Flathead lake, Hell Gate and Deer Lodge City. The Indians were on the war path at the time. Each night he camped about a mile from the trail, not daring to make a fire for fear of the Indians. The wolves and bears were very thick and he had much trouble to keep them off. Finally reaching his destination, he was employed by a California company, with whom he remained until cold weather put a stop to their mining. Then he purchased a mule and went to Last Chance Gulch and took claims on Grizzly Gulch. After a time he went to Virginia City, bought a wagon and some oxen, and took 1,000 pounds of flour and bacon to Silver City, The roads were frozen hard and the cattle's feet became sore, and when they arrived at Montana City the cattle were exhausted, but after resting there for a time he proceeded on his way, delivered his goods in Silver City, received his money, and returned and began mining on his claim. He did not meet with much success, however, and the following spring sold out for $1,000. Then, with two partners, he purchased a claim in Dry Gulch, and in three months they each took out $1,500. He then started what was called the California feed corral, the first in the place, and after running it three months he sold out and purchased 300 acres of land, to which he moved and on which he made several improvements, and resided until 1876. That year came the Black Hills excitement. Times were dull in this vicinity, and property could not be sold at any price. Leaving his land in charge of his brother-in-law, giving him what he could make on it, Mr. Fant returned to Kentucky.

In the meantime, September 15, 1869, Mr. Fant had married Miss Ann R. Patterson, a native of St. Louis, Missouri, and a daughter of Lewis Patterson, an old settler of that place. His family accompanied him back to Kentucky, and there he rented a farm and put in a crop. He was not satisfied, however, and shortly afterward sold everything he had, went to Missouri and left his wife and child there with her relatives while he went to Texas. But after his arrival in Texas he concluded that Montana was the best country he had yet seen; so he returned to Missouri, made arrangements for his wife to come on the boat, while he came by way of Ogden, and they met at Benton, and thus in 1878 they found themselves back on their ranch, contented to remain there and engage in farming. His wife died in 1881, and after her death he sent his two daughters to San Francisco to be educated. While in that city one of them, Adda Laura, died of diphtheria; and he brought the other, Mary Nancy, home with him. She is now the wife of J. Bruce Simpson, of Helena.

In 1887 Mr. Fant sold his land for $30,000. He had developed it into one of the finest farms in Montana. Soon afterward he purchased 320 acres of land near his first tract, for which he paid $8,000, and for which he was subsequently offered $60,000. He now has 640 acres in one body, located three miles and a half from Helena. On it he is raising hay, grain and vegetables. He owns two lots in Helena, on one of which he recently erected a nice residence, at a cost of $10,000, where he now lives, retired from active business, having his land rented. For his second wife he married Mrs. Mary A. Nash, a most estimable woman and a daughter of Israel Pasco, an English gentleman.

Mr. Fant is a member of the Masonic fraternity and the A. O. U. W., and in politics is a Democrat. He and his wife are members of the Episcopal Church. They are highly esteemed by a large circle of friends.

Hon. Preston H. Leslie, of Helena, Montana, is ex-Governor both of Kentucky and of Montana. He was born in Wayne county (now Clinton county) Kentucky, March 2, 1819, and is of Scotch and Welsh ancestry; but his ancestors, on both his father's and mother's side, have long been residents of the South, and participated in the struggle for independence. On coming to the Colonies they first settled in North Carolina and Georgia, and later became pioneers of Kentucky, where three generations of the family have resided. His father, Vachel H. Leslie, was born in Kentucky in 1792, and married Sally Hopkins, a native of his own State, born in 1796. She was the daughter af Dennis Hopkins, a resident of Kentucky but a native of the State of Georgia. Governor Leslie's parents had ten children, all of whom they reared to maturity, eight of whom are still living. He was their second son, and was educated in his native State, under the old Field school system.

In 1838, Mr. Leslie commenced the study of law, and was admitted to the bar on the 10th of October, 1840, and had sent a direct message by Kicking Bear that to live they must do so, but that he would not have any more dancing until after he had come to the agency and talked the matter over with me; but the news comes in this morning that they are dancing again, and it is participated in by a great many Indians who become silly and like men intoxicated over the excitement. The dance is demoralizing, indecent, and disgusting.

"'Desiring to exhaust all reasonable means before resorting to extremes, I have sent a message to Sitting Bull by his nephew, One Bull, that I want to see him at the agency, and I feel began the practice of his profession in the county in which he had always resided. In the spring of 1841, he removed to Monroe county and continued his law practice there until 1859. He then moved to Glasgow, in Barren county, where he resided until he came to Montana, February 6, 1887. Here he has since continued in his profession, except thirty months of the time, while serving as Governor of the Territory.

In politics he was a Whig until 1856. He then became a Democrat, and has since consistently and unwaveringly adhered to his party. In 1842 he was elected County Attorney for the county of Monroe, in which capacity he served until 1844, when he was elected to represent the county in the State Legislature; and in 1850 he was again elected to the same position. After his second term had expired he was, in 1852, elected to the State Senate, and in 1867 was again elected to the Senate. The second term he was elected Speaker of the Senate. That year there occurred a vacancy both in the office of Lieutenant Governor and Governor, and by virtue of his being Speaker of the Senate he became Governor of the State, his inauguration occurring February 13, 1871. After serving the unexpired term, he was elected Governor by the people, receiving a majority of over 39,000 votes, a most gratifying compliment to his integrity and ability. He was inaugurated on the 5th of September, 1871, and served four years. He then returned to his practice in Glasgow, Kentucky, and in July, 1881, there occurred a vacancy in the office of Circuit Judge, and he was appointed by the Governor to fill it; and in September, of that year, he was elected by the people to succeed himself. He discharged the duties of his office until September, 1886, when President Cleveland appointed him Governor of the Territory of Montana. He took the oath of office February 8, 1887, and served until April 13, 1889.

He was appointed about the 1st of March, 1894, United States District Attorney, by President Cleveland, for the District of Montana, which office he now holds and handles with the same success that always gave credit and honor to his official work in other positions.

Previous to the great Civil war, Governor Leslie was a strong Union man, and did everything in his power to preserve the Union; but when the war began his sympathies were with his people of the South, and he sided with and supported boldly, and with great earnestness, the Confederate cause, until the end of that memorable struggle. He has held office of great importance and trust during very exciting times in the history of the country, and through it all he acted with the best of wisdom and judgment, and maintained his integrity as a Christian gentleman.

November 11, 1841, Mr. Leslie married Miss Louisa Black, a native of Monroe county, Kentucky. They had a family of seven children, all of whom were reared to maturity. August 19, 1858, Mrs. Leslie died, and November 17, 1859, he married Mrs. Mary Kuykendall, a native of Boone county, Missouri. Three children came of that marriage, and they are all grown.

September 2, 1838, Mr. Leslie joined the Baptist Church, of which he has since been a consistent and active member. He has now attained the ripe age of seventy-four years, is in the enjoyment of good health, is vigorous and active in the affairs of life, and his mind is as strong and as clear as ever.

HON. JAMES M. PAGE, a resident of Beaver Head valley, Montana, came to the Territory in 1866, and is now one of the prominent stock men of the State. A resumé of his life is as follows:

James M. Page was born in Crawford county, Pennsylvania, June 22, 1839, son of Wallace and Nancy (Bonney) Page, born in Massachusetts. His parents removed in 1830 to Pennsylvania and settled on a farm in Crawford county, where the father died in 1840, in the thirtieth year of his age, leaving a widow and five children. She died in 1852. All the children are still living. The parents were members of the Baptist church and were highly respected people.

James M. is the youngest of the family. He went with his mother and her other children to Michigan in 1844 and settled at Climax, being then four years old. They were poor and had a hard struggle for existence and soon the children were scattered. James lived a part of the time with his uncle, Thomas B. Eldred, and later with another uncle, Emerson Bonney. When he was twelve years old he began to do for himself, and was a wage worker on farms until he was sixteen. Then he engaged with a surveying party, with whom he worked on public surveys in northern Michigan. He remained in this business until April, 1862.

In April, 1862, he returned to his home and enlisted in Company A, Sixth Michigan Cavalry, and went to the front in the Army of the Potomac, serving under Generals Kilpatrick and Custer. His service began August 14, 1862, and lasted until the close of the war, when he was mustered out, in June, 1865. He participated in all the engagements of his regiment until after the battle of Gettysburg, and had been in thirty-five battles and skirmishes; and at Liberty Mills, while engaged on the skirmish quite confident that I shall succeed in allaying the present excitement and put a stop to this absurd "craze," for the present at least, but I would respectfully recommend the removal, from the reservation and confinement in some some military prison, some distance from the Sioux country, of Sitting Bull and the parties named in my letter of June 18 last, hereinbefore referred to, some time during the coming winter before next spring opens.'

"At other Sioux agencies the Messiah craze seems to have made little or no impression. At Lower Brulé it was easily checked by the arrest by Indian police of twenty two dancers, of line, he and twenty-three of his comrades were captured by the enemy and were taken to Libby prison, Belle Isle and Andersonville. He spent fourteen months in these Confederate prisons, at the expiration of which time Mr. Page and one other were all that were left of the twenty-four. Mr. Page was one of the first prisoners taken to Andersonville, where he spent seven months and endured horrible sufferings that are beyond description. At the time of his release he was a mere skeleton. He then joined his command and soon recuperated. When President Lincoln was assassinated he assisted in running down the murderer. He also participated in the review of the victorious army at Washington. From Washington he was sent to Leavenworth to be engaged against the Indians, and while there his regiment was discharged. He had entered the service as a private, was promoted as Second Lieutenant, and his whole army record was an excellent one.

After his discharge Mr. Page returned to Grand Rapids, Michigan, and for a brief time was in railroad employ. During the winter of 1855–6 he attended Eastman's Business College in Chicago. In the spring of 1886 he started for Montana, leaving Leavenworth, Kansas, on the 3d of March, in a company composed of twenty-four men, making the journey with horse teams, and landing safe at Virginia City, June 22. On this trip the party were menaced by the Indians, but succeeded in keeping them off. On his arrival in Montana he engaged in farming and stock-raising in Madison valley, and in the fall of 1869 came to his present locality, five miles south of Twin Bridges, where he now has a fine ranch of 1,000 acres. He has a home on this ranch and also one in Twin Bridges, and besides has four other improved farms of 160 acres each. Ever since he came to Montana he has been largely engaged in stock-raising and has also been more or less interested in mining. He was one of the organizers of the King Mining Company, and has recently closed the sale of the King mine for $25,000. He held the appointment of United States Mineral Surveyor for a number of years in Montana and Idaho, and has extended the Government surveys in nearly every county in Montana. In this way he has not only become thoroughly informed on the mineral wealth of the State, but has also made a wide acquaintance among its people. During his early surveying expeditions he had many exciting experiences with the Indians in the Yellowstone and Musselshell country, and he has been longer connected with the General Surveyor's office than any other man now in the State.

Mr. Page was married July 7, 1872, to Miss Mary Christianson, a native of Holstein, Germany, a daughter of Christian Christianson, and a resident of America since 1861. Her family came to Montana in 1864 and her father is now a resident of Sheridan, this State. Mr. and Mrs. Page have four daughters: Helen E., Mina E., Mary E. and Lena M. Mrs. Page and three of her daughters are members of the Baptist Church.

Fraternally, Mr. Page is a Master Mason and a Knight Templar, and also belongs to the A. O. U. W. and G. A. R. He has been a Republican since the organization of the party and has been the choice of his party to fill various positions of trust. For fifteen years he filled the office of County Surveyor of Madison county and for three terms was a member of the Montana Territorial Legislature, representing the counties of Madison and Beaver Head, and in whatever position he has been placed he has performed his duty with the strictest fidelity.

FRANCIS REDFERN.—In the beautiful Ruby valley, twelve miles northwest of Virginia City, is located the rich farm and commodious and refined home of the gentleman whose name appears above. He is a Montana pioneer of 1864 and is one of the representative farmers of the State. Some personal mention of him is appropriate in this work and is herewith presented.

Francis Redfern was born in Bedford county, Pennsylvania, January 13, 1849, and is descended from Irish ancestors, his father, John Redfern, having been born in Ireland in 1801. John Redfern's first wife died on the Emerald Isle, leaving him with three children, and in 1837 he married Miss Mary Hogan, with whom he soon afterward emigrated to America. They settled in Bedford county, Pennsylvania, where for some years he worked at his trade, that of stonemason and bricklayer, and where he also became the owner of a farm. He sold his farm in 1858 and removed to Iowa, where he purchased land and settled down to farming.

In 1864 he and his son (the subject of this sketch) crossed the plains with ox teams, leaving Jackson county, Iowa, on the 1st day of May and landing at Virginia City, Montana, on the 8th of August of the same year. They came out to the Ruby valley and located the lands on which Francis Redfern now resides, being among the first settlers in the valley. Their first crop was wheat, oats and potatoes, the seed wheat costing $10 per bushel; oats, twenty-seven cents per pound; and potatoes, fifteen cents per pound. Although the seed was high the crops were good and sold for enormous prices to the miners at Alder Gulch. Here the elder Mr. Redfern continued to whom seventeen were imprisoned for eight weeks at Fort Snelling. The Crow Creek, Santee, Yankton, and Sisseton Sioux, through schools, missions and industrial pursuits, had been brought to give too valuable hostages to civilization to be affected by such delusion.

"As early as June, 1890, a rumor that the Sioux were secretly planning an outbreak and needed close watching led this office to call upon the agents for the Sioux for reports as to the status and temper of the Indians in their charge. The replies indicated that no good grounds for apprehending trouble existed. The Rosebud agent, however, referred to the fact that secret communications had been passing between dissatisfied non-progressive Indians at the various agencies who had refused to sign the agreement under which a large portion of reside up to the time of his death, which occurred in 1887, in the eighty-sixth year of his age. By his second wife he had had a family of nine children.

At the time he came to Montana with his father Francis Redfern was only fifteen years old. As soon as he reached his majority he took claim to 160 acres of land adjoining his father's, to which he has since added 260 acres more, all of which he still owns, making one of the choicest farms in the valley. In 1875 he built his present farm residence. Since coming to Montana his time has been principally devoted to raising cattle and horses, his cattle being of the Durham breed, and his horses Clydesdale.

In 1874 Mr. Redfern discovered the Bedford quartz mine in Madison valley. This is a rich silver and lead mine, sixty parts lead and thirty ounces of silver to the ton, the vein being from fifty to sixty feet wide. There are a group of these mines near together. A stock company has been formed to develop them, and in it Mr. Redfern is interested. He is also interested in rich placer mines near the California and Harris Gulch.

Mr. Redfern was happily married, July 15, 1875, to Miss Elinor Lucretia Meagher, who was born in St. Augustine, Florida, daughter of Captain James Drew Meagher. Captain Meagher was born in Waterford, Ireland, and was a first cousin of Thomas Francis Meagher, in honor of whom Meagher county, Montana, was named. Her mother's maiden name was Elena Eldhor, and she was of Spanish descent. The Captain had resided in the South for several years previous to the Civil war, and when the war broke out he, being opposed to slavery, espoused the Union cause and served in the Union navy. He lost his right arm in one of the engagements in which he most gallantly participated. Through the ravages of war his property in the South was swept away and after peace again reigned he located in Marquette, Michigan, where he died in 1879. His widow survived him until 1889, when she passed from this life to the felicity of the faithful in heaven. They were people of great nobility of character and were highly appreciated and beloved by a wide circle of friends. Mr. and Mrs. Redfern have five children, viz.: Francis Meagher, Arthur Arnold, Eugene, Bernice and Lucretia.

In their religious faith Mr. Redfern and his family are devout Catholics, and, politically, he is a Democrat.

JOHN HAUSWIRTH, deceased, was one of the highly respected pioneers of Montana. He was born in the village of Saanen, canton Bern, Switzerland, December 28, 1829. After completing his studies in the common schools of his native land, he entered the military service of his country, distinguishing himself during the Sonderbond war, and, for his meritorious conduct, being promoted to the rank of First Lieutenant.

It was in 1857 that Mr. Hauswirth emigrated to America with his family, and upon his arrival here he settled in Wisconsin and engaged in merchandising, remaining there thus employed until 1864. In 1864 he came to Montana and commenced mining and prospecting at Alder Gulch. Believing that there was a great future for Montana, he went back to Wisconsin in 1868 for his family and the following year brought them with him to this pioneer country, locating in Deer Lodge valley. In this valley they made their home until 1875, when they removed to Butte City, where he continued to reside up to the time of his death, December 27, 1884. His death was the result of a heavy cold which he contracted while helping a lady and her children to cross the Big Hole river. It was on a bitter cold day, the river was partly frozen, and the only way they had to cross was to wade, which he did, carrying two of the children in his arms, the river being hip deep. He landed the children in safety on the shore, and himself traveled some distance in his wet and frozen clothes. The result was congestion of the brain, which in two days terminated in his death.

Mr. Hauswirth's whole life was characterized by acts of kindness. During his residence in Butte City he was distinguished for his public spirit and his willingness to render aid in any enterprise tending to advance the interests of the place. He was an intelligent and persevering prospector and his efforts in that direction were rewarded by his being the discoverer of the Anselmo mine, as well as many others of less note. The net product from the Anselmo mine in two years was $147,000. He was one of the principal owners of the Sheridan mine, a very valuable property. These mines are now owned by his heirs and others.

Mr. Hauswirth was married in 1848 to Miss Kunnigunda Zwalla, a native of his own canton, who came with him to America and to Montana and shared with him all his reverses and successes, and who survived him three the Sioux reserve had been opened to settlement by the President's proclamation of February 10, 1890. The Standing Rock agent reported as follows :

"'So far as the Indians of this agency are concerned, there is nothing in either their words or actions that would justify the rumor, and I do not believe that such an imprudent step is seriously meditated by any of the Sioux. There are, however, a few malcontents here, as at all of the Sioux agencies, who cling tenaciously to the old Indian ways and are slow to accept the better order of things, whose influence is exerted in the wrong direction, and this class of years, her death occurring in 1887. They had seven children, of whom four are living, occupying honorable and useful positions in life. Their daughter, Mrs. Catharine Fenner, of Anaconda, is referred to elsewhere in this work. John Hauswirth is a resident of Salt Lake City. Herman Hauswirth is engaged in mining at Butte City. Another son, Robert, is Deputy Sheriff of Silver Bow county.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Hauswirth were members of the Lutheran Church. He was one of the organizers of the Liederkranz Society in Butte City, and for two successive years served as its president. He was also an active member of the fire department in that city.

ELISHA GIRARD, a resident of Warm Springs, Deer Lodge county, is another one of the Montana pioneers of 1865, and his long residence here entitles him to some personal mention in this work. A sketch of his life is as follows:

Elisha Girard was born in Iberville, Canada, December 9, 1836. He is of French ancestry and springs from the same family of which the noted Stephen Girard was a member. The progenitor of their family came from France to America in 1687 with General Carignan. Mr. Girard's grandfather, Joseph Girard, was a farmer by occupation and was a veteran of the war of 1812. He married Miss Mary Moquin, by whom he had four children, one of whom, Joseph, was the father of our subject. After her death he wedded Miss Emily Brunelle, and seven more children were added to his family. Grandfather Girard was seventy-six at the time of his death, and his second wife lived to be ninety-one.

The younger Joseph Girard was born in Lougueuil, Canada, January 1, 1812. He was a ship-carpenter and resided in Brooklyn, New York, where he carried on his business for many years. He died in 1873, at the age of sixty-one years, at Iberville, Canada. His wife, nee Thersil Dubeau, is also a native of Canada and is now in her eighty-first year and living with her son Elisha. Like her worthy husband, she is a devout member of the Catholic Church. They had a family of fifteen children, eight of whom reached maturity and six of that number are still living.

Elisha Girard is the eldest of his father's family. He was educated in the public schools of his native town, and soon after he reached his majority went to California, making the journey by way of the isthmus of Panama and landing in the Golden State in 1858. For two years he engaged in mining there, principally in Amador county, accumulating some money. After that he spent about two years in Nevada, following which he prospected for nearly five years in the British possessions, and during that time made a visit to his home in Canada. In the spring of 1865 he came up the Missouri river to Fort Benton and thence to Helena, arriving at the latter place on the first of July. After mining for a short time, he secured a clerkship in the store of Belanger & Allen, with whom he remained five years, until they closed out their business. He then came to his present location and here took claim to 160 acres of Government land. As the years passed by prosperity attended his earnest efforts. He added more acres to his original tract and his herd of cattle increased until at one time he had four hundred head. His brother Moses and a widowed sister, Mrs. Roselie Dausereau, and her son Rudolph, a boy of seventeen, reside with him and all are interested with him in business. They now own 3,000 acres of land, still carry on stock-raising and also keep a general store. Besides this they do a money loaning business. In connection with his brother-in-law, Louie Belanger, Mr. Girard owned the Warm Springs property, which they improved by erecting a number of buildings and which they sold to the present owners, Drs. Mitchell and Musicbrood. They had expended upon this property no less than $16,000, and sold out at a heavy loss. The present owners have built the Insane Asylum here and the place has become noted and greatly enhanced in value.

Politically, Mr. Girard affiliates with the Republican party. He has served most efficiently as County Commissioner of Deer Lodge county and for fifteen years has been Postmaster of Warm Springs. Public-spirited and enterprising, intelligent and well posted on public affairs, he is a man of influence in the community and is as highly respected as he is well known.

CAPTAIN C. H. PALMER, Butte, Montana, manager of the Butte & Boston Mining Company, is one of the most efficient and widely known mining superintendents in the Northwest. The founder of this company, and also its general manager from the time of its inception, he has developed it into a large industry, controlling many of the most available claims in the Butte district.

Mr. Palmer was born in Fredonia, New York, June 5 1841. As early as 1856 he began mining in the copper districts of Lake Superior. He subsequently entered the University of Michigan, at Ann Arbor, where he graduated in 1863. The next two years he studied abroad, chiefly at Berlin. In 1866 he returned to America and became engineer of the Atlantic mine, formerly South Pewabic, in Michigan, where he remained until 1870,

Indians are ever ready to circulate idle rumors and sow dissension, to discourage the more progressive; but only a few of the Sioux could now possibly be united in attempting any overt act against the Government, and the removal from among them of a few individuals (the leaders of disaffection) such as Sitting Bull, Circling Bear, Black Bird, and Circling Hawk of this agency, Spotted Elk (Big Foot) and his lieutenants of Cheyenne River, Crow Dog and Low Dog of Rosebud, and any of like ilk of Pine Ridge, would end all trouble and uneasiness in the future.'

"The agent at Cheyenne River reported

During 1870 and 1871 he was engineer of the Silver Islet Mining Company, after which he retired from the mining business and followed railroading. From 1879 until 1888 he was in the Lake Superior country, and in the latter year came to Montana.

After looking over the Territory for some time he secured the properties near Butte which have made the Butte & Boston Mining Company one of the most successful concerns of its kind in the country. During his residence in Butte Mr. Palmer has become one of the most efficient and active operators in this great mining camp, and by his shrewd industry and ability has built up one of the most perfect mining and smelting institutions in the West.

Personally he is a man of sterling character, genial and whole-souled, and, as the able president of the hospitable Silver Bow Club, of Butte, has made a wide circle of friends in Montana.

HON. HENRY L. FRANK, one of Butte's most enterprising and successful business men, was born in Ironton, Ohio, July 5, 1851. His ancestors in the old country were wine-growers in Alsace, then in France but now a part of Germany. His father, Moses Frank, a native of that place, emigrated to America when a boy, settling in Cincinnati, became a wholesale merchant and still resides there. He was married in that city, to Miss Ester Luplin, and had eight children, of whom seven are living, besides both the parents.

Henry L., the eldest, was educated in his native city, in the public schools, and obtained his mercantile knowledge in his father's store. After leaving home he was two years in Colorado and New Mexico, and then came to Butte City, in 1877, and began in the wholesale liquor business, in which he has had great success. His trade was small at first, conducted in a log cabin with a dirt roof; it had been the Copperopolis Restaurant, and stood on the ground where the Butte Hardware Company now have their fine brick building on Main street. Mr. Frank remained there three years, and then removed to the corner of Broadway and Main street, where he followed his trade four years; then removed to the corner of Utah street and Broadway, and was there six years, when he came to his present location on East Broadway, where he occupies a fine store, 42 x 100 feet in dimensions, two floors, besides a building 40 x 100 feet at the depot, and a refrigerator and bottling house. These facilities for doing business give some conception of the growth of his trade since he first started out in it.

Of course he has a considerable trade in other towns besides Butte City. He has also been largely interested in mines in Montana, Idaho and British Columbia, and was one of the organizers of the Silver Bow Electric Light Company. For some years also he was president of the Butte Water Company. He has erected a number of large buildings in the city, thus demonstrating himself to have been an active factor in the material interests of the place and in the building up of Butte.

He is liberal and enterprising, has many friends and is a favorite with a large portion of the community. He has passed through all the degrees of Freemasonry, just now reaching the thirty-third degree of the Scottish rite. He is also a member of the B. P. O. E., and K. of P. In his political connections he is a Democrat. He twice was elected Mayor of Butte City, and he also has the honor of being elected a member of the First and Second Legislatures of the State.

FREEMAN P. TOWER, A. M., D. D., president of the Montana University, is a native of Connecticut, born at Eastford, February 13, 1838.

Dr. Tower is of English origin. He is the seventh generation in a direct line from John Tower, who emigrated from England to this country in its early history and settled at Newtown, near Boston. The Towers have been a family of clergymen and business men. The Doctor's father, Charles Tower, was born in Massachusetts in 1779, and his mother, whose maiden name was Sarah Pratt, was the daughter of Freeman Pratt, of Southbridge, Massachusetts. Freeman Pratt was one of the first cotton manufacturers of New England. Charles Tower and his wife were the parents of eleven children, of whom only five are now living. He reached the advanced age of eighty-nine years, and his wife died at eighty. In their younger days they were members of the Congregational Church, but afterward became Methodists, and died strong in the Christian faith.

Dr. Tower was the eighth child in his father's family. He was educated at Middletown, Connecticut, where he graduated in 1863. He then united with the New York East Methodist Conference, of which he remained a member twelve years, as preacher in charge of the Tabernacle Church at Brooklyn, Sand Street Church at the same place, at Norwalk, Connecticut, and other places. Then he was transferred to the California Conference and was stationed at Alameda, where he remained one year, at the end of that time being sent by the bishop to Salem, Oregon. He was pastor of the church at Salem three years, and during that period built the fine church edifice there. He then became connected with the Willamette Univer some little excitement regarding the coming of an Indian 'Messiah,' as did the agent at Pine Ridge agency, who also expressed his belief that it would soon die out without causing trouble.

"After receiving later reports, already mentioned, which showed that ghost dancing was becoming a serious element of disturbance, the office instructed the agents at Standing Rock, Crow Creek and Lower Brule, Rosebud, and Pine Ridge Agencies, to exercise great caution in the management of the Indians, with a view to avoiding an outbreak, and, if deemed necessary, to call upon this office to secure military aid to prevent disturbances.

"Agent Royer, of the Pine Ridge Agency, was especially advised, October 18, that Major-General Miles, commander of the military di-sity, and for ten years, from 1879 to 1889, was its agent and educational lecturer. In 1889 he was elected president of the Montana University, in which position he has since rendered efficient service.

In 1863 Dr. Tower married Miss Julia A. Cleveland, a native of Warren, Massachusetts. They have had three children, two of whom died in infancy. The surviving child, Olin F., was born March 19, 1872, and is a graduate of Willamette University.

When the war broke out Dr. Tower enlisted under the first call for 75,000 men, but the quota being full his company was disbanded, and as he was a minister he revised his decision and took no further active part in the war. In his political views he is independent. All his life his attention has been given to religious and educational affairs. He is a logical and forcible speaker and has a fine voice for effective pulpit oratory.

EDMUND WHITCOMB dates his arrival at Bannack, Montana, April 27, 1863, and is consequently classed with the pioneers of this State. A brief sketch of his life is herewith presented.

Edward Whitcomb was born in Ashland county, Ohio, November 23, 1837. His remote ancestors were Germans. John Whitcomb, the father, was born in Maryland, in the year 1802. When quite young he went to Pennsylvania to reside, and there, about 1827, was married to Miss Mary Draughbaugh, a native of Germany. They continued to reside in Pennsylvania until 1837, when they removed to Ohio and settled on a farm. There John Whitcomb died in 1886, in the eighty-fourth year of his age. His widow passed away, two years later, in her seventy seventh year. Five of their ten children are still living.

The subject of our sketch was the third born in his father's family, and was reared to manhood at the old homestead in Ohio. His common-school education was supplemented by a course at Ashland Academy, which he attended two terms. He went to Kansas in the spring of 1860, and from there, in 1862, to Colorado. At the latter place he was engaged in mining and lumbering.

When leaving Denver he and his party left at a time when considerable snow was remaining in the ravines and cañons, in which places they had to shovel snow day after day. On leaving old Fort Bridger for Salt Lake City the snow was capped by a hard crust, which made traveling exceedingly difficult. The night before arriving at Salt Lake City they camped in snow fifteen inches deep, while crossing the summit to the city. Everything had the appearance of spring, the grass being green and some people preparing their gardens. This was the most sudden change in temperature that Mr. Whitcomb had ever experienced.

After spending fifteen days in Salt Lake City the party left for Bannack, then included in Idaho Territory, and arrived April 27, 1863, camping on Bannack flats. Two hours later the "road agents" (highwaymen) commenced killing Bannack Indians, Old Snag, a crippled Indian, being their first victim, and they killed three others, alleging that the Indians had made a statement to the effect that the eleven miners who had left Bannack the preceding autumn would never appear alive again.

Mr. Whitcomb went with the stampede to Alder creek, and remained there until August 10. Then, with Colonel W. W. De Lacy and party,—forty-four men,—started for Snake river. It was falsely reported that gold diggings were on the south fork of that stream.

The party disbanded, some returning to Bannack and Virginia City (Alder Gulch), and Mr. Whitcomb, with four men, went to Yellowstone lake, by way of the head of the Madison, passed on down through Yankee Jim's cañon, and crossed to East Gallatin, arriving at Virginia City November 17.

During the following winter and spring the "road agents" "got in their work." Mr. Whitcomb wintered on Vivian Gulch, twelve miles from Virginia City, saw George Ives, the first one hung,—five in Virginia City before breakfast, one in Nevada City, one punished with fifty lashes, and later several hung in Helena City.

At the commencement of the Civil war, while in Kansas, Mr. Whitcomb belonged to the militia, organized for home protection. He was acquainted with Captains Chandler and Cleveland,—the latter a dashing young "Jayhawker,"—and the four Wilson brothers,—all a terror to the peaceable settlers. It was while he was in Kansas that that section, suffering drouth, received aid from every State in the Union.

The most of the time during his first seven years in Montana, Mr. Whitcomb was engaged in placer mining. At Silver Creek, where the miners had good sluicing, they averaged in gold-dust about $15 per day to the man. In the meantime, in 1865, Mr. Whitcomb had pre-empted 160 acres of meadow land, twelve miles from Helena, vision in which the agency was situated, also chairman of the commission recently appointed to negotiate with the Northern Cheyennes, would shortly visit the agency, and that he would have opportunity to explain the situation to him and ask his advice as to the wisdom of calling for troops.

"October 24, 1890, this office recommended that the War Department be requested to cause Sitting Bull, Circling Hawk, Black Bird, and Circling Bear to be confined in some military prison and to instruct the proper military authorities to be on the alert to discover any suspicious movements of the Indians of the Sioux agencies.

"Early in November reports received from the agents at Pine Ridge, Rosebud, and Cheyenne River showed that the Indians of those which he still owns. When he retired from the mines, in 1869, he located the farm on which he now resides, it also comprising 160 acres. This property is just south of the Montana University. In 1890 he sold 145 acres of his land for $29,750, and gave ten acres to the college, retaining five acres for a home place. He also gave $250 in cash to the college. At this writing, 1893, he is erecting a fine brick residence on his land, one of the best in the valley. With what he has accumulated by years of toil and good management, he is now able to live comfortably without work, and has partially retired from active business.

Mr. Whitcomb was married June 29, 1871, to Miss Catharine A. Durgen, a native of Maine. She came to Bannack in 1862, being among the pioneer women of the place, and narrowly escaped being killed in the great Indian massacre of that year. She died in 1888. Four years later Mr. Whitcomb was again married, this time to Mrs. Margaret Kitson, a native of Massachusetts. She had three children, Mary, Walter and Charles, by Mr. Kitson, and she and Mr. Whitcomb have one daughter, Effa May. Mr. Whitcomb and his first wife adopted a son, John Edward Whitcomb, who is now in his seventeenth year.

Mr. Whitcomb is a member of the I. O. O. F., and in politics is a Republican, but he is a man who thinks for himself and is quite independent in his political action. Most of his attention has always been given to his own business. He is a capable and intelligent farmer and stockman and has made a success in life. One of Montana's worthy and highly reliable pioneers, he has resided here during her whole history, has grown with her growth and has prospered by her prosperity.

WILLIAM B. MORRISON, secretary and treasurer of the Helena Lumber Company, Helena, Montana, was born in St. John, New Brunswick, July 25, 1863, and spent the earlier years of his life there, where he received his education, graduating in the grammar school. When he completed his education he engaged with a wholesale firm, dealers in groceries and importers of West India goods, until 1887, when he came to Montana, locating in Missoula and accepting a position with the Missoula Mercantile Company. He remained there until 1889, when he was elected secretary and treasurer of the Helena Lumber Company and removed to Helena, where he is in charge of the business at this point. This company is a branch of the Big Blackfoot Milling Company, at Bonner, their plant being the largest between St. Paul and Tacoma, with a daily capacity of 150,000 feet of lumber. The product of the Bonner plant goes to all points in Montana, the Dakotas and Idaho. The Helena branch is one of the most important, its volume of business being very large and requiring careful supervision, which it receives from Mr. Morrison, who, although a comparatively young man, is in every way conversant with the minutest detail of the business and is recognized as well qualified for the position he fills.

CHARLES WALTER, the active business partner of the Henry Elling mercantile establishment of Sheridan, Madison county, Montana, is an enterprising young business man of more than ordinary ability. Briefly given, a sketch of his life is as follows:

Charles Walter was born in Germany, March 29, 1859, and was educated in his native country. In 1873, then a boy in his 'teens, he emigrated to the United States, went direct to Iowa, and there secured employment as clerk. Four years he clerked for the same firm. Then, taking Horace Greeley's advice,—"Go West, young man,"—he came to Butte City, Montana, where he remained a short time, and from there went to Virginia City. At the latter place he accepted a clerkship with R. Vickers & Company, in which he continued eight years. In 1889 he came to Sheridan. The firm of Elling, Parmater & Scott was then doing business here, and upon Mr. Scott's retirement from the firm, Mr. Walter was taken in as a partner. Three years later Mr. Parmater also retired from the business. Since then it has been conducted under the firm name of Henry Elling & Company, Mr. Walter being the resident partner and sole manager. In 1890 this firm built at Sheridan the best brick store in the county, or, perhaps in the whole State, it having been planned by Mr. Walter. It is 28 x 80 feet, with basement under the whole, and with gallery extending on three sides of the salesroom, the building being a model both for convenience and beauty. They also have a large warehouse in connection with their store, built for the purpose of storing grain and surplus stock. They handle large quantities of general merchandise of every description, including drugs, Mr. Walter having learned the drug business in Iowa.

Since coming to Montana, Mr. Walter has interested himself to a considerable extent in ranching and stock-agencies, especially Pine Ridge, were arming themselves and taking a defiant attitude toward the Government and its representatives, committing depredations and likely to go to other excesses; and November 13 this office recommended that the matter be submitted to the War Department, with request that such prompt action be taken to avert an outbreak as the emergency might be found by them to demand. On that day the President of the United States addressed the following communication to the Secretary of the Interior:

"'Replying to your several communications in regard to the condition of the Indians at the Sioux and Cheyenne agencies, I beg to say that some days ago I directed the War Department raising. Recently, however, he has closed out that part of his business in order to devote his time exclusively to the establishment above referred to. He also holds a large amount of valuable mining stock.

Mr. Walter was married April 15, 1893, to Miss Elnore Legris, a native of Canada and a niece of Mrs. J. B. Laurin, of Laurin, Montana.

While his political associations are with the Democratic party, he is not pleased with its attitude on the silver question, he being decidedly in favor of the free coinage of silver. He is one of the first Aldermen of Sheridan. Fraternally, he is identified with the A. O. U. W. and the I. O. O. F., and of the latter organization at Sheridan he is a Trustee.

Joseph Pennington, a Montana pioneer of 1863, a prominent stock-raiser, and owner of the Golden Pacific mine, was born in Kentucky, March 29, 1835. He is of English and Scotch descent, some of his ancestors being among the early settlers of South Carolina, where his father, Joseph Pennington, was born in the year 1800. The senior Joseph Pennington removed from South Carolina to Kentucky when a young man, and was there married to Miss Leticia B. Owens, a native of that State. Her father, Henry Owens, was born in Maryland. They had a family of thirteen children, of whom seven are still living. About the year 1843 they removed to Missouri and settled on a farm, where Mrs Pennington, now in her ninety-sixth year, still resides, Mr. Pennington having passed away several years ago. He was a school-teacher and farmer by occupation, and his religious faith was that of the Baptist Church. Mrs. Pennington is also a Baptist.

The subject of our sketch was their seventh born. He was reared to manhood in Missouri at a time when school advantages were limited and therefore the greater part of his education was obtained in the dear school of experience. In 1854 he crossed the plains to California and mined in Shasta county, meeting with fair success. After two years spent in the Golden State he returned to Missouri, and there, April 24, 1857, was married to Miss Delila Fine, daughter of Levi Fine, of Tennessee. After his marriage he settled down to farming in Missouri and remained there until 1859, when he again crossed the plains, this time to Colorado. After prospecting throughout that section of the country for six months and without success, he returned to Missouri. In 1863 we again find him on a journey across the plains, his objective point being Oregon, but after hearing of the discovery of gold at Bannack and Alder Gulch he changed his course and came hither. He was three months in making this trip. After his arrival in Ruby valley he took claim to a tract of land which afterward became known as Cold Spring Ranch, located eighteen miles west of Virginia City. Here he built a log house and kept a stage station and entertained many of the travelers on their way between Virginia City and Bannack. Not only the best pioneers of Montana stopped with him but also the highwaymen who began to infest the country were entertained at his station. After residing at that place twelve months he he sold out and located another tract of land on Ram's Horn creek, two miles further east in the same valley. A year later he removed to a point one mile below Twin Bridges, where he remained seven years, and from whence in the fall of 1879 he came to his present property, a fine ranch of 320 acres. Here he is engaged in raising grain, hay and stock, his horses being principally of the Cleveland Bay breed and his cattle Durham.

During his residence in Montana Mr. Pennington has all the time been more or less interested in mines and mining. He now owns nine good gold prospects, all in Rochester district, some of them within three miles of his home. He is now operating the Golden Pacific, which mills from $10 to $30 per ton and which is considered a very valuable property. He has built a five-stamp water mill. In all his mining operations he is in partnership with his stepson, T. J. Bird. Mr. Bird is married and has four children, one of whom, Joseph Pennington E. Bird, resides with Mr. and Mrs. Pennington.

Mr. Pennington has all his life been a strong adherent of the Democratic party, but he now differs with his party on the silver question, he being in favor of free coinage of silver. During his long residence in Montana he has interested himself in educational matters, has helped to organize several school districts and has often served as Trustee and Director.

Judge John Young Batterton, of Deer Lodge, Montana, was born in Boone county, Missouri, October 22, 1826.

The Judge is of Scotch descent. Some of his ancestors settled in Virginia previous to the Revolutionary war and they were subsequently among the pioneers of Kentucky, his grandfather, Moses Batterton, having been born, reared and married in the latter State. The lady he married, Anna Corlew, was of French origin, her peoto send an officer of high rank to investigate the situation and to report upon it from a military standpoint. General Ruger, I understand, has been assigned to that duty, and is now probably at, or on his way to, these agencies. I have to-day directed the Secretary of War to assume a military responsibility for the suppression of any threatened outbreak, and to take such steps as may be necessary to that end. In the meantime, I suggest that you advise your agents to separate the well-disposed from the ill-disposed Indians, and while maintaining their control ple also being among the early settlers of Virginia, and later removing from there to Kentucky. Moses Batterton and his wife had nine children, their second child, Lemuel Berket Batterton, being our subject's father. The grandfather lived to be seventy-five years of age, surviving his wife several years.

Lemuel B. Batterton was born in Kentucky, in 1801. He removed to Missouri when a young man, and was one of the pioneers of that State. There he was married to Miss Mary Lynch, who was descended from Welsh and German ancestors. He spent his life in Missouri as a farmer and carpenter, and he and his wife had a family of ten children, of whom five are still living. The father died at the age of seventy-two, and the mother in the sixty-seventh year of her age. Both were earnest Christians and consistent members of the Baptist Church, as also were Grandfather and Grandmother Batterton and others of the family.

Judge Batterton was the second of their ten children. He was educated in the public schools and in the State University of Missouri, and followed the profession of teacher in the public schools for ten years. He also served as Superintendent of Instruction in his county. Later, he was elected and served as Probate Judge. He was also elected County Judge, and while serving in that capacity was the presiding Justice of the court. During all these years he also carried on farming and stock-raising.

Judge Batterton was married July 6, 1854, to Miss Elizabeth Young Turner, native of his own State, and they had eight children born to them in Missouri. In 1877, resigning his position as Judge and settling up his affairs in Missouri, he removed with his family to Montana. His eldest daughter, Ada, had married Mr. Harvey T. Mahan, and they also came with the family. All settled in Deer Lodge, the father purchasing a small farm almost within the corporate limits of the city, where he has since resided. Soon after his arrival in Deer Lodge county he was elected one of the County Commissioners, in which capacity he served most efficiently for ten years. He is now in a measure retired from active life. Of the other members of the family, we record that the second daughter, Mamie T., is a popular and successful teacher; Zona is the wife of S. C. Kenyon, and resides in Bozeman; Sallie A. is teaching in the public schools of Bozeman; James is a jeweler in Idaho; Bettie, at home; Lennie May, also engaged in teaching; and John Y., Jr., the youngest of the family, is still a minor.

The Judge and his wife and nearly all their family are members of the Christian Church. Politically he is a Democrat; fraternally, a member of the Masonic order.

THE CONRAD BROTHERS, prominent bankers and business men of northern Montana, having banking houses at Great Falls and Kalispell, are pioneers of Montana. They came to the Territory and settled at Fort Benton in 1868 when they were boys, one eighteen years old and the other twenty, and have ever since been intimately identified with its growth and development. In all their business enterprises they have been partners and their lives have been closely blended.

William G. Conrad, the senior brother, was born in Warren county, Virginia, August 3, 1848; and Charles E. Conrad, May 20, 1850. They are of German and English descent. Their ancestor, Joseph Conrad, emigrated from Germany to America in the early settlement of the colonies and located in the Shenandoah valley. His posterity were prominent in colonial days as well as later in the history of this country. The father of these gentlemen, Colonel James W. Conrad, was born in Warren county, Virginia, in 1812, and was married in his native State to Miss Maria S. Ashby, a native of the Old Dominion, born in 1827, and of English descent. She traces her family history back to John Ashby, who was a subject of King Charles I. of England, and who was among the first Englishmen that landed in Virginia. Her great-grandfather, also named John Ashby, was a Captain with General Braddock when the latter was killed near Pittsburg, and her grandfather, Benjamin Ashby, and of Virginia's most honored sons, served as an officer during the Revolutionary war, 1776. Colonel James W. Conrad and his wife had a family of thirteen children, all born in Virginia, and eight of that number are still living. He owned a large plantation, served for some years as Judge, and was also Colonel of the State militia. He and his wife were life-long Methodists. In 1874 they removed to Montana and located at Fort Benton, where he retired from active business. His death occurred July 18, 1894, at Great Falls, at the age of eighty-two years. He was a man of many excellent traits of character and was honored and esteemed by all who knew him. His good wife is still living and is greatly beloved by her children and grandchildren, and, indeed, by all who knew her.

William G. Conrad is the eldest son of the family, He was educated in the common schools of his native State and at the Washington Academy, and, as above stated, when merging into manhood, came out West to Montana with his brother. Their journey hither was made by rail to Cincinnati, thence down the Ohio river to Cairo, thence up the Mississippi to St. Louis, and thence on the Missouri to their destination, three months being consumed in making the trip, and the whole journey being over and discipline so far as may be possible, to avoid forcing any issue that will result in an outbreak, until suitable military preparations can be made.'

"November 15 Agent Royer sent to this office the following telegram from Pine Ridge:

'Indians are dancing in the snow and are wild and crazy. I have fully informed you that employes and Government property at this agency have no protection and are at the mercy of these dancers. Why delay by further investigation? We need protection, and we need it

4,000 miles by water. After many dangers and privations, they reached Fort Benton in safety.

At Fort Benton they were employed by I. G. Baker & Brother, who were engaged in general merchandising, freighting, steamboating, contracting and banking, at first working for wages. As time passed by they bought out the interest of the Baker brothers and became sole owners of the business, and soon they did more merchandising, freighting and fur dealing than any other firm in all northern Montana. Their business spread out over a territory that extended a thousand miles in every direction. They furnished supplies for the Canadian government and freighted the same to all parts of the country extending between Winnipeg and the summit of the Rocky mountains, and as for north as the white man had penetrated. From 1874 until 1884 W. G. Conrad was president of the steamboat line on the Missouri, and previous to the advent of the railroads to northern Montana they were by far the largest transporters of merchandise here. In one year they transferred on wagons for the United States Government alone 20,000,000 pounds, besides hauling all the goods for the Canadian government and freighting for individuals. They have been for a number of years engaged in the stock business, and in this, as in their other enterprises, they have met with marked success, now owning four of the largest herds of cattle in Montana and the Canadian Northwest.

The advent of the railroads, of course, brought a change in their business operations, and of recent years they sold out their mercantile interests and freighting business, and are now giving their especial attention to banking, Conrad Brothers' principal office being located at Great Falls. Their establishments are backed by over a million and a half of dollars, all standing as the result of their own honest and earnest efforts. William G. is the president of the Northwestern National Bank, of Great Falls, and Charles E. is president of the Conrad National Bank, of Kalispell. At both of these places they are doing a prosperous business.

William G. Conrad was married in 1876 to Miss Fannie E. Bowen, a native of Virginia, and a daughter of Hon. Paul L. Bowen, of that State. They have four children living, namely: Maria Josephine, Minnie Atkinson, George Hartfield, and Arthur Franklin. Their eldest son, William Lee, died in 1878, at the age of one year. Mr. Conrad owns an elegant home in Great Falls and also one in the noted Shenandoah valley of Virginia, which is considered the handsomest in the State. He and his wife are members of the Episcopal Church, in which he has filled the office of vestryman for a number of years.

Charles E. Conrad is also married and has a family, their home being at Kalispell, the county seat at Flathead county. This prosperous town he helped to found and has been actively identified with it ever since. Mr. Conrad was married, January 4, 1881, to Miss Alicia D. Stanford, a native of Halifax, Nova Scotia, and a daughter of James Stanford of that place. They have a son and two daughters: Charles D., Kate and Alicia.

Both these gentlemen have all their lives been staunch Democrats, and as such have taken a somewhat active part in the political affairs of Montana. William G. first served in an official capacity as County Commissioner of Choteau county. Later he served as the first Mayor of Fort Benton, both he and his brother having had a hand in the incorporation of the city. In 1878 he was elected a member of the Territorial Senate, in which position he rendered most efficient service. Charles E. has also been honored by official position. He was unanimously elected a member of the Constitutional Convention in 1889, and helped to frame the present constitution of the State.

Hon. James H. Lynch, the present Postmaster of Butte, Montana, is a native of Galena, Illinois, born April 11, 1853. Mr. Lynch's father, John Lynch, was born in county Fermanagh, Ireland, in 1814, and came to Illinois when twenty years of age. He married Miss Manly, a native of his own country, and they had ten sons, all born at Galena, to which he had moved in 1838, a pioneer there. In 1869 he moved to Dakota, taking all his sons with him: they obtained 3,000 acres of land and engaged in the raising of wheat; and this valuable property is still their own. The father died in 1881, and the mother in 1884. They were people of the highest respectability. Eight of the sons still survive, two of whom are in the jobbing trade in Butte City.

James H., the second son, attended the public schools in Galena, graduating in the high school. In business life he was first in the employ of Thompson & Lewis, at Vermillion, Dakota, buying and shipping grain and dealing in agricultural implements, and doing a very large business there until 1877, when he went to the Black Hills, by way of Fort Pierre, arriving at Fort Pierre on the 20th of February. Associating himself with Dudley Caldwell & Company, he took charge of their mills for two years. Later he was Under-Sheriff of Lawrence county for three years, and March 27, 1880, he was married to Miss Mary J. Lackey, the daughter of Henry Lackey. She was born in Canada. In February, 1882, the family came to Butte, where Mr. Lynch was first in the employ of Perron, Wall & Company, in their lumber now. The leaders should be arrested and confined in some military post until the matter is quieted, and this should be done at once.'

"A military force under General John R. Brooke, consisting of five companies of infantry, three troops of cavalry, and one Hotchkiss and one Gatling gun, arrived at Pine Ridge November 20, 1890. Two troops of cavalry and six companies of infantry were stationed at Rosebud. Troops were ordered to other agencies until nearly half the infantry and cavalry of the United States Army were concentrated upon the Sioux reservations. When the troops reached Rosebud about 1,800 Indians—men, business. The following summer he opened a lumber and produce business at Anaconda, where he did a rushing business, averaging a thousand dollars a day in sales for a year. He then became a member of the firm of Lynch & Mather, and kept the Homestead Hotel. In the autumn of 1883 he outfitted parties to go to the Coeur d'Alene country; in the spring of 1884 he resigned his position and went to Eagle City, then the seat of the excitement,—since dead and taken by the coyotes. In the fall of 1884 he retired to Butte and purchased the estate of Charles Trowbridge, a wholesale liquor business, and had a very successful trade. February 10, 1892, he sold this out and retired from business. He was appointed Postmaster February 27, 1894, and took charge of the office on the first of April following.

Mr. Lynch is a stockholder and director in the Silver Bow National Bank, and has secured large property interests in Butte. He is a man of great energy and business ability. He has always been a Democrat, has taken a great deal of interest in political affairs, and for two terms was Alderman of the city and one term president of the Council. Every time that he has run for office he has succeeded in the election. In the late contest for the position of Postmaster there were five good candidates, and he was successful in obtaining the place. The Butte postoffice is one of the first-class, doing five times as much business as one in a city of the same size that depends solely upon agricultural and commercial correspondence. Mr. Lynch has one assistant Postmaster, one register clerk, two general delivery clerks, two distributing mailing clerks, one postage clerk and nine carriers,—this number to be increased when South Butte is annexed. In 1893 the postal order business amounted to $625,542.33, which is a good index to the other business of the city of Butte.

Mr. Lynch is highly spoken of by the citizens, and there is no question that the management of the postoffice will be such as to give the patrons general satisfaction.

WILLIAM J. ZIMMERMAN, Clerk of the Seventh Judicial District Court, and residing at Miles City, Custer county, is a native of the State of Pennsylvania, born at Tamaqua, in Schuylkill county, November 30, 1863, a son of Henry and Elizabeth (Forney) Zimmerman. His father, who was a mechanic by trade, was of Holland and English ancestry, who were early settlers in eastern Pennsylvania. His mother's ancestry can be traced back many centuries, into northern Italy and southern France, and later through England to this country. Longevity characterizes his ancestry on both sides.

William grew to manhood in his native State, attending the common schools, where he more than is usual utilized his opportunities for laying a solid foundation for future success. He learned the trade of his father,—saddle and harness making. His father served in the late war, in the Tenth Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, also in the One Hundred and Seventy-third Pennsylvania Infantry.

Resolving to seek his fortune in the great West, our subject came to Miles City, in April, 1886, and at once engaged at work in his trade for H. M. Moran & Company, leading saddle and harness manufacturers, and remained in their employ until the autumn of 1892, when he was elected, on the Republican ticket, to his present position. He is a gentleman of fine physique, modest, and of polished manners and a congenial disposition. He soon became a social favorite in Miles City, and popular in his line of trade. His many friends are pleased to speak of him as an honest, conscientious young man, worthy of all confidence. While working at his trade in Miles City, it is said that he was a persistent student at all hours he could devote to study outside of hours devoted to labor and sleep. He never wasted time about saloons and loafing places, but attended night schools, and thus prepared himself for the responsible position he now fills. He is deserving of all the honors that the people of Custer county can bestow, and honors fit him well, as his nature is such that they cannot "spoil" him. He has a bright future before him. His popularity has thus won him many votes from the Democratic party. He is a Republican, as was his father before him, who voted for General Taylor and for every Republican candidate for president since.

He is a member of Yellowstone Lodge, No. 26, A. F. & A. M., of Miles City, and has filled the office of Secretary of the lodge for two years: has also filled the Junior Warden's chair.

He was married in November, 1892, to Miss Minerva T. Heisler, a daughter of Frank and Maria (Tyson) Heisler. Her parents reside in Schuylkill county, Pennsylvania, and are of Scotch ancestry. For many years her father was engaged in mercantile pursuits, and in the late war was a Captain in a Pennsylvania regiment. Mr. and Mrs. Zimmerman have one child, named Franklin Henry,—and born November 12, 1893.

GASPARD DESCHAMPS is ranked with the most successful farmers of Grass valley, Missoula county, Montana, and is deserving of some personal mention in this work. Briefly given, a sketch of his life is as follows:

Gaspard Deschamps was born in Montreal, Canada, November 26, 1846. His ancestors came from France to women, and children—stampeded toward Pine Ridge and the bad lands, destroying their own property before leaving and that of others en route.

"On December 1, 1890, in accordance with Department instructions, the following order was sent to the Sioux agents: 'During the present Indian troubles you are instructed that while you shall continue all the business and carry into effect the educational and other purposes of your agency, you will, as to all operations intended to suppress any outbreak by force, co-operate with and obey the orders of the military officer commanding on the reservation in your charge.'

"Sitting Bull's camp, where the dancing had been going on, was on Grand river forty miles from the agency. The number of Indian po-

America about the year 1700 and settled in Canada. His father, A. Deschamps, was a farmer and a hotel-keeper, and lived to be eighty-eight years old. The mother of our subject also lived more than the allotted time, her death occurring at the age of seventy-two. They had a family of thirteen children, Gaspard being the sixth born and one of the five who are now living. He was reared and educated in his native town, and at the age of sixteen was apprenticed to learn the trade of blacksmith. In 1865 he went to West Suffield, Connecticut, and was employed in work at his trade there and in other New England towns for five years. He went to California in 1870, landing in San Francisco, and working there as a journeyman for three months. Then he came to Cedar Creek, Montana, and the following three years was engaged in mining on a claim of his own, during that time taking out between three and four thousand dollars. From mining he turned his attention to the cattle business, in which he was engaged five years and in which he met with excellent success. He ranged his cattle in the Flat Head country among the Indians, at that time there being only five white men there.

It was in 1877 that Mr. Deschamps came to Missoula, and upon locating here he opened a blacksmith shop and began work at his trade. That same year, on the 12th of June, he was married, at Missoula, to Miss D. Ceyr, the daughter of Alys Ceyr, also of French descent. After their marriage they went to Valley Creek, and at Two Creeks located and purchased land, 240 acres in all, to which he subsequently added until he now has 400 acres there. He erected buildings and made other improvements on that property and resided there until April, 1883, when he came to his present location in Grass valley, nine miles west of Missoula. Here he purchased 400 acres, on which was located the first shingled house built in this section of the country. Prosperity has seemed to attend his every effort. To-day he is the owner of 2,500 acres of land, much of it well improved, and is classed with the wealthiest farmers in the county. Each year he makes from four to five hundred tons of hay, and keeps from three to five hundred head of cattle. For several years he has been breeding Galloway and Durham cattle. He also raises Norman horses, and keeps some hogs.

Mr. and Mrs. Deschamps are the parents of nine children, all born at their home in Grass valley, their names being as follows: Gaspard, Alvina, Ulric, Arthur, Regina, Alma, Elzeorel, Admie and Julia.

Formerly Mr. Deschamps was a Democrat, but he now favors the principles of the People's party. He has never accepted office and has never joined any society, his whole attention having been given to his own business affairs. He takes a deep interest in the prosperity of Missoula county and the State of Montana, and in his quiet way is doing what he can to bring about their further growth and development.

Frank Janes, a member of the City Council of Anaconda, Montana, and one of her most worthy citizens, was born in Deerfield, Massachusetts, May 26, 1858, a descendant of Welsh ancestors who were early settlers of New England.

His father, George W. Janes, was also born at Deerfield, at the old family homestead, in 1824. He married Miss Ellen Janes, a lady of his own name, but not a relative. They had seven children, of whom six are living, Frank being their fifth born. This worthy couple spent their lives on the farm where he was born, and were well known throughout the vicinity and highly esteemed for their many excellent qualities. Both were members of the Baptist Church. He served as one of the Selectmen of the town of Deerfield from 1863 to 1874; and in 1873 he was elected to the Legislature, and re-elected the following year. In 1877 he was elected a member of the general school committee, re-elected in 1878 for one year, and again in 1879 for three years.

Frank Janes was reared on the farm and educated in the public schools, and when he grew up learned the carpenter's trade. He worked at his trade in the East until 1883, when he came west to make his own way in the world, upon his own merits, not even having an acquaintance here. His first step was at Bozeman, Montana, where he worked a short time, and whence he went to Helena and secured employment on the Northern Pacific Railroad, building water tanks for the company. Next we find him at Marysville. He was one of the workmen on the first twenty stamps put in for the Drum Lummon mine. From Marysville, in 1884, he came to Anaconda, which was then just starting. Here he was employed by the Anaconda Company, soon became foreman of their carpenter work, and for the next seven years has been superintendent of the construction of all their works, having under his supervision no less than licemen in that vicinity was increased and he was kept under close surveillance. December 12 the commanding officer at Fort Yates was instructed by General Ruger, commanding the Department of Dakota, to make it his special duty to secure the person of Sitting Bull, and to call on Agent McLaughlin 'for such co-operation and assistance as would best promote the object in view.' December 14 the police notified the agent that Sitting Bull was preparing to leave the reservation. Accordingly, after consultation with the post commander it was decided that the arrest should be made the following morning by the police under command of Lieutenant Bullhead, with United States troops within supporting distance.

fifty carpenters. In the meantime he went to Hamilton, in the Bitter Root valley, and built the Bitter Root Development Company's sawmill, one of the largest and best mills in the State of Montana.

Since coming to Anaconda, Mr. Janes has thoroughly identified himself with the interests of the place, and is doing everything in his power to promote its welfare. He has invested in real estate here, and is a stockholder in the Boulder Valley Fluming Company.

Fraternally, Mr. Janes is a member of the I. O. O. F., and, politically, he affiliates with the Republican party. In 1893 he was the choice of his fellow-citizens of the Third ward as their representative in the City Council, in which capacity he is now serving intelligently and efficiently.

GEORGE STAUDAHER, a well-known farmer and stock dealer of the Beaver Head valley, dates his arrival in Montana in June, 1863. Biographical mention of him is as follows:

Mr. Staudaher was born in Austria, April 23, 1836, son of Michael and Mary (Myers) Staudaher, and one of a family of two sons and seven daughters. His parents were industrious farmers and devout members of the Catholic Church. His father died in his sixty-third year and his mother in her sixty-sixth. Two of the daughters and the subject of of our sketch are the only ones of the family now living. The latter was reared and educated in his native land. When he was sixteen he began to do for himself, going successively to Baden, Prussia and Belgium, and doing farm work in those places, receiving two dollars and a half per month, which there was considered good wages.

In 1859 Mr. Staudaher came to America, landing at New York city and going from there to Chicago, where he spent the winter. In 1860 he went to Kansas, but still he had not found a suitable location, and in May, 1861, he started for Colorado, paying $25 for his passage with an ox train. Arrived in Colorado, he engaged in mining at Black Hawk in the Bobtail lode, where he remained three years, receiving from $2.50 to $3 per day. In 1863 he came to Bannack, Montana, in company with three others, they having purchased an outfit and two years' provisions. In June they went from Bannack to Alder Gulch, where they secured claims on German Bar, trading their teams for six claims. There Mr. Staudaher took out $2,000 in gold dust in two months. In November he went by stage to Salt Lake, their being eight passengers in the stage and all of them together having $60,000 in gold. They made the journey in safety, while both the coaches that preceded and followed them were robbed. At Salt Lake he purchased three yoke of oxen and a wagon and laid in a stock of provisions for himself and partners sufficient to last a year. They continued their mining operations together until 1864, when Mr. Staudaher retired from the company.

February 12, 1865, he married Miss Catherine Miller, a native of Germany who had come to this country and Alder Gulch that same year. They began their married life in a little log house which he built. From time to time he purchased other claims and continued his mining operations until 1867. Wages were high and he ran behind and that year found himself financially embarrassed. In 1867 he selected a location in Beaver Head valley south of the Point of Rocks, where he took squatter's claim to a tract of land, built a log house and turned all his energies to farming and stock-raising. His first crops were destroyed by the grasshoppers. In 1880 he sold out and came to his present location, ten miles north of Dillon, and here prosperity has since attended his efforts. Here he owns 900 acres of choice farming land and has one of the finest farm residences in the vicinity. He, however, resides in Dillon in order to give his children educational advantages. His broad acres are well stocked with fine horses, cattle and sheep, his cattle numbering 600 head and his sheep no less than 3,000.

Mr. and Mrs. Staudaher have had nine children, one of whom, Annie M., died in her ninth year. The others are George J., Nicholas M., John A., Louisa K., William L., Agatha L., Mary Ester and Francis J. The first three named are enterprising young men and are engaged in the stock business on their father's ranch. Louisa K. is the wife of F. Brundridge. All the family are members of the Catholic Church.

Mr. Staudaher has always voted with the Democratic party until recently, but is now in favor of the free coinage of silver. He is a member of the A. O. U. W.

CHARLES M. JOHNSON.—To this young man belongs the distinction of being the first County Clerk and Recorder of Ravalli county, Montana. A sketch of his life is appropriate in this work, and is as follows:

Charles M. Johnson was born in Virginia City, Montana, July 19, 1870, son of Norman and Emma F. (Cooper)

Bull's cabin and arrested him. He agreed to accompany them to the agency, but while dressing caused considerable delay, and during this time his followers began to congregate to the number of 150, so that when he was brought out of the house they had the police entirely surrounded. Sitting Bull then refused to go and called on his friends, the ghost dancers to rescue him. At this juncture one of them shot Lieutenant Bullhead. The lieutenant then shot Sitting Bull, who also received another shot and was killed outright. Another shot struck Sergeant Shavehead and then the firing became general, In about two hours the police had secured possession of Sitting Bull's house and driven their assailants into the woods.* Shortly

Johnson, natives of New York and Kentucky, respectively. Norman Johnson was born in 1836, and is of English descent. He resided for some time in Illinois. In 1862 he made the long and hazardous journey across the plains from Illinois to Montana, arriving at his destination in the fall. Like nearly all the newcomers to this Territory, his attention was first directed to the mines. After mining for a time at Bannack he went to Virginia City, and was at the latter place during all the early excitement that was experienced in that mining camp. He identified himself with the best element of the camp and did his part toward putting an end to the crime, murder and lawlessness that threatened the life and property of every one. He was not only a member of the Vigilant Committee, but was also identified with every enterprise which had for its object the best interests of the miners and pioneer settlers. It was in Virginia City that Mr. Johnson met and married Miss Cooper, she having come to Montana in 1869. They removed to Bozeman in 1873 and purchased a farm, upon which they resided until 1883. That year they sold out and came to the Bitter Root valley. Mr. Johnson owns a fine farm of 200 acres near Corvallis, to the improvement and cultivation of which he has devoted much time and attention, and on this farm he has lived since 1883. He and his wife have eight children, all born in Montana, and all living, Charles M. being the oldest.

The subject of our sketch received his early education in his native State, and was afterward sent to school at Ada and to Oberlin College. After his return to Montana he accepted a position as bookkeeper, and was thus occupied until 1893, when the county of Ravalli was organized and he was appointed County Clerk and Recorder, the appointment being made by the Legislature. In this capacity he is now serving efficiently.

Politically, he is a Republican; fraternally, an I. O. O. F.

HON. C. K. HARDENBROOK, of Deer Lodge, Montana, dates his birth at Mount Gilead, Knox county, Ohio, November 7, 1847.

Mr. Hardenbrook is descended from Holland ancestors, who settled in America about the year 1720. Great-grandfather Ludowick Hardenbrook resided in New York, and Grandfather Hardenbrook removed from that State to Ohio at an early day. Five of the latter's sons fought in the war of 1812. Francis Hardenbrook, our subject's father, was born in Ohio, where the town of Mansfield now stands, in 1799. He married Miss Nancy Kelly, a native of Pennsylvania and a descendant of Irish ancestors. In 1848 they moved to Monmouth, Warren county, Illinois, where he improved a farm and where he resided until 1874. That year he removed to Iowa and retired from active life. He died in 1883, at the age of eighty-four years. His wife died at the age of fifty-four. They were members of the Presbyterian Church and were people of sterling qualities, highly respected by all who knew them. They had a family of thirteen children, eleven of whom grew to maturity and nine of that number are still living.

Charles Kelly Hardenbrook was their tenth child. He was one year old at the time the family moved to Illinois, and was educated in the public schools of that State and at Monmouth College. Upon leaving college, he came direct to Montana and engaged in mining operations, mining first at Cedar cfeek, Missoula county, and coming from there to Deer Lodge county, where he continued mining for ten years. In 1876 he was among the throng that sought the mining districts of the Black Hills. After returning from the Black Hills, he purchased 800 acres of land in Deer Lodge county and turned his attention to farming and stock-raising, in which he has since been interested, now making a specialty of raising horses. He is also still engaged in mining enterprises.

Their bravery and discipline received highest praise from Captain Fechet. The ghost dancers fled from their hiding places to the Cheyenne River Reservation, leaving their families and dead behind them. Their women who had taken part in the fight had been disarmed by the police and placed under guard and were turned over to the troops when they arrived. The losses were six policemen killed (including Bullhead and Shavehead, who soon died at the agency hospital) and one wounded. The attacking party lost eight killed and three wounded."—Report of Indian Commission for 1891.

Mr. Hardenbrook was married in 1878 to Miss Jennie Brice, a native of Missouri, and they have an interesting family of five children, all born in Montana, namely: Herbert B., Abby, Linda, Charles K., Jr., and Hilda K.

Mr. Hardenbrook has always affiliated with the Democratic party, and has been twice elected and served two terms as County Superintendent of Schools in his county. In 1889 he was elected a member of the first State Legislature of Montana, and while in that honorable body he served on a number of important committees, among which was the Committee on Ways and Means and Education. He has always been deeply interested in the advancement of educational affairs and has done much in this direction for his county. Mr. Hardenbrook is an active member of the Masonic order, belonging to both the blue lodge and the chapter at Deer Lodge and is a Past Master of the former. Both he and his wife are members of the order of the Eastern Star, and she is identified with the Presbyterian Church. The Hardenbrook family are among the most estimable people of the city.

EUGENE STARK, one of the reliable business men of Virginia City and a Montana pioneer of 1863, is a native of Ohio, born in Cincinnati, February 22, 1843.

Mr. Stark is a descendant of French ancestry. His father, Valiant Stark, came from France to New York in 1830, and in 1835 removed from there to Cincinnati. A musician and composer, he was for many years prominently connected with that profession. While in Cincinnati he was for seven years professionally connected with the St. Xavier College. Later he was prominently engaged in his profession at St. Louis, where he died in 1860. At this writing, 1893, his widow still survives, now in her eighty-fourth year. They had nine children, of whom five are living. Eugene was their fourth born. He was educated in Chillicothe and Cincinnati, and since his eleventh year he has earned his own living.

When he was twelve years old Mr. Stark began to learn the trade of watchmaker, and was in that business for eight years in the East. In 1863, in company with eight others, he started from Atchinson for California. At the Sweetwater they met the Stewart party and were influenced by them to come to Montana. Others joined their party from time to time, and on the 4th of July, 1863, they landed safe at Bannack. Mr. Stark made the long journey most of the way on foot. After remaining at Bannack about two months, he came to Alder Gulch, where he has since been in business and thoroughly identified with the interest of the place. He first engaged in mining at Brown's Gulch and met with satisfactory success. From there he returned to Virginia City and opened a jewelry store, thus becoming the pioneer in that business of the town. He was also engaged in erecting cabins, and with "the boys" went to all the stampedes and did considerable prospecting throughout the county, as well as traversing the whole Territory. For a time he was engaged in mining at Butte City. In 1866 he returned to Virginia City again. And next we find him successively running a billiard hall, restaurant and watchmaking business. From 1873 to 1876 he conducted the last named business at Deer Lodge; moved back to Virginia City, and from 1876 till 1880 was in business here; and since the last date he has been a ranch owner. He is now engaged in the stock business, making a specialty of Norman-Percheron horses. He owns the jewelry store on the corner of Jackson and Wallace streets, and has his office there.

In 1861 Mr. Stark enlisted for service in the Union ranks, and served under Generals Fremont and Halleck for three months, after which his company was disbanded and he was honorably discharged. He is now an active member of the G. A. R. Also he belongs to the A. O. U. W., in which he has served as Foreman and Financier. For two years he has served as a member of the City Council, and in every way possible he has aided in the growth and development of the place. When the business men of the city decided to build a telegraph line to Darris he became interested in the enterprise, took stock in it, and took charge of the construction of the line; and in this way he brought his town into more intimate connection with the rest of the world. After its completion he had charge of the office a year, and he also served for some time as treasurer of the company. Another organization with which Mr. Stark is intimately connected is the Pioneer Society of Madison county, which he helped to organize and of which he was elected first secretary.

A resident of Montana since before he reached his majority, Mr. Stark has had an extensive experience here. Through all these years he has so conducted himself as to have the entire confidence of all with whom he has had dealings.

DENIS COLLINS, who resides in the Middle Ruby valley, near Laurin, is a Montana pioneer of 1863 and a prominent stock-farmer. A brief sketch of his life is herewith presented.

CHAPTER XXIX.

PLACER MINING—PROFIT AND LOSS REDUCED TO SCIENTIFIC CALCULATION—MONTANA'S GOLD PRODUCT UP TO 1894—ORIGINAL DEPOSITS—GOLD DUST—THE MILLS OF GOD—HOW GOLD DUST GOT TO MISSOURI AND OTHER REMOTE PLACES—PROSPECTING BY THE LIGHT OF SCIENCE—MONTANA MINERALS—PRECIOUS STONES—WATER AND WOOD—IRON CAPS—IRON DEPOSITS.

BY DR. G. C. SWALLOW.

This chapter on gold deposits in placer mines, and also a following one on the mineral wealth of the various counties of Montana, are from the pen of a learned scientist who was famous in his line of work long before Montana had a name or a place on the maps. I am grateful for it, although not entirely in line with my own theories, which I should not have intruded had this reached me in time, but, like the special article on the history of the Republican party in Montana, it came too late either to take proper place in the order of this work or appear in entirety, as, I regret to say, some of the early data are already in print from my own far less capable hand.

THE profits of placer mining can be calculated with as much certainty as the profits of selling groceries or of raising a crop of wheat. By properly prospecting the amount of gold in each cubic yard of any given placer can be determined with great certainty; and when we know the character of the boulders and dirt, the grade of the bed-rock, the position and extent of the dumping-ground, and the amount and fall of the water, the cost of working a cubic yard can be very accurately calculated.

The following table gives the annual product of our gold mines:

The great difficulty in the way of successful and more successful placer mining, is partial ownership of the gulches. In early times the gulches were taken by claims, of greater or less extent. Alder Gulch and almost all our placers were taken up in this way. This would do where men could make fortunes with rockers, shovel and sluice box; but with the giant and other improved apparatus the entire gulch must be worked to give success. Partial owners of gulches should unite or sell out that the millions in these idle gulches may be added to our scant circulation.

"Placer" is a Spanish word, meaning pleasure and delight. When the uneasy prospector discovered the shining dust in Last Chance, on which the business part of Helena is built, they were certainly both pleased and delighted, and very properly called it a "placer." The Spaniards called these deposits "placers," where native gold was found in loose sand and gravel, above or upon the consolidated strata called "bed-rock." They are most commonly found in mountain gulches, in sands washed by rivers, and sometimes in the gravels of the drift deposits. All gold, so far as known, was originally deposited in veins imbedded in quartz or other minerals, and that now found in placers has been worn out of these veins by the action of the weather, water and glaciers, and deposited with the decomposed rocks in its present positions in gulches and river beds.

During the countless ages since the gold was deposited in the veins of the rocks, and these rocks were elevated into mountains, the agents above named have worn away vast quantities of the rocks, and those containing veins of gold, and carried the materials and the gold down into the gulches and out into the valleys, form-

Denis Collins was born in county Cork, Ireland, in 1831, son of Michael and Ellen (Caughlin) Collins, worthy and respected farmers. After the birth of their third child Mrs. Collins died, Denis at that time being only four years of age. His father lived to be sixty.

In 1852 the subject of our sketch emigrated to America, landing at New York, where he worked for wages until the spring of 1860. At that time he crossed the plains to Colorado, arriving at his destination on the 1st of May and at once giving his attention to mining and prospecting, taking out some gold. In the spring of 1863 he left Denver (then a small place) to come to Montana, attracted hither by the gold excitement. At Bannack he secured employment in the mines at $10 per day. He washed the dirt after hauling it a mile, and at that also he received $10 a day. Next he came to Virginia City and mined on his own account. He was without money when he landed in Virginia City, for the noted Plummer had followed him when he left Bannack and had taken his oxen and $36—all the money he had. Here, however, he met with success. He employed three men and they all took out from one to three hundred dollars per day, and he himself in a single day took out $202. When winter came on he sold his claim for $4,000 and went to Bivin's Gulch, where, with Aleck McCoy as partner, he had two flumes and was successful in securing considerable gold. He remained there five years. Then he turned his attention to ranching, taking up 160 acres of land in Ruby valley. In the fall of 1881 he sold this property to J. B. Laurin, after which he purchased his present fine farm of 500 acres, paying $10,500 for the same. Here he now resides, prosperously engaged in raising horses and cattle. He has two fine stock horses, a Clyde and a shire, and also has some fine Devonshire cattle.

Mr. Collins is in politics a Democrat, and in religion a devout Catholic. During his residence in Montana he has witnessed its wonderful transformation, and is justly proud of its growth and development. He has a wide acquaintance and is favorably known by most of Montana's pioneers.

GEORGE M. HAYS, assistant cashier of the first National Bank of Billings, was born in Jefferson county, Pennsylvania, in 1862, a son of John L. and Sarah E. (Miller) Hays, of Irish and Scotch descent. The ancestors were among the early settlers of Pennsylvania. The father of our subject was a prominent Baptist minister. George attended school in Erie, Pennsylvania, and also the high schools of Cleveland, Ohio. Seeking the wider field of opportunities for young men in the West, he located in Billings, Montana, in the spring of 1783, when the place was in its infancy, and has devoted his time, means and energy in the improvement of the town. Mr. Hays was appointed Deputy County Clerk of Yellowstone county, under Dr. H. H. Bole, the first County Clerk; and during that time he was also Deputy County Treasurer; was elected County Clerk and Recorder in 1886, re-elected in 1889, and elected Clerk of the District Court from 1890 until 1893. He was also elected the first City Treasurer after the incorporation of Billings. This has always been a Republican county, but by his fitness, devotion to business and genial courtesy to all, Mr. Hays has rendered himself so deservedly popular that he has been liberally supported by his Republican friends. He is Past Master of Ashlar Lodge, No. 29, A. F. & A. M., is Eminent Commander in the Commandery, and holds an office in Algeria Temple at Helena.

Mr. Hays was married in November, 1886, to Jennie Jones, a daughter of Thomas Jones, a native of Wales, but now deceased. Three children have been born to this union: Donald L., John Lambert and Ethel Maude. Mr. Hays has taken an active interest in all enterprises conducive to the growth and prosperity of the town, county and State. He is chairman of the County Democratic Committee, a member of the State Central Committee, and a member of the Montana Board of World's Fair Commission, representing Yellowstone county. Mrs. Hays is a member of the Congregational Church.

MORTIMER HEWLETT LOTT is the founder of the town of Twin Bridges, Madison county, Montana, and as such is deserving of more than a passing notice on the pages of this book.

Mr. Lott is of German descent. His grandfather, Harmonious Lott, was a seaman. He lived on Long Island, was the father of six children, and lived to be ninety years old. One of his sons, Hewlett Lott, the father of Mortimer H., was born on Long Island in 1789; married Maria Ditmar, a native of the same place. Both the Lotts and the Ditmars were of German ancestry, and both families had moved to Pennsylvania in 1814, where they became large land owners and founders of the town of Lottsville, Warren county. There Mr. Lott, the subject of our sketch, was born, December 25, 1827. He was one of a family of four children, two sons and two daughters. Their father died there in his eighty-fifth year, and their mother was about the same age when she died. She was a Methodist and he was an Episcopalian.

ing the deposits of clay, sand, gravel and gold. But the most efficient agents in this work were glaciers or streams of ice, such as are now at work in the mountains of Alaska, grinding out the precious metals.

The evidence is absolutely conclusive that there were vast ages when the temperature of the northern hemisphere was much colder than now, and when all the gulches and gorges of the Rocky mountains were filled with glaciers or rivers of ice. There is nothing in the nature of art so well calculated as glaciers to grind up the rocks and carry the sands, gravels, boulders and gold down into the gulches and deposit them as

The subject of our sketch spent the first twenty-four years of his life on the farm on which he was born. In 1857 he moved to Kansas and settled on the Little Blue river in Marshall county, where he took up 160 acres of land. He and his brother, John S., were together there, and they became the owners of 1,000 acres, which they cultivated three years, but on account of its being a malaria district they were obliged to seek another location and crossed the plains to Pike's Peak. Then followed months and years of prospecting, their travels taking them over Colorado, into New Mexico and Arizona, and finally to Montana, the most of their expeditions being fruitless and attended with many hardships. They discovered Big Hole and began to work it on the 1st of August, 1862, but, hearing of the discovery of gold at Bannack, they quit work and went to that place, finding about 200 men had got there in advance of them. There our subject, in partnership with Hiram Conly, purchased a claim on Jemmie's Bar, which they mined for three months, and in that short time took out $20,000. In July, 1863, Mr. Lott went to Alder Gulch, where a large number of miners had already congregated, making the journey from Bannack to that place on horseback and carrying his gold dust with him. For about fifteen miles of the trip he was pursued by the road agents, but as he ran his horse and as darkness came on he eluded his pursuers and reached his destination in safety. He did not engage in mining in Virginia City. Going to Salt Lake he purchased 100 head of cattle, drove them to Virginia City and sold them to the miners for beef. In November of that same year he was again joined by his brother, and they purchased a stock of goods and opened a store, and as prices were high and money plenty they did a prosperous business. Since then their interests have been identical. In 1865 they sold their store and came to where the prosperous town of Twin Bridges now stands.

Here they secured a tract of rich farming land two miles square, and in 1867 they built two bridges, one across Beaver Head river and the other across Big Hole river. This brought the travel to their place and resulted in the founding of the town. They first engaged in farming. During the first two years they paid $10,000 for seed oats and had the misfortune to have both crops eaten up by the grasshoppers. After this they turned their attention more especially to hay-making and to stock-raising. As many of the travelers stopped at their place and asked for entertainment, Mr. Lott and his brother were induced to open a hotel, and it was no unusual thing for them to entertain as many as 100 people at once. Indeed, nearly all the early pioneers of Montana stopped with them. In 1867-8 they ran a mercantile business in connection with their hotel. In 1873 a grange store was started here, under the management of George T. Lewis, and did a large business for a number of years, but was finally abandoned, and in 1886 the Messrs. Lott again opened a store. In 1889 they platted the town of Twin Bridges. They have given much time and means to improving the town, and to that end became deeply interested in educational affairs and gave 100 acres of land to induce a normal school to locate here. A substantial brick building was erected and a good school has since been maintained. They made a strenuous effort to get the State Normal School established at Twin Bridges, but failed in that, and in lieu of it secured the location of the State Orphan Asylum here, the building for which was erected in 1891. To this institution they donated twenty-two acres. They have also donated lots to the different religious organizations.

The subject of our sketch was married May 20, 1880, to Miss Melvina J. Carson, a native of Pennsylvania, and they have had four children, only two of whom, Maria Eliza and Mortimer J., are living. Mrs. Lott is a member of the Methodist Church.

Politically, Mr. Lott was a Whig, but since the organization of the Republican party he has been identified with it, and has filled various important public positions. When he first settled at Alder Gulch he was elected Recorder of the mining district, and when the road agents began their work of murder and robbery it was in Mr. Lott's store that the notorious Ives was guarded after he was arrested until he could be tried and hung. Mr. Lott drew up the papers for the miners to sign, in which they agreed to stand by each other when they started out to find the murderers of the Dutchman; and out of this first organization grew the Vigilant Committee. In 1871, he was elected Probate Judge of the county, and served two years. He also served one term as County Commissioner, was a Justice of the Peace for several years, and for twelve years was Postmaster at Twin Bridges. In 1891 he built the brick hotel in which he and his family are now located, and where they entertain in a most hospitable manner the traveling public. Mr. Lott is a charter member and Past Master of West Gate Lodge, No. 27, A. F. & A. M.

we find them in our placers. These facts establish a good knowledge of the action of glaciers and the manner in which they grind up the rocks and carry down deposits of sands and clays, and boulders thus produced will help the miner to understand where he should look for the richer portions of the placers thus formed. This knowledge of glaciers would explain many puzzling problems about "bed-rocks," "bars," "cross channels" and "ancient rivers."

On the supposition that the gold was brought down by streams of water, it is difficult to explain how so much of it got upon high bars and why the most of it was left on the north and JOHN TEMPLE, a Montana pioneer of 1863, and now one of the respected farmers of Ruby valley, is a native of Ireland, born in the town of Killegonda, county Donegal, February 15, 1823. His remote ancestors were English but several generations of the family were born on the Emerald Isle. In his native town he received his early education, and in 1842, about the time he was merging into manhood, he emigrated to America, crossing the ocean on the Rob Roy, and being forty-two days in making the voyage.

Soon after he landed in New York Mr. Temple secured a position as clerk, and subsequently was in business for himself there. In 1857 he removed to St. Louis, and was engaged in business in that city until the Civil war broke out. While in New York, in 1851, he had married Miss Elizabeth Josephine Moultona, a native of that city and a daughter of Irish parents, and in 1861, accompanied by his wife, he crossed the plains with a mule team to Colorado. Upon his arrival there he located in Central City. For two years he was engaged in freighting. In 1863, laying in a sufficient supply of provisions to last them a year, he fitted out an ox team and came to Montana. There were fifteen well-armed men in the company with which he traveled, and, although they were troubled by the Indians to some extent, they succeeded in making the journey in safety, and on the 3d of August landed at Alder Gulch.

Arrived in Montana, Mr. Temple at once engaged in mining and met with a good degree of success. He employed as high as twenty-two men in his claim and in three years took out about $50,000. After that he purchased the ranch on which he has since resided, 320 acres, located three miles west of Sheridan. His principal farm products have been hay, grain and stock. Some of his first crops were destroyed by grasshoppers, but by persevering industry and economy he was finally prospered, and now in his old age is comfortably situated. The little log cabin that was on the ranch when he purchased it gave way in 1874 to a more comfortable log house, and in 1881 he built the frame dwelling in which he now resides.

Mr. and Mrs. Temple became the parents of one child, Mary Jane, born in New York. She is now the wife of Hiram Brundridge, and resides in California. Mrs. Temple's death occurred in California, January 4, 1893. On account of her failing health Mr. Temple had taken her to that sunny land, hoping that a change of climate would be beneficial, but it proved of no avail and she died there. His home is now presided over by Mrs. Ann Frew, daughter of Hiram Brundridge and widow of William R. Frew. Mr. Frew died August 10, 1892, leaving her with five children, William R., Ellen, May, Alice and George Kenneth, all of whom make their home with Mr. Temple.

Mr. Temple was reared an Episcopalian, and is a member of the church at Sheridan. In politics he has always been a Democrat. During the excitement caused by the road agents at Alder Gulch in an early day, Mr. Temple allied himself with the Vigilants and did his part toward putting a stop to the murders and robberies that were being committed. He was a witness to the hanging of seven of the desperadoes. By his kind heart, his genial manner and his many sterling traits of character he has won the respect and esteem of all who know him.

B. F. SEC, one of the prominent farmers and stock raisers of the Bitter Root valley, and a Montana pioneer of 1864, was born in Marion county, Missouri, November 22, 1829, being of German descent. His ancestors located in Virginia, in the Colonial days. George Sec, the great-great-grandfather of our subject, served in the Revolutionary war, and lived to attain the age of 105 years. The paternal lineage down to our subject have been natives of Virginia, and is recorded as follows: Great-grandfather, George Sec; grandfather, Frederick Sec; and father, George Sec. The last named moved to Missouri in 1826, and was there married in that year, to Malinda Garner, a native of Kentucky and a daughter of John Garner, one of the early pioneers of that State. Mr. and Mrs. Sec reared, in Missouri, a family of nine children, six of whom still survive. The father died in 1885, at the age of sixty-seven years, and his widow departed this life two years afterward.

Benjamin Franklin Sec, our subject, received his education in the private schools. In May, 1850, he crossed the plains with ox teams to California, and, although many of the emigrants that year were troubled with the Indians, the party of which he was a member arrived safely at their destination on August 20th, of the same year. Mr. Sec began the life of a miner in El Dorado county, and in 1851 was a member of a company who, at a great expense, tried to dam the Mokelumne river, but were unsuccessful. After remaining in California eleven years he returned to Missouri, with only a few hundred dollars, but with much experience. He was there married January 31, 1861, to Miss Margaret Jones, a daughter of Calvin Jones, a native of Kentucky. In the spring of 1864, a son, Franklin, was born to them in that State.

With his wife and child Mr. Sec again made the trip across the plains with ox teams. At the Platte river the east sides of gulches; but these are just the places where glaciers would melt most and leave most of their freight. When we remember that a glacier is a river of ice running very slow, that speed is nothing when we have time enough, that these rivers of ice have frozen into them the loose rocks along their courses, that they were at times hundreds and thousands of feet deep, that as they slid along they would break off projecting rocks and grind all beneath them to powder, that they would carry along with them everything ground and unground and deposit them wherever the ice of the glacier melted, we have important facts to help in min-

Indians succeeded in stealing the horses of the entire company, but the trip was made in safety with ox teams, and they arrived in Virginia City, Montana, in the month of August. With a number of others Mr. Sec went to the Big Hole river, purchased 160 acres of land, erected a cabin, and began life in the wilds of Montana. They were thirty-five miles from Virginia City, where they secured their supplies. He sold hay at that place for $50 a ton. In the spring of 1865, at the outbreak of the Last Chance Gulch excitement, Mr. Sec engaged in freighting to that place and also conducted a dairy, receiving $1.50 per gallon for his milk and $1.50 per pound for butter. He received from $12 to $25 a day for hauling freight. In the following July he went to the Blackfoot country, purchased a claim on Carpenter's Bar, afterward sold the same for $75 and resumed the freighting and dairy business. He next followed mining at Washington Gulch, and during the following winter was engaged in hunting deer in Boulder valley. On one occasion he saw approaching him six deer, at which he shot, but missed his aim. The deer lay down in the brush, and by walking around on the bluff above them he succeeded in shooting the entire number, having used only a small squirrel gun. In the following spring Mr. Sec returned to California Gulch, where he again resumed dairying and freighting. The miners made him the custodian of their gold dust, and at one time there was more gold in his cabin than one man could carry. In 1867 he located on a ranch in the Bitter Root valley, where he was among the very first settlers, and where at that time the Flathead Indians were plentiful, but not troublesome. Mr. Sec found a ready sale for his products at Helena and Virginia City, but after remaining there twelve years he gave the ranch to his son Franklin, and purchased his present farm on Skalkaho river. He now owns 400 acres of fine farming land, where, in addition to general farming he raises a fine grade of Short-horn cattle and Norman horses. In 1883 he built a good residence on his place, where the pioneer now resides with his family in the enjoyment of well-earned peace and plenty. Mr. Sec still owns an interest in the Mineral Hill, Moss Back, Lent and Arkansas mines, which contain gold and silver. They assay as high as $27 in gold and $60 in silver to the ton. Our subject is also the owner of the Eureka Hot Springs, located ten miles above Grantsdale, on the Sleeping Child creek. The curative properties of the waters of these springs have been tested and are considered of great value in a remedial way.

Mr. and Mrs. Sec have had nine children born to them in Montana, as follows: Samuel Clay, William, Henry D., George C., Maggie, Mary, Alice, Kittie and Armstrong Custer. Mr. Sec has lent a willing hand in all enterprises for the benefit of the county. When the Indians made the raid on the settlers of the Bitter Root valley, he was not slow to volunteer with his neighbors for the protection of their homes, and was at the Lo Lo to aid in a fight with the Nez Perces. The prompt action taken by the settlers turned the Indians aside, and averted the danger. In his early history Mr Sec was a Whig; afterward became a stanch Democrat, but recently, not being pleased with the actions of his party on the silver question, joined the ranks of the People's party. He has acquired a good reputation for integrity, has the respect and good-will of all old Montana pioneers, and is well and favorably known in the entire Bitter Root valley.

HORACE AGARD SHOEMAKER, of Billings, is a native of "York State" and a lineal descendant of the Thurston family, who trace their ancestry back hundreds of years, in European countries, and whose family tree has produced many individuals prominent in religious, educational, political and medical branches in the old countries, and later many eminent men and women in the United States. Mr. Shoemaker is a man of fine physique, genial in social life, well educated and has that peculiar magnetism that wins friendship readily. He quickly reads personal characteristics in the expression of a stranger, is a gentleman of warm friendly attachments and very determined in his convictions, a devout advocate of morals, temperate in his habits and uncompromising in his opposition to evil in all its phases.

His mother, whose name before marriage was Mariah Thurston, was a daughter of Levi and Abigail (Newton) Thurston, of Nichols, New York, and born in Keene, New Hampshire, May 19, 1797, and was married to Daniel McDowell Shoemaker, November 24, 1818, in Owego, New York. Her husband was born at Water Gap, Delaware county, Pennsylvania, February 24, 1795, a son of Daniel and Anna (McDowell) Shoemaker, of Shroudsburg, same State. He was a farmer and later resided in Nichols, New York, where he died November 26, 1873; and she died December 26, 1874,—both earnest and efficient workers in the Methodist Church. He was Steward and Clerk of the Board of Church Trustees of the Asbury Methodist Episcopal Church for forty years, which church edifice he was the chief mover in building, in 1824. His house was the Methodist itinerant's home. The first

ing. Hence the boulders, gravels, sands and gold are found on the bars and benches, and in the gulches where they opened out into valleys; for there the glaciers would melt and drop their loads. The ice would melt most on the north and east sides of the glaciers, where the sun strikes the warmest on the mountain sides opposite; and there they would drop the most gold, as we find it in Montana. There are exceptions, easily accounted for by the shape of the gulches.

quarterly meeting on his circuit was held in his large corn house, and at his residence sixty dined and forty staid over night! Going thirty miles in a big wagon or on horseback to attend such meetings was common in those days. With the hard work of spinning for the manufacture of all the sheets used in domestic life and of all the wearing apparel for the family, the scouring of floors, etc., it is no wonder that the mother became an invalid long before her death.

Their children were four in number, as follows:

Hiram Warner Shoemaker, born February 5, 1819, married October 25, 1850, to Ellen Scott; was Sheriff of Tioga county, New York, four years; also express messenger and mail agent, and gained credit in all the positions he held.

Elizabeth Nyce Shoemaker, born June 21, 1821, taught school for twenty years, and married, November 24, 1878, Rev. Francis M. Chubbuck, of Hooper's Valley, New York, who was born in Orwell, Pennsylvania, March 16, 1813. He served under General Banks in the late Civil war, and died May 15, 1890.

Lyman Thurston Shoemaker, the youngest child, born in 1833, married Elizabeth Little, of Kingston, Wyoming valley, Pennsylvania, in 1857, leaving two daughters,—Ellen Reeves, of Port Jervis, New York, and Elouise Carlisle, of Brooklyn, same State. For sixteen years before his death, in 1874, at Port Jervis, he was a scientific engineer, running between Port Jervis and Jersey City.

Horace Agard Shoemaker, born February 22, 1831, educated at Wyoming Seminary, was connected with the Erie Railroad and North Branch Canal for fifteen years, generally in the capacity of civil engineer; an intelligent, scientific farmer now in Nichols, Tioga county, New York; an educated Methodist and a prominent correspondent for various periodicals. He spent eighteen months surveying a railway line from Columbia, South Carolina, into the mountains of east Tennessee, whence he was recalled to the New York, Lake Erie & Western Railway by Superintendents Post and Riddle, and placed in charge of filling Cascade Gulf, between Susquehanna, Pennsylvania, and Deposit, New York. He remained with the Erie company fifteen years, always holding responsible positions. He was married October 8, 1856, to Esther Lyons Comfort, who was born February 15, 1834, a daughter of James and Mary (McKune) Comfort, of Harmony, Pennsylvania. She was educated at Wyoming (Pennsylvania) Seminary, taught school several years and was an earnest Christian, and died February 7, 1891. Their children are three in number, viz.:

Hiram Ralph Shoemaker, A. M., who was born May 30, 1859, graduated in the classical course in the Potsdam State Normal and Training School in 1879, and as A. B. at Syracuse University in 1884; ordained Deacon at Canadaigua, New York, October 10, 1886, and became a member of the Central New York Methodist Conference, same year, at Mottville, New York; married, December 29, 1886, to Margaret Katherine Schneider, who was born October 6, 1863, a daughter of Jacob and Elizabeth (Zaeger) Schneider, of Syracuse, New York; their children are Esther E., born April 22, 1888; and Caroline M., born February 27, 1890.

George Winthrop Shoemaker, who was born in Owego, New York, June 8, 1862, graduated in the four-years classical course in the Potsdam State Normal and Training School in 1883, and is now a physician and druggist in Billings, Montana. For many years he was a prominent educator in his native State, was principal of the Academy in Port Jervis, New York, in 1883–84, and in Montana was the principal of the Billings schools for two years, and forced to give up teaching on account of impaired health. He was married June 26, 1886, to Alice G. Swift, who was born December 19, 1864, in Potsdam, New York; she also is a graduate of the State Normal and Training School, at that place. Their children are Harold, Ralph, Horace A., Jr., Martha G. and Gertrude E.

Martha Elizabeth Shoemaker, born in Owego, New York, October 2, 1864, graduated in two courses at the State Normal and Training School at Potsdam, and is now principal of the high school at Bozeman, Montana. She also has taught at Billings, this State, and in Windsor, Broome county, Middleburg, Schoharie county, Elmira and Rochelle, New York, and in Mont Clair, New Jersey. She was nominated by the Republican party in September, 1894, for the office of Superintendent of Schools, for Yellowstone county, Montana, for a two-year term, and the prospects are bright for her election, for she naturally has superior talents as a teacher and as a social entertainer, making all her pupils her permanent friends.

William Zosel, one of the prominent farmers and horse-raisers of Deer Lodge county, Montana, and now a resident of Deer Lodge, was born in Saxony, Germany, in 1850.

His parents, William and Caroline (Digh) Zosel, emigrated with their family to America in 1855. The father was a manufacturer of linen cloth in the old country, but after coming to America settled on a farm in Missouri and now resides at Canton, that State, he and his wife being countless ages, and our placers are their tailings. We, however, have some placers not produced by glaciers. The Nevada creek placer mines are a noted example of placers produced by the ordinary action of weather and water. They extend along the base of the mountain for miles, and were formed by the decomposition of the granite which forms the slopes of the mountain. This granite is full of gold veins and is itself rich in gold, and decomposes rapidly; and the materials are washed down by rains and snow. The gold is found in all parts of it from grass roots to bed-rock. Gold is also found in the sands of streams which have been washed each about seventy years of age. At the time they left Germany their family consisted of five children, William being the third, and afterward four other children were born to them. All are still living except one.

William was reared on his father's farm in Missouri, remaining at home until six months before he attained his majority, his educational advantages being somewhat limited. After leaving home he secured employment as a farm hand, at first receiving $20 per month and board, and later having his wages increased to $25. In 1872 he came to Montana, in company with William Biggs, bringing in a herd of cattle for John S. Pemberton and R. S. Kelly, for whom he worked the first winter, at $40 per month, boarding himself. From the fall of 1873 he was foreman of the Pemberton horse and cattle ranch until he began business for himself, receiving $100 a month.

In 1879 he returned East, and on the 18th of December married Miss Louise Hetzler, a native of Canton, Missouri. Immediately after his marriage he brought his wife to Montana and filed a homestead claim for 160 acres of railroad land, five miles and a half east of Deer Lodge. On this tract of land they built a little home and began life independently. He raised grain on his own land, and on the free range near by he kept his horses and cattle, and as the years rolled by his honest industry was rewarded with success. Soon he turned his attention to raising fine trotting horses, in which he has met with excellent success, selling his colts for from $100 up to $500 each.

Mr. Zosel and his partner, Mr. John Randolph, located a number of mines. The Carbonite Extension they sold for $10,000, and the Bonanza, a good silver property, Mr. Zosel still owns. Their mines are located in what is called the Zosel district because of its proximity to his farm.

In 1892 Mr. Zosel built a nice residence in Deer Lodge, where he and his family have since lived, he having moved to town in order to secure good educational advantages for his children. His family is composed of nine bright and interesting children, all born in Montana except Mattie E., who was born in Canton, Missouri, in 1884, their names being as follows: Clara L., Alma May, Mattie E., Mary Belle, John D., William H., Louis C., Charles P. and Annie Marguerette.

Mr. Zosel's parents are members of the Lutheran Church, in which faith they reared their children, and he and his wife are both members of this church. He is also identified with the I. O. O. F. and the A. O. U. W. Politically he is quite independent in his views.

JACOB E. VAN GUNDY, a prominent citizen of Deer Lodge and a Montana pioneer of 1865, dates his birth at Cincinnati, Ohio, October 9, 1834.

Mr. Van Gundy is of French and German descent. His father, Christian Von Gundy, was born in Alsace, France (now a part of Germany) in 1779, and was married in that country to Miss Catharine Ringenberg, a native of the same town in which he was born. In 1829 they emigrated to America, bringing with them their only child, Joseph. They rented a small farm of twenty-five acres, near the city of Cincinnati, Ohio, and the father was engaged in farming there up to 1840, at which time he found the farm too small to rendera support to his family, and moved to Campbell county, Kentucky, where he purchased a much larger farm. On this property he resided up to the time of his death, which occurred in 1854, in the seventy-fifth year of his age.

Jacob E. Van Gundy was thirteen years of age when his mother died, and after her death he returned to Cincinnati to live with a married sister, and attended school there for a time. When seventeen years of age he began life on his own account as a farm hand at $9 per month, and continued farm work until he was twenty. In 1855 he went to California, making the trip by way of the isthmus of Panama and landing at San Francisco, from which port he went direct to the gold diggings in Sierra county. After mining a short time, and being unsuccessful, he secured a clerkship in a store and continued there until 1862. At that time he went to Washoe, Nevada, on a prospecting tour, after which he prospected for silver leads and tried quartz mining in Humboldt county, Nevada. Not meeting with success at that place, next we find him in October, 1864, at Silver City, Idaho, working for Marion Moore and Colonel Fagus, on the Oro Fino quartz mines, at $3 per day and board.

In April, 1865, he and six others fitted up a pack train of horses and started for Montana, making the journey along Snake river, and keeping guard every night to protect themselves from the hostile Indians. The history of Mr. Van Gundy's early life in Montana is not unlike that of many other pioneers of the State—going from camp to camp, lured on with the prospect of striking a rich find, and seemingly never discouraged. He first went to Virginia City, from there to Helena, and then to the Blackfoot country, finally locating a claim, from which, in the language of the miner, he made "grub." William Cherry and John Ulery were his com-away from the places where the glaciers deposited it. There are golden sands and gravels thousands of miles away from all veins of gold. A few years since a great excitement was created in Missouri by the discovery of gold in the drift gravels of that State. Two years ago a company was formed to work a similar deposit in Dakota. Such deposits, so far away from the sources of the gold, are very limited and never pay for working; for the manner in which they were formed precludes the possibility of extensive deposits. The glaciers of Alaska are making just such deposits as these in the Northern Pacific ocean. Glaciers many miles wide and several hundred feet deep are flowing from the mountains of Alaska and bearing to the ocean panions at this time. He afterward owned other claims at various points, and continued mining without any very great success until December, 1869, when, as the exposure and hard work were making inroads upon his health, he was obliged to give up mining. His next venture was in a saloon business at Beartown, where he bought out James Talbott's establishment for $700. In four days from that time came the Cedar creek stampede and all who could left Beartown. Thus Mr. Van Gundy soon found himself $1,500 in debt and had every reason to be discouraged. While he was making preparations to leave in August of the same year, the tide turned, and Beartown enjoyed another season of prosperity; so that by November of that same year he was not only able to pay his bills but also had $1,200 in cash. He continued in business there until 1873, when he sold out and paid $1,600 for a mining claim in Phelan Gulch, which he operated during the summer of 1874 with fair success and for some time thereafter.

In the spring of 1874 Mr. Van Gundy formed a partnership with Robert Fenner and established the Western Brewery at Deer Lodge. This partnership lasted until May 1, 1881, when our subject purchased Mr. Fenner's interest. The following year he made extensive improvements in the brewery and continued the business on a larger scale, selling his product in Butte City and Anaconda, as well as at Deer Lodge. In 1886 he sold a half interest in the establishment to Mr. Miller. In 1892 he leased Mr. Miller's interest, and has since been operating the brewery alone, finding a ready market for his beer in his home town and the various towns along the Northern Pacific Railroad.

Mr. Van Gundy is still interested in mining operations, having invested largely in this enterprise. Among other mines in which he is interested is the Mammoth quartz mine, which is said to be of great value. Mr. Van Gundy is also deeply interested in the material improvement of the town in which he lives. In 1887 he built a fine brick block, 46 x 80 feet, two stories, and located in the center of the business portion of the town. The first floor is used for business purposes and the upper story is elegantly finished and furnished and occupied by the West Side Club. He also built the comfortable and attractive residence here which he and his family occupy.

Mr. Van Gundy was married, in 1879, to Mrs. C. C. Lyons, widow of H. H. Lyons. She is a native of St. Joseph, Missouri. She has two daughters by Mr. Lyons: Cornelia May and Evalina Montana, and she and Mr. Van Gundy have four children: Elmer Jacob, Kattie Alveretta, J. Emory and Phebe May.

In fraternal organizations Mr. Van Gundy is prominent and active. For years he has been identified with the Masonic order, Blue Lodge, Chapter and Commandery, and is Past High Priest of the order. He has passed all the chairs of the I. O. O. F. and has represented some of the orders in the Grand Lodge; is a Knight of Pythias; and is Past Master Workman of the A. O. U. W., and a member of the D. of H., and was one of the organizers of the Grand Lodge of the A. O. U. W. in Montana. Politically, he affiliates with the Republican party.

JESSE PATTERSON, a prominent farmer of Boulder valley, also vice-president of the First National Bank of Boulder, has long been identified with the interests of Montana, and as he is one of her representative citizens we take pleasure in presenting in this work the following sketch of his life.

Jesse Patterson was born twelve miles east of Columbus, Ohio, February 7, 1837, and is of Scotch-Irish ancestry. His great-grandfather, Joseph Patterson, the first of the family in this country, located in Pennsylvania. His son Joseph had seven sons, of whom Jesse, the third of the family, born July 12, 1797, was our subject's father. When a young man, this Jesse Patterson located in Franklin county, Ohio, where he was subsequently married to Miss Frances Drake, a native of Ohio and a daughter of Francis Drake, who had removed from Pennsylvania to that State. After their marriage they located on a farm in Franklin county, where they remained until 1846, at that time purchasing and removing to a farm in La Fayette county, Wisconsin, where they spent the residue of their lives, Mr. Patterson dying in March, 1856, and his wife passing away in 1869. Both were members of the Methodist Church for many years. In their lives they exemplified the teachings of the faith which they professed, and both were held in high esteem by all who knew them. Of their nine children, four are still living.

Jesse Patterson, their third son and fifth child, spent the first ten years of his life on their farm in Ohio and the rest of his youthful days in Wisconsin, working on the farm in summer and attending school in winter. In 1857 he secured 160 acres of Government land in Howard county, Iowa, where he made his home until the spring of 1864. Then, with his wife and two children, he crossed quantities of boulders, gravels and sands,—some of them containing gold. When these rivers of ice with their precious loads reach the sea, large masses break off and float away as icebergs; and wherever they melt they drop their freight of golden sands.

Similar deposits are sometimes found in our wide valleys far away from the mountains. These were formed by the glaciers flowing out into the valley before they were melted, or were floated out as icebergs when these valleys were lakes or bays of the ocean. Some of these abnormal deposits of gold in gravels so far from their mountain sources may have been carried by the great glacier that once covered nearly all North America as far south as St. Louis or Cincinnati.

Such were the modes in which our placers were formed. Vast bodies of moving ice frozen full of masses of rock, were the mills that the plains to Montana with the Townsend train, which was composed of fifty wagons. While the emigrant party were on the Powder river they were attacked by a large band of Cheyenne Indians and during the fight which followed four whites and about twelve Indians were killed, after which the Indians withdrew and allowed the emigrants to proceed without further molestation.

Mr. Patterson arrived in Virginia City August 10, 1864. He first engaged in hauling supplies to the mines, for which he received about $25 per day. Afterward he followed placer-mining. He was a party to the discovery of the mines at Blackfoot, called the Carpenter Bar diggings, which they worked from June until the following September. They employed about six men, and in three months took out $26,000. Mr. Patterson spent the winter in Trinity county, California, and in the spring brought a stock of groceries and dried fruits to Montana. His train was composed of three wagons, with four yoke of oxen to each wagon, and it was not until the latter part of August that he reached his destination. The following winter he spent in prospecting in the Salmon river mining district. In the spring he turned his attention to the lumber business, near Jefferson City; built one of the first sawmills in the county, and continued in that business for a period of fifteen years. Then he purchased 200 acres of land in Boulder valley, to which he subsequently added 160 acres more, and he has from time to time made improvements upon this place until now he has one of the best-paying farms in the county. Muskrat creek runs through his land, affording abundance of water for his stock. His cattle are a grade of Durhams, and he is giving considerable attention to the breeding of valuable draft and road horses of the Norman Percheron and Knox Belmont breeds. Besides being largely engaged in farming and stock-raising, Mr. Patterson has various other interests. He is a stockholder in several valuable mines and is vice-president of the First National Bank of Boulder. He helped to found this bank and is ranked with its heaviest stockholders.

Mr. Patterson was married, in Iowa, December 12, 1858, to Miss Martha E. Tolley, a native of Wisconsin. The Tolleys were for many years residents of Kentucky. Mr. and Mrs. Patterson have four children, namely: Mary Frances, wife of C. A. Darlington, Madison valley; Alice Ellen, wife of P. H. Park, of Jefferson county; Frederick Summit, and William Henry, now at home.

Notwithstanding his father was a radical Democrat and that he was reared under the influence of Democracy, Mr. Patterson has been a life-long Republican. He became a voter when the life of this country was in imminent danger; he cast his first Presidential vote for Lincoln, and he has ever been true to the principles of the party he then espoused.

Richard A. Reynolds, a Montana pioneer of 1864, and now one of the leading stock men of Beaver Head valley, was born in Wales of Welsh parentage.

His father, Owen Reynolds, was born in Wales, and came to America in 1842. He had married in his native land, and when he came to this country brought with him his wife and eight children, the subject of this sketch being then six weeks old. They settled at Utica, New York, where the father worked at his trade, that of blacksmith. In 1845 they removed to Kenosha county, Wisconsin, where he resided until the time of his death, which occurred in 1858, in the sixty-first year of his age. He had been a Methodist from early in life, and she was reared an Episcopalian. She died in the fifty-sixth year of her age.

Richard A. received his education at Pleasant Prairie, Kenosha county, and at fifteen years of age, after the death of his mother, began to do for himself as a farm hand, receiving $7 per month and board. Later he removed to northwestern Wisconsin, where he became the owner of land which he improved and sold; purchased again and improved and sold, and was farming his third farm when the great Civil war burst upon the country. He at once offered his services, but at first was not accepted on account of his having a sore leg, caused by the bursting of a blood vessel. In 1863, however, he recovered, was accepted, and was mustered into Company I, Thirteenth Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry. They served under General Sully, were sent on the first boat that went up the Yellowstone, and for a time guarded Sully's supplies. They had several skirmishes with the Sioux and with the Blackfoot Indians. Mr. Reynold's continued in service in the Northwest until the close of the war, was mustered out in September, 1865, and then returned to his home in Eau Claire county, Wisconsin.

ground the gold out of the quartz and deposited it in the beds and at the mouths of these ancient channels. These channels were plowed out by these ice-rivers armed with teeth of flint. These teeth have left their marks, deep scratches, on the surface of the rocks in our gulches and valleys.

With these facts in mind the prospector will find much aid in examining the form of the gulch, to determine where the glacier flowing through it would pile up its freight of golden sands, where the sun would strike it hottest and melt it most, and where it left most of the gravel; for these places would be the richest parts of the placer. In gulches bordered by high mountains, the north and east sides would have the most sun; there the ice river would spread out and melt and leave more or less of

The following spring Mr. Reynolds again came to Montana, this time for the benefit of his health. He crossed the plains with a wagon, three yoke of cattle and five cows. He also had flour, bacon, corn-meal and beans enough for a year's supply. In the party with which he traveled there were three families, and when traveling through the Indian country they joined with other parties until the company numbered thirty-five men. In the Black Hills they were twice corraled by Indians, and each time succeeded in driving them off. Once Mr. Reynolds recognized among them Indians he had known and befriended while in the service, and he pacified them with presents of tobacco. The company had started the 26th of May, and it was not until in November that they reached their destination in Beaver Head valley.

Mr. Reynolds "squatted" on lands on Blacktail Deer creek, where he still lives, and for three years drouth and grasshoppers destroyed his crops and he was obliged to work for wages at mining to earn his living. He mined somewhat on his own account and made a few good finds, getting out once, in a single afternoon, as high as $100; but everything thus found was used to work more ground, and when he left mining he was as poor as when he began. The little he now had left he invested in wild horses, which he broke and put to work hauling farm produce, which he bought in the valleys and sold at the mining camps. He now began to meet with prosperity. As fast as his horses well were broke they were sold, always at an advance on the purchase price, and their places filled again by wild colts.

Finally, becoming convinced that if there was anything he could handle successfully it was horses and sheep, he concluded to invest his little savings in the latter and add to his already growing band of horses from time to time as could be afforded. Accordingly he, with John F. Bishop, journeyed overland in 1869 to Oregon, where they bought a band of 1,400 sheep, Mr. Reynolds' share being 400 head. Their return on foot, driving the sheep before them, was necessarily slow, and they did not arrive on the home range until the winter had set in, having been five months on the road and enduring many hardships. This was the first band of stock sheep in this vicinity. He has continued in this business, with flattering success, until he now owns about 8,000 head, located in eastern Montana and western Dakota. His horses, however, have been most profitable, numbering sometimes as high as 500 full-blood American, both draft and roadsters, with stallions imported from England and France. He has also a fine herd of shorthorn cattle. In addition to his stock and farming interests, Mr. Reynolds, in 1889, with his brother-in-law, H. J. Thompson, bought and consolidated the two lumber yards in Dillon, and they deal extensively in lumber, also grain and hay, being one of the leading business houses in the country. They have erected several buildings in Dillon, among them a planing-mill and a large warehouse.

In politics Mr. Reynolds has always been a stanch Republican. He has served his county twice as County Commissioner, when a large Democratic majority made the election of a Republican a personal compliment.

In 1877, during the Indian raid made by the Nez Perces, he took his family to Virginia City for safety, and with his team carried volunteers a distance of forty-four miles to the Blacktail crossing of the Salt Lake road, in the night, and returned to Virginia City with dispatches.

Mr. Reynolds was married in 1873 to Mrs. Virginia Johnson, a sister of the Poindexters of Dillon. She had by her first husband, Dr. Johnson, of St. Louis, Missouri, three children, two of whom are living: Georgia, wife of Rupert Nuckolls, of Dillon; and Philip, who also resides near Dillon.

Mr. and Mrs. Reynolds had one child that died in infancy. Mrs. Reynolds died in 1885, and in 1887 Mr. Reynolds married Miss Della Thompson, of New Cassel, Wisconsin.

While Mr. Reynolds has accumulated a comfortable competency, he has gained what is still better—the good will and high esteem of all who know him. He is, indeed, a fair representative of the prosperous pioneers of Montana.

HENRY O. WORDEN, a native of Missoula and one of her enterprising young business men, was born April 26, 1869. He is a son of Hon. F. L. Worden, a prominent pioneer of Montana. Henry O. was reared in his native town and learned the mercantile business in his father's store, in which he continued up to the time of his father's death in 1887, and until 1890, when the business was sold.

About the time he reached his majority, his father's estate having been settled and the store disposed of, young Worden entered the employ of the Montana Commercial Company, with which he remained until Sep-its rich freights of golden sands. At the place where the gulch opens into the valley, is the place where it would finally melt and leave what was left of its precious freight.

These are the general deductions from the modes in which glaciers formed placers. There are some others, produced by local causes, which will be named. It should also be stated that the effects of ice rivers, nature's quartz-mills, are modified very materially by the shape of the channel, and that all depends on the forms of the gulch and the places where the ice melts and leaves its tailings.

Most of the mines of the United States were discovered by prospectors, or persons who made it a business to search for valuable minerals.

tember 1, 1863. At that time the firm of Murphy & Worden was formed, Mr. Worden being the junior member, and they have since been doing a wholesale and retail grocery business, with large and well-filled store rooms on Main street, near the stand where Mr. Worden's father opened the first store in Missoula and where he did business for many years. Mr. W. C. Murphy, the senior member of the firm, has long been a business man of Missoula, and both he and Mr. Worden have a wide acquaintance throughout the western part of Montana, over which their business operations extend. Their stock consists of everything in the line of groceries, provisions and wines and liquors, and the new firm is rapidly coming to the front.

Mr. Worden is unmarried and resides with his mother and family.

GENERAL LESTER SEBASTIAN WILLSON.—The tides of emigration that swept over this western country during the fifties and sixties, while they brought much of the lawless element to the mining camps and early settlements, they also brought many of the very best young men of the East—young men of sterling integrity who came out here not merely to secure a sum of money in the mines and return to their homes, but who came to establish themselves in honorable business and "grow up with the country." Now, after the passage of more than a quarter of a century, we find them at the head of affairs in their respective towns and cities—men of prominence and worth, held in high esteem by their fellows. The sketching of their lives is a pleasing task to the biographer, for in no country is the study of biography more interesting than in the western portion of the United States, where, within a brief space of time, cities have sprung up, wide extents of territory have become populated and brought under a high state of cultivation, and where poor young men have made fortunes and by dint of their own pluck and energy have risen to positions of importance and trust.

Among these enterprising young men was one who landed in Montana about twenty-five years ago, whose name has since been coupled with the social and commercial history of Bozeman, whose life has exerted an influence for good, and who is entitled to just consideration in this work. We refer to General L. S. Willson, whose name appears at the head of this article, and a resume of whose life is herewith presented:

Lester Sebastian Willson was born in St. Lawrence county, New York, June 16, 1839. His father, Ambrose Willson, was a native of the State of New York, his ancestors being among its pioneers; while the mother of our subject, whose maiden name was Julia A. Hill, was a descendant of the Knox family of Revolutionary fame. Lester S. received his education in the common schools and academy of his native county. The son of a farmer, in his younger days he had some practical experience in agriculture.

When the Civil war came on young Willson was among the first to tender his services for the defense of his country. In August, 1861, he enlisted in the Sixtieth New York Infantry, was first on duty in the Army of the Potomac, was afterward transferred to the Western Army, and was with General Sherman on that famous "March to the Sea." He served until the close of the war and was mustered out in July, 1865, having participated in many of the hardest-fought battles of that sanguinary struggle. His military record was a progressive one and showed promotion for merit from the start, rising from a private successively to the rank of Sergeant, Second Lieutenant, Adjutant, Captain, Lieutenant Colonel and Colonel. After the old regiment was mustered out he was brevetted both Colonel and Brigadier General. Much of his service consisted of staff duties—Assistant Inspector General, Assistant Adjutant General, etc.

After his return to his native State and peace again reigned over the country, he was appointed Assistant Quartermaster General of the State of New York, which at that time was a very important position, involving a great responsibility and a large volume of business. This office he filled for two years. The immense volume of transportation incident to return of troops, equipments etc., from the field of war brought him constantly in contact with railroad officials and other public men. At the same time a large volume of money passed through his hands, uniforming State troops, and providing for the Soldiers' Home, of which he had supervision. His position was at that time one of the more arduous duties and larger responsibilities than perhaps the same office in that State has since required. Governor Fenton and General Willson were warm personal friends, the latter being one of the Governor's staff. General Willson was a member of the Republican State convention held at Syracuse, New York, in March, 1867, that nominated most of the mem

The work of such men is called "prospecting." Some look upon prospectors as a class of men possessing but little energy and thrift; but it is still true that nearly all the gold, silver and copper mines in Montana were discovered by the hard labors of these men among our gulches and mountains. Some prospectors have made large fortunes, while others have a competence, and others still have not been so fortunate, prudent and persevering. Many have discovered very valuable mines and have for some cause sold out for small pay or neglected to secure good titles. The discoverer of the famous Comstock mine in Nevada, from which more than $600,000,000 have been taken, died poor, even dependent upon his friends for food and bers of the constitutional convention that revised the State constitution that year, and had the pleasure of participating in that body with his warm friend, Horace Greeley.

When General Willson contemplated moving West, he resigned his position in the State of New York, much against the protest of Governor Fenton and the advice of his friend, Mr. Greeley, being one of the few young men that he advised not to go West. In connection with Charles Rich and a Mr. Tuller, he formed a partnership to do a mercantile business in Montana. Messrs. Rich and Tuller, also a brother of L. S. Willson, came overland with a stock of goods in the spring of 1866. They loaded their caravan at Omaha, Nebraska, and were about six months on the way, having been detained for some time at Fort Reno, on Powder river, by the hostile attitude of the Indians. They entered the Gallatin valley through Bozeman Pass, and continued down the valley some miles, to a point where a settlement of farmers had commenced the cultivation of some ground, and were making preparations for homes. They pitched their tents and commenced business. After a few months they removed to the little village of Bozeman, which had been established in the meantime, and found that the Masonic fraternity had erected a commodious, two-story log house on what is now the corner of Main and Bozeman streets, this corner being occupied by the modern brick structure in which the Commercial Exchange Bank is doing business. The log house consisted of a lodge room above and a store below. This store-room Messrs Tuller and Rich, secured and in it opened up their stock of merchandise, which at that time consisted principally of boots and shoes. Later they added dry goods and finally drifted into general merchandise, increasing their facilities from time to time and ere long doing business on a large scale. Lester S. Willson followed these gentlemen to Montana in 1867, and became an active member of the firm and its chief salesman. Mr. Tuller soon afterward retired from the company, the firm name then being Rich & Willson. They also engaged largely in freighting, Mr. Rich superintending outside business while Mr. Willson managed the store at Bozeman. This freighting business was begun on a small scale, with two six-mule teams, but so rapidly did their trade increase that soon they had to enlarge their capacity, putting other teams on the road. Then for some time their freight train consisted of six twelve-mule teams, with a capacity of more than 100,000 pounds. After the Union Pacific Railroad was completed to Corinne, west of Ogden, that was their point of receiving goods from the East and where they loaded their teams with goods, which consisted principally of their own, for their store at Bozeman. However, they made occasional trips with goods for parties at Phillipsburg, Helena and Butte mining camps, also with Indian supplies to the Crow Agency, and often accompanying the military on expeditions against the Indians.

General Willson has all these years been prominently connected with the commercial interests of this part of Montana, and in public matters he has also figured prominently. He was elected to the Territorial Legislature of Montana in 1868, and in that body served two years, there being only one other Republican in that Legislature. At the same time he was a member of the National Republican Central Committee. He was Quartermaster General of Montana during the administrations of Governors Crosby and Carpenter. Few men have contributed more freely of their energy and means toward building up the city of Bozeman and extending its commercial and social influence than has General Willson. He is still interested in the mercantile business here, and now has one of the largest and best stocked establishments in Gallatin valley. He is a stockholder in, and vice president of, the Gallatin Valley National Bank of Bozeman. He is a member of William English Post No. 10, G. A. R., of Bozeman, and has served as Commander of the same. He is a member of the military order of the Loyal Legions of the United States Commandery of the State of New York. He is also a member of the Masonic fraternity.

March 2, 1869, General Willson married Miss Emma D. Weeks, at Albany, New York. Her ancestors were among the early settlers of New England, and her father was a soldier in the war of 1812. They have two children,—Fred Fielding, born November 11, 1877, and Lester Eugene, November 11, 1879. Mrs. Willson is a woman of rare social attainments and exerts an influence for good on all around her. She is an active member of the Presbyterian Church and a great worker in all charitable undertakings. None know her but to love her. The citizens of Bozeman may well feel proud to claim as their leading residents General and Mrs. L. S. Willson.

ROBERT H. SELWAY, of Dillon, came to Montana in 1864, and is one of the representative farmers of the Beaver Head valley, his farm being located at the mouth of Blacktail creek, one half mile north of the city of Dillon.

He was born in England in 1847, and crossed the ocean in the Great Eastern with his father and family in 1849. They landed at New York, and went to Kenosha, Wisconclothing. Others have made large fortunes by developing their discoveries.

In fact prospecting always has been, is now, and always will be, an important business in all mining countries. Some think Montana has been well prospected; some think the prospector is a character of the past, but hundreds are now searching our mountain sides and our gulches for the precious metals, and their discoveries are recorded by the thousands every year. The books of the recorders in the different counties showed the following entries between December 1, 1889, and December 1, 1890, when these books were carefully examined:

Total number of claims recorded in thirteen counties 8745

These returns show the total number of claims recorded in thirteen counties during the year 1890 alone to be 8,745. Some of these were doubtless old claims recorded under new names, but the larger part of them were new discoveries. This certainly is a good showing for a State which has had thousands of sharp-eyed prospectors searching every ravine, foot-hill and mountain-side for quartz veins during the last quarter of a century. It also shows that there is a calling for the prospector, and that he will still make many discoveries, some of which may prove as valuable as the Granite mountain, the Anaconda or the Drum Lummon.

All these facts, developed in the last quarter of a century by prospectors, miners and by scientific men, show most conclusively that all the mountains of Montana, save that part of the range of the Rocky mountains north of Sun river, are intersected with metallic veins, and the probabilities are that there are few sections of land in them all, save those named above, which has not some mineral veins. No intelligent man, who has followed the discoveries already made, will doubt that the future will prove the above prediction true.

Like the trapper, the prospector has a solitary life, and he has more hardships, more exposures, and more exhausting labors. While the trapper may have a temporary home, though sin, where they settled on a farm on lake Michigan, which the father purchased. In 1864 he returned to England on a visit, and died there in the sixty-fourth year of his age. His widow then came to Montana and made her home with her son, the subject of this sketch.

James Selway, one of their sons, had come to Montana in 1863, and Robert H. and his brother Thomas followed in 1864. They came with oxen, were all summer in making the journey, and had to fight the Sioux Indians off a great deal of the way. On the Platte river one of their company was killed by the Indians. Their train at times numbered as high as two hundred, and while traveling through the hostile Indian country they kept guard every night.

Mr. Selway came direct to Beaver Head valley and located on the land which he now owns. When he arrived there were only three or four settlers in the whole valley and the Bannack and Spoke Indians were numerous These Indians, however, were friendly. He homesteaded and pre-empted land, and now has 640 acres, on which he has good buildings and valuable improvements. In 1865 he raised the first crop of potatoes and wheat. In 1866 he went 120 miles for seed oats, paid twenty cents per pound for it, and raised a large crop, which sold for ten and fifteen cents per pound. The following year all the crops in this vicinity were destroyed by grasshoppers, and the misfortune was so great that many of the settlers left the country. He quit farming and turned his attenit be of a primitive kind, the prospector camps wherever the fatigues of the day and the shades of night find him. Seldom do his labors permit him to occupy the same place many successive nights. Men in other professions do some prospecting when their regular occupations permit; it then becomes recreation, like hunting and fishing; but when the professional prospector starts out for his summer's work he finds it anything but play and recreation.

If he would make tolerable provision for his creature comforts and mingle a little recreation with his labors, as all men should, he will prepare an extra outfit,— a pack-horse and perhaps tion to the raising of cattle and horses, in which he succeeded, and, in company with his brothers, he has as high as 3,000 head. This stock was pastured on the free range in summer, but was brought home in winter, and for many years it proved a fair-paying business. He imported Shire horses from England, and is now breeding Percherons.

In 1879, on Christmas day, Mr. Selway was married to Miss Julia A. Block, a native of Illinois, a daughter of Charles Block, she having come to Montana in 1878. They have three sons and two daughters, as follows: Maud M., Charles E., Robert R., Mable and Warren F.

Mr. Selway has always been a reliable Republican, but has never been an office-seeker or office-holder, nor has he ever joined any societies. He is one of the earliest pioneers of Beaver Head county and one of her most respected citizens, highly deserving of the success which his industry has acquired. Two of his brothers reside near him, and they are also highly respected and in well-to-do circumstances.

JOSEPH SOLOMON, one of Missoula's most successful business men, is a native of Germany and a descendant of German ancestry, his birth having occurred January 8, 1849. In 1865, when a boy in his 'teens, he emigrated to America, landing in New York, a stranger and not knowing a word of our language. From New York he went to San Francisco by way of the Isthmus of Panama, arriving at that city in 1866, and soon after his arrival there accepting the position of traveling agent for Bonner Brothers, of San Francisco. Later he traveled for Strauss, Heller & Company. In this business he continued for twelve years, traveling all over the West, including California, Oregon, Washington, Montana and New Mexico, thus gaining an extensive acquaintance with the business men of these States and Territories.

In 1878 Mr. Solomon selected Missoula, Montana, as the best point in which to start in business for himself, and he accordingly opened a general merchandise store here in which he did a large and successful business for five years. He then sold out and invested his means in city property, and now he is one of the largest real-estate owners in Missoula. He owns seven residences and eight business buildings, besides a large number of city lots and suburban property.

Mr. Solomon was married in 1891 to Miss T. Seleig, of San Francisco, daughter of Moses Seleig, a prominent business man of that city.

Fraternally, he is a member of the Masonic order, the A. O. U. W., the E. B. of San Francisco, and of the Free Sons of California. Politically, he is a Democrat. He has, however, given but little attention to politics, as his extensive business operations have all along claimed his close attention. He has been very successful in his business ventures, and is regarded as an able financier and most worthy citizen.

JAMES M. KIMBALL, telegraph operator on the N. P. Railroad at Billings, was born in Indiana, in 1842, a son of John and Lucinda (Hilton) Kimball, of German ancestry. The father was for many years prominently connected with the railroads of Indiana, and at the time of his death was an official of the Indianapolis, Bloomington & Western Railroad. He was killed by a railroad collision at Indianapolis, in 1877. James M. Kimball received his education at Vernon Academy, under Prof. O. Phelps, and when young began studying electricity. When the cry for the defenders of the Union was heard over the land, in 1861, young Kimball left school, and in September of that year enlisted in the Sixth Indiana Volunteer Infantry, Company B. He was afterward detached and placed in charge of the left flank of the Fifty-fourth Indiana Regiment, as drill master. With a number of others he was captured at Green River, but was paroled and returned to his home in Indiana. The war closed before he received his exchange. After the close of the struggle, Mr. Kimball began the study of telegraphy, and has ever since followed that occupation. He has gained a voting residence in eighteen States of the Union while in the employ of the Western Union Telegraph Company.

Mr. Kimball was married in Indiana, in 1863, to Miss Julia Woods, a daughter of William and Elizabeth (Shell) Woods, natives of Tennessee. The mother was a relative of the prominent Shell family of east Tennessee. The father, a farmer and mechanic by occupation, owned land near Morgantown, Indiana, and his death occurred before the late war. Mr. and Mrs. Kimball have five children, viz.: Joseph T., Andrew S., Melvina, Sarah and Julia. In his social relations, our subject is a member of the I. O. O. F., the K. of P and the G. A. R. Although reared under Democratic influences, his first presidential vote was cast for Abraham Lincoln, and he has since continued an aggressive Republican. Both he and his wife are zealous members of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

HON. JOHN B. CATLIN, Receiver at the Land Office in Missoula, dates his arrival in Montana in 1866. Of his life we present the following brief sketch:

John B. Catlin was born in Cleveland, Ohio, June 21, 1837. He is of Welsh extraction, his grandfather Catlin a saddle-horse, gun and fishing tackle, bed blankets, frying-pan, flour, crackers, sugar, coffee and bacon, hammer, pick, shovel, hatchet, gold pan or horn scoop, and a canvass or rubber blanket for shelter. With such an outfit he may enjoy the few luxuries of the profession, together with the recreations of fishing and hunting. But if the prospector has "quartz on the brain," or a mania for "gold diggins," his outfit will likely be much more limited, and you will find him making good time carrying all—blanket, frying-pan, salt, bacon, flour, pick, shovel, hammer and horn-scoop, revolver and fish line.

having been born in that country, and being one of the early settlers of Washington county, New York, where he reared his family. Arad Sprage Catlin, the father of John B., was born in Washington county in 1810. He was married in Franklin county, New York, to Miss Mary Babcock. Her father was a native of Rhode Island, and her mother, a McGowran, was descended from one of the Highland chieftains of Scotland. The year following his marriage, Arad S. Catlin and his wife removed to Ohio, thence in 1838 to Indiana, and in 1861 to Buchanan, Michigan, where he had a farm and where he also conducted a blacksmith business. There he continued to reside until his death, which occurred in 1870. His whole life had been characterized by honest industry and his efforts were crowned with success. His widow, now in the seventy-eighth year of her age, resides with her son, John B., at Missoula. She is a member of the Adventist Church, of which her husband was also a consistent member. They reared six children, of whom four are living, John B. being their first born.

The subject of our sketch received his education in Indiana. His early life was spent in farm work, at which he was engaged when the Civil war came on. In August, 1862, he enlisted as a private in Company H, Eighty-seventh Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and from that time until the close of the war he participated in all the privations, battles and victories of the brave and invincible Army of the Cumberland. For meritorious service during the battle of Missionary Ridge he was promoted to Commissary Sergeant, and served in this capacity until Sherman's conquering army reached Atlanta. He was then promoted to Captain of Company I, and had command of Company H on Sherman's grand march to the sea and at the grand review of the victorious army in Washington. After this he was mustered out, and returned to Indianapolis, Indiana, where he received his honorable discharge in June, 1865.

July 4, 1866, Mr. Catlin left Nebraska City with an ox train to cross the plains to Montana. There were twenty-seven men in the company, many of them veterans of the war, and all were armed with Remington breach-loading rifles. On a portion of the way they were constantly menaced by the Indians, yet when attacks were made the Indians were easily repulsed, and their journey was only retarded by their often having to get ready to defend themselves. December 9, 1866, they arrived at Bozeman. Mr. Catlin came to a place near where Butte City is now located, and that winter he and his companions occupied themselves by hunting, killing deer, mountain sheep, elk and antelope. The following season he mined on Silver Bow Gulch, four miles below Butte. In 1867 he made a trip to Idaho, Oregon and Washington, wintered at Puget Sound, and in the spring of the following year came back to Montana, making the journey back by way of Coeur d'Alene. Upon his return he purchased a ranch in Bitter Root valley, to the improvement and cultivation of which he devoted his time and energy. He had about 500 acres under fence, and in the meantime he was also more or less interested in mining.

In the fall of 1870 Mr Catlin returned East, and in Iowa, December 6, 1870, married Miss Lizzie Taylor, a native of La Porte, Indiana, a former schoolmate of his and the daughter of William Taylor of Indiana. He returned to Montana with his bride, and for nine years they made their home on the ranch above alluded to. He sold this farm in 1880 and purchased a hotel in Stevensville, and continued in the hotel business there for nine years. At the end of that time he received the appointment of agent at the Blackfoot Indian Agency, where he remained a year and a half. He resigned his position there in order to accept the appointment of Receiver of the Land Office at Missoula, this appointment being dated September 30, 1890. Since he entered upon the duties of this office he and his family have resided at Missoula.

Mr. Catlin affiliates with the Republican party; is a member of the G. A. R., and is Past Master Workman of the A. O. U. W. In 1885 he was elected a member of the Territorial Constitutional Convention of Montana, in which action was taken upon a constitution for the new State.

Mr. and Mrs. Catlin have two children, Mary Belle and Arthur Wilbur.

GASPER F. DELETRAZ, who has been a resident of Montana ever since 1864, is now a respected citizen of Fort Benton. He has had a remarkable career.

He was born May 11, 1824, in Annecy, France, is of Spanish descent, received his education in his native country, and learned the trade of cook. He arrived in San Francisco January 7, 1851, and followed his trade for six months in Sacramento, being paid $300 a month. While in San Francisco he went one evening to visit a friend of his father, and on returning late at night he was attacked by a ferocious bulldog and badly bitten, and in consequence was laid up a number of months in a hospital. This institution was such a neglected, filthy place that he narrowly escaped death; nearly every day some

A skillful prospector, thus equipped and full of life and hope, has as fair a chance to become a millionaire as men of other pursuits, and to make his money as honestly; but he may endure many hardships and suffer heat, cold and hunger before he sees the reward of his labors. While men in other professions will enjoy the comforts and even the luxuries of life, he will be enduring its hardships.

Montana was once the paradise of prospectors, when there was no dew and only two or three rain storms from May to November, and when one could kill rabbits and grouse at almost every stream and lake, and when the trail of the buffalo, one died there. Finally he made the doctor understand that he would die if he did not get more nourishment. The doctor then furnished him a quart of porter, and in this way he got "strength" enough to "get out of" that place. Finding his father's friend again he told him his trouble, and with his assistance he obtained a place as cook in a private family at San Pablo, where the head of the family, a Spaniard, had two beautiful daughters, one of whom brought him daily the orders what to cook for the different meals. She was a lovely girl, and Mr. Deletraz was young and smart, and they "fell in love" with each other. When she came to see him he occasionally gave her a kiss. But one evening her father discovered the courtship, and the next two days she did not come to give the usual cooking orders. In the afternoon of the second day Mr. Deletraz noticed her sitting in a second-story window, and she threw him a kiss, and he returned it. But then he thought that the beautiful girl was imprisoned on his account, he felt bad and resolved to leave. Accordingly he gave notice to the manager to tell the proprietors to look for another cook. The lady asked, "What does he want to leave for? He is a good cook; let him stay." Mr. Deletraz then made the mistake of his life by saying that he would not stay at any wages.

But our subject had another narrow escape. He considered himself a good equestrian; but one day he was given a stupid-looking horse to ride, which went very slow at first and then suddenly started up and ran off at a high speed. In doing so he ran so close to a tree that Mr. Deletraz fell off and was badly crushed. He was then laid up for three months.

After this he went to Siskiyou county, California, where he had a good prospect; but the work proved too hard for him, and he filled the position of cook in the La Fayette Hotel for six years. He finally ran the institution and did a large business; but one day, when he had it stocked full of provisions, a fire consumed it, and he lost all he had made.

Then he returned to Yreka and was employed in the Empire Restaurant until the breaking out of the Fraser river excitement, when he repaired to its source, but only to find everything a failure there. He then sold his property at Yreka and went to Salem, Oregon, and started the first soda-water manufactory in that country, in which he was successful, making some money. He purchased eighty acres of land in Linn county, that State, and raised fruit and supplied the people of the Willamette valley with soda-water. In the winter of 1861–2 the great flood came and carried off his horses and 1,800 bushels of wheat and devastated the whole place; and he was broken up again. In this calamity he lost thirteen horses; in fact, all that was left consisted of two good horses and a wagon, which happened to be not on the place at the time of the flood. With this meager outfit, and almost heartbroken, he went to Walla Walla, where the first winter proved a hard one, and it required all he could make to support himself and team. In the spring he sold the horses and wagon, for $700, and started alone, without even a blanket, and walked to Lewiston,—a journey of eighty-seven miles,—sleeping by a fire at night. When he reached Snake river he was very thirsty and drank too much water, resulting in giving him a fever, which laid him up for a long time. A would-be doctor dosed him with a course of "medicine," either to "cure or kill;" and the patient was at one time unconscious for three days. He was picked up by men who thought him almost dead, and laid on a higher piece of ground, as the water was rising in the river. He at length recovered, and soon afterward he had the good fortune to make a discovery that led to the arrest of the murderers of Magruder. They were followed to San Francisco, arrested, brought back, convicted and executed.

Next Mr. Deletraz went to Salt Lake City, where he could have had a good start again could he have violated his conscience by becoming a Mormon. He next walked to Cheyenne, a distance of 800 miles, and was so worn out on arriving there that he was not able to endure the hard labor of the position he obtained more than a week,—loading gravel. Then he started on foot for the fort in the Black Hills, lost his way, slept in hay-stacks and finally reached Lake Ranch House, where many people were stopping. He asked for his breakfast, saying at the same time that he could not pay for it. They inquired of him what he could do, saying that their cook had been drunk for three days, and told him to cook his own breakfast. He did so, and bacon never tasted so good to him in his life as on that occasion. Learning that he could cook, they employed him in that capacity, for thirty-two to forty persons; and they had a cellar well stocked with everything they needed. There it was his custom to rise at four o'clock in the morning, and he had all his meals ready to the exact minute. It was a common exclamation among the guests, "What good meals you have here!" While there he once prepared a meal for General Gibbon and A. Porter, a banker at Denver, who both noticed Mr. Deletraz' work as a cook; and the latter went so far as to say to him, "If you will come to Denver we will build you a hotel and let you run it." Such was the way he the moose, the elk, the deer, the antelope and the the mountain sheep and even the tracks of the bear were as frequent as the paths of the miners. Then pine knots made a most brilliant camp fire, and a few pine boughs and a blanket a most luxurious bed, and the blue vault gemmed with stars made a tent more gorgeous than Persian kings ever imagined. But now the dews fill your hair and blankets with cold shivers, and your limbs with rheumatic twinges, and dark clouds often obscure the sky and threaten an infant deluge.

No matter what the obstacles, no matter what hardships must be endured, the love of gold is stronger than all. It turns rivers from their channels, drives tunnels through the very heart pleased the people who enjoyed the good meals at Lake Ranch House. At the end of six months he was paid $1,200, and he proceeded to the fort, where he became cook for the officers' club. Everywhere he went he did such excellent work that he was specially praised.

Subsequently he went to the North Platte and started a restaurant, and did a good business there. When trade began to slacken he purchased mule and horse teams and wagons, loaded these with supplies, and started for Los Angeles, California. It was a long journey, but he arrived there, set up his tent and served the people four weeks. After this he purchased a ranch of 160 acres on Kern river, took up 160 acres more, bought 300 cows and began dairying. The cattle did well the first year, but during the second the drouth came and everything was burned up. Grass and all the live stock perished, and Mr. Deletraz was attacked again with a severe fever till he thought he should die too. After taking quinine thirty-six days he became strong enough to get away from that place.

Proceeding to San Francisco, he was told there that if he wanted to get well he must go to the Rocky mountains. Accordingly he started for Helena, Montana, but was fearfully sick on the journey. After recovering his health there he was employed a year in the Pacific Hotel, at $250 a month. Next he came to Fort Benton, where he spent his first night sleeping on his blanket. In the morning he looked at the beautiful Missouri as it rolled by in its majesty, and prayed that if God would give him health he would make that vicinity his home. He worked eight months in the Overland Hotel, and then became cook for Hon. T. C. Power. From the window of the kitchen here he saw the beautiful tract of land directly in the rear of the town, and he learned by investigation that it was Government land. He entered it, built a cabin upon it and soon after ward Fort Benton began to boom. Some parties endeavored to "jump" his land, but he stuck to it, obtained his title from President Hayes, and he made of it an addition to the town. He has sold $14,000 worth of lots, and has 505 lots yet left. It is a most beautiful tract of land. Mr. Deletraz has also 160 acres of land in Teton, has a band of sheep, has erected a number of buildings in the city, and has become one of the wealthy and influential men of the place. He is still enterprising, being willing to give a large bonus to any solid company that will build a line of railroad directly into the city.

In 1881 he made a trip to his old home in Europe; and while there he desired to marry his cousin, Annetta Deletraz, a girl he had known from childhood; but his church, the Catholic, would not allow it unless he paid $1,600 for a "dispensation" to permit it. Being an American citizen, Mr. Deletraz asked the advice of the American consul there, who advised him to take his cousin to New York and be married there. This advice he followed, and he returned to Fort Benton, where he now enjoys the comforts of a beautiful home, the premises being adorned with flowering plants of his own setting.

In his early life Mr. Deletraz was a scientific billiard-player, but of course, his long sojourn in the wild West has prevented him from the enjoyment of the game.

In 1855, in Oregon, he participated in the Indian war, in which twenty-nine white men were killed. He suffered many severe exposures and had many narrow escapes; but now the thought of all his trials of the past only heightens his present joy.

CHARLES OTTO has long been a resident of Montana and is well known here. For a number of years he has been identified with Missoula, where he now lives. Of his life we present the following sketch:

Charles Otto was born in Baden, Germany, November 26, 1838, the son of German parents, his father being a large lumber dealer in that country. It was on the 2d day of August, 1855, that young Otto landed on American soil, he being then a lad of seventeen years, starting out to make his own way in the world. From New York city he went to Cincinnati, where he obtained employment in a brewery and where he became thoroughly familiar with all the details of that business. In 1857 we find him at Springfield, Illinois. There he worked on a farm during the summer and at the cooper's trade in winter. In 1859 the Pike's Peak excitement and his love for adventure brought him out West, and he turned his attention to mining. In the mines, however, he made no more than wages, and as the occupation was not altogether suited to his taste he sold his claim and crossed the plains to California. He remained in California until 1863, his time being divided between mining and working in a brewery. His mining experience here was more successful than it had been elsewhere. Indeed, he found some pieces of gold that were worth from $60 to $70. In 1863 Mr. Otto went to Virginia City, Nevada, and secured employment in the Philadelphia Brewery; but the close confinement did not agree with his health, so he left the brewery and began hauling quartz from Gold Hill to Carson river. He remained in Nevada until 1866, when he came to Montana, landing at Helena on the 9th of June of the mountains, and nothing but the central fires of the earth can drive the miner from following the veins of ore down to where the furnaces of Vulcan pour out rivers of gold and silver and platinum. This love of gold and gems has been common to all ages since the days of Tubal Cain. It is a characteristic of all peoples and all classes of peoples. Kings and peasants have labored for the precious metals and the glittering gems. Solomon sent a Tyrian fleet to Ophir for gold and precious stones, and Ferdinand and Isabella sent Columbus to unknown lands in search of them. The Czar of Russia employed Sir Roderick I. Murchison, of England and Dr. Vernsuill, of France, two distinguished geologists, to prospect the Ural mountains for precious metals and other valuable minerals. In fact, all the geologists employed by governments and States have been general prospectors. Dr. Hayden, his associates and their successors were in the main prospectors.

These numerous other facts in the history of and camping on Rodney street. At that time there was but one residence in the town.

Mr. Otto had come to Helena with a freight train, bringing with him 400 pounds of tobacco, expecting to sell it at a large profit, but as the market was already supplied he made nothing on his venture. Again he turned his attention to mining. He worked at Confederate bar and at other places, but the cost of provisions was high and he did not make much. In the spring of 1868 he removed to Radersburg, where he worked for $4 per day on the night shift. After this he prospected with a company in the Big Dry Gulch, but as he met with but little success he went to Cable City and began hauling quartz to the mill below the town. In this occupation he continued until December, when he returned to Helena. In Helena he for a time worked for a contractor, was afterward employed in sawing ice for John Horsky, drove a beer wagon three years, and then for three years and a half worked in the brewery. Still later he worked in a brewery at Phillipsburg and one at Deer Lodge. July 12, 1877, he arrived in Missoula, and on the 19th of that month began working in the brewery of John Hughes. In 1879 he purchased the brewery, and conducted the business successfully until 1885, when he sold out, his successors being Wagner & Pelekan. After that he turned his attention to real-estate deals. In company with other prominent citizens of Missoula, he purchased a valuable tract of land on Front street, a part of which has been sold and the rest improved. Mr. Otto has declined $10,000 for the property he still owns on Front street. He also has a ranch on Miller creek, six miles from the city. He was one of the founders of the Western Missoula National Bank, and in this institution has since been a stockholder and a director. While he has in a measure retired from active business, he is giving some attention to the raising of fine fruits, among which are apples, pears, cherries and plums.

Mr. Otto is a charter member of the I. O. O. F. at Missoula. His political views are in harmony with the principles advocated by the Democratic party, with which party he has been identified ever since he cast his first presidential vote.

L. B. Wells, of Helena, Montana, was born in Mt. Morris, Livingston county, New York, May 10, 1842. His early life was spent in Buffalo, from which place he went to Michigan with his grandmother, who located in Grand Rapids. Here he embarked in the grocery business, operating very successfully for a number of years. During the war he became sutler, feeding the Government troops at Grand Rapids. In 1866 he sold his grocery business and moved to the West, locating at St. Joseph, Missouri. In 1863 he married Miss Laura J. Gordon, a daughter of one of the pioneers of Michigan, Mr. Gordon having come to Grand Rapids in 1833, and was the pioneer lumberman of the famous Grand Rapids lumber district, furnishing the lumber for the first frame building erected in Grand Rapids.

Mr. Wells remained in Grand Rapids with his wife until 1869. On the 13th of July of that year he embarked on a steamer up the Missouri river, and after an adventurous trip through the country of hostile Indians and an encounter with the Sioux near Fort Peck, they reached Cow island on the upper Missouri that fall. From this point they were transported by teams to Fort Benton. At Fort Benton they bought an ox team and proceeded to Helena, Montana. Here they remained for some time, looking around in the new country and finally went up to Greenhorn, where Mr. Wells became interested in some quartz mines. They built a mill at this point, but the conditions were crude, with no facilities for securing machinery, and with the primitive methods then in vogue the quartz venture was not a success. So he returned to Helena, and with his wife embarked in the millinery business, which they operated very successfully for many years. During this time Mr. Wells was actively interested in all the movements of this exciting period. He was a member of the Vigilance Committee and took part in the various manœuvers of that day and time. While engaged in the millinery business Mr. Wells continued prospecting and discovered and located many quartz lodes, some of which have since proven very valuable. In 1876 Mr. Wells embarked in the greenhouse business and built up an extensive and lucrative establishment, now ably managed by his efficient wife, who survives him.

the profession show it to be an honorable calling, if not a profitable one, whether those engaged in it be called geologists, mining engineers, mining experts or prospectors.

The means used in search of valuable minerals are very various. Some are based on sound knowledge, some on baseless theories, and some on superstitious notions and supernatural agencies.

A few prospectors have called upon the spirits to aid them in their search. Whether the spirits have been efficient and profitable assistants in this work, I know not; but it may be proper to say that, from what we have learned of the subject, we have very decided impressions that the spirits thus employed are not very good prospectors, and that those who have employed them have derived very little satisfaction from such business relations. Some prospectors have also used persons known as "clairvoyants," or people so clear-sighted that they can see things hidden from the sight of

In July, 1890, Mr. Wells was fatally injured, while riding near Helena, by a runaway team belonging to a Chinese market gardener. Mrs. Wells was severely injured by this accident, but recovered, and since the death of her husband has managed and operated the greenhouses and extensive real estate holdings, which had been acquired by Mr. Wells and herself before his death. The Wells conservatories are now the most extensive and perfectly equipped greenhouses between St. Paul and the coast. They consist of a plant of seven houses, all in active operation and fully stocked.

With the locating of the permanent capital at Helena, and the permanent establishing of Fort Harrison, now under construction, these conservatories bid fair to become a valuable and lucrative investment. Mrs. Wells by her able management has gained a wide circle of patrons, and with the natural growth of the Capital City will doubtless continue to supply the State of Montana with an abundance of floral beauty.

HON. LUKE D. HATCH, one of the representative citizens of the Bitter Root valley, dates his arrival in Montana in 1866.

Mr. Hatch was born in Mason, Cass county, Michigan, October 3, 1844. His people were among the early settlers of Bangor, Maine, and took an active part in all the affairs of the colonies. They were represented in both the Revolution and the war of 1812. His grandfather, Noah Hatch, was born in Massachusetts. He was an honest and well-to-do farmer, and was a member of the Presbyterian Church. He and his wife had a family of sixteen children, ten of whom reached adult age, four of that number still surviving. The property owned by the Hatches at Bangor has descended through several generations and is still owned by members of the family. Ezra Hatch, the father of Luke D., was born in New York, February 2, 1812. He was married, in 1839, to Miss Sarah Maria Allen, who was born in New York, January 6, 1818, a descendant of Ethan Allen of Revolutionary fame. Both the Hatches and the Allens had moved to the Territory of Michigan in 1833, and it was there in Mason, Cass county, that Mr. Hatch was married. He and his wife reared a family of six children. He was a stonecutter by trade, but was also for some time engaged in farming, and later in life turned his attention to mercantile pursuits. In 1849 he was among the gold-seekers that went to California, and in the new El Dorado he met with good success, returning to his home after an absence of about a year and bringing with him about $16,000. He died in 1856, and his wife in 1869. Both were earnest Christians and members of the Presbyterian Church.

Luke D. Hatch, the third-born in the above family, spent his boyhood days on his father's farm in Michigan and received his education in the public schools. He was a lad of sixteen years when President Lincoln made his first call for volunteers to put down the great rebellion; but, boy that he was, he was imbued with the patriotism of his illustrious ancestors; was eager to enlist, and his name was enrolled in Company E, First Regiment of Michigan Volunteer Infantry. He was at once sent to the front, his service being with the Army of the Potomac. His term of service having expired, he re-enlisted, August 2, in the same company. After being in active service in the Army of the Potomac two years, dating from the time of his second enlistment, he again enlisted, as a veteran, and served in the same army through all its reverses and its glorious victories until the conflict was ended by General Lee's surrender. During his service he participated in no less than forty battles; was twice wounded, and from time to time was promoted until, when he was mustered out, he held the commission of Second Lieutenant. A braver, truer soldier than young Hatch never faced the enemy's fire.

The war over, Mr. Hatch returned to his home, and for one year was engaged in farming in Michigan. Then he sold out and came across the plains to Montana, making the journey by the Bozeman route. The Indians were very hostile that year and frequently made attacks upon the party with which Mr. Hatch was traveling, but they fought their way through and landed safe at Alder Gulch. There he mined until the fall of 1867, meeting with some success. On account of the illness of his father, he returned to Michigan, and that winter his father died. Our subject remained at the old homestead until the fall of 1868, and on the 11th of December of that year he was married to Miss Emma Adelia Vantril, a native of Elk-common people; but we have no proof that they have ever been successful prospectors.

Some natural agencies are used in this search for gold and silver, about which we know very little, save they are unknown to science and cannot be investigated by scientific methods The divining rod is used, and some nameless things which are concealed from the eyes of unbelievers by some opaque covering, which places them with the "unknowables." We have known no discoveries of valuable mines by such agencies. Divining rods have claims to our serious consideration, simply because there is some testimony that they have aided water witches in finding water. What virtue they possess, or whether they possess any, is wholly unknown to science, for science knows nothing about the "unknowable." But there is no mystery about their mechanism, and any one can make a divining rod with a jack-knife. Cut a forked green stick from one-quarter to three-eighths of an inch in diameter and eighteen to twenty inches long, the forks equal in size, and cut twelve or fifteen inches long, and you hart county, Indiana, her people having moved to Cass county, Michigan, when she was six months old. Mr. Hatch remained in Michigan until after the death of his mother, which occurred in 1869, and then he and his wife removed to Missouri. He made his home in the latter State until 1881, in the meantime making several trips back and forth to Montana and carrying on mining operations. In 1881 he brought his wife and son to Montana and they became permanent residents of Stevensville. Since that time he was for three years a member of the mercantile house of Eddy, Hammond & Company, but the most of his time and attention have been given to mining operations. He is interested in both gold and silver mines, and owns considerable property in Stevensville, among which is the pleasant residence in which he and his family reside.

Mr. and Mrs. Hatch have had three children, Frank Clyde being the only one living, the other two having died in infancy.

Fraternally, Mr. Hatch is a member of the A. O. U. W., the G. A. R. and the Masonic order. Ever since he was a voter he has been identified with the Democratic party. In 1889 his fellow-citizens of Missoula county elected him a member of the Territorial Convention which formulated the State Constitution, and in that body he served most efficiently.

HON. ROBERT FISHER, Registrar of the Land Office at Missoula, Montana, is ranked with the worthy pioneers of this State. Of his life we make record as follows:

Robert Fisher was born in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, October 10, 1827, his forefathers having long resided in that city. His remote ancestors were English people. Richard Fisher, his father, was born in Philadelphia in 1795; was twice married, his second wife, nee Margaret Johnston, the mother of our subject, being also a native of Philadelphia, she being of Irish descent. He was a successful florist, had made several trips to England in connection with his business, and at the age of forty-five, being in ill health and hoping that a sea voyage and change of climate would be of benefit to him, he started again for England. He was destined, however, never to reach that country. Being taken severely ill on board the vessel, he died and was buried in the great deep. He left a widow and six children, two of the latter being by his first wife. The mother of our subject died in her forty-second year.

Robert Fisher was reared in his native city, receiving his education in her public schools. Upon leaving school he accepted a clerkship in the mercantile house of Levick & Jenkins, with whom he remained six years. Then he went South, and until 1852 was in Nashville, Tennessee. In March, 1852, he sailed for California, making the voyage by way of the isthmus of Panama, and on board the Golden Gate steamed into the port of San Francisco on the 22d of May. The attraction which led him to California at that time was the reputed wealth of her gold mines, and upon landing at San Francisco he at once directed his course toward the mines. At Downieville he had his first experience in mining, afterward he was at El Dorado and Hangtown, and for eight years he continued his mining operations with unabated zeal. During that time he met with all the privations and varied experiences of a California miner—sometimes short of "grub," and at other times being rich. The largest nugget he found was near Cold Springs. At that place he and two others took out $324 in one day.

In 1860 Mr. Fisher went to Carson City, Nevada, where he was engaged in merchandising six years. Then he sold out his business and came to Summit, Madison county, Montana, and after a brief experience in the mines at that place he came to Helena and purchased a claim in Grizzly Gulch. In the fall of 1866 he removed to Springville, Jefferson county, where he pre-empted a farm, and where he was engaged in mining and also carried on a livery business. He remained there until 1881, and during that time made several valuable investments. In company with two others, he was owner of the Iron Age mine, which they sold for $30,000. In 1881, accompanied by his family, Mr. Fisher made a trip to the Atlantic States, and upon his return West he located at Santa Fe, New Mexico, where he was engaged in the ice business. His wife was at that time in poor health, and will have a divining rod of the approved form. It is used by grasping a fork in each hand so the large end of the rod will be up. Holding it in this position, walk over the ground where you want to find water or gold or silver, and, when you come to either, the large end of the rod will turn down; and the more you hold it still, the more it will turn down till it points to the water or gold or silver. The favorite wood for the divining rod is witch-hazel; the peach and common hazel are sometimes used.

My authority for the form and manner of using the divining rod is Baron Alexander von Humboldt. When the author of Kosmos was in this country and was one day walking out with Professor Parker Cleaveland, the distinguished father of American mineralogy, they came upon a cluster of witch-hazel. "Ah!"

it was on her account that he went to New Mexico. Upon her recovery they returned to their home in Jefferson county, Montana, and continued to reside there until 1891, when President Harrison appointed Mr. Fisher Registrar of the Land Office. This appointment necessitated his removal to Missoula, whither he came with his family and where he has since resided.

During Mr. Fisher's residence in Nevada he was thrice elected a member of the Territorial Legislature, and served in the sessions of 1862, '64 and '66. In 1871 and '73 he was a member of the Territorial Council of Montana. He was also elected and served in the first State Senate of Montana. His whole career has been characterized by the highest integrity, and his official service has been such that it reflected credit on him and also on his constituents. In his early life he was a Whig, but when the Republican party was organized he became identified with it and has since been a faithful adherent to its principles.

Mr. Fisher was married April 6, 1864, in Placerville, California, to Mrs. Nannie J. Egleston, a native of Virginia, the widow of George Egleston and the daughter of Peter Butler. Mrs. Fisher had three children by her first husband, all of whom are deceased, and she and Mr. Fisher have had four children, three having died in infancy. Their only surviving child, Annie Vestus, is the wife of George Hansinger.

S. G. RAMSEY, Sheriff of Missoula county, Montana, was born in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, August 22, 1852. He is of Scotch descent, his ancestors having emigrated from Scotland to this country and settled in Montgomery county, Pennsylvania. Isaac Ramsey, his grandfather, was a resident of Montgomery county, and by profession was a schoolteacher. In religion he was a Baptist. He lived to be eighty years of age. In his family were four sons and two daughters, one of the former, Samuel W. Ramsey, being the father of our subject. Samuel W. Ramsey was born in Philadelphia in 1822. He spent his whole life on a farm in his native State, and died there in 1870, in the forty-eighth year of his age. His wife, nee Sarah Gilbert, a native of Delaware, survived him twenty-one years, her death occurring in 1891. They had a family of five children.

S. G. Ramsey attended the public schools of his native city. In 1870, after his father's death, he began work in the telegraph office of the Philadelphia & Reading Railroad Company, where he remained one year, after which he was employed as brakeman and later as conductor by the same company. In 1873 he severed his connection with that company and entered the service of the Pittsburg, Ft. Wayne & Chicago Railroad as telegraph operator, from which position he was promoted to that of train dispatcher. He resigned his position with that company in order to accept that of manager of the Atlantic & Pacific Telegraph Company. In the meantime he had made himself proficient in stenography, and in 1877 went into the office of the general manager of the Pennsylvania Railroad as private secretary, remaining in that capacity until August, 1883. Then, on account of failing health, he went to Colorado, where he entered the employ of the Union Pacific as agent and operator. This position he held until June, 1886. Then he accepted the position of chief clerk to the receiver of the Shenandoah Valley Railroad at Roanoke. From there in August of the same year he came to Drummond, Montana, as night telegraph operator for the Northern Pacific Company. Two weeks later he was transferred to the office of the superintendent of the Pacific division at Tacoma, where he was employed as chief clerk. On the completion of the Cascade division in July, 1887, he was promoted to the position of assistant train dispatcher at Tacoma, and in February of the following year to that of chief dispatcher of the Cascade division. From this latter position he was transferred to that of chief clerk to the assistant general manager of the Western division, the duties of which office he performed until the reorganization of the company necessitated the abolishment of the office of assistant general manager at Tacoma and the creation of the office of assistant general superintendent at Helena. Mr. Ramsey then occupied the position of chief clerk under superintendents N. D. Root, M. C. Kimberley, and G. W. Dickinson. In October, 1888, he was promoted to acting superintendent of the Idaho division, with headquarters at Sprague, Washington. His appointment was confirmed and he was made superintendent, January 1, 1889. In April, 1890, he was transferred to the office of superintendent of the Rocky division of the Northern Pacific, with headquarters at Missoula, and this position he filled with ability until May 10, 1892, when he resigned and accepted the nomination of the Democratic party for Sheriff of Missoula county. He was elected to exclaimed the Baron. "There is the best material for a divining rod. Let us make one." It was soon made, and the great scientist took it in his hand and in a playful manner, said: "Let us try its powers." He walked with it around a well, over a stream of water, and over a purse of gold and silver coin, but the divining rod showed no signs and made no demonstrations for the water and none for the gold and silver. That divining rod was preserved in the study of Professor Cleaveland for many years, and was then presented to the author of this narrative, and it is now in the University of Missouri.

Many may think the possession of the best divining rod in the world for thirty years ought to make one as rich as Croesus; but we are still fortunate enough to work for the good things in this glorious world of ours. Notwithstand-this office by a majority of 265 votes. His duties here, as elsewhere, are promptly and efficiently performed, and he is more than meeting the expectations of his constituents.

Mr. Ramsey was married June 17, 1877, to Miss Cora E. Baugh, a native of Toledo, Ohio, and the daughter of William Baugh of that State. They have two children, Marshall G. and Samuel C.

Fraternally, Mr. Ramsey is identified with both the order of Elks and the Masonic lodge. During his residence in Montana he has made some investments in mines and is now a stockholder in the Keystone and the King and Queen mines, both of which are being operated on a paying basis.

RAS ROCHESTER, the Postmaster and leading merchant of Laurin, Madison county, Montana, is a native of Kentucky, born at Bowling Green, December 10, 1863.

The Rochesters trace their ancestry to England and are able to back as far as 1558. In England the family belonged to the nobility, had a coat-of-arms, and were prominent in the affairs of their day. The progenitor of the family in America, Nicholas Rochester, was born in Kent county, England, in 1640, and his son, William, also a native of England, was born in 1680. In 1689 father and son came to America and settled in Westmoreland county, Virginia. William Rochester married and had two sons, John and Nathaniel, both born in the Old Dominion. Nathaniel Rochester removed to New York and became the founder of the city of Rochester. From New York he and his family returned to Virginia and from there went to Kentucky, where they were prominent and valued citizens, taking a part in the affairs of State.

Mr. Rochester's father, William Henry Rochester, was born in Warren county, Kentucky, in 1828. He married Miss Mary Moore, a native of Kentucky and a daughter of John R. Moore, of that State. She was ten years younger than her husband. They had a family of thirteen children, nine of whom reached maturity, Ras being the fifth-born. For many years the father was a successful merchant, but is now retired from active business. The family are Presbyterians.

Ras Rochester was educated in Ogden College, in his native town, that institution having been endowed by Robert W. Ogden, the second husband of our subject's Grandmother Rochester. Leaving college in 1882, he came direct to Dillon, Montana, and for a year worked on a farm at Twin Bridges. From there he came to Laurin and accepted a clerkship in the store of Mr. Laurin, beginning with $25 and board per month. This store had been established by Mr. Laurin in 1863 and was the pioneer business place for the whole Ruby valley. In 1886 his brother, Charles W. Rochester, and he became partners with Mr. Laurin in the cattle and horse business. They had large herds of stock and continued in the business a year and a half with excellent success. Mr. Laurin had in the meantime sold out to a Mr. Lapraise, and at the end of the year and a half the firm bought the store of him and resumed business at the old stand. In June, 1888, Charles W. Rochester died. Another brother, Henry, came out to Montana that summer and he and Ras purchased the whole business, which they continued together successfully until the spring of 1890. At that time Henry sold his interest to his brother and returned to Kentucky, and since then the subject of our sketch has continued in business alone. He carried a $20,000 stock of general merchandise and has a trade which extends into the country for a radius of forty miles. His success since he landed here a poor boy has indeed been phenomenal.

Mr. Rochester was married August 7, 1888, to Miss Minnie I. Chapman, a native of Missouri and a daughter of J. H. Chapman, of that State. They have two children, a son and daughter, Gatha and William Henry.

In politics, Mr. Rochester is a Democrat. His appointment to the position of Postmaster of Laurin was in 1888, and here, as in other business affairs, he has proved himself most efficient. He was on one occasion elected a Justice of the Peace, but did not qualify as his time was wholly taken up with other business.

WILLIAM MCKEEN, another one of Missoula's respected citizens, was born in New Brunswick, Canada, November 16, 1828. His grandfather, Robert McKeen, emigrated from Scotland to America not long before the Revolutionary war and settled in New York. He was loyal to his king, and on that account found it more congenial to remove to New Brunswick. He and his good wife lived to the ages of seventy-five and eighty years respectively. Both were members of the Episcopal Church. They reared a family of eight children, of whom Jacob, the youngest, was the father of our subject. Jacob McKeen was born on the St. Johns river, near Fredericton, New Brunswick, in 1800, and in 1822 he married Miss Jennie ing the testimony for the divining rod, the prospector can lose nothing by leaving it out of his outfit.

Magnetism is sometimes used in prospecting, and may be made very useful in finding those minerals which are magnetic and attract the needle. The lodestone, or magnetic oxide of iron, often attracts the surveyor's needle so as to point out the position of such leads of iron ore. Sometimes these leads of magnetite so affect the needle that lines cannot be run by the compass or theodolite in their vicinity.

But the best instruments for prospecting are good eyes—eyes educated to distinguish the minerals sought. When one is prospecting for quartz, he wants a good eye for the indication in the rocks and for the fragments of quartz lying on the foothills and mountain sides as he travels over them. A stray piece of quartz will challenge his attention as a fragment from some lode. When such fragment is found, the first question is, Where did it come from? Is it water-worn and rounded, or angular, with sharp corners? If water-worn and rounded it has traveled by stream or glacier, and the prospector must seek its lode above on the line of Hawkins. Her parents were both natives of Holland and had emigrated to New York about the same time his parents did. After their marriage they settled near Fredericton, where Mr. McKeen carried on farming operations and was also largely engaged in the lumber business. They were the parents of two sons and one daughter. Both he and his wife were members of the Episcopal Church, and he was also a Royal Arch Mason. Also for a time he was Captain of a volunteer company at his native place, and his sword and epaulets are still highly prized by his children. He died in the seventy-sixth year of his age, and his widow is still living, having reached the advanced age of eighty-nine.

William McKeen is the youngest in the above named family. He was reared in his native place, and began life there on his own account as a lumberman, in which business he has ever since continued. He now owns a sawmill in the Bitter Root valley, where he furnishes employment to from forty to sixty men and where he is making and selling large quantities of lumber. He has manufactured as much as nine million feet of lumber in a single year.

In 1887 Mr. McKeen purchased his commodious residence on Front street in Missoula, where he and his family reside. He was married November 1, 1859, to Miss Ann Hammond, who was born August 2, 1834, daughter of Andrew B. Hammond, of New Brunswick. The Hammonds trace one branch of their ancestry back to William Penn. Mr. and Mrs. McKeen have had five children. The oldest, Hattie E., is the wife of Dr. H. H. Hanson, of Missoula. Charles M. died in his seventh year. Bertha is the wife of John Roberts, and resides in Wales. Helen J. married Mr. Havelock Coy, a lawyer of Fredericton, New Brunswick. Mr. and Mrs. McKeen are members of the Episcopal Church in Missoula, and, politically, Mr. McKeen is identified with the Republican party. In business he has been successful, has acquired a competency, and as a man of the highest integrity and reliability has gained the respect and esteem of all with whom he has had dealings.

HON. JASON W. STREVELL, attorney at law, Miles City, is a native of the State of New York, born near Albany, in February, 1832, a son of Harvey and Elizabeth (Lewis) Strevell. His father, born in 1800 and died in 1890, was a farmer, and in politics an active Democrat. His mother was a Whig and strongly opposed to the institution of slavery. Young Jason received an academic education at Rensselaerville, New York, studied law in the office of Peckham & Tremain at Albany, same State, then the leading law firm of the State of New York, and was admitted to the bar in Albany, in 1855. He began the practice of his profession in 1856, at Pontiac, Illinois, where he remained twenty-four years, enjoying a successful career in his profession, becoming deservedly popular, and was also prominent in politics. He represented his district in the lower house of the Legislature as a Republican for four years, and in the Senate also for the same length of time. In 1876 he was the Republican Elector when R. B. Hayes was elected President of the United States. He was zealously opposed to slavery and well posted on the subject, owing to the teachings of his mother.

In October, 1879, he located in Miles City, Montana, where he has ever since been engaged in the practice of his favorite profession, having an extensive patronage, as well as the confidence and esteem of all the citizens. Soon after locating here he saw the need of a Sabbath-school, as he was a devout Presbyterian, and he at once set about organizing one, rather enlarging the insignificant nucleus of one already in existence. A year previously George M. Miles had opened a school, and Mr. Strevell came to his aid, and the two soon saw their labors producing favorable results. Mr. Strevell had been reared under the influences of the Dutch Reformed Church, but became zealous in the work of the Presbyterian Church, as the latter had representatives almost everywhere, and with both his time and money he accomplished great good in the Sabbath-school field, in which he is widely and favorably known.

such stream or glacier. Ores have thus been traced to their source for hundreds of miles. But for gold and silver quartz in those mountains, the source of these stray specimens must be sought in the gulches on which they are found. But if the specimen has not been worn and rounded and has sharp angles, it has not traveled far from its lode, which must be sought above in the mountain side. It may be traced by following a line of like specimens up to their source. Where the line of specimens ceases, the prospector may expect to find the vein, by the croppings or other indications of the lode. If the rock is bare, this part of the work is soon done; but if covered up it must be cleaned off by sinking a shaft and following the indications or fragments of quartz. When the lode is found, the work of the prospector is finished and the development begins. Such a discovery is called a "prospect," and the holes dug to discover it are called "prospect holes," or "prospect shafts." They may be seen on hill and valley all over the mountainous parts of Montana.

Prospecting for placer gold is generally more laborious, but it keeps the prospector more stationary. When he finds a gulch that suits his notions, he sinks shafts to bedrock and tests the gravel as he goes down by washing and panning it. Experience in mining and a knowledge of glaciers are most helpful in prospecting a gulch and its benches, or "bars"

He was Probate Judge of Custer county in 1881–2. In 1858, in Illinois, he married Miss Elizabeth Kelly, a daughter of Dr. John Kelly, of Lake City, Minnesota, who is a prominent physician. Her mother's maiden name was Esther Bishop, and her residence at Scranton, Pennsylvania. Her brother, Lewis Bishop, was a Colonel of volunteers in the war of 1812, and their ancestors participated in the war for independence. Judge Strevell and wife have had two children, one of whom is deceased. Charles N., the surviving one, is a merchant in Ogden, Utah; and Helen M. married George M. Miles, a prominent merchant in Miles City, and died in 1887.

Judge Strevell is a stanch Republican in his political views, and is one of the substantial, public-spirited citizens of Miles City, a man well qualified for the highest position within the gift of the people of the country. He is zealous in all good works. He is a member of the Board of Trustees for the State Reform School located near Miles City, and is now chairman of the board. He has had all the business he could attend to during his long public career, and stands high in the confidence and esteem of all who know him.

DONALD BRADFORD first came to Montana in 1884, but after remaining a short time he returned to the East. His residence here, although brief, had given him a favorable opinion of the State, and in 1886 he came back to Montana and took up his abode at Helena, where he has since made his home and the headquarters of his operations.

Donald Bradford was born in Springfield, Illinois, September 14, 1861. During the earlier years of his life he attended the common schools of his native State and Mississippi, and his education was completed in the University of Virginia. He determined to follow the profession of law, and upon locating in Helena he entered upon a law practice, which, however, he abandoned at the end of one year in order to engage in more congenial pursuits. The large areas of land susceptible of irrigation and which would under cultivation produce large crops attracted Mr. Bradford's attention, and he entered into enterprises to render these lands available for farming. His first venture was the construction of the big Dearborn canal, conveying water from the Dearborn river to adjacent lands and furnishing irrigation to an area of 75,000 acres hitherto unworked to any extent. Other extensive irrigating enterprises have also been promoted by him, and he is largely interested in Helena real estate, and farming lands adjacent to the city, as well as property elsewhere.

In 1890 Mr. Bradford was the Democratic nominee for Mayor of Helena, and was triumphantly elected over a candidate who had been deemed invincible by the members of the opposing party. In addition to this office, he has been secretary of the Helena Board of Trade, has organized the Chamber of Commerce and the Commercial Club, and is president of the Northeastern Abstract Company. He is a member of no secret organizations, but is an active and prominent member of the Montana Club. He belongs to the Episcopal Church. Although a young man, he is prominently identified with the interests of Montana and is an active promoter of measures looking to the prosperity of the State.

Mr. Bradford was married in Springfield, Illinois, in 1888, to Miss Esther Fox, and they have one child.

JOHN J. WALK, one of the leading citizens of Billings and prominent among the prosperous stock and mining men of Yellowstone county, is a native of the State of Indiana, where he was born, in Harrison county, in 1847, son of Joseph and Olive (Crandall) Walk. His father's ancestors were from Holland, but his grandfather, Abraham Walk, was born and reared in North Carolina, as the miners call them. It is generally very easy to prospect a bar, but there is great difficulty in prospecting a gulch or valley where the water is abundant. There are many gulches where there is every reason to believe the gravel on bedrock is very rich; but the bedrock water is so abundant that those gravels cannot be easily reached and prospected. To remove this water and enable the prospector to test the gravel on bedrock is often very expensive, as many of our Montana miners can testify from hard experience.

Expensive hydraulic machinery is sometimes necessary to remove the water. Streams and even considerable rivers are at times turned from their channels for the purpose of working the gravel and sands of their beds. But the prospecting of these gravels under streams and other waters is often done by raising the gravels through the water by sand pumps or other means. The work of removing the water belongs to mining rather than prospecting.

Mines are sometimes discovered by accident, by persons when they are not looking for them.

A man while hunting discovered a valuable iron mine in Maine; an Indian, while climbing a mountain side in South America, pulled down a tuft of roots which liberated a reservoir of native quicksilver; and the waters in the race of Sutter's mill exposed the golden sands that caused the greatest "stampede" the world has ever known, a stampede that brought men from the east, the north, the south, from Europe and Asia, a stampede that collected the most enerwhere he married, and in 1812, with his wife, moved in a cart to the then Territory of Indiana. He took part in the battle of Tippecanoe under General Harrison. Joseph A. Walk, our subject's father, was born and reared in Indiana and reared a large family. Two of his sons, Andrew and Martin, served in the Federal army during the late war, in the Army of the Potomac, in the Third Indiana Cavalry. Francis M. served during the war in the Twelfth Indiana Battery, which was stationed for a time at Fort Negley. Later he was transferred to a steam war vessel on the Mississippi river.

John J. Walk grew to manhood in Indiana, where he received a common-school education. In 1866 he went to Kansas, where he was engaged for four years in farming and stock-raising. In 1870 he went to Colorado and decided to engage in stock-raising, but concluded first to secure a helpmate. Accordingly, February 16, 1871, he married Miss Emma Davis, at Middletown, Missouri. She was the daughter of Samuel Davis. Her father, a native of Pennsylvania, was a prominent farmer and stockman. He had two sons, Frank and James, in the Federal army, and one (Hiram) a Lieutenant in the Confederate army, under Sterling Price. Frank was shot from his horse and killed by a bushwhacker while the animal was drinking, near Paris, Missouri. The father still survives, being now eighty-four years old.

Immediately after marriage, in 1871, Mr. Walk and wife crossed the plains in a wagon, and he purchased a lot and erected on it a residence, in Pueblo, Colorado, where he owned an entire block; but in December, that year, sold out, at a profit, and located at River Bend, on the Kansas Pacific Railroad; and that winter he and his brother-in-law, Ephraim Davis, killed 650 buffalo (!) for their hides, and made considerable money. The following spring Mr. Walk purchased a small herd of cattle and was soon extensively engaged in the cattle trade, which he continued with success until September, 1879, when he sold out and went to Oregon, where he purchased a large herd of cattle, which he drove overland to Montana, in 1880, locating them on White Beaver, Yellowstone valley, in the fall of that year. In the spring of 1881 he moved his herd to Clark's fork. The winter of 1880-1 was severe, and he lost thirty-five per cent of his cattle. In the fall of 1881 he engaged in butchering and supplying meats to the construction forces along the line of the Union Pacific Railroad, and conducted the business during the ensuing winter. In 1883 he purchased another large herd of cattle in Oregon, which he drove through the country and located on the Lake Basin range. The winters of 1884-5 were mild, and his loss of stock light. The summer of 1886 was unusually dry, and there was but little grass, and the cattle entered the following winter in bad condition, and the winter proved to be the most severe before or since. The result was a fearful loss of stock, the average loss being about sixty-five per cent, from which stockmen have never fully recovered. In 1886 Mr. Walk had his cattle on the Crow Indian Reservation. The winters of 1887-8 were mild and cattle prospered, but he had difficulties with Indians, who killed and consumed many of his cattle. At the same time he paid a heavy tariff to the Government for the the right of pasture. The winters of 1889-90-91 were mild.

In 1892 he sold his entire stock interest and engaged in mining in Boulder mining camp, Park county, where he now owns valuable free-milling gold quartz property. May 9, 1892, he began operating a stage line between Big Timber, on the Northern Pacific Railroad, and Boulder getic people of all races within the Golden Gate, and made California one of the grandest commonwealths of the world. But Professor Dana, the geologist of the Wilkes' expedition around the world, had already mentioned the Pacific coast as a hopeful field for those in search of the precious metals. This was one of the motives which impelled our Government to the acquisition of California.

There is a great variety of ores in Montana. The most of them have been worked with profit; a few have not yet appeared in sufficient quantities, as the ores of tin; and some are absolutely injurious when associated with other ores; as zinc when associated with the ores of lead and silver.

An ore of antimony has been very successfully worked in one place about fifteen miles from Thompson Falls. It has also appeared with the galena in many of our mines.

Bismuth appeared in the mines in Emigrant Gulch.

Tellurium is found in the mines in Tucker Gulch at Butte, on Mill creek, at Maiden, and at Neihart. Some of these ores have been very rich in gold. One shipment from Tucker Gulch yielded $325,000 per ton.

Cobalt and nickel are found in the Bell Stowe mine on Thompson river.

Black sand, abundant in some of our placers, always contains gold, and at times as much as $200 per ton.

Beautiful crystals or corundum are abundant in some of our placers. These crystals form beautiful gems of the varieties known as Oriental Ruby and Oriental Topaz, Oriental Emerald mining camp, a tri-weekly line on which he had a contract for carrying the mail. His coach was drawn by four horses, had a capacity for sixteen passengers, and he had twenty-two head of horses to operate the line. In July, 1893, he sold out to Dow Wolu, of Boulder river, who is bound to fill all contracts until June 30, 1894. In October, 1893, Mr. Walk decided to engage in the sheep industry, when he purchased 1,400 head and placed them on a ceded portion of the Crow Indian Reservation. In partnership with J. J. Nickey he constructed the Grand Hotel at Billings, at a cost of $38,000, which had been in charge of Mr. Nickey for three years. In 1883 Mr. Walk erected his elegant residence in the Foster addition, North side, at a cost of $4,000. He and his wife have two interesting daughters, now attending the Sacred Heart School, at St. Charles, Missouri. They are Edith E., aged eighteen years, and Alice E., fifteen years. Mrs. Walk is a member of the Congregational Church, and he is a member of the K. of P., and politically he votes independently.

JEFFERSON MCCAULEY, a respected farmer and stock dealer of Big Hole valley, came to Montana in 1864, arriving at Virginia City, July 14. Briefly, a sketch of his life is as follows:

Mr. McCauley was born in northwestern Pennsylvania, February 10, 1843, son of David McCauley, a native of the north of Ireland. David McCauley came to America when a child. His father had died in Ireland before they started for this country and his mother died on the voyage; so David landed in America an orphan. He was reared in Pennsylvania, and was there married to Miss Mary Eaton, a native of Allegheny county, that State, and of English descent. After their marriage they removed to Venango county, Pennsylvania, where he owned a farm and where he resided until the time of his death, which occurred in 1870. His wife died in the thirty-ninth year of her age. They were industrious, respectable farmers and were members of the Presbyterian Church. Five of their seven children are still living.

Jefferson McCauley was the fourth born in the family. He was reared on his father's farm and received his early education in the public schools and later attended an academy. When he was eighteen he started out to make his own way in the world as a schoolteacher. After he had taught two terms he decided to learn the trade of blacksmith, and at that business worked for three years in Pennsylvania. Then he made the journey by rail to St. Joseph, Missouri, and thence across the plains with mule teams to Montana, via the Bighorn and Yellowstone rivers. He and three other young men purchased their team and outfit in partnership and made the trip together. After his arrival at Virginia City he leased a mine, but soon found he could make more at blacksmithing than mining; so he purchased a shop and soon found himself in the midst of a prosperous business. The price for shoeing a span of horses at that time was $12, and he received $10 for making a miner's pick and fifty cents for sharpening one.

While in Virginia City, October 13, 1869, Mr. McCauley married Miss Nevada Schriver, a native of Portland, Oregon, and a daughter of George Schriver, who is of German descent. Her mother was before her marriage a Miss Culberson, her ancestors being English. After his marriage he removed to German Gulch in Deer Lodge and Oriental Amethyst. They are harder and more brilliant than any other gem save the diamond. A company is now working or preparing to work Eldorado bar and other placers near Helena for these precious stones.

There is what may be called a copper placer in a small stream in Jefferson county, between Jefferson City and Beaver station, as it was called in the old times. Our attention was called to it by the bright copper which coated the tires of the buggy and the horses' shoes when we drove through the stream. It was found that the water of the stream was thoroughly impregnated with a solution of copper, and the sands in the bed of it were full of bright crystals of metallic copper. It may be possible to work out these crystals from the sands and to precipitate the copper from the water with profit.

There are some half dozen oil springs under the mountains west of Red Lodge. Experts say these springs are ready to fill our towns with oil and asphalt and our country homes with bright lights from home springs of coal oil.

Every one who has had the least experience in mining will at once admit the absolute necessity of timber and water in successful mining. We have rich placers never worked, because no water could reach them without enormous expense. Hundreds of mines made good yields last year, for the large supply of water. Give water enough to run giants in our placers, and county, where he secured a claim and where he mined for seven years, meeting with fair success. In a single day he took out as high as $100 from this claim.

In 1872 Mr. McCauley came to his present location in Big Hole valley, three miles north of Melrose. Here he took squatters' claim to a tract of land and engaged in farming and stock-raising, and from time to time as he was prospered he added to his original holdings until he is now the owner of 600 acres of choice land, which is utilized as a grain and stock farm. His cattle are a cross of Durham and Herefordshire, while his horses are chiefly Norman-Percheron. Since coming to this farm he for three years ran a blacksmith shop in Butte City and did a successful business. Like most men who have ever mined, he still takes an interest in mining and has several good prospects for gold, silver and copper, all near his home. In time these mines will unquestionably become of great value.

Mr. and Mrs. McCauley have had nine children, two of whom died in infancy. Those living are Robert Lee, Rena Dale, May Belle, Rosie Edith, Daisy Lewella, Jefferson Flint and George Thurman. Both he and his wife are active and efficient members of the Presbyterian Church, and, in politics, he has until quite recently been a Democrat but is now independent in his views. He has several times been elected and served as Justice of the Peace.

FREDERICK C. WEBSTER, a successful member of the Montana bar, residing at Missoula, came from the East, having been born in Litchfield, Connecticut, October 17, 1850. His family originated in the north of England, emigrated to New England in the Colonial days and became prominent in the early history of this country, Noah and Daniel Webster both being members of the family. His pioneer ancestors went from Hartford to Litchfield, cutting their way through the woods and being among the first settlers of the latter place. The property was divided among the first settlers by lot, and Mr. Webster drew the farm which contained Chestnut Hill. On that farm he took up his abode and there many generations of the family have been born, the property still being owned by the Websters. Grandfather Benjamin Webster was born and spent his life at Chestnut Hill. He lived to be ninety years old. Charles B. Webster, his oldest son, the father of our subject, was born there in 1823, and he, too, spent his whole life at that place, reaching his three-score years and ten. Charles B. Webster married Miss Lucinda Baldwin, a native of Connecticut, and they became the parents of two sons, Frederick C. and Wilbur F. The latter resides at the old homestead.

Frederick C. Webster graduated at Yale College in the class of 1873, with the degree of B. A. He then took a course in the Yale Law Department and also read law a year with Judge Edward Seymour, now Judge of the Supreme Court of Connecticut. He was admitted to practice in the courts of Massachusetts in June, 1875, and soon afterward came West, his first location being at Minneapolis, Minnesota. After three years spent in that city he went to Colorado and became interested in mining at San Juan, and also in various other pursuits. From San Juan he went to Grand Junction, where he practiced law and was elected City Attorney. In 1884 we find him at Butte City, Montana, and three years later he came from that place to Missoula, with which he has since been identified. Here he entered into a partnership with the veteran lawyer of Montana, Judge Woody, which association was continued until Judge Woody's election to the Bench. After this Mr. Webster and Mr. Woody became partners, and are now doing business under the firm millions in fine gold would be added to the annual yield of our mines. Give more water and the mines will give more gold. Nearly all our mines have water enough, and some more than enough, in the early part of the season, when the snows are melting and the spring rains fill the streams. Could the surplus be saved until the dry season came, the efficient working time might be so prolonged as to double the yield of gold.

Reservoirs and irrigating canals have long been used for mining. These modes of increasing and prolonging the supply of water were resorted to by our enterprising miners at an early day in the history of Montana mining, as shown by the old reservoirs in nearly every gulch, and by the numerous ditches which once conducted the waters along the hillsides of every valley. But the mines are so numerous, and the amount of water for each so limited, that this system of supply can avail to a limited extent only for increasing the water and for prolonging the mining season, save by an outlay of money beyond the means of private individuals. It is different with irrigation, for large streams can be utilized, and the same canal can supply hundreds and even thousands of farms.

But nature has furnished the most efficient means of supplying our mines with both timber and water. Nearly all our mines are at or near our numerous mountain ranges, which nature has clothed with dense forests of pines. Nature has also provided that every tiny leaf of all these pines should constantly by night and day, and in all seasons, give off moisture to be condensed into clouds which yield the showers name of Webster & Woody. As skillful lawyers and as men of the highest integrity they have gained an enviable reputation. In 1888 Mr. Webster was elected Prosecuting Attorney of Missoula county. At the close of his term he was re elected, and served altogether four years. He has since given his undivided attention to his law practice.

Mr. Webster was married, June 1, 1889, to Miss Anna C. Rye, a native of Norway, and they have two children, Lucy B. and Frederick B., both born in Missoula. He built the residence in which he and his family reside.

In his native town, in 1873, Mr. Webster was made a Master Mason, and since then he has taken an active part in the affairs of the order. At this writing he is Deputy Grand Master of the Grand Lodge of the State of Montana. He served as Master of Missoula Lodge, No. 13, two years; was the first High Priest of the Chapter in Missoula; is also a member of the Commandry at Butte City. Politically, he is a Republican.

HON. FRANCIS LYMAN WORDEN, deceased, was the pioneer merchant of Missoula, having come to Montana in 1860. He was prominently identified with the growth and development of this city and also of the State, and was ranked with Montana's most enterprising and highly respected citizens. Of his life and ancestry we make record as follows:

The Wordens are of Welsh origin. Some representatives of the family were among the earliest settlers in New England and twelve generations of them have been born in America. Our subject's grandfather, Asa Worden, was born in Vermont in 1758. He reared a family of eight children and lived to be ninety years of age. His son, Rufus Worden, was born in Vermont, May, 8, 1804; married Susan Powers, and had a family of eight children, four sons and four daughters; was an industrious and prosperous farmer all his life; died in the seventy-sixth year of his age. Francis L. was the oldest son in this family.

Mr. Worden was born in Vermont in 1830, and attended school in Troy, New York, where, at the age of fourteen, he began clerking in a store. In the capacity of clerk he continued for seven years at Troy. In 1852 he went to San Francisco, California, and clerked there for about two years, but in the meantime he made a trip down the coast to Panama. From California he went to Oregon. There he mined one year and then started for Colville, but stopped at Snake river, and returned to The Dalles in Oregon, where he remained a short time, and while there participated in the Indian war of 1855. He spent nine months with the Oregon pioneers in this war. He was then employed as clerk in the Indian Department, under Isaac J. Stephens. Afterward he clerked for a short time at The Dalles. From The Dalles he went to Walla Walla and opened a store, soon after bought out the parties who had preceded him there, and thus became for a time the only merchant in that county. He was Postmaster of Walla Walla for two years. In 1860 he formed a partnership with C. P. Higgins, and they located in Hell Gate valley, four miles above the present city of Missoula. From this place they soon afterward moved their business to Missoula, their store being the first one in the town. In 1862 the gold was first discovered on Gold creek, and with the rush of miners to that point these enterprising merchants went there with a stock of goods, and conducted their store at that place until the following and snows of our mountains. And besides, nature has pushed these mountains high into the cold regions, so that every wind that comes from the warm Pacific freighted with moisture is condensed into rain, hail or snow, to fill our mountain reservoirs. Such are the provisions of nature to furnish the water needed by the mines in our mountains.

The effects of forests on the supply of water were especially noticeable during the last excessively dry season, while exploring the forest-clad mountains of the Little Belt and Judith ranges and the vast forest region around Cook City. Instead of dry streams which elsewhere told of failing water and the early retreat of the miners from their placers, and the herds of the stockmen from their usual summer ranges, in these forest regions the springs and streams were full.

As we rode over these lofty mountains and along these deep valleys in the grateful shade of the "whispering pines," and noted everywhere the gushing fountains and the sparkling streams, we could but remember the ancient proverb, "The largest rivers are cradled in the leaves of the mountain pines."

This is true in Asia, true in Africa, true in Europe and true in America. Wherever the mountain pines have been permitted to grow where the great God planted them the small fountains and the great rivers have continued to flow and make the lands fruitful. But where the ax has swept away these forests, the springs have dried up and the streams have left dry beds and the lands are covered with drifting sands, as is seen in Mesopotamia, Palestine and northern Africa, once the most fertile regions of the world.

year. Then they moved the goods to Deer Lodge and opened the first store in that town. In 1864 they became the pioneer mill men of the valley, built a sawmill and gristmill, and in 1866 completed a valuable milling property, which proved of great value to the settlers. In 1868 they sold their interests at Deer Lodge, and that same year, in partnership with Captain Higgins and Hon. W. J. McCormack, Mr. Worden laid out 100 acres of the town site of Missoula. From that time they became the main factors in bringing about the present development of the city. It was through their efforts that ditches were made, pipes were laid and that an abundance of pure water was brought to the town. Mr. Warden continued his mercantile business successfully all his life, his whole career being characterized by the highest integrity.

He was married at Frenchtown, Missoula county, Montana, November 29, 1866, to Miss Lucretia Miller, a native of Pennsylvania and a daughter of Henry W. Miller. Mr. Miller came to Montana with his wife and two daughters in 1862, settled on a farm near Frenchtown, and there died in 1869. His wife survived him until September 8, 1893, when she passed away in the sixty-fourth year of her age. Mr. and Mrs. Worden became the parents of seven children, namely: Lucina L., who is now the wife of Frederick T. Sterling, Missoula, and has one child; Henry O., a business man of Missoula; Carrie M., Louise M., wife of B. E. Bradley, of St. Louis; Frank L., Horace B., and Ruth M. Mrs. Worden and her unmarried children reside in the pleasant home in Missoula, which Mr. Worden built some time before his death. He died February 5, 1887. His private life was that of a true and devoted husband and a loving and indulgent father. While in business and political circles he has been missed, it is in his own home circle where his loss has been most keenly felt.

Of Mr. Worden's public life, we record that in 1864 he was elected to and served in the Territorial Legislature, representing the counties of Missoula, Deer Lodge and Choteau. He was also elected one of the County Commissioners of Missoula county, and by that Board was chosen Chairman, in which capacity he served most faithfully. In 1875 he was again elected to the Territorial Legislature from Missoula county, and in 1880 he was elected to the Legislative Council, being the only Republican elected to that body. Mr. Worden was a man who was largely endowed with those qualities of mind and heart that conduce to make men esteemed and honored. He braved much danger in the early settlement of the country, and during his honorable business career won a degree of success to which he was most justly entitled. His good name and record are a credit to the State of which he was an honored founder.

Hon. James T Phillips, of Missoula, Montana, was born in Albany, New York, March 14, 1837. His ancestors originated in England and some of his forefathers were among the early settlers of New England. His father, Washington Phillips, was born in Berkshire county, Massachusetts, in the year 1812. He was a graduate of Oberlin College, having studied there under President Finney; spent his whole life in the Congregational ministry; died in 1872, in the sixtieth year of his age. His first wife, nee Eliza Tarbell, also a native of Massachusetts,

But how is it that these pine leaves feed the springs and mountain streams, and thus "cradle the mighty rivers," and keep them flowing through the dryest seasons?

1. It is well known that the leaves of the pines, as well as the leaves of all other living plants, constantly give off into the air vapor of water. This vapor helps to form the clouds which so constantly appear on the mountains, and there furnish the frequent rains and snows so well known and ever expected in those high regions. These rains and snows help furnish the waters to keep up the springs and streams that feed the rivers.

2. These pines shed large quantities of leaves and twigs and cones every year, which cover the ground and keep it moist and cool by preventing the evaporation of the moisture.

3. This mulch of leaves and twigs and cones keeps the ground cool and moist and promotes the growth of mosses and lichens and grasses, which greatly increase the surface mulch, that, like a rich carpet of sponges, holds the waters and gives them up gradually, and keeps up the springs and small streams which make the mighty rivers. This spongy coating varies in thickness from the fraction of an inch to several feet, as shown where fires have burned it up and exposed the logs and rocks it had covered.

4. In these forests the snow falls in great quantities, and in spring the sun and warm winds melt it less rapidly in the shade than in the open country; and the waters instead of running off and producing destructive floods as on our naked mountains, are absorbed by this spongy carpet and held as in reservoirs, which gradually yield them up to keep up the springs and streams through the long dry summer and autumn.

and the mother of our subject, died when the latter was only four years old. Mr. Phillips was afterward married again, but his second wife lived only a few years.

James T. Phillips received his education in the public schools. When a mere boy he began to support himself by clerking, and when he was fifteen he went overland to Santa Fe with a scientific surveying party in the employ of the United States Government. Their survey being completed, he returned home.

In April, 1861, soon after the firing on Fort Sumter, in answer to President Lincoln's call for volunteers to put down the rebellion, he enlisted in Company A, Sixth Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry. He was at the first battle of Bull Run, and was mustered out when his time expired in the fall. Again he enlisted, this time in Company D, Eleventh Massachuseets Volunteer Infantry, and this time for nine months. At the expiration of this term, he re-enlisted, in the Second Massachusetts Volunteer Cavalry, entering it as Sergeant in Company K. He remained with this regiment from October, 1862, until the close of the war, and was discharged on Boston Commons in 1865. He participated in the battles of Winchester and Cedar Creek and numerous other smaller engagements, was slightly wounded on three occasions, had many hairbreadth escapes, and for his gallant service was promoted from time to time until he was in command of his company.

After the war Mr. Phillips opened a drug store in Brookfield, Massachusetts, and some time later removed from there to Detroit, Michigan, where he became a commercial agent. For twenty-one years he was on the road, representing some of the leading wholesale houses of Detroit. During this time he was a member of the Commercial Society, and was honored by being chosen its President, in which capacity he served one year. From Michigan he came to Missoula, Montana, in 1886, and opened a wholesale liquor business, which he has since conducted. He is now the proprietor of the Montana Saloon, and has a large patronage.

Mr. Phillips has been identified with the Masonic fraternity since 1861, and has since advanced in the order until he has attained the thirty-second Scottish Rite degree. He is also a member of the A. O. U. W., and, politically, is a Republican. In 1889 he was elected a member of the Montana State Legislature, and has the honor of having served in the first State Legislature of Montana. He served two terms in that body. During that time he was a member of military and other committees. Since he took up his abode in Missoula he has accumulated considerable property here. He owns a nice home in the city and has built a brick block on Front street. He naturally takes a great deal of interest in military affairs. It was largely through his instrumentality that the Montana National Guards at Missoula were organized, and of this company he was elected Captain.

Mr. Phillips was married in 1860, on New Year's Day, to Miss Mary J. Thompson, a native of Brookfield, Massachusetts, and a daughter of Avery Thompson of that State.

This is nature's reservoir, spread everywhere under the pine forests to catch the water of every mountain side and valley, and to hold it for the dry seasons to follow. And this reservoir, built by the great engineer of the universe, has no defects. Though built of tiny leaves, brittle twigs, flexible mosses, slender grasses and microscopic lichens, yet it is stronger than the walls of vast granite blocks tied and cemented by the rules of science. It never bursts and produces such floods as once carried ruin down the Ten-Mile and devastation and death to Johnstown.

In Florida and Louisiana it may be a pleasant sight to see the effect of the woodman's ax on the forests, and the planters' fires upon the jungle, letting the sunshine in upon the reeking soil; but in Montana the woodman's ax and forest fires destroy nature's reservoirs, and make our mountains and hills barren wastes and fruitful sources of ruinous floods,—when the waters of melting snows and storms all sweep down to all the valleys, leaving but little in the naked soil to supply the springs and streams. If one would see the difference, let him visit Cook City at the end of summer and feast his eyes with the glorious forests and perennial fountains on every hillside and the sparkling streams in every ravine and valley; and then go to Helena and see the mountains, once clothed with grand old forests and native reservoirs, but now hideous with blackened stumps and naked rocks, dry sands and pebbly channels, where, before the ax destroyed our forests and natural reservoirs, springs gushed and streams flowed to quench the thirst of the miner and wash his golden sands. But the natural reservoirs have been destroyed with the forests around Helena. Our

HON. EUGENE O. DUGAN, Mayor of Butte City and one of her active business men, is a native of St. John, New Brunswick, born March 24, 1862.

His father, John Dugan, emigrated from Ireland to America when a young man, settling in Boston, where he married Miss Annie Moriarty, a native of his own country. He was a lumberman by occupation, and resided in the United States and Canada up to the time of his death, which occurred at St. John in the sixty-seventh year of his age. His wife still survives, being now (1894) sixty-five years old. They were devout Catholics. They had four children, of whom two are living.

Mayor Dugan, their youngest, was brought up to manhood in his native town, and educated in her public schools. On starting out in business he was first in the employ of E. D. Jewett & Company until 1883. Then he spent nine months in New York, and then came on to Montana, arriving in Butte in 1884. Here he was bookkeeper for Casey & Brophy until they dissolved partnership, and then he became a member of the firm of P. J. Brophy & Company, grocers, which relation he sustained until 1893, when, in connection with Mr. Jones, he engaged in the insurance and money-lending business, the firm name being Dugan & Jones. They represent twelve of the best insurance companies in the country, both American and English, and lend money for Eastern parties on real-estate security. They constitute a firm of the highest reliability and enjoy a large patronage. To a considerable extent Mr. Dugan is also interested in gold, silver and copper mines, some of which are being worked and pay well.

Mr. Dugan is a Democrat. In 1891 he was chosen a member of the city Council from the Second ward, being the first Democrat to gain that distinction in that ward. While serving in the Council he took a deep interest in the affairs of the city, exhibiting marked executive ability. At the close of his term he was made the nominee of his party for Mayor and was easily elected; and he is now serving with credit to himself and to the fullest satisfaction of his fellow citizens. During the first year of his Mayoralty grading and sewerage were done to the amount of $55,000; the new Library Building has been completed, which is a credit to the city: it cost, with furniture, $100,000, and the library already contains 16,000 volumes; and the Mayor has favored various other improvements; and now he recommends the paving of Broadway and Main streets,—an improvement greatly needed; and his efforts in this line show the progressive character of his administration of the city's affairs.

Mayor Dugan is a member of the Catholic Church and of the A. O. U. W. He is a man of energetic business talent, and during his residence in Montana he has made a wide and favorable acquaintance and has hosts of friends.

PETER HOE, a contractor and builder of Billings, was born in Norway, February 22, 1848, a son of Christopher and Rachel (Moore) Hoe. The father was a sea captain. Peter attended the common schools of his native country until seventeen years of age, after which he spent two years in the Royal Agricultural College at Throndhjem, where he studied all branches of agriculture and mechanics, and received a diploma. He had made himself engineers have done their best to fill their places with the artificial ponds their skill has invented.

The whole world outside America has learned the sad lesson that forests destroyed means disastrous floods, distressing droughts, failing fountains, dry streams and barren soils, as shown by the late floods from the Pyrenees in France, which swept away an ancient city, and the floods of China, which have devastated whole provinces, drowned hundreds of thousands and left ten million people without homes or food or the means of support. The nations built reservoirs as early as Solomon's time, which gave temporary relief; but their fountains have failed, and even Solomon's reservoirs are dry, and his fruitful fields and glorious gardens are now barren wastes.

But modern Europe has learned better. The woodman's ax is followed by the forester's spade. For every tree cut down three new ones are planted. Government help in building reservoirs will be a temporary aid to our miners and farmers; but while the government undertakes to hold and manage our forests, something should be done to supply the destruction made by the wood-choppers, the lumbermen, the coal-burner and the forest fires. As the forests disappear our mining will languish.

Nowhere can forests be renewed and increased more easily than here. Young pines and firs by the million spring up in the wake of every fire and wood-chopper. A part of these young trees could be easily transplanted to unoccupied places in the mountains and foot-hills. Such a work would make the future of our mountain country more hopeful, and secure the working of our mines for the next thousand years.

But you say trees transplanted will die without water. So will the plants, which cover our familiar with the English language before coming to the United States. In 1868 Mr. Hoe arrived in Sioux City, Iowa, spent the following five years in the Government Land Office, and then engaged in contracting and building brick and stone structures. In 1884 he purchased and located on a half section of land in Hyde county, South Dakota, but that venture proved unsuccessful, and eight years afterward he sold one-half of the tract. Since 1892 Mr. Hoe has resided in Billings, Montana, where he has erected a good residence, has a large and lucrative business, and still owns a quarter section of land in Hyde county.

October 16, 1875, in Sioux City, Iowa, our subject was united in marriage with Mary Olesen, a daughter of Ole and Gertie (Erickson) Olesen, natives of Norway. The father was a mechanic and farmer by occupation. Mr. and Mrs. Hoe have had four sons and four daughters,—Martha J., Sophia J., James, Anna L., Oscar, Charlie, Mabel E. and Christopher. The family are Lutherans in their religious belief, but attend the Congregational Church. Mr. Hoe affiliates with the Republican party.

HON. E. A. KENNEY, for many years a respected citizen of Missoula, and ex-State Auditor of Montana, is a native of Vermont, his birth having occurred at Guilford, May 26, 1843. Of his life and ancestry we make record as follows:

Mr. Kenney's grandfather, Alvin Kenney, was born in Ireland, was married there, and with his young wife emigrated to America in 1814. They settled on a farm near where Vernon, Vermont, now stands, and there they reared their family of four sons and three daughters. He died in the seventy-second year of his age and his wife passed away the following year. Their son Alvin was our subject's father. He was the second in the family and was born at Vernon in 1815. He married Levina Pierce, a descendant of one of the earliest families that settled in America, their marriage occurring in 1837, he being twenty-two and she twenty. The first five years of their married life were spent at Guilford, whence they removed to Claremont, New Hampshire, where they resided until our subject was sixteen years of age. At that time they removed to Meriden, Connecticut, and a little later to Hartford. There August 2, 1862, both father and son tendered their services to their country, enlisting in Company F, Fifteenth Volunteer Infantry. The elder Mr. Kenney entered the army as First Sergeant, later was Quartermaster's Sergeant, and continued in active duty until October, 1864, when he died of yellow fever at New Berne, North Carolina. And we may here state that his wife died the following year.

E. A. Kenney's service was in the Army of the Potomac, with which he continued until the war closed. His first engagement was the second battle of Bull Run. He was at Antietam, the second battle of Fredericksburg, and in many other minor engagements. When General Lee surrendered, young Kenney was at Morehead City, aiding in forwarding supplies to Sherman's army. Twice during his service he was slightly wounded, a ball striking his foot-hills every springtime with their carpet of flowers, die without water. But these plants utilize the waters as they drop from the melting snow. They spring up and bloom just below the snow line, and sometimes even through the snow. They follow the snow line as it melts and retreats up the mountain sides every spring, utilizing the water to feed their blooms and ripen their seeds. The tree-planter might know as much as the violets and the anemone and follow up the snow line and plant his trees where the ground is wet, under every log and beside every rock where the moisture lingers latest.

By this following of the flowers, the tree-planter's season will last from March on the foot-hills to July in the high mountains. The anemone blooms all the way from March to July,—March on the foot-hills and July on the alpine summits. Let us be wise according to our best lights. Let those who believe in God follow his plans for supplying the springs and rivers by forests; and those of us who believe in evolution follow the plan evolved by the laws of nature to supply the waters needed in our homes, our factories, our mines and our farms.

And besides, this natural mode of keeping up the supply of water will also keep up the supply of timber so useful in mining. With the present system of destroying our forests, in fifty years our mountains will have but little timber; but trees planted now would be large enough in fifty years for mining.

A very large number of the mines in Montana had iron ores covering the characteristic ores of the vein to a greater or less depth. These iron ores are known to old English miners as "gossan," and though these caps are not rich in gold and silver and copper, they have been, in leg one time, and at the other time being hit in the shoulder by a piece of shell. He entered the service at the age of nineteen, as a private, and from time to time was promoted until he became Captain of his company. After the grand review at Washington, in which he took part, he returned to his home in Connecticut. For sometime after the war he was connected with a military school in Cheshire, Connecticut, as military instructor. In March, 1868, he enlisted in Company F, Second United States Cavalry, and was on duty five years at Fort Ellis, near Bozeman, Montana. Then he formed a partnership with Hugh Hoope and started a trading post at the present site of Livingston, this partnership being dissolved at the end of six months and Mr. Kenney coming from there to Missoula. The first three years of his residence in Missoula he was principal of the schools here, then he was placed on the Republican ticket for Treasurer of the county, and, what was very complimentary to him, he was the only man on that ticket who was elected. After serving his term as Treasurer he was elected Sheriff. There were then many criminals in the country and the sheriff's office was one that was attended with great risk to life. His courage and nerve here stood him in good stead and he filled the position in a most capable and efficient manner. When Missoula was incorporated as a city he was elected its first Marshal, in which office he served three terms, being twice re-elected. At the first Republican State Convention at Anaconda he was nominated for State Auditor, was subsequently elected, and in that capacity served from November 8, 1890, until January, 1, 1893.

Since his retirement from office he has been rusticating at his home in Missoula, in a romantic spot on the east side of the Rattlesnake river and at the foot of Old Jumbo mountain. Near his home he has a small fruit ranch, and in the life of a horticulturist he finds both pleasure and profit.

Mr. Kenney was married January 1, 1876, to Miss Ophelia Pelkey, a native of St. Louis, Missouri, born September 4, 1860. She is a daughter of Augustus and Elvira Pelkey, who came to Montana in 1862. Soon after their arrival here, Mrs. Pelkey, on the 4th of August, gave birth to a daughter, the first white girl baby born in Montana. Mr. and Mrs. Kenney have seven children, all natives of Missoula except the youngest, who was born in Helena. Their names are as follows: Lydia A., George A., Delia L., Edwin, William G., Florence L. and Albert.

Mr. Kenney has been a life-long Republican and is a member of the G. A. R., being Past Vice Commander of Robert Winthrop Post at Missoula. His long residence and official career have gained for him a wide acquaintance throughout Montana, and he is as popular as he is well known.

Andrew Campbell, a prominent attorney, United States Commissioner and Justice of the Peace of Billings, was born in Manchester, England, in 1828, a son of Duncan and Mary (McKeever) Campbell. The father was a cousin of the Duke of Argyle, and a relative of the famous family of Howards. When seven years of age he began work in cotton-mills, his father having been a weaver all ages and in all great mining countries, esteemed a good indication of rich mines. This opinion was so strong and prevalent among the miners of Europe at a very early day in the history of mining, that it found expression in several languages, as shown by the "gossan hood" of Cornwall, "chapeau de fer" of France, and the "eisernen hut" of Germany. It even became a proverb in the very early ages of mining, as is shown by the following, well known to German miners:

"Er ist nie nicht gang so gut Der tragt nicht eine eisernen hut."
No mine is deemed so good,
As one that has an iron hood.

This popular idea, which has come down to us through the ages, is verified in a great many of the mines of Montana. This opinion has been so universal as to give it all the force of the old legend, Vox populi, vox dei.

Though the iron and manganese ores which form these caps are not as a rule very rich in the precious metals, they carry enough to make them very valuable fluxes to use with more refractory and richer ores.

There is a vast amount of the brown hydrous oxide and sulphuret of iron forming the caps and constituting the gangues of thousands of our mines. Originally this iron was all sulphuret, but the combined action of air and water has changed this sulphuret from pyrites to limonite down as far as the air has been permitted to penetrate. Below permanent water the iron still remains a sulphuret. Such iron caps are found in the mines of nearly every mining district in the State. While this iron is deemed a good indication of valuable mines, and while it always has some gold and is a good flux, for smelting richer refractory ores, it has but little value for manufacturing iron.

and cotton-spinner, was a soldier in the British army during the war of 1812, and came to America with his family in 1837.

Andrew Campbell, our subject, received but limited school advantages. He owned and resided on a farm several years in Bureau county, Illinois, and while there also served as Road Commissioner. In 1865 he removed to Utah, served two years as Recorder for mining districts, was engaged in contracting on the Union Pacific Railroad, next began farming on land he owned in Nebraska, went from there to the Black Hills, and afterward to Fort Custer, where he was engaged in furnishing fuel for the Government two years. After the contract for the Union Pacific Railroad was extended 100 miles west of Bismarck, Mr. Campbell was employed as a contractor on that division until the road was completed. He built two miles of the road, commencing six miles west of Billings. While engaged in that occupation he read law in his tent, was admitted to the bar at Helena, under Chief Justice Blake, and since 1886 has served as Justice of the Peace of Billings. Mr. Campbell has also filled the offices of City Justice and City Attorney.

He was married in Bureau county, Illinois, November 14, 1854, to Amanda M. Harrington, a daughter of James J. and Eliza J. Sherman, of Rhode Island. The father was a lineal descendant of Roger Sherman. Mr. and Mrs. Campbell have four children—James A.; Maria A., wife of Thomas P. McDonald, of Park county, Montana; Fannie R., wife of James Echels, of Livingston, this State; and Percy A., of Butte. Mr. Campbell is a member of Ashlar Lodge, No. 29, A. F. & A. M., and Chapter, No. 6. In political matters, he affiliates with the Democratic party. Mrs. Campbell is a member of the Congregational Church, in which she was formerly a member of the choir.

Augustus William Allie, a retired citizen of Avon, Deer Lodge county, Montana, was born in Prussia, December 25, 1849. Although a native of Prussia, his earliest recollections are of Cincinnati, Ohio, to which city he was taken when he was six months old and where the first nine years of his life were spent. When he was nine years old he left home and went to Decatur and other places in Illinois, and in 1859, when only ten years old, he started for Pike's Peak, Colorado, where, soon after his arrival, he obtained employment in the Pollock House, the first hotel built there. Subsequently he went to the San Juan country and Mexico, but returned to Pike's Peak and remained there until 1863, when he directed his course toward Boise City, Idaho. In the fall of that year he went to Oregon; returned to Boise City the next year, and the following fall went back to Colorado. In the spring of 1865 we again find him en route for Idaho, but, meeting with misfortune at Salt Lake and losing all his possessions, he was compelled to walk from there to Boise City. In 1866 he spent a short time in Montana, went from here to California and Oregon, and that same year came back to Montana, and in this State he has since made his home.

There are extensive beds of limonite in various valleys and ravines in our mining districts, which appear to have been deposited in the water, as bog ores are. These beds were once covered with water, and the waters coming down from the mountain sides over and through the iron gangues and caps of the mines, became charged with that metal, which was deposited in the waters below as bog ore. These iron ores usually contain small quantities of gold, which make them so much more valuable for fluxes. Some of this is pure enough to be worked as other bog ores are, in manufacturing iron. There are beds of these ores of great extent in the ravines in the Judith and Little Belt mountains and other districts of the State. Prospectors so often find the caps of mines of gold, silver, copper and lead made up of similar iron ore, that they have sometimes mistaken this bog ore for vein caps, and have worked through it to be disappointed by finding beneath barren rocks instead of metalliferous veins. A little example of the position, shape and surroundings of these beds of bog ore will enable the prospector to distinguish them from the caps of veins.

Several deposits of magnetic iron (loadstone) have been discovered in the Judith mountains, in large croppings from the head of Wolf creek to the Barker district, and on Henderson mountain. Specular iron has also been discovered in various parts of the State. There is an extended bed in the Judith mountains, a strong vein in the Red mountains, near Highland, and extensive croppings of a vein of this ore in Fairview district in Jefferson county. Spathic iron has been noticed in many localities in the State in workable quantities. It often

For a number of years Mr. Allie has been engaged in mining operations, and his earnest efforts in this direction have been crowned with signal success. He was engaged in placer-mining in Deer Lodge county and worked a claim in Ophir Gulch, near Blackfoot City, for fourteen years. In 1880 he retired from active work, and has since been enjoying the competency which is the reward of years of persistent labor.

Mr. Allie is a member of Helena Lodge, No. 3, F. & A. M., and of Helena Chapter and Commandery.

Hon. Silven Hughes, a Montana pioneer of 1864, and now one of the progressive business men of Butte City, is a native of New York, born November 25, 1854, of Irish ancestry. His father, Richard, and his mother, Mary (Shilley) Hughes, emigrated in 1848 from county Kilkenny, Ireland, and settled in Orleans county, New York; In 1856 they removed to Jackson county, Iowa, and followed farming there for eight years; and then, in 1864, they crossed the plains with a wagon and two yoke of oxen and a yoke of cows. The family at that time comprised the wife, two daughters and the subject of this sketch. Leaving Omaha on the 4th of April, they arrived at Alder Gulch, July 12. On reaching Powder river they were attacked by a large band of Cheyenne Indians, just as they were starting out upon a day's journey. The Indians appeared coming over the hills in large numbers. The emigrants coraled their wagons, of which they had 150, and the men with them numbered 450. The savages made charge after charge, continuing their attacks all day, but were each time repulsed. Five of the emigrants were killed, and it is believed that at least thirty-six Indians were killed, besides many wounded. At night they withdrew, and the emigrants pursued their journey, which, aside from this disaster, was a safe and enjoyable one.

Mr. Hughes' father mined at Alder Gulch with only middling success. He remained there till 1878, when he came to Butte, where he passed the remainder of his days, dying March 25, 1894. His good wife had died in Alder Gulch in 1873. They were good citizens and devoted members of the Catholic Church. Only two of their children now survive.

The gentleman whose name introduces this brief record, their eldest child, was ten years of age when the family made their journey across the plains to Montana, and he contains a vivid recollection of the scenes of that tedious but at times thrilling period. He attended school at Virginia City until sixteen years of age, when he was appointed a cadet in the United States Naval Academy at Annapolis, Maryland, where he spent two years in study. Returning to his home in Montana, he was employed in the grocery store of Cory O'Brien for two years, and next had a position in the county clerk's office, which he filled until he came to Butte.

On his arrival here he was for the first four years bookkeeper for Lee W. Foster & Company; then he became a member of the firm of Estes, Connell, Mitchell & Company at Anaconda, in which relation he continued until 1892, when the firm dissolved. Mr. Hughes then came to Butte and established his present grocery business at the corner of Montana and Park streets, where he keeps a well selected stock of fresh goods and provisions, en-occurs in regular strata in the rocks with our coal-beds and sometimes in concretions in shales and clays of the same age.

On Belt creek a regular stratum of this ore crops out in the bluffs seventy-five feet below the great coal-beds. This bed of spathic ore is twenty inches thick and has a uniform structure and thickness. Three similar beds of spathic iron crop out for a long distance on the hills both north and south of Elk creek, a tributary of South Sun river. And still another bed, south of Hogan, may be traced through Mamelles-de-fer and for some distance on the ridges to the south. These beds of spathic iron appear to be parallel to and form a regular stratum in the coal-bearing rocks.

Black-band iron ore appears in the croppings of a very large fissure vein cutting the Bear creek coal-field in a direction from northwest to southeast through sections 1, 6, 7 and 8. The vein varies in width from five to twenty feet and appears to be filled with black-band ore similar to that so much used in Wales. This ore can be smelted by the raw coals so abundant in this locality by using a hot-blast furnace of proper construction. Whether this ore is rich enough to be worked with profit, by the cheap process above named, and whether it joying a good patronage. To the present he still retains mining interests. In the latter, however, he has not met with large success, but they will yield remunerative returns when times change for the better in the price of silver.

On the 18th of September, 1893, Mr. Hughes was married to Miss Margaret Casey.

All his life Mr. Hughes has been a Democrat, tried and true. He had the honor to be elected to represent Deer Lodge county in the first State Legislature of Montana, in which position he served creditably for a term of two years. In his religious connections he is a Catholic. He is esteemed by the community as one of the best business men of Butte, a gentleman of honor and integrity.

HERBERT NICHOLSON, president of the firm of Herbert Nicholson & Company, commission merchants of Helena, Montana, was born in Middlesex, England, August 12, 1863. During the earlier years of his life he attended the schools and colleges of England and Germany, his education being received in Felstead, England, and at the University of Niesky, Germany. On leaving the latter institution, he engaged in business in London until 1884, when he came to Montana and turned his attention to stock-raising on the Yellowstone, in which business he still retains an interest. He next removed to Helena and established himself in business, and is now the head of the firm and the president of the house of Herbert Nicholson & Company, limited general commission merchants and brokers, with offices, warehouses and salesrooms at the railroad yards in the southern part of the city, where their large establishment gives employment to a great many persons who are under the direct personal supervision of Mr. Nicholson.

Mr. Nicholson was married in February, 1890, to Miss Stella Knight, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Knight, of Helena, and resides in Lenox, a residence portion of Helena, beautifully situated on a plateau directly east of the city proper.

N. J. BIELENBERG, Deer Lodge, Montana.—Prominent among Montana pioneers we find Mr. N. J. Bielenberg of Deer Lodge, who was one of the earliest comers into the Northwest.

Mr. Bielenberg was born in Holstein, Germany, June 8, 1847. At the age of four years he was brought to America by his parents, who located at Davenport, Iowa. Here he grew up, attending the public school until 1863. In that year he went to Chicago, where he served an apprenticeship in the butchering business, remaining there until the spring of 1865; that year he came to Montana, locating at Blackfoot City, where he embarked in the butchering business, remaining there in that pursuit until 1870. In that year he engaged in the same business at Helena, remaining there until 1872, in which year he married Miss Anna Bosk, of Deer Lodge, and removed to that town. Here he engaged in the stock-raising business, buying and selling and driving cattle from Montana to Cheyenne, from whence he shipped them to Chicago. This he continued until 1877, going into business then at Butte, where he operated a large butchering business, erecting a cold-storage warehouse and handling beef in wholesale quantities. This business has subsequently grown into the Butte Butchering Company, under which name it now exists.

About 1884 Mr. Bielenberg became associated with his half-brother, Conrad Kohrs, running large herds in connection with him and his brother John. In 1884 he went into the sheep business, at first alone, then in partnership with Joseph Toomey. This business grew to enormous proportions, handling in one year over 130,000 head of sheep. Their flocks were to be found in all parts of the State, and in addition to their own they bought and shipped a great many herds throughout the Northwest, operating from Washington Territory to North Dakota. It can be safely said that Mr. Bielenberg and associates were the fathers of the sheep industry in northern Montana, and their operations were the is pure enough to make good iron, can be determined by analyses.

Up to the present time in the history of Montana mining there has been but little demand for iron ores, save such as are now used in smelting, for the gold they contain and their fluxing properties. But the day is not far distant when it will be more profitable to make our own iron. Then all ores suitable for that purpose will be more valuable and find a ready sale. The cost of transportation from the East will be a sufficient protection for manufacturing some varieties of iron for home consumption.

CHAPTER XXX.

RAPID PROGRESS OF MONTANA—COMPLETION OF THE GREAT NORTHERN PACIFIC RAILROAD—CHANGE OF GOVERNORS—THE AUSTRALIAN BALLOT—INFLUX OF POPULATION—THE CONSTITUTION—THE VOTE FOR THE CONSTITUTION—FIRST ELECTION IN THE STATE OF MONTANA—SILVER STATUE AT THE COLUMBIAN EXPOSITION.

THE next great vital event in Montana, after the completion and entry of the Union Pacific into the capital in 1881, was the fulfillment of Jefferson's aspiration, the story of which filled the first pages of this work. A spike of gold was driven with great ceremony at Independence creek, Deer Lodge river, a day's gallop west of Helena, on the 8th of September., 1883, and the great Northwest Passage to India was open!

S. T. Hauser, the first Montana governor of Montana, resigned from office in 1886, H. P. Leslie, of Kentucky, succeeding. But it is idle to dwell on a list of officers when peace and prosperity attended the growing commonwealth. A table of the officers of Montana is furnished in its place. It would be wrong, however, even by inference, to say that these imported men at the head of affairs, as a rule, failed in duty when on the ground. They may be likened to first of any importance within the State. Mr. Bielenberg was the first shipper to discover the value of screenings in the feeding of sheep in transit, and his first discovery has since grown to be quite a valuable industry in the handling of mutton for Eastern markets.

Mr. Bielenberg is still engaged in the cattle and stock business within the State of Montana. They are still running a bunch of from ten to twelve thousand head of sheep, and have stock interests in various parts of the State.

In addition to these pursuits, Mr. Bielenberg has been actively interested in mining and other business ventures, and is a prominent and active citizen of Deer Lodge county.

He is an active Republican and served as a delegate to the National Republican Convention at Minneapolis in 1892.

His family consists of five children, two boys and three girls, all living.

JOHN DUFFY, a prominent farmer of the Little Prickly Pear valley, in Lewis & Clarke county, was born in county Mayo, Ireland, December 12, 1829, a son of Patrick and Catherine (McCormick) Duffy, natives of that country The parents had a family of five children, three sons and two daughters. The father died in 1843, and the mother and family afterward came to New York, where she died, in Onondaga county in 1893, at the age of ninety-four years.

John Duffy, the subject of this sketch, came to America in 1854. He spent the first year and a half here in New York, was then engaged in steamboating on the Mississippi river until the opening of the Civil war, remained in Chicago one year, from that time until 1866 resided in Indiana, and in the latter year came to Montana. Mr. Duffy took passage on the Minnehaha, on the Missouri river, to Fort Benton, and from there came to Helena, arriving at the latter place June 20, 1866. His first work in this State was to mine in Last Chance Gulch for wages, and in 1869 obtained diggings of his own, in which he made from $8 to $10 a day. In 1871 he located on 160 acres of land in officers of the army, ready, only wanting opportunity. The next Montana governor was B. F. White, of Dillon, appointed by Harrison.

Meantime, population, of a solid, cultured class, from the maple woods of the Miami Reserve, largely, Yankees who had lodged a generation so in Ohio and Indiana on their way West, came pouring in by way of the Northern Pacific. The Indian troubles had entirely passed into history, so far as the daily massacre went at least, and so the remote little nooks and crooks along the mountain creeks soon began to blossom with happy homes as never before. There was talk of a State. A convention was held, a constitution was framed, a vote taken; the constitution adopted and a State formed, and without the least friction, in brief space.

This constitution is replete with cold caution and jealous guard over the liberties of Montana, and is severely economical for a State that has mountains of gold for its corner-stones and silver walls and gateways. As this instrument is wisely, though not entirely favorably commented upon by Judge Wade in his fourth chapter on The Bench and Bar, I pass on, noting only that the exemption clause, both from taxation and process of law, is perhaps the most liberal of all the States, old or young, in the Union.

This first State election, or, speaking more exactly, this election for the first State officers and the adoption of the economical and cautious constitution,—on the 1st of October, 1889,—showed that Montana had changed her politics, the long dominant and all-powerful Democratic party electing but one officer, the governor, in the Prickly Pear valley, within one mile of his present home, and engaged in farming and stock-raising. Mr. Duffy has added to his original purchase from time to time until he is now the owner of 740 acres. During one year he paid $7,000 for land purchased from the railroad company. He now has a beautiful and comfortable home, surrounded by a fine grove, and overlooks the entire valley and surrounding mountains. He follows general farming, but has obtained his greatest success in stock-raising. He raises a good grade of Durham cattle and Norman-Percheron horses. Of the latter he keeps a fine imported stallion, and is a thorough judge of horses. In addition to his other interests, Mr. Duffy has also retained his interest in mining to some extent. In company with Thomas Cruse, he owned at one time an extension of the Drum Lummon, but afterward sold his interest to Mr. Cruse for $10,000. He is now a stockholder in the Granite Butte, which is being developed, and gives promise of a rich property.

In 1862 Mr. Duffy was united in marriage with Miss Ellen Grully, a native of Ireland. They have two children,—John and Edward. The wife and mother died in 1865, and three years later the father married Miss Mary McCarty, a native of county Limerick, Ireland. She departed this life in 1880, and in the following year our subject married Miss Mary Longly. They have three children,—James, Catherine Ellen and W. W. Dixon. In political matters, Mr. Duffy has been a life-long Democrat, but has never sought public preferment. He has always given his entire attention to his business, and by this course has become one of the most prominent and successful farmers in Lewis and Clarke county.

HARRY SOMMERS, superintendent of the Rocky Mountain Bell Telephone Company, Helena, Montana, is one of the enterprising young men of the city.

Mr. Sommers was born in Davenport, Iowa, September 19, 1862, and in 1866 his parents removed with their family to Jefferson City, Missouri. In Jefferson City he was partly educated, residing there until 1876, when he removed to Denver and continued his studies there until 1889. That year he began learning telegraphy in one of the offices of the Western Union Telegraph Company. He remained with that company at Denver and Salt Lake City until 1883, when he went to Portland, Oregon, as operator for the Northern Pacific Railroad Company; was subsequently stationed on their road at Heron as wire chief, continuing as such until December 31, 1887. At that date he was appointed manager of the Rocky Mountain Telegraph Company, with headquarters at Helena. This place he occupied until September 1, 1888, when he accepted the position of superintendent of the Rocky Mountain Bell Telephone Company, in which capacity he still continues. When he took charge of the service there were exchanges at Helena, Butte, Deer Lodge, Anaconda and Phillipsburg. Since that date exchanges have been put in at Bozeman, Missoula, Great Falls and Dillon. Toll lines now connect all the principal cities. Under his superintendence the number of instruments in use has increased from 600 to 1,200, and 400 miles of metallic circuit copper wire now connect the subscribers in the different cities. Mr. Sommers is also interested in the district messenger service in Helena, Butte, and Great Falls, and has made some investments in real estate and mines.

the entire list of contemplated State officers, as finally decided by the courts.

This inflowing tide, these maple-woods immigrants, had brought their politics along with them in their pockets, as it were. They had not been long enough in Montana to wear out the tickets they brought with them before the election took place. This is of course only a figure of speech. I mean to say they brought with them the political atmosphere of Ohio and the Wabash valleys and had not yet been absorbed into the mountain atmosphere of Montana. Another generation, mark me, will find them less devoted to national than State politics, whether that State or local politics bears the name of any great existing party or something yet unborn and without a name.

Out of this first State election grew one of the most remarkable "muddles" ever recorded in political warfare. But over all the trouble and tribulation Montana towered supreme in good nature and continual forbearance and good sense. The tension was very great and lasted long. You read of Yale locks on various places designated as the State capital, of members of this first State legislature being kidnapped and carried by force into the capital, a remarkable expression of modesty, certainly. I know that members of a legislative body were, as a rule, quite ready not only to be seen, but heard, on the floor of the legislative hall, when I was in politics.

In truth, you read of many very remarkable and contradictory transactions during the next two or three years of young Montana's political history. It is reported of one member of this first legislature that he fled out of the back door of his hotel and escaped from the capital

He is a member of the order of Elks, Knights of Pythias, Order of Railway Telegraphers and Sons of Veterans.

August 9, 1892, Mr. Sommers married Miss Annie Houser, who was born at Virginia City, Montana, and who was a resident of Butte at the time of her marriage.

DR. FRANK S. HEDGES is the representative of the Homeopathic School of Medicine, at Missoula, Montana. Biographical mention of him is appropriate here.

Dr. Hedges was born in Jerseyville, Illinois, October 6, 1860, and is of Scotch and English descent, some of his ancestors having settled in the State of New York at an early day. His father, Dionysius E. Hedges, was born in New York in 1831; removed from there to Jerseyville, Illinois, where he was married to Miss Martha Mossy, a native of Watertown, New York. He was engaged in the manufacture of carriages at Jerseyville until 1866, afterward conducted business eleven years at Oskaloosa, Iowa, and from there removed to Walla Walla, Washington, where he and his wife now reside. They reared a family of eight children, of whom the subject of our sketch was the fourth-born.

When his parents moved to Iowa Dr. Hedges was a mere lad, and in that State his education was received. After completing his literary studies he entered Hahnemann College, in Philadelphia, where he took a medical course and where he graduated in 1883. Immediately after his graduation he came to Missoula, Montana, to enter upon his professional career, and here he has since practiced, meeting with most flattering success. In 1886 he built his residence on Main street and has since had his office at his home. His practice extends not only over the city but also for miles in the surrounding country, the Doctor's reputation both as a skilled physician and a thorough gentleman being well known far and near.

Dr. Hedges is somewhat interested in the improvement of cattle and horses. He has some fine specimens of horse flesh and takes great delight in owning a team that can take him to a patient as quick as the fastest. His horses are of the Hambletonian Nutwood stock.

May 11, 1884, Dr. Hedges was married to Miss Anna Shothorn, a native of Ohio and a daughter of John Shothorn, a merchant of that State. They have two sons, Clifford C. and Frank S., born in Missoula.

Dr. Hedges has been Coroner of Missoula county two terms and has also served several years as County Physician.

DANIEL HANLEY, secretary of the firm of Herbert Nicholson & Company, Helena, Montana, dates his birth in Lowell, Massachusetts, December 3, 1857, his parents, natives of the Emerald Isle, having emigrated to this country in 1848 and settled in the Bay State. When he was eighteen months old he was taken by his parents to the northern peninsula of Michigan, they settling at Copper Harbor on Lake Superior, where he received his early education. At the age of thirteen he began to work in the mines, and remained in the lake region until 1877, when he went to the Black Hills, Dakota, and until 1880 prospected and mined there. Then he went to Colorado and continued prospecting for a time. In September of that year he located in St. Paul, Minnesota, and entered the employ of a wholesale commission house, with which city of Montana to a neighboring State on the cow-catcher of an engine appropriated for that purpose. Indeed, whole books of wild rumor might be written on the singularly comical situations developed here. But the many volumes and the thousand and one columns written on this exciting theme have all taken the matter quite seriously, although, as we go forward and the events round down, the serious aspect will disappear and only the quiet fun of it all will remain to history.

But turn to the next chapter for the serious side of all this, for my publishers, not having faith in my disposition to go seriously into these political details, have called in the brilliant secretary of the present popular Governor to set down this episode in the history of Montana from his own critical point of view; and this must necessarily be wide apart from my own, though each one of us may be never so honest. You see I had had a little newspaper suppressed for alleged treason, although, truly, my treason consisted only in putting up the name of Joseph Lane for President after the defeat of the Breckinridge ticket; then I was elected on that ticket to a little office in Oregon to succeed Judge Hill, author of the annotated Law Reports of Oregon and also of Washington; and then, years later, President Cleveland had offered me a small place in the Indian Bureau when he first kept house in Washington. With this explanation I turn the next chapter over entirely to the really able and incisive secretary of Montana's present governor, regretting that it only now came to hand and must be cut in two or kept out entirely; for I have intruded my own politics, good or bad, up to this point, and the matter is already in print.

he was connected four years. The two succeeding years he was with Yans & Howes, wholesale grocers. He then embarked in the commission business for himself in St. Paul, and continued there until 1887, when he came to Montana.

After coming to Montana Mr. Hanley continued in the commission business for two years longer. Then he followed the business of a general merchandise broker until May 1, 1893, when he became secretary of the Herbert Nicholson Company, limited, with which he is still connected. Mr. Hanley is now serving his second term as Alderman from the sixth ward in Helena, and is Chairman of the Auditing and Fire Department committees, the two most important of the municipal committees. He is Chairman of the Democratic County and City Central committees, and is an active and indefatigable worker for the party, whose success is largely due to his personal efforts. He is a member of the A. O. U. W. and of the Catholic Church.

Mr. Hanley was married August 2, 1881, to Miss Margaret Harrington, of Belle Plaine, Minnesota. They have six children, four sons and two daughters.

ANDREW B. HAMMOND, of Missoula, president of the First National Bank and of the Missoula Mercantile Company, was born at Leonards, New Brunswick, July 22, 1848.

His ancestors were English and were among the first settlers of Long Island. At an early date they removed to Nova Scotia, where Simon Hammond, Mr. Hammond's grandfather, was born. He removed to New Brunswick and settled at Kings, near Fredericton, where Mr. Hammond's father, Andrew B. Hammond, was born in 1807. Andrew B. Hammond, Sr., married Miss Gloryanna H. Coombes, and they had seven children, of whom six are now living. He had previously been married to a sister of his wife. He was an extensive lumberman, and in religion was a Baptist, while his wife was an Episcopalian and brought her children up in that faith. He died in 1854, in his forty-eighth year, and his wife died in her seventy-fourth year. They were people of the highest integrity of character and had the respect and esteem of all who knew them.

The subject of our sketch was the fourth child in this family, and received his early education in the public schools. When he was thirteen he left school to work on his mother's farm and continued thus occupied for three years. Then he went to a logging camp near his home, where he spent one year, and afterward spent one year in the same business in Maine, and another year in the Alleghany mountains in Pennsylvania. In 1867 he came to Montana. At that time he was nineteen years of age. Coming up the Missouri river to Fort Peck, he spent the winter there in the employ of Daply & Peck, Indian fur traders, and the following year came to Missoula. Soon afterward, however, his love for adventure led him still further west, and ere long we find him on the Puget Sound engaged in the lumbering business. In 1870 he returned to Missoula county, Montana, and the next two years was at Hell Gate, employed as clerk in the store of George White. Mr. White died, and it devolved upon Mr. Hammond to wind up the business. In 1872 he came to Missoula and entered the employ of Bonner & Eddy.

Leaving you to turn to the next chapter, I may mention that the political agitation did not in the least stagger the stalwart young State, opinions to the contrary notwithstanding; but population increased at a marvelous rate. When talk of the World's Fair at Chicago began to be heard, Montana was one of the first at the front, despite Yale locks and shy legislators. To anticipate a little and conclude the most brilliant bit of all her history, I set it down as an unanimously conceded fact that more people, from over sea or at home, looked upon the shining silver figure of Justice from the Shining Mountains, ten to one, than on any other one thing at the Columbian Exposition; and most important of all there was surely not one word of question as to either the splendid audacity of the idea or the perfection of the idea, I here copy a description of this work as given by the Associated Press:

"Justice stands with one foot on a globe, and the entire outline of the splendid and massive figure gives the idea of a forward movement. The goddess wears a tunic which drapes the figure from the swelling breast to a point just below the knee, but so perfect is the artist's work that every line of the nether limbs is visible, and the statue seems alive from the unshod feet to the bare arms and the graceful Grecian knot of hair upon which rests the starry crown of this modern Astraea. Immense strength and exquisite grace, together with a superabundance of life and movement, are the points which enchain the observer of the model at once. The left arm, beautifully modeled, holds aloft the historic scales, and the right grasps firmly the familiar two-edged sword, which points downward at an angle of forty-five degrees. The expression of the face is grave but gracious, and

In 1876 this firm sold out and Mr. Hammond then formed the firm of Eddy, Hammond & Company, which continued until 1885, at which time the Missoula Mercantile Company was established, and he was made its president. During the building of the Northern Pacific Railroad Messrs. Bonner, Eddy and Hammond were engaged in furnishing the company with the lumber used in its construction, and upon the completion of the road found themselves the owners of a number of sawmills. The growing wants of the country for lumber induced them to organize the Big Blackfoot Lumber Company. They built the plant at Bonner, and Mr. Hammond became the largest stockholder in it, the other stockholder's being Messrs. Bonner, Eddy and W. H. Hind. The mill is managed by Mr. Hammond's brother, W. H. Hammond. It has a capacity of 250,000 feet every twenty-four hours, and is considered by far the largest and finest sawmill in the world. In connection with it they have a sash and door factory and supply all of Montana with their products. They also have a large flouring mill. The capital stock of the Big Blackfoot Company is $700,000. By his management of these great business enterprises, Mr. Hammond has justly acquired the reputation of being one of the most successful and capable business men of Montana, or of the Northwest.

He was married, February 22, 1879, to Miss Florence Abbott, a native of Oregon and a daughter of Mr. Lorenzo Abbott of that State. She came to Montana when ten years of age. They have six children, as follows: Edwinna C., Florence, Richard E., Leonard C., Grace and Daisy.

Mr. Hammond has been in politics a strong Republican, and has rendered his party most efficient aid. He belongs to the Masonic fraternity,—blue lodge, chapter and commandery, and is also a member of the Shrine.

JOSEPH GOUTHIER, one of the representative farmers of Grass valley, was born in Canada, December 26, 1830, a son of Charles and Rosalin (Shappe) Gouthier, of French descent. The mother died when our subject was only eighteen months old, and his father survived until eighty-four years of age. Joseph, the youngest of nine children, remained on a farm in Canada until reaching his majority, then worked in the mines of Pittsfield, Massachusetts, until 1854, and in that year, via the isthmus, went to California, arriving in San Francisco in March. He then went to the mines of Calaveras county, where he met with good success. During the summer he traveled over the West to British Columbia, and then mined one season at French Gulch, Montana, where he made $4,000, having taken out as high as $500 in a day.

In 1866 Mr. Gouthier located on 160 acres of his present farm in Missoula county, to which he has since added until he now owns 380 acres, and has made many improvements on his place. In political matters he was formerly a Democrat, but is now a free-silver-coinage man, and casts his vote with the Populists. He is a member of the Catholic Church, and aided liberally in erecting the fine church edifice at Frenchtown.

the full-orbed windows of the soul seem to pierce the future. The tunic, or rather the drapery, with its metal girdle, is Grecian even to the smallest detail, and the robe is broidered most beautifully.

"The figure rests upon the back of a Montana eagle, also of solid silver. From the eagle to the top of Rehan's head the statue measures nine feet and rests upon a plinth of solid gold, the base being formed of mineral-bearing rock. The whole has a height of fifteen feet. The silver was furnished by the First National bank of Helena, through ex-Governor S. T. Hauser and Hon. W. A. Clark, of Butte."

HISTORY OF THE REPUBLICAN PARTY.

HELENA, October 18, 1894.

THE LEWIS PUBLISHING COMPANY,
113 Adams Street, Chicago, Illinois:

Gentlemen:—My attention having been called to the History of the Republican party in Montana, written by my private secretary, Mr. A. B. Keith, I desire to say that I have read the article carefully and can assure you that it is a faithful presentation of the facts worthy a prominent place in your forthcoming History of Montana. Mr. Keith spared neither time nor effort to familiarize himself with the necessary data, and his production will meet the hearty approval of every Republican in the State who is conversant with the history of the party from the early days down to the present time. As a concise recital of the leading events in the history of the party I think it could not well be improved upon, and I take pleasure in giving it my endorsement.

With respect,

Yours very truly,
J. E. RICKARDS,
Governor of Montana.

For want of space we permit our editor's introductory notes, in the preceding chapter, to take the place of the first few (and less important) pages furnished by Mr. Keith.

THIRTY-FOURTH PRECINCT MUDDLE.

THE Republicans contested the legality of the returns sent in from precinct 34 before the canvassing board of Silver Bow county, showing that the plain provision of the law had been violated in the matter of certification. The law requires that the returns from a precinct shall be certified by the clerks of election and attested by the judges of election. The alleged returns from precinct 34 had been certified to by the judges of election and attested by the clerks. On these grounds the alleged returns were rejected by the board of canvassers. Thereupon the Democrats commenced mandamus proceedings before a Democratic judge to compel the board to canvas the vote as indicated by these returns. Before these mandamus proceedings were completed, and the question of an appeal from the order of the judge requiring the count to be made to the Supreme Court had been determined, the time fixed by the law for the State canvassing board to complete its work arrived.

On the 31st day of October, 1889, the State board of canvassers met to canvass the returns from the various counties in the State, and having no returns in from Silver Bow county, a messenger was sent to its county seat, Butte City, to obtain a properly certified abstract of the votes cast in that county. Information from the county clerk of Silver Bow county to the special messenger sent by the State board, was to the effect that the county canvassing board had met, and, as provided by law, on the 14th day of October, to canvass the vote of that county, and that in making such canvass the vote of precinct 34 had been rejected as false, fraudulent and void. Thereupon the State board, having exhausted the authority vested in it by statute in its endeavor to secure an abstract with the vote of Silver Bow county, acted in line with its clearly defined duty by declaring the result from the best information obtainable. The vote of Silver Bow county, with the exception of precinct 34, which had been rejected by the county board of canvassers, was counted and the results of the election in the State announced.

The rejection of precinct 34 gave the entire Republican legislative ticket of Silver Bow county a majority, whereas the counting of the alleged returns from that precinct would have

WILLIAM BROWN, of Silver City, Montana, was born in Strumstead, Sweden, May 6, 1832. In 1850, when eighteen years of age, he emigrated to America, arriving in New York without money and with no knowledge of the English language. For two years he sailed to different ports of the world from New York, and in 1852, hearing of the California gold excitement, sailed for San Francisco. He first mined at King's Camp, near Stockton, afterward followed the same occupation at different places with good success, and in 1858, during the Klamath river excitement, went with others to that place, but while there lost his previous earnings. For the following three years Mr. Brown mined in Josephine county. From 1861 until 1862 he mined at Oro Fino, Idaho, spent a short time at Boise City, next resided in Virginia City, Montana, and May 1, 1864, arrived at Silver creek. After arriving here Mr. Brown immediately discovered gold and began mining, and in four months he and his companions had taken out $17,000 in gold. They continued mining until 1868, and during that time miners came to the creek in large numbers. The Indians, however, made them much trouble in stealing their horses, and their lives were also constantly in danger. When Mr. Brown came to the creek there were two or three squatters living here in tents, with Indian wives, and in 1868 he purchased a claim of one of them, for which he paid $1,500. Since then he has added to his land until he now owns 230 acres of valuable farming land, and is also the owner of the old town of Silver City. He raises large quantities of hay, is also a prominent stock dealer, and for a number of years conducted a butcher shop at Marysville. Mr. Brown still retains his interest in mining, and is now a stockholder in the Pigeon Mining Company. Their mine is located near Marysville.

In 1872 our subject was united in marriage with Miss Anna Falset, a native of Norway. They have had eight children, five now living, –Andrew, Saloma, Albert, Eliza and Josephine. Mr. Brown is a life-long Democrat, and has held the position of School Trustee of his district for many years. He is esteemed by his neighbors as a man of responsibility, and is a good representative of the pioneers of the now great State of Montana.

HERMAN T. ENGELHORN, M. A., LL. D., principal and proprietor of the Engelhorn Business College, and one of Montana's most enterprising and competent educators, forms the subject of this article.

Herman T. Engelhorn was born in Iowa, February 29, 1856, son of John E. and Anna E. (Bartlet) Englehorn, and of German descent. His father located in Iowa in 1849, where he was for many years a prominent architect and builder, and where he died at the age of sixty-three years; the mother still survives, now in her seventy-sixth year.

The early education of Herman T. was received in his native State under a private tutor. Then he attended the high school at Lansing, Iowa, and afterward the Iowa College, at Grinnell, graduating in the latter institution in 1880 with the degree of A. B., and three years later receiving from the same college the degree of A. M. After this he attended the Davenport Business College, where he completed the business, penmanship and art courses. After his graduation he was retained at Davenport for two years as an instructor in the college, and the following year taught in the Milwaukee Excelsior Business College.

given five members of the delegation to the Democrats by majorities ranging from nineteen to twenty-one votes, in addition to the five Democratic candidates whose election was not disputed, thus giving that party the entire delegation from that county and control of the legislative assembly on joint ballot. Had correct returns been made from that precinct, and the nominees of that party are believed to have received from all the light attainable, no question as to the political complexion of the legislative delegation could have been raised.

In the contest between Lloyd and Sullivan for the office of sheriff of Silver Bow county, heretofore referred to, which came before the Supreme Court of Montana on an appeal from the second judicial district, all the facts material to determining the question of fraud at precinct 34, and the legal questions involved, were fully brought out and incorporated in the opinion of that body written by Chief Justice Henry A. Blake. (See Ninth Montana Reports: also Appellant's brief, herewith submitted.) It was held that the alleged returns from precinct 34 should not have been admitted in evidence in the lower court for the following reasons:

(1) They were not made out by the proper officers—the clerks of election. (2) The clerks of the election did not participate in the canvass of the votes, and were not present at any time during the canvass of the votes. (3) The clerks of election did not certify to the correctness of the returns. (4) Two judges of election only canvassed the returns. (5) The polling places where the so-called canvass was being conducted by two of the judges was not in public, the door was kept locked and the windows covered so that the public could not and did not witness the canvass. (6) The returns were not certified as by statute required. (7)

Returning to his home in Iowa, he was married at Lansing, February 25, 1882, to Miss Emma A. Lenz, a native of Iowa and a daughter of Dr. Fred Lenz. Soon after their marriage they decided to make Montana their home, and they accordingly came out here, first to Butte City and soon afterward to Helena, and with Helena Professor Engelhorn has since been identified. Previous to the establishment of his business college here he accepted a position as teacher of penmanship in the public schools, where he had the best of opportunity to become acquainted with the educators and citizens of Helena. October 1, 1883, in the Dr. Blake building on Broadway, he opened his business college, and two years later moved to his present quarters in the Horsky building, where he has ample room and all the needed appliances for the highest interests of the college. His thorough fitness for the business he has undertaken, together with the close attention he has given it, have brought the institution to a state nearing perfection and put it on a footing with the best educational institutions in the country, East or West. To a thorough business training this school supplements opportunities for finished education in all the branches taught in less grade than the great universities. An able corps of professors are employed, each especially qualified in the studies assigned to his charge, and over all Professor Engelhorn gives his personal attention. The success and excellence of the college have been assured from its beginning, and it has received the patronage of the best people from all over the Northwest. The enrollment of pupils has continued to increase from the start. The first year there were less than sixty, the second year nearly 100, the third year about 140, and in 1889 about 300. Up to the present time its enrollment exceeds 3,000.

One of the attractive features of Engelhorn Business College is that Professor Engelhorn has an elegant and refined home, over which Mrs. Engelhorn gracefully presides. Here the student stranger can find all the comforts and refining influences of a home, surrounded with ladies and gentlemen of education and culture. Professor Engelhorn is the editor of a spicy and interesting quarterly, entitled Engelhorn's Business Educator, an eight-page paper devoted, as its name implies, to practical education. It is now in its eighth volume. Another interesting feature of the college is that its proprietor and his family are fine musicians. He plays seven different instruments.

Professor Engelhorn and his wife have four children, Clara Laura May, Esther Anna, Wesley Theodore and an infant, all natives of Helena. He and his wife are members of the Presbyterian Church, of which he is a Deacon.

JOHN D. THOMAS, of Helena, has been identified with the interests of Montana since 1865. A brief sketch of his life is as follows:

John D. Thomas was born in Wales in 1828, and in 1851 emigrated to America. After spending one year in the State of Pennsylvania he located in Illinois, where he re-

The clerks of the election signed their names to the returns, as attesting, two days after the alleged canvass of the votes. (8) The clerks should have certified and not attested. (9) Three judges certified the returns, only two being present at the canvass. (10) The third judge, one O'Regan, not being present at any time during the canvass, certified to them notwithstanding. (11) One of the judges, Pennycock, made out the alleged returns. (12) Pennycock and Morrison, two of the judges, conducted the canvass alone and secretly.

The Supreme Court held that the evidence showed that great frauds had been perpetrated by the judges of election at precinct 34, as follows: (1) Morrison, one of the judges, endeavored to induce a person named Omo, not a voter at said precinct, to vote in the name of an absent registered voter at that precinct. (2) Ballots were marked by one of the judges for identification when handed by a voter to be placed in the ballot box. (3) A large number of ballots were destroyed, and others stamped with the "official stamp" and marked for the Democratic candidates. (4) The returns show 172 votes for the constitution and two against the constitution—the whole number of votes cast at the precinct being 174. (5) The evidence shows five voters who did not mark their ballots for or against the constitution, unimpeached and uncontradicted. (6) The returns show 171 votes for the Democratic candidates, and but three votes for a majority of the Republican candidates. The evidence shows five voters voted for the Republican candidates at said election. (7) The evidence shows a clear disregard for the mandatory requirements of the election laws, with actual fraud as makes the true result doubtful.

mained from October, 1852, until April 1, 1853. He then went to California, making the journey by water, and for ten years thereafter was engaged in mining in Tuolumne, Sierra and Placer counties, and during that time got plenty of gold but expended it in unprofitable investments. In the fall of 1863 he went to Nevada, and at Virginia City worked by the day in the mines for twenty months. His next move was to Montana. For three years he mined on Grizzly Gulch, and in two years of that time he cleared $5,000. In the fall of 1867 he went to Oregon, and mined there until the spring of the following year. Next, we find him engaged in stock-raising in the Willamette valley, purchasing thirty-five head of cattle to begin with, and continuing thus occupied there until 1870. Then he brought 100 head of cattle with him to Ten-mile valley, near Helena, where, with Mr. Gehring as his partner, he purchased 166 acres of land, on which, in connection with their stock-raising, they cultivated wheat, barley, oats and vegetables. Produce was high, and their enterprise prospered. In 1871 Mr. Thomas bought his partner's interest and under the pre-emption and homestead laws also secured adjoining lands, finally becoming the owner of 400 acres. In 1890 he sold 260 acres of this tract for $115 per acre and 100 acres for $100 per acre. His wisdom in securing and holding so much land near the city resulted in his now having a snug fortune to enjoy in his declining years.

Mr. Thomas has been a Master Mason for many years. During the Civil war he was a Republican and a strong Union man, but he is now a stanch Democrat. He is unmarried.

HON. A. F. BRAY, one of the representative business men of Butte City, was born in Cornwall, England, October 21, 1854, of ancestry established in that country from time immemorial. His parents were Absalom Francis and Jane Bray, who had six children. The occupation of the family was that of farming, and in their religious relations they were members of the Methodist Church.

The subject of this sketch, named after his father, was educated in his native town, served a number of years learning the dry-goods business, and in 1876 came to America to attend the Centennial Exposition. After spending the most of his money he decided to cast his fortune in this country, the land of opportunity. First he was employed on a railroad in Texas, at $1.25 a day; then for nine years he was employed in the construction of levees in Mississippi as a contractor for the Government, and finally, in 1885, after a year's sickness and the consequent loss of considerable money, he came to Butte, with only $2,200, and opened a small grocery store on upper Main street, where Murray's bank now stands. After following the business there for a year, he purchased the stock of goods owned by Craddock & Company, and moved down Main street to a point opposite the post-office, where his trade increased under his judicious management. About a year after opening business at this point he purchased the stock and business of E. J. Maul & Company, and continued to prosper for another year, when, on account of ill-health, he sold out and spent a year at Oakland, California.

Returning to Butte, he bought out Battiger & Company and opened out at the northeast corner of Wyoming and Judge Blake's opinion, concurred in by the entire bench, recites at length the facts confirmatory of the foregoing statements. One of the most interesting facts brought out in this opinion is that the names of the voters appeared on the poll-books at precinct 34 in alphabetical order, after the names of the three judges and two clerks had been entered therein. As the law requires the name of every voter to be spoken in an audible voice by the judge receiving his vote, and the clerks of the election to write down the name and number of the vote at the time, it was, to say the least, a remarkable circumstance that so large a body of voters entered the booths and voted in alphabetical order, without any pre-arrangement or drill in such an unnecessary procedure.

Notwithstanding the action of the State canvassing board and the findings of the highest judicial tribunal in the State, the Democrats refused to submit to the rejection of precinct 34, and immediately began obstructive proceedings of the most determined type. Party spirit ran high. Democratic leaders talked bloodshed and violence, and for a time it looked as if the new State would be degraded by murder and assassination, growing out of the incendiary utterances of men who refused to tamely submit to the inevitable conclusions of law and fact, when party ambitions were in issue. The signal failure of its last great plot to retain Montana within its political control, agitated the Democracy into extremes of speech and action that cast a blight upon the early hours of Statehood and greatly checked the prosperity of the commonwealth. The Democrats organized to resist Republican control of the legislative assembly, Joseph K. Toole, who had been elected governor Park streets, naming his establishment the Butte Cash Grocery, and here he is now conducting a successful business. He owns most of the stock and his wife the remainder. The place is one of the best for such a store in the whole city. His business has grown to large dimensions, and besides he has a branch store at Centreville. The total amount of stock in the two establishments at present is over $100,000. He is a close buyer and an excellent judge of goods. In addition to his retail trade he also sells at wholesale, the territory of his operations in the latter capacity extending out for 300 miles or more. He also owns some mining interests. He is a rapid worker, executive, and is constantly engaged either directly in the work or in passing from point to point superintending it. His manner inspires all his employes with the spirit of industry and good cheer. He is an excellent salesman, and every one patronizing him feels satisfied with his transactions of business with him. He has erected a fine residence at 303 West Granite street.

Mr. Bray was married October 9, 1856, to Miss Nellie Copeland, who is a daughter of John Wesley Copeland, a native of the State of Illinois, and they have two children, namely: Absalom F. and Nellie. Mr. Bray enjoys fraternal relations in the A. O. U. W., K. of P., the Foresters and the Sons of St. George. In his political principles he has been an active Republican, and as such was elected to the State Legislature, but afterward he espoused the cause of the Populists, and by that party he was elected to a second term in the Legislature, where during the last session he had the honor of being the Speaker pro tem. Mr. Bray is a gentleman of good general information, of independent, close, analytical thought, and is disposed to be a progressive man in the highest and best sense of the term.

DR. H. H. HANSON, one of Missoula's most prominent and successful physicians, comes of Puritan stock, his ancestors being among the early settlers of Massachusetts. It is recorded that there were four Hanson brothers who removed from Massachusetts to New Brunswick and were among the first settlers and founders of the town of St. John. One of these brothers, Benjamin Hanson, the Doctor's great-grandfather, built the first cabin in St. John. He was the father of eleven children, and it is said of him that he attained the great age of 103 years. His son Benjamin, the fourth in the family, was born at St. John, and when he grew up was extensively engaged in the lumber business, owning and operating a sawmill on the Nashwaak river. Edgar, the next to the oldest in his family of seven children, was Doctor Hanson's father. Edgar Hanson was born in 1835. He married his cousin, Miss Helen Hanson, a native of his own town, and they have had seven children, all of whom are living except the oldest. For the past twenty years Mr. Hanson has held the office of Deputy Provincial Secretary of the Province of New Brunswick. One of his duties is to dispense all the marriage licenses for the Province. A noted fisherman, many of the most renowned men of the country visit him and go with him on his fishing excursions. He and his wife are members of the Episcopal Church.

Dr. Hanson was born in Fredericton, New Brunswick, April 30, 1858, which was the year after the siege of Lucknow and its rescue by General Horatio Havelock, and in over Thomas C. Power, the Republican nominee, being a party to this plan and converting his official power, as chief executive of the State, to its accomplishment.

LEGISLATIVE DEAD-LOCK.

As the time drew near for the convening of the first legislative assembly of the State of Montana, it became evident that trouble was brewing. The "Big Four," representing the wealth, influence and to a high degree the political ambitions of the Democratic party, either in its own personnel or by proxy, foresaw the inevitable control of the legislature on joint ballot by the Republican party, and the election of two Republicans to the United States Senate, unless measures were resorted to that would counteract the official action of the State canvassing board in the elimination of the alleged returns for precinct 34. Thereupon the Democratic leaders, big and little, organized a movement that had in view the seating of the five Democratic candidates for the legislature who would have been entitled to seats had the alleged precinct 34 returns been returns in fact, reflecting the honest results of the ballot. Sharp practice was relied upon to accomplish that which the law did not sustain. Large sums of money, conservatively estimated at $500,000, had been expended by the Democratic committees and politicians during the campaign, in a desperate effort to retain political power in a commonwealth which they realized was rapidly passing out from under their control. As a net result of their combined and united efforts to stem the tide of Republicanism, they had succeeded in electing Joseph K. Toole to the gubernatorial chair. Events following the election justified the belief that this measure of honor of this distinguished general the Doctor was named Horatio Havelock Hanson. Dr. Hanson was educated in King's College, receiving the degree of B. A. in 1876, and M. D. in 1881. After his graduation he spent some time in looking for a desirable location, all the while being engaged in the practice of his profession. He was at Gibson, New Brunswick, one year; spent about the same length of time at Van Buren, Maine; was three years in Andover; and in 1886 came to Montana. His first location in Montana was at Townsend, where he remained from 1886 until 1889, and whence he came to Missoula. Here he has since remained, being pleased with this location and meeting with eminent success in his practice here. Without question, he has the finest office and the largest assortment of the most modern instruments of any physician or surgeon in the town. While he has met with signal success as a physician, it is as a surgeon that he excels, to this subject having given much careful study and having a large experience in it. He has removed from the abdomen 113 tumors, and without losing a patient,—a record of which few young surgeons can boast. As a specialist on the diseases of women he has also attained notoriety for successful treatment.

Dr. Hanson was married March 2, 1879, to Miss Hattie Elizabeth McKeen, a native of the town in which he was born, and a daughter of William McKeen, of that place. They have two children, Pearl Gladis and Nellie.

The Doctor is a member of the Royal Arcanum, the A. O. U. W., the Mystic Tie and the Masonic order. In politics he is a Republican.

HON. W. J. MCCORMICK, deceased, was one of Montana's most worthy pioneers and one of the founders and most liberal and enterprising citizens of Missoula.

He was born in Muncie, Delaware county, Indiana, in 1835. His grandfather, John McCormick, emigrated from Dublin, Ireland, to this country and settled at Harrisburg, Virginia. From him are descended a large family, many of whom have occupied honorable positions in life. The late Hon. James G. Blaine and the late Hon. Cyrus B. McCormick were of this family. Rev. William McCormick, the father of our subject, was born in Harrisburg, Virginia, and was a talented Baptist minister. After his marriage, which event took place in his native town, he removed to Indiana, where for many years he was in the work of the ministry, and where he reared his family of seven children, Washington J., the subject of this biography, being the youngest of the family.

W. J. McCormick was educated at Asbury College, Greencastle, Indiana, and in 1856 was admitted to the bar. In 1857 he went to Utah, where he held the responsible positions of Secretary, Attorney General and Chief Justice. He came to Montana in 1863 and first located at Virginia City, where he practiced his profession for over two years. He took an active and efficient part in the politics of the country. He was Secretary of the first Democratic convention held in the Territory, and in 1864 was elected a member of the Territorial Legislature. In 1866 he was appointed to the Flathead Indian Agency, which position he held for two years.

success at the poles was appreciated chiefly for whatever of executive influence could be used in the determination of senatorial honors in the gauntlet of the legislative assembly.

The first official step taken by the Democratic conspirators found expression through a proclamation issued by Governor Toole under date of November 22, the day preceding the meeting of the legislative assembly. This body was about to convene in response to a formal proclamation previously promulgated by the governor, under the provisions of law. But the manifesto of the 22d of November, at the very threshold of its convention, conveyed to the members of the legislature and to the public something of the nature of the contest which the Democratic leaders had planned to make. In this proclamation the governor said that in all probability a conflict would arise between respective claimants for seats in the legislature which might imperil the peace of the State. He therefore designated that the respective houses "shall meet" for organization at rooms in the county courthouse of Lewis and Clarke county, which he named for the purpose, making this designation mandatory in the sense of involving legality of procedure, which was clearly beyond his authority. He also defined as members of the legislative assembly those who held certificates of election from the respective county clerks, which would have the effect to rule out of the membership of the house of representatives, in advance of its convention, those members from Silver Bow county whose title to seats rested upon certificates of election from the State canvassing board. In other words, it would seat the five Democratic claimants holding county certificates from the county

Mr. McCormick came to Missoula in 1868, and here the following year he was married to Miss Kate Higgins, daughter of Christopher Power Higgins and Edith (O'Byrn) Higgins, and sister of the late Captain C. P. Higgins, of Missoula. Her people were descendants of the early kings of Ireland, and came to America in 1826. The date of her arrival in Montana was 1865.

After locating in Missoula, Mr. McCormick became connected with Captain Higgins and Hon. F. L. Worden in the building and development of the town, and soon came into the possession of a large amount of property here. He was interested in milling and stock-raising in both Missoula and Choteau counties, and had valuable ranch property in the Bitter Root valley. He was also the founder and first editor of the Gazette. An editor, a talented lawyer, an influential politician and a successful business man, his various abilities were of great value in this frontier country and were always directed in the right channel. News of his untimely death brought sorrow not only to his immediate family but also to his many acquaintances throughout the State. His death was caused by his being blown by a high wind from the roof of one of the buildings at Fort Owen. He died February 3, 1889. Few, indeed, of the early citizens of Missoula, did more to bring about her development than did he. Among other of his benefactions were the three blocks on which the Catholic school, the hospital and church edifice now stand. He also gave largely to secure the building of the Northern Pacific Railroad to Missoula. It was just after his demise that Missoula had her greatest era of prosperity, and had he lived a few years longer he would have been one of her richest citizens, as he was, without question, one of her best.

Mr. and Mrs. McCormick had seven children, all natives of Missoula, their names being as follows: Mary Edith O'Byrn, William Worden, John Francis Higgins, Blanche Ada Louise, Veronica Honora Hester, Paul Christopher Higgins, and Washington J. The daughter, Blanche Ada Louise, died Janary 15, 1892, in her seventeenth year. She was a beautiful and accomplished girl and was a general favorite among her many friends. Mr. McCormick was reared a Baptist, but was not a man of creeds. Mrs. McCormick is descended from a long line of Catholic ancestry who never swerved in their faith in the Christian religion, and she and her children are all trying to follow in the footsteps of their worthy sires. To the eldest daughter are we indebted for the material for this sketch of her honored father.

THE FIRST NATIONAL BANK OF MISSOULA was chartered first as The Missoula National Bank, in 1873, by Messrs. F. L. Worden, S. T. Hauser, C. P. Higgins, Hiram Knowles and D. J. Welsh, with a capital stock of $50,000. Its officers were C. P. Higgins, president; D. J. Welsh, vice-president; and Ferdinand Kennett, cashier. In this way it continued until 1882, when its stock was increased to $100,000. E. L. Bonner, R. S. Eddy and A. B. Hammond became stockholders, and the latter gentleman was elected vice-president. In 1889 the stock was increased to $150,000, Mr. A. B. Hammond was elected president, and J. M. Keath cashier, and the name was changed to the First clerk of Silver Bow county by reason of the mandamus requiring the local board of canvassers of that county to count the alleged returns from precinct 34, after the State board had completed its work and the case was legally closed.

It was claimed in justification of this remarkable attempt to prejudge the question of right and title to legislative seats, on the part of the governor, that Chief Justice Henry N. Blake had ordered the county clerk of Jefferson county to issue a certificate to one Whaley, a candidate for joint representative in the counties of Jefferson and Gallatin; but, as a matter of fact, Blake made no such order. He merely ordered the county clerk, in deference to a complaint legally made, to appear and show cause why such certificate was not issued. The precedent upon which Governor Toole based his declaration had not been established. An opinion as to the legal rectitude of the governor's proceeding, ostensibly emanating from the Territorial attorney-general, was prepared by that gentleman several days after his retirement from office, when he held no position as a legal adviser more responsible than that of a Democratic attorney. The constitution makes each house of the legislative assembly the judge of the qualifications of its own members, and Governor Toole's invasion of this prerogative, in order to determine in advance the status of the Democratic claimants from Silver Bow county, provoked the most intense criticism.

This proclamation was followed by active steps on the part of the governor to make its declarations effective. The rooms which the governor had positively designated as the convention halls of the respective houses of the legislature had been

National Bank of Missoula. In 1893 its charter expired and was renewed. At this writing its capital, surplus and, undivided profits amount to over a half million dollars, and it is considered one of the strongest and best banks in the State of Montana.

JOHN RANKIN, one of Missoula's enterprising and successful citizens, dates his arrival in Montana in the spring of 1869. Since that date he has been closely connected with the growth and development of this city. Of his life we make record as follows:

John Rankin was born in London, Canada, October 21, 1841. His father, Hugh Rankin, was born in the Highlands of Scotland, in 1804; came to America when a boy and located at Prescott, Canada East, where he was reared, and where he was married to Miss Jenette Stewart, a native of the Lowlands of Scotland and a daughter of Angus Stewart, the Stewart family having located in Canada about the same time Mr. Rankin came to America. Some years after their marriage they settled on a tract of wild land near London, which at that time was covered with heavy timber and which, after years of hard labor, Mr. Rankin developed into a fine farm. He died there Janvary 1, 1878, in the seventy-fourth year of his age. His good wife survived him until 1893, when she passed away, at the age of eighty-four. They were faithful members of the Presbyterian Church and their whole lives were characterized by honest industry. They had seven sons and two daughters, of whom John was the fourth-born and is one of the seven survivors.

He was reared on his father's frontier farm where educational facilities were meager, his only schooling being obtained in the primitive log schoolhouse near his home. When he was nineteen years of age he began to learn the carpenter's trade and continued to work at that trade in Canada until 1869, at which time he came to Montana. He was two months and a half on the voyage up the Missouri river. At Crow Island the boat grounded and from that point he made the rest of the journey on foot. This was the year in which Colonel Baker punished the Indians so severely for their many atrocities on the settlers. Mr. Rankin first worked for a short time at Helena. Then he went to Unionville, where he and his brother, Duncan Rankin, built a quartz mill. After this they bought a team, went to the Cedar Creek mining camp and prospected in the mountains, and in the fall of 1870 John Rankin came to Missoula, then a town composed of only a few little houses. After this he was engaged in contracting and building bridges. Many of the first bridges in Missoula county were built by him. The first was called the Blockhouse bridge. It was five miles south of Missoula and was 250 feet in length. Afterward he turned his attention to building houses, and many of the fine business blocks and residences in Missoula are the result of his handiwork. While working on the first stone building erected in the town he met with an accident by which he came near losing his life. At some political meeting the town people were having a cannon fired. It was heavily loaded and wadded with old gunny sack. He came round a corner just as it was discharged and was hit on the head by the wad, being knocked senseless and remaining so for ten days. From the effect of that shock his hearing has ever since been slightly rented from E. W. Knight, Democratic chairman of the board of county commissioners. The ordinary locks on the doors were speedily removed and in their stead Yale locks, or locks of a similar character, were put on. Reliable Democrats, noted for their physical courage, were placed "on guard" and the following official order given:

CAPTAIN JOHN SMITH, in Charge of House of Representatives:

Sir:—At 12 o'clock noon to-day you will open the doors of the house of representatives and admit no person to the floor except persons claiming to be members of that body. When notified by any member whom you have admitted that the house of representatives has temporarily organized, you will turn over your keys to such person as the house may designate. If the auditor of the State appears at the door before you are relieved by the person designated by the house of representatives, you will admit him to the floor of the house. When you are relieved by such person your employment ceases.

J. K. TOOLE, Governor.

The proclamation of the governor, supplemented by the Yale locks and the official order to Captain John Smith, indicated to the Republicans that no one not possessed of a key or a certificate from a county clerk would be permitted to enter the room set apart for the house of representatives. It was evident that the Democratic scheme contemplated effecting an organization of the house with the five Democratic claimants from Silver Bow occupying seats in that body, and then permit the five Republican members, who were ruled out thereby, to go through the farce of contesting for their seats in a body made Democratic by their exclusions from the seats to which they were entitled by virtue of the State certificates they impaired. To Mr. Rankin belongs the distinction of having built the first church edifice in Missoula—the Methodist Church, erected in 1872. About that time he purchased a sawmill on Grant creek. Fort Missoula was established soon after and he furnished most of the lumber for it. After this the town began to grow rapidly. In 1884 he built Mr. Fred Kennett's fine residence, and the following year he built his own beautiful and attractive home. These were among the first good residences that were built here. In 1891 he erected the Rankin Block on Front street, a brick building 86 x 90 feet, three stories and basement, finished for stores and hotel. It has sixty-five rooms, is well finished and furnished throughout, and is a credit both to its builder and to the town in which it is located. Mr. Rankin is running the hotel himself. He still owns his sawmill, and is also the owner of a ranch of 1,480 acres, where he is raising hay and grain and some stock.

April 27, 1879, Mr. Rankin married Miss Olive M. Pickering, a native of New Hampshire. She is a daughter of John L. Pickering, of Portsmouth, New Hampshire, and a niece of C. W. Berry, Missoula's noted pioneer. Mr. and Mrs. Rankin have had six children, all born in Missoula. Phila they lost while in her ninth year. The others are Jenith P., Hattie L., Wellington D., Mary F. and Grace.

Mr. Rankin is a member of the A. O. U. W. and the I. O. O. F., and his political affiliations are with the Republican party. He held the office of County Commissioner for one term, and thus rendered his county valuable service. Little of his attention, however, has been given to political matters, as his extensive business operations have claimed a greater part of his time.

LAWRENCE WALSH, one of the prominent mine-owners of Montana, was born in Waterford city, Ireland, November 15, 1844, of Irish parents. He received his education in St. John's College, Catholic. In 1862 he came to America, landing at New York, and for a number of years afterward was employed as freight check clerk for the Michigan Southern & North Indiana and Toledo & Ann Arbor Railroads.

In 1869, filled with the spirit of adventure, he came up the Yellowstone river to Bozeman, Montana, and thence to Alder Gulch, now Virginia City, where he followed placer mining two seasons. Mr. Walsh was then engaged in huntiug and trapping at Yellowstone until 1875, in the fall of which year he went to the Black Hills at Deadwood, but, not meeting with good success there, returned to Montana in the following spring, and remained at Bozeman until 1877. He next prospected at Pony, also followed placer mining at Jackson creek until the spring of 1878, and since that time has resided in Marysville. Mr. Walsh has discovered many valuable quartz mines, among them being the Bon Mahon, Fraction No. 2, Liberty, Intermediate, Marguerite S., Sergeant Jasper, Summit, Nile, Concert, Shakopee, Earthquake, General Grant, General Sheridan, etc. These mines are considered among the most valuable of this rich mining district.

Mr. Walsh is thoroughly informed on the general topics of the day, as well as upon all the mining interests of his held. Under the law it becomes the duty of the State auditor to call the house of representatives to order: hence the direction given Captain Smith to admit him if he appeared. The right of the State auditor to preside over the house of representatives until a temporary organization is effected, is unquestioned. As incidental to this authority, and in view of the warlike preparation made by the Democrats to capture the organization by strategy if possible and by force if necessary, State Auditor E. A. Kenny (Republican) issued a call for the house of representatives to meet at Iron Hall on Main street in the city of Helena for the purpose of effecting an organization. His right to designate the meeting place of this body, over which he must temporarily preside, was as clearly defined as the right of the governor to set apart a convention hall by proclamation, when there is no capital building designed for that purpose.

Governor Toole's enthusiasm for Democratic success invoked a long period of disaster to the young State, without adding to the political assets of the Democratic party. It was an executive mistake that proved an expensive one to his party. In the light of after events Governor Toole's action strongly reminds one of Macaulay's statement that when King Carles went down to Parliament with an armed force he intended to commit a crime, but only committed a mistake.

The day following the issuance of this remarkable proclamation, November 23, 1889, the first legislature of the State of Montana convened. The Senate met at the place desig-

State, and it may be truthfully said that he has tramped over the Territory of Montana, having camped for months wherever night found him. In political matters, he supports the Republican party, but is thoughtful and independent in all his actions, and is thoroughly identified with American interests.

CHARLES WESLEY CANNON, who stands well to the front among Montana's most successful pioneer business men, was born in Cleveland, Ohio, July 1, 1836.

Mr. Cannon is of French descent. Jan Cannon, the progenitor of the family in America, was a French Huguenot who settled in New York city as early as 1692, where he was for many years a prominent merchant and honorable citizen. Among his descendants have been men of mark, both in the Colonial days and in the later history of the country. Our subject's grandfather, James Le Grand Cannon, was born in Stratford, Connecticut, and was a direct descendant of Jan Cannon. His son, George Cannon, born at Stratford in 1799, was married in 1830 to Miss Margurette White, daughter of Dr. White, of Albany, New York, her birth having occurred in 1813. They removed to Cincinnati, Ohio, where he was for a number of years engaged in business, and whence he removed to Dubuque, Iowa, there being successfully engaged in merchandising the rest of his life. His wife died when in the prime of life, leaving him with a family of little children, five sons and a daughter, of whom Charles W. was the third born. The father's death occurred September 15, 1862, in the sixty-third year of his age. Both were consistent members of the Episcopal Church. In 1852, on account of the failing health of the elder Mr. Cannon, the care of his business largely devolved upon his son, Charles W., who was at that time only sixteen years of age. The experience gained at that time proved of great value to him in after life. In 1859 a partnership was formed with George B. Smith, and under the firm name of Cannon & Smith their house became one of the most successful ones in Iowa.

In 1863, soon after a double bereavement by the death of their father and only sister, Mr. Cannon and his younger brother, Henry, decided to leave the scene of their sorrow and try their fortune in the far West. They accordingly sold out their business and made necessary preparations for the hazardous journey. Their outfit consisted of four mules and a wagon loaded with necessary supplies, and they had also the luxury of a French cook. They started in April, 1863, from Dubuque, crossed the State of Iowa to Omaha, and their route from Omaha was on the north side of the Platte river. The pleasure of the first part of the journey was unmarred, but when they arrived at a point eleven miles west of Fort Laramie they were attacked by a band of twenty-three Sioux Indians. The Indians succeeded in getting one of their mules, and the whites, thinking that the red men were satisfied with what they got, tied the third mule to the rear of their wagon; but before they had proceeded far the Indians made another raid upon them and captured another mule. By their undaunted courage the young emigrants escaped with their lives, although the Indians fired showers of ammunition at them. Continuing on their journey, they found their load was too heavy for the two mules and they were obliged to dispense with everything they could possibly do without. The Indians followed them at a distance, but finally gave up the chase. That same day the nated by the governor, there being no contested seats in that body. The Republican members of the house of representatives met at Iron Hall and effected a temporary organization, while the Democratic members met at the hall in the courthouse designated by the governor, admitted to seats the five Democratic claimants from Silver Bow county, and effected a temporary organization therewith. Thus was inaugurated the dead-lock which was maintained until the session of the first legislature expired by limitation and part way through the second session of that body the following legislative year.

The Republican house of representatives, having been called to order by the State auditor, as required by law, and having effected an organization in due form with a quorum present, had complied with the provisions of law and was in fact the legal house of representatives, as was subsequently determined by action of the Supreme Court of the State of Montana and by the Senate of the United States. The Democratic house, on the contrary, conformed to a few of the legal forms of organization, with but twenty-eight members responding to roll call, including the five claimants, who had no title in fact to the seats they insisted upon filling.

The two houses remained apart during the entire session, although at the outset an effort was made by the Republicans to effect a compromise on some basis that would permit the interests of the State to be served by necessary legislation. Representative R. H. Howey (Republican) offered the following resolution in Cannons overtook some other emigrants, with whom they camped that night. Next morning both parties started out together, and continued together until they reached Deer Creek Station, which was on the opposite side of the river. There were a few soldiers stationed there. As they were soon to enter the mountains and as the other emigrants could not render them any assistance as they had all their own teams could do, Mr. Cannon decided to cross the river and see if he could buy a team. He accordingly took a roll of greenbacks in his mouth and swam the Platte river, more than 100 feet wide at this point. He secured a yoke of oxen for $160. Although they experienced some little difficulty in getting the oxen and the mules to work together, they proceeded on their way, but before they had traveled far found that they were being followed by Indians. At this critical time they were fortunate in falling in with some other emigrants whose assistance then perhaps saved their lives.

Notwithstanding all their hardships and dangers, they never once thought of turning back. Meeting with a company of soldiers who were preparing for a campaign against the Indians on Powder river, the soldiers tried to get them to enlist but they declined. Here the French cook deserted them. Subsequently Mr. Cannon exchanged his oxen for a horse by given $40 to boot, and for a time they drove a spike team as it was called. At the Sweet Water, in Wyoming, they rested a brief time and prospected some, but found nothing sufficient to induce them to remain and accordingly they moved on. Before they reached their destination, however, the horse and one of the mules died of starvation, and it was with the aid of borrowed cattle that they were enabled to get their wagon to Virginia City. More than four months had been spent in making the journey. Upon his arrival in Virginia City, Mr. Cannon entered a barber shop to have his hair cut, the price for which was $1, and it was there that he found greenbacks were worth only fifty cents to the dollar. Prices in gold were as follows: 100 pounds of flour, $40; coffee, $1 per pound; sugar and salt, each $1 per pound; a shovel, $13; gum boots, $11 a pair, the freight on all goods being thirty-five cents per pound from the States.

In Virginia City they began merchandising under the firm name of Cannon Brothers. A year later they removed to Helena, and after they had conducted business in Helena a year the subject of our sketch returned to St. Louis. There he formed a partnership with Captain F. B. Kerchiville and Mr. M. S. Mullon, the style of the firm being Kerchiville, Cannon & Company. They chartered three steamboats, loaded with goods and miners' supplies and sent them to the house at Helena, the boats being unloaded at Fort Benton and brought from there by wagon to Helena. This venture proved a great success. The business was continued by the firm in Helena until 1869, when Mr. Cannon purchased the interest of his partners and continued it successfully himself until 1880. That year he sold out, retired from merchandising, and has since given his attention to real-estate, mining and other business interests, which by his capable and sagacious management grew to enormous proportions. Prosperity continued to attend him and he became a millionaire,—the largest tax payer in Helena, a city noted for its large proportion of wealthy citizens.

Mr. Cannon was largely instrumental in procuring for Helena her gas, electric-light and street-railway systems, the house of representatives, which was adopted by that body, but which the Democratic house and Democratic leaders refused to recognize or pay any attention to:

Whereas: The existing dead-lock in the first senate and legislature of the State of Montana, preventing the enactment of much needed laws and the transaction of important business for the State, is to be deplored by all good citizens; and

Whereas: This condition of things has been brought about primarily as the result of an election held October 1, 1889, at precinct 34, Silver Bow county; and

Whereas: It is evident that no satisfactory settlement can be made until a full investigation of such election is had, and that no such investigation can be legally had until the senate as well as the house of representatives shall have been duly organized; therefore,

Be it resolved, That we, the Republican members of the house of representatives, propose the following as a just an equitable basis upon which the whole controversy shall be settled:

First: That the Democratic members whose election is undisputed meet with the Republican members whose election is undisputed as an organized house of representatives.

Second: That the Democratic members of the senate qualify and that the senate organize at once.

Third: That the house of representatives so organized select a commission of three Republican members and three Democratic members, and that this commission so constituted shall have full authority to compel the attendance of witnesses and the production of papers, and shall fully investigate the election held at precinct 34, Silver Bow county, on October 1, 1889, and that the said committee shall report not later than fifteen days after its appointment or election.

Fourth: That the senate take an adjournment to such time as shall be necessary for said commission to fully investigate said election and be able to report to the house of representatives.

Fifth: That both Republican and Democratic members shall be bound by the result of such investigation.

The refusal of the Democrats to consider this proposition, which would have developed all the facts material to the precinct controversy, convinced the Republicans that no settlement of the difficulties could be effected on an equitable basis. Later in the session, after it became known that Pennycook, O'Regan, Morrison and other parties to the precinct fraud could not be found, and that the voters at that precinct had disappeared and that their testimony could not be secured, all being beyond the reach of legal process even if located, the Democrats proposed an investigation into the precinct election with a view to determining whether fraud had or had not been pracand is president and a large stockholder in each of the companies which furnish these facilities. He is vice-president of the Montana Central Railway and a director of the Montana National Bank and also of several important mining companies. For several years he has been one of the largest wool growers in the State. His ranch comprises 3,000 acres, requires twenty-eight miles of fence to enclose it, and is stocked with nearly 20,000 sheep, besides cattle and horses. It is thoroughly equipped with all of the best farming implements, and is a model of its kind.

March 17, 1868, Mr. Cannon was happily married to Miss Catharine B. Martine, only daughter of the late Captain W. W. Martine, of Ithaca, New York. He was of Spanish ancestry. His wife was before her marriage Miss Argenith Newell. Both the Martines and the Newells were early settlers in the Colonies and were participants in the Revolutionary war, their residence for many years being at Boston. Mrs. Cannon was born in Ithaca, New York, November 16, 1851, and in early life had the misfortune to lose both her parents. Her educational advantages were of the best and she early developed rare mental and social qualities. Soon after their marriage Mr. Cannon built a beautiful little cottage on Broadway, at that time by far the best residence in the city, and in this home they have since lived and dispensed hospitality. They became the parents of two children, one of whom, Bernice Martinique, a lovely daughter, died in 1889 at the ticed. As propositions of this character, when made, merely re-opened the case without reference to facts already established by affidavits and otherwise, and reverted back to the original evidence then inaccessible, the Republicans did not assent to them. It was clearly the Democratic purpose, in default of evidence to re-establish facts previously proven by the Republicans, to rest their case on the count of the alleged returns from precinct 34, made in pursuance of the mandamus proceedings before a partisan judge, and then hold that the action of the lower court was conclusive. This, in fact, was the claim made by the Democratic leaders, and was a thinly disguised effort to reap a party advantage without reference to the real facts in issue.

Talk of compromise along these lines had no other effect than to intensify party feeling, making both sides watchful and suspicious, and practically put an end to any hope of settlement of the difficulties during the session.

During the dead-lock of the first session the house of representatives passed a great many important bills, necessary to the welfare of the new State, none of which became laws on account of the conduct of the Democratic members of the State senate. Aside from its early efforts in behalf of a compromise and its participation in the joint session which elected Wilber F. Sanders and Thomas C. Powers senators of the United States, one of the most interesting and notable incidents of its career was a suit brought by Representative William Thompson, of Silver Bow county, against State Auditor Kinney to secure his claim for mileage and per-diem as a member of the legislature. Thompson was one of the five members whose title to a seat was disputed by the Democrats, and who held his seat under authority of a certificate from the State canvassing board instead of from the clerk of his county. The suit was brought before the supreme court to test the legality of his certificate of election.

Chief Justice Blake, having served as a member of the State canvassing board, did not sit in the hearing and determination of the case, the opinion being handed down without division by the other members of that tribunal. (See supreme court reports.)

We quote but one paragraph herewith, which verifies the rights of the State canvassing board in the premises, and effectually disposes of the position taken by Governor Toole in his proclamation issued the day preceding the convention of the legislative assembly. The paragraph referred to reads as follows:

age of eighteen years. She was proficient in music and was a favorite among her circle of friends, of whom she had many. Their son, William Le Grand, was born in Helena, September 24, 1872, was educated in France and Germany, and is now managing the large farm above referred to. The family have traveled extensively in Europe, and usually spend a part of each winter in New York city. Mr. and Mrs. Cannon are members of the Episcopal Church, and in politics he is a stanch Republican.

SHIRLEY C. ASHBY, president of the Helena National Bank, was born in Fauquier county, Virginia, August 10, 1843.

Mr. Ashby is a descendant of English and Scotch ancestors who were early settlers in Virginia, they having located there previous to the Revolution. His mother's sides of the house, the Carters, are descendants of the Stewarts of Scotland. They were among the first settlers of Virginia. Mr. Ashby's grandfather, Captain John Ashby, served in the war of 1812, and lived to a ripe old age. His son, George William Ashby, the father of our subject, was born in Virginia in 1800; married Miss Phebe G. Carter, also a native of Virginia, born in 1807. They had a family of five children; three of whom died when young. One son, W. Wirt Ashby, died at St. Louis, Missouri, when in his fifty-seventh year. Thus Shirley C. Ashby is the only one of the family left.

He was reared in his native State, and at the commencement of the Civil war he enlisted in Company D, Sixth Virginia Cavalry, under Colonel Fitz Hugh, in Lee's division. Mr. Ashby was then a youth of seventeen years. He served gallantly during the war, being in many hard-fought battles and having several horses killed under him, but always escaping serious injury himself. The ravages

To declare that the county clerk's certificate of election to the office in question is the highest prima-facie evidence of title to the office, as against the certificate of the canvassing board constituted by an act of Congress, and the ordinance framed by the constitutional convention and adopted by the people, would be in effect to declare that the provisions of the statute in this respect stand without modification by the act of Congress and constitution and ordinances, and prevail over them. If the ordinance did not work a change in the statute in this particular, how can it be maintained that the same ordinance worked such important changes in other respects? The effect of ordinance No. 2 was to terminate the terms of all the elective officers of the Territory of Montana, while under the literal statutory provisions their terms of office would have continued for more than a year; and under that theory the officers elected at the late election, under this ordinance, who have taken possession of these offices, are there without authority.

This decision by the court of last resort practically settled the status of the members holding certificates, but the Democrats refused to recognize the validity of the supreme court's definition of the legal points in issue, and the dead-lock was continued.

THE SENATE.

The first senate of the State of Montana comprised sixteen members, one from each county, no seat being in dispute. Politically this body was evenly divided, each party being represented by eight senators, with the presiding officer Lieutenant Governor J. E. Rickards, a Republican. Fearing the decisive vote of the presiding officer in the event of a tie on any proposition in issue, the eight Democratic members refused to meet with the Republican members and effect an organization of that body. The eight Republican members and the Lieutenant-Governor met in pursuance of the proclamation of Governor Toole and in the room designated, and the oath of office was administered to the members.

In refusing to take the oath of office and participate in the organization of the senate the Democratic members hoped, by preventing a quorum, to destroy the possibility of that body co-operating with the house of representatives in the election of United States senators. The Democratic conspiracy of obstruction contemplated first the preventing of the election of two Republican United States senators in due form, and in the event that such election was held to of war having swept away nearly all their property, the Ashbys found themselves almost penniless. Shirley C. Ashby then went to St. Louis and was employed as clerk on a steamboat. In 1867 we find him in Montana, in the employ of I. G. Baker & Bros., dealers in general merchandise at Fort Benton. This firm also did a large freighting business. While with them he became a very efficient assistant. He made many excursions to trade with the Indians, these trips extending all along the Missouri river and frequently being attended with great danger to him. Thus he became acquainted with all the Indian chiefs at the various posts where he traded, and was often compelled to camp and eat with the Indians. He proved himself of great value to his employers, and they, appreciating his efforts in their behalf, gave him an interest in the business, and thus by his courage and business enterprise he gained a start in life. He continued to make Fort Benton his headquarters until 1870, when he came to Helena and was employed as clerk, having loaned his surplus funds. After a time he was elected to the office of County Assessor, in which capacity he served five years. In the meantime he also embarked in the real-estate and insurance business, in both of which he was successful, continuing the same and working his way up until 1889. That year he sold out. Then he turned his attention to the sale of agricultural implements, wagons and carriages, in which he did a large business, his operations covering a wide extent of territory. This business also proved a success and he still continues it. In 1890 the Helena National Bank was started by John T. Murphey and Frank Baird, Mr. Murphey being elected president. Mr. Ashby became a stockholder in this institution, and in August, 1892, upon Mr. Murphey's retiring from the presidency, Mr. Ashby was elected to succeed him.

Since coming to Helena Mr. Ashby has interested himself in all that pertains to the well-being and growth of the city, having erected several business blocks, as well as a fine residence for himself and family. Politically, he has been a life-long Democrat; religiously, he gives his preference to the Methodist Episcopal Church South.

destroy its claims as to legal procedure and carry the contest into the Senate chamber at Washington.

The Republican senators met day after day, listening to roll call, and adjourned. This routine was observed until the 19th day of the session, when, at the end of a recess, roll call was on motion dispensed with and the following resolution, introduced by Senator Hedges, was adopted:

Resolved, By the members of the senate of the legislative assembly of Montana, constituting a moiety but not a majority as required by our constitution to form a quorum for the transaction of business or to complete its organization, having adjourned from day to day, until this present 19th day of the session has been reached, and it appearing by the late roll call now here made, as at all previous ones, that the following named senators elect, to-wit: C. J. McNamara, C. W. Hoffman, W. M. Thornton, J. A. Baker, Wm. Parberry, D. J. Hennessey, E. G. Redd, W. S. Becker, are absent, though at all times within the vicinity and able to be present, and there being no qualified sergeant-at-arms of this body, now, therefore be it ordered in the manner prescribed and set forth in the following order, we will proceed to compel the attendance of the aforesaid absent members. (See Senate Journal, First Legislative Session.)

The order above referred to was a voluminous document reciting certain facts bearing on the election of the members of that body and its legality, etc., citing section ten, article five, of the constitution in support of the right of a minority of that body to compel the attendance of absent members, and also referring to section section 1,333 of the fifth division of the Compiled Statutes of the State of Montana, which conferred the right upon either house of the legislative assembly to empower any person, when there is no sergeant-at-arms, to compel the attendance of absent members. Acting upon this authority the Republican senators directed a temporary sergeant-at-arms, then selected, to bring within the bar of the senate the absentees mentioned.

At the afternoon session the temporary sergeant-at-arms reported to the senate that he had served the warrant upon Senators Hoffman, Parberry, Baker, Redd and Becker, all of whom refused to appear. The following day the temporary sergeant-at-arms reported having served the warrant on Senator Thornton, who refused to accompany him to the senate chamber. The temporary sergeant-at-arms was instructed to complete the service upon absent senators, whereupon the lieutenant governor reported

Mr. Ashby was married August 10, 1876, to Miss E. W. Grey. Three children have been born to them in Helena, Phebe May, Shirley Baker and Gertrude.

EDWARD MCSORLEY, County Treasurer of Jefferson County, was born at Deerfield, Oneida County, New York, in 1830. His father, Henry McSorley, was born in County Tyrone, Ireland, in 1800, and came to the United States in 1824, locating in Oneida County. He was married there to Miss Margaret McIncrow, a native also of Ireland, and they had five children, one of whom died in infancy. The mother died at the age of fifty-nine years, and the father lived to the age of eighty years. They spent their entire lives after coming to the United States in Oneida county, where by honest industry they secured a competency.

Edward McSorley, their second child in order of birth, received his education in the public schools of his native town, and was early inured to farm labor. He began life on his own account as a school teacher, supplementing his work in the school-room with farming. In company with his brother he worked large tracts of land. In 1868 he came up the Missouri river to Montana, spending six weeks in the journey, and first settled at Fish Creek, Jefferson county, where he was engaged in placer mining for a time. Mr. McSorley then conducted a store until 1878. In that year he was elected Treasurer of the county, was three times re-elected, and in 1886 secured the appointment of Postmaster of Boulder, under Cleveland's administration. He afterward served three years as clerk of the First National Bank of Boulder, and in 1892 was again elected Treasurer of his county, which position he still holds. He has given bonds to the extent of $75,000, and about $60,000 passes through his hands annually. Mr. McSorley is a man of good business ability, of the highest integrity of character, and has all his life been a faithful adherent to the principles of the Democrac having received a communication from the absent senators, stating that having been unable to confer with one of their number they could not report in person at that hour but would appear in a body at the session at two o'clock P. M. They failed to appear, however, when a recess was taken until three o'clock to await their coming, when failing to come, an adjournment was taken until the following day.

The 21st and 22d days of the session passed without incident, when upon the 24th day the eight Democratic senators appeared and took the oath of office before Chief Justice Henry N. Blake. This oath, which was previously taken by the Republican members, was of an iron-clad character, and, in view of subsequent events, is of interest in this connection:

I do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I will support, protect and defend the constitution of the United States and the constitution of the State of Montana, and that I will discharge the duties of my office with fidelity, and that I have not paid or contributed or promised to pay or contribute, either directly or indirectly, any money or other valuable thing to procure my nomination or election, except for necessary and proper expenses authorized by law; that I have not knowingly violated any election law of this State or procured it to be done by others in my behalf; that I will not knowingly receive, directly or indirectly, any money or other valuable thing for the performance or non-performance of any act or duty pertaining to my office, other than the compensation allowed by law. So help me God.

On the 25th day of the session the presiding officer announced a communication from the governor, which was laid upon the table pending the formation of committees. This motion was made by Hedges (Republican), and seconded by Baker (Democrat). Dec. 19, 1889, the 27th day of the session, the organization of the senate was effected.

Notwithstanding their oaths of office the Democratic members had planned to prevent the organization of the senate until some opportune time when by reason of the absence of some Republican member they could control the organization and dictate committees. This was regarded as very important, especially in the matter of a conference committee, for upon the question of which house of representatives should be recognized and co-operated with in joint session would hinge the political complexion of the two United States Senators shortly to be chosen.

There is no doubt that the Democratic senators, having held out until the 24th day of the session waiting for political events to shape

LOUIS GANS, one of Montana's pioneer business men, was the founder of the Gans & Klein mercantile establishment of Helena, one of the oldest and most reliable business houses in Montana. It is appropriate that some personal mention be made of him in this work, and the following sketch of his life will be of interest to many:

Louis Gans was born in Austria, in September, 1840, and comes of a family of merchants of that country. He was reared and educated in his native land, learned the mercantile business there and was also for a time engaged in teaching. On learning of America and its free institutions and the many opportunities for poor but industrious young men to make a fortune, he in 1857, when only seventeen years of age, set sail for New York. After a safe passage, he landed in New York city, a stranger without name or money and scarcely able to speak a work of the English language. He at once began his mercantile career, carrying a basket and peddling notions through New Jersey and Pennsylvania and meeting with success from the start. The following year he went to Mobile, Alabama, and accepted a clerkship in a store, at a salary of $50 per month. In this position he continued until 1862, all the while saving his earnings. In 1862 he sailed from New York for California, via the Isthmus, and in due time landed in San Francisco. From there he went to Portland, Oregon, and then to Idaho, looking for a situation or business opening. At Placerville, he started a small store and remained there until the fall of 1865. Then he came to Helena. In the spring of the following year he formed a partnership with Henry Klein, which has continued up to the present time, and has made a most enviable record as an enterprising, obliging and square-dealing house, acquiring the leading position in the wholesale clothing business in Montana, themselves favorably to the Democratic house of "representatives," finally decided to take their seats in the senate chamber as affording them better strategic opportunities to forward the purposes of the great Democratic conspiracy.

An effort was therefore made to prevent an organization from being effected on the 29th day of the session, for a tie would have given the presiding officer, a Republican, the decisive vote. Although a quorum was present and answered to roll call, the Democrats had determined upon a policy of silence when any vote was taken on the matter of organization, on the presumption that the quorum present would technically be broken thereby, and the order of business suspended.

But this policy of obstruction was thwarted by the rulings of Lieutenant Governor Rickards. Hedges (Republican) moved that the senate proceed to the election of a president pro tem., the motion being carried by viva-voce vote. Thornton (Democrat) demanded the ayes and noes, but Rickards promptly ruled that inasmuch as no rules had as yet been adopted for the government of the senate there was no rule for calling the ayes and noes. Senator Fisher (Republican) introduced the following resolution: Resolved, That the senate do now proceed to the election of the officers and attaches of this body, and that the rule of this election shall be that a plurality of votes shall elect in each and every case until permanent rules are adopted governing this body.

This rule was adopted and the officers and attaches of the senate elected in accordance therewith, Democratic protests thereto being met by reference to Cushing's Manual and to sections 1327 and 1332 of the Revised Statutes by the president of the senate, and citations of precedents to the effect that when a quorum is present a majority of votes cast, whether it be a majority of votes present or not, must determine the action of a legislative body. The Democrats who refused to vote, although present, were very indignant at the ruling of the lieutenant-governor, and a storm of abuse was heaped upon his head by the Democratic press and the leaders who saw in the organization of the senate a death blow to the conspiracy to control the joint session in the near future. Rickards was falsely accused of ruling that seven was a majority of sixteen, Senators Brown (Republican) and McNamara (Democrat) having been paired at the time, neither being present when the organization was effected.

based wholly upon intelligent effort and most liberal and honorable business methods. In 1878 Mr. Herman Gans, a nephew of our subject, was taken into the firm. He had previously for some time been an efficient salesman in the house, and since his admission he has constantly grown in favor with the people of Montana, being to-day ranked with the best business men of the State. The firm name has continued the same, the partners now being Louis Gans, Henry Klein and Herman Gans. Louis Gans has made his home in New York city and has for all these years done the buying for the house, making yearly visits to Montana to advise with his partners and look after his large business interests. The firm are largely interested in other business enterprises in Montana. Mr. Gans is a large stockholder in and president of the Berry Boice Cattle Company, owning about 30,000 head of cattle.

As a natural result of his wise foresight and safe investments in lines of business in which there were fair profits, there has come to Mr. Gans large wealth, his highest expectations being more than realized. The result has not been to make him a sordid business man, but to the contrary, he is kind-hearted and benevolent, the benignity of his charcter beaming from his eyes and face and making one feel that he is in the presence of a friend of humanity. This trait of his character has found form in his establishment of the Montefiore Home, an institution in New York city for the care of chronic invalids. Here they have a home and their sufferings are alleviated as far as it is in the power of human skill to do. There are now 300 patients in this institution. Mr. Gans is chairman of its executive committee, has charge of all its interests, and to it gives much of his valuable time, feeling amply repaid by the reflection that he is render

Paul McCormick

The newspaper attack on the lieutenant-governor received a prompt rebuke from the pen of A. B. Keith, then managing editor of the Helena Daily Journal, who in an article on the rectitude of the ruling made showed that Senator Blackburn, when a Democratic member of the house of representatives in 1879, supported the Tucker amendment to the rules of that body, providing that a majority of votes cast should determine the action of the house if the speaker decided that those voting and those present but not voting, together constituted a quorum. Congressman Springer, of Illinois, took similar grounds in a speech before the house of representatives January 23, 1880. (See Congressional Record.) The ruling of Speaker Reed to the same effect, which was subsequently confirmed by the Supreme Court of the United States, in an action brought thereunder, forever set at rest criticism of Lieutenant-Governor Rickards in the organization of the Montana senate.

Having refused to vote in the organization of the senate, the Democratic senators likewise refused to participate in carrying out the constitutional requirement that that body determine by lot to which senatorial districts the long term should be assigned and to which the short term. By refraining from voting and participating in this action, the Democrats hoped to raise the question of the legality of procedure. The drawing of lots resulted in assigning to the short term, one year, five Republican and three Democratic members, while the long term, three years, was given five Democrats and three Republicans, thus giving the Democrats an initiatory advantage in the next session of that body. The validity of this determination by lot was never questioned by the Democrats.

The attempt to prevent the organization of the senate having failed, the eight Democratic members resumed their previous method of obstruction in absenting themselves from the senate chamber, leaving that body without a quorum present to transact business. None of them appeared at roll call the day following the organization and done of the bills or memorials reported from the house could be acted upon by the senate. In this way the Democrats hoped to prevent the senate and house from legally meeting in joint session to elect United States senators.

This policy of absenteeism was thereafter steadfastly maintained by the Democratic senators. That it was in line with suggestions em-ing help to the suffering. This institution is the only one of its kind in the world. Mr. Gans has also for ten years been a director of Mount Sinai Hospital, where large numbers of sick people are restored to health and from which they are not sent away empty-handed, but are furnished financial aid and are helped to positions in which they can provide for themselves. These things have been mentioned of him by one of his friends as only a few of the many things which go to illustrate the kindness of his heart toward his fellow men.

Mr. Gans was happily married in 1872 to Miss Fannie Gans, a native of New York. They have two daughters. Sarah, the older, is now Mrs. Harry Hocks of New York. The other daughter, Lottie, resides with her parents at their beautiful home, No. 23, Thomas street, New York city.

Mr. Gans belongs to the Masonic fraternity and is Vice President of Bethel Temple Lodge, who have the finest edifice in America.

PAUL MCCORMICK, of Billings, is a type of the splendid, fearless, enterprising pioneers who played the leading part in redeeming eastern Montana from the sway of the savages, opening the way to this region of beauty and fertility and "beckoning after them, the slow and passing steps of agriculture and civilization."

Mr. McCormick was born at Greenwood, Steuben county, New York, June 2, 1845, and here spent his boyhood and youth, remaining until he attained his majority. He attended the common schools and afterward the Alfred Center Academy. When twenty-one years of age he concluded that the West was the place for him to make a career, and in 1866 he started for Montana, reaching that year the Gallatin valley and locating on Middle creek, where he engaged in farming and freighting. He remained there until 1870, in which year he accompanied Colonel Baker on his famous expedition against the Piegans to the Marias battlegrounds, furnishing at the anating from leading Democrats at Washington, with a view to a contest in the United States senate, was at all times suspected. That the national Democracy had entered into the contest in advance and was assisting the local Democracy in its efforts to prevent legislation absolutely essential to the welfare of the new State, by maintaining the dead lock, was finally proven beyond the shadow of a doubt by correspondence discovered in the desk of Senator Baker (Democrat). The correspondence herein referred to is as follows, the first letter being addressed to Samuel T. Hauser, a member of the Big Four residing in Helena:

WASHINGTON, D. C., Dec. 26, 1889.

Dear Sir: The Democrats made a mistake in going into the senate session. It was a bad break, but as it has been done we must do the best we can with what is left. All of us—and I have consulted the leading Democrats here—are of the opinion that the Democratic members of the legislature must elect two senators on the same day the Republicans elect. It will not do for the two Republican senators to be here without contestants on our side. The United States senate requires the two houses to meet separately, and that the votes of "the members" shall be recorded on the journals of the respective houses for United States senators. If a majority of each house vote for one man, then upon meeting in joint session the next day that man will be declared senator. If the journals do not show a majority of each house for one man, then the joint session will proceed to elect. Your senate is a tie, but the Republicans may undertake to count the vote of the lieutenant-governor for senator. He has clearly no vote for senator, as he is not a member of the senate within the meaning of the United States law. On motion to go into joint convention he can vote if there is a tie, but that is all. When assembled in joint convention the Republicans will elect two senators, and all that we can do is to have our State senate elect one of its members as president, and a secretary, and vote for the senators, keeping a journal, etc. The house of representatives must do the same, and the two houses must then meet in joint convention at the courthouse and elect two senators, as the senate journal will not show a majority in that body for one man for senator.

The two Republican Senators will come here with a certified copy of the proceedings, and the Democrats with Governor Toole's certificate, which makes a prima-facie case for us. Then the fight will begin here. Of course the Republican Senate will not admit our people, but we will make it so hot for them that they same time the greater portion of the transportation of the army.

In 1875 Mr. McCormick, in connection with Major F. D. Pease and C. H. Daniels, organized and fitted the expedition to the lower Yellowstone, which is known in history as the Fort Pease expedition. This was one of the most dangerous and daring expeditions ever recorded in the frontier annals of Montana. With a party of thirty-three men they embarked on Mackinaws at Benton's landing on the Yellowstone and proceeded to the mouth of the Big Horn river. Three miles below this point, on the north bank of the Yellowstone, in the heart of the hostile Indian country, they built Fort Pease, and for eight months withstood the assault of the fierce and treacherous Sioux Indians, enduring hardships and dangers throughout this long term such as seldom fall to the lot of a brave and adventurous body of determined men.

It was virtually an eight months' battle for existence, for during the time they were not actually fighting the redskins it was necessary for them to be in a state of constant vigilance and readiness for battle. Several of the party were killed, and in view of the many dangers through which the remainder passed, it was a wonder that any of them escaped. During the following year the United States troops entered this field, and this assistance from the Government was in no small measure brought about by the Fort Pease expedition.

Mr. McCormick joined the command against the hostile Indians in the spring of 1876, as trader, and at the close of the campaign located at Miles City, where Fort Keogh was established. He remained at this point, engaged in merchandising and freighting, until the spring of 1879, when he moved his base of operations to Junction City, at which point his firm is still located, operating extensively in freighting, merchandising and Government contracting.

In October, 1892, Mr. McCormick moved to Billings, where he has since resided, continuing, however, his operations throughout Yellowstone country. Mr. Mc-will not admit the other. If they needed them it would be different, but they have six majority already and can afford to play the high judicial role. The United States Senate requires that the governor shall sign the certificate of a senator, and we will have the best of them on that point; but they will have the best of us as to the senate. The fact that our people went into session with them is an estoppel upon us as to the legal organization of that body. It was a terrible mistake and one we did not anticipate. I sent Toole a full statement as to all the questions involved, but did not think of our people walking into "their parlor" as they have done.

It only remains for us to have two contestants here on time, and if we do nothing else we can show up the pharisaical scoundrelism of Harrison's conduct in this matter. You know what I always thought of him. Everybody here now knows the same. I thank God that he is so mean constitutionally that he will continue to drive away from him every man of honor and liberality and genuine good feeling until the people will come to the rescue of the government from this congealed mass of meanness. Yours, etc., G. G. VEST.

Show this to Governor Toole.

P. S.—After writing the foregoing I am afraid that I have not made clear my meaning as to the course the Democrats must take at the next session of your State senate. They should not attend, and if brought in under arrest should refuse to vote. By refusing to vote they can prevent the lieutenant-governor from voting on a motion to go into joint convention. In order for him to vote on any question the journal must show a tie vote affirmatively. This cannot be done if our people do not vote. As to punishment for refusing to vote I will not insult the Democrats of Montana by supposing that there is one of them who would not laugh at all such threats. V.

Following is Mr. Hauser's rejoinder:

HELENA, MONTANA, Jan. 4, 1890.

SENATOR G. G. VEST, Washington, D. C. Dear Sir: The State senate, consisting of sixteen members, on the 15th of December eight Democratic senators qualified, but refused to vote on organization, and records show that permanent organization claimed by Republicans was effected by seven voting out of fourteen present. Their journal shows that only eight senators were present when the motion to go into joint session was carried. There has been no quorum present at senate sessions since 23d; shall Democratic senators effect the organizations as outlined in your letter of the 25th and elect senators, or shall they proceed immediately with the house to elect without organizing senate.

(Signed) S. T. HAUSER.

Sent at request of Governor Toole and J. A. Baker.

Cormick has never sought political preferment, but was nominated and elected as a delegate to the National Convention in 1892. In 1879, after the organization of Custer county, he was elected a Delegate to the Legislature for the new organization, but, through some legal technicality, he was not allowed a voice in that body.

Mr. McCormick has been largely interested in the stock business, and in this pursuit has been very successful. This, in connection with his Government contracting, has kept him actively employed, and his close attention to his business has made him one of the best financiers of eastern Montana.

As a pioneer and one of the early trail blazers of the Montana frontier, Mr. McCormick was an observer and participant in the many exciting scenes of that period. He is still actively engaged in the management and direction of his many business interests in the Yellowstone country, and will doubtless be an active participant in the financial movements of this section for many years to come.

Mr. McCormick was married at Helena, February 23, 1879, to Miss Mary Spear, and of this union there have been born four children, two of whom are deceased.

PETER WHALEY, a Montana pioneer of 1863, was born n Tullow, county Carlow, Ireland, June 29, 1828, a son of Peter and Mary Ann (Clary) Whaley, who had six children in their native land. In 1838 the father emigrated to America, to enjoy the liberty denied him in his beloved native land, and to make a home for his family under better advantages. He succeeded in saving sufficient money to send for his family in 1841, and they immediately joined him in this country, having spent thirty-five days in crossing the ocean. They located in Jo Daviess county, Illinois, where Mr. Whaley followed

WASHINGTON, D. C., Jan. 5, 1890.

S. T. HAUSER: If eight Democratic senators will act together proceed as I wrote you and let senators elected come here with governor's certificate. This is vital. The certificate is absolutely necessary. G. G. VEST.

December 31st, the thirty-ninth day of the session, having arrived, the president of the senate announced that it became the duty of that body to vote viva voce for two United States senators. On the first ballot Wilbur F. Sanders received the vote of every senator present, the eight Republican members. On the second ballot no choice was recorded, no one man receiving a majority of the votes cast. The next day, January 1, 1890, the senate proceeded to the house of representatives for the purpose of balloting in joint assembly for two members of the United States senate. Upon roll call it was found that a majority of the two houses combined was present, and the minutes so show.

Wilbur F. Sanders, of Lewis and Clarke county, received thirty-eight votes—every vote present— and was declared duly elected to represent the State of Montana in the senate of the United States. On the second ballot for senator Lee Mantle, of Silver Bow county, received eleven votes; B. Platt Carpenter, of Lewis and Clarke, one vote; T. C. Power, of Lewis and Clarke, three votes; L. H. Hershfield, of Lewis and Clarke, four votes; John E. Rickards, of Silver Bow, eleven votes; Dr. Leavitt, of Silver Bow, eight votes. The following day, January 2, the joint assembly reconvened and balloted for senator, the result being: Mantle, three votes; Power, thirty-five. T. C. Power, of Lewis and Clarke, late Republican candidate for governor, was thereupon declared duly elected to represent the State of Montana in the senate of the United States.

In this connection it is but fair to state that Lee Mantle would undoubtedly have been elected senator had the members of the legislative assembly from that section of the State commonly designated as the West Side united upon him. This was conceded by the members from other sections of the State. But the members from the West Side were unable to unite upon any one candidate and the election of Power followed. The West Side members, lead-mining many years, and his death occurred there at the age of sixty-seven years; his wife survived him only four years. They were devout Catholics, and were honest and worthy people.

Peter Whaley, the youngest of their four children, was thirteen years of age when he came to the United States, and remained with his parents until reaching years of maturity. In the winter of 1849-50, via the Isthmus, he went to California, and followed mining at Shasta, French creek, Sonora, and Weaverville, where he often made as high as $200 a day. Two years afterward he returned to Wisconsin, but after spending six months there went again to California. Not meeting with as good success in mining as at first, he again returned East, and for the following three years was engaged with his brother in the mercantile business at Hatching, Minnesota. During that time they sold much on credit, and they failed to collect from $12,000 to $15,000. After his marriage, in 1859, our subject emigrated to Central City, Colorado; three years afterward went to the gold fields of Idaho; spent one winter at Camp Floyd; in the following spring went to the gold mines at Bannack, and two weeks later located at Alder Gulch. While there he was very successful in his mining operations, often making as high as $250 in a day, and was a witness to all the exciting times of that camp. From Alder Gulch he went to Diamond City, Meagher county, where, in company with his father-in-law, D. J. Whitehead, they opened numerous supply stores, and continued in that occupation until the camp was deserted. After following agricultural pursuits two years, Mr. Whaley received the appointment of United States Indian Agent from the Government, for the Flathead Indians; but one year afterward, on account of his strong Democratic belief, was removed from that position.

as well as many from the East Side, were anxious to nominate Lieutenant Governor Rickards, and it is conceded that he would have been named for the position but for the fact that he could not at this critical time be spared from the chair of the presiding officer of the State senate—a conclusion amply justified by the subsequent history of the dead-lock.

Although Governor Toole communicated with the senate after its organization, the Democratic senators refused to attend. They had in the main carried out the instructions of Senator Vest, the Democrats in "joint convention" naming W. A. Clark and Martin Maginnis as their choice for United States senators. On January 8th, the forty-seventh day of the session, the sergeant-at-arms of the senate was directed to bring the absentees within the bar of the senate. That officer reported having served notice on Senator Parberry, who refused to recognize the authority of the senate to order his arrest; Hoffman and Redd were sick; Hennessey, McNamara and Thornton were out of town, and Baker and Becker could not be found.

At the afternoon session a communication from the Governor was read, showing the amount of revenue necessary to raise for the maintenance of the State government for the ensuing two years. The communication was ordered filed, pending the formation of standing committees.

For several days following the senatoral sessions were uneventful, being characterized as usual by no quorum and the transaction of no business in the line of legislation. In the meantime the Democratic members were watching for an opportunity to secure some advantage that would enable them through the machinery of the senate to raise a doubt as to the legality of the house of representatives, and thus weaken the Republican case before the senate of the United States.

Finally, on the 15th of January, the fifty-fifth day of the session, this opportunity was believed to have come. It was discovered by those on guard that four Republican members of the senate were either out of town on leaves of absence or confined to sick-beds. Thereupon the Democratic senators, who had been persistently absenting themselves, rushed into the senate prepared to control that body and force an official expression conducive to Democratic interests. So confident were they of their ability to cloud the titles of Senators-elect Sanders and Power, that words of exultation were passed

He then purchased 160 acres of his present farm, in the Bitter Root valley, three miles north of Stevensville, and erected a small log cabin. He has added to his original purchase until now he owns 400 acres, has a good frame residence, and all other necessary farm improvements.

May 20, 1859, Mr. Whaley was united in marriage with Miss Hannah Whitehead, a native of Somerset, Perry county, Ohio. They brought their two eldest children, David J. and Julia, to this State. Six children have been added to the family in Montana,—Edmond C., Clement P., Matthew, Mary, Anna and Arthur. The family are strict adherents to the Catholic faith. In political matters, Mr. Whaley is a stanch Democrat.

WILLIAM L. ROBBINS, proprietor of the Central Hotel, Melrose, Montana, is one of the prominent and enterprising men of the town.

Mr. Robbins was born in Denver, Colorado, August 9, 1862, son of T. M. Robbins, whose history appears in this work. He came with his parents to Montana when he was two years old, and here amid pioneer scenes he was reared. For nine years previous to his location in Melrose he was engaged in the stock business, and between the years 1876 and 1880 he kept a dairy, having about sixty cows and selling milk at Glendale. In this way he got his start.

In 1881, when the railroad was built, Mr. Robbins came to Melrose. This town had been laid out the previous fall. In connection with his father, he built the Central Hotel, a saloon and a livery stable, and since then has been actively engaged in running all of them. He also owns a large number of town lots, takes a deep interest in the improvement of the place, and is rated as one of its leading men.

Mr. Robbins was married October 28, 1885, to Miss Lizzy Reese, a native of Wales and a daughter of James J. and Ann J. Reese. They came to Montana in 1882, around in Democratic circles and the lobby of the senate was crowded with prominent members of that party to enjoy the great triumph in store.

After the routine business of the senate had been transacted, Senator Hoffman (Democrat) introduced the following resolution, adroitly framed to serve the purpose of the Democratic conspiracy:

WHEREAS, It is the desire of the senate to proceed with legislative business as soon as possible, and it is the sense of this body that it is not necessary at this time to interfere with or attempt to dictate terms of settlement of the questions at issue between the two bodies of men claiming to be the regularly organized house of representatives of the first legislative assembly of the State of Montana; therefore,

Be it resolved, That the senate as a body do refrain from interfering in the controversy and do further refrain and refuse to recognize either body as the regularly organized house of representatives until such time as they shall come together and settle the question at issue between themselves.

Before this resolution, or motion, was seconded, Senator Fisher (Republican) arose to a point of order that the resolution did not state facts and was subversive of the previous acts of the senate, and therefore could not be entertained. Lieutenant Governor Rickards ruled that the point of order was well taken, and sustained it, whereupon Senator Thornton appealed from the decision of the chair. The chair ruled the appeal out of order. Senator Baker (Democrat) then betrayed the Democratic purpose by moving "that the senate recognize the house of which Hon. C. P. Blakely is speaker," that being the Democratic house. The chair ruled this motion out of order, and when Senator Thornton (Democrat) again appealed from this ruling, his appeal was again thrown out of order, as subversive of the acts of the senate. Thus was thwarted the conspiracy that had been so carefully planned to reverse the action of the State senate. The firm stand taken by Lieutenant Governor Rickards, and so ably maintained, caused great excitement among the Democrats present, and threats against his life were freely made in the lobby of the senate. There is no question but that Lieutenant Governor Rickards took his life in his hands upon this and other occasions when he arose to the exigencies of the hour and stamped upon the Democratic conspiracy that threatened to overwhelm the rights of the people and prostitute the functions of government to personal ambitions.

The final card was played by Senator Baker and her parents are now prominent farmers of the Big Hole valley. Mr. and Mrs. Robbins have two children, Ester Ann and William F.

Fraternally, Mr. Robbins is identified with the I. O. O. F. at Glendale. In politics, he is a Republican. He is now serving as Justice of the Peace and Notary Public of his town.

Having been reared in Montana when game of all kinds was plenty, he early in life became an enthusiastic and expert hunter and is still fond of the chase. He has two fine staghounds. In a single month he has killed as many as twenty-three deer, and he has frequently hunted in company with the old Montana pioneers.

Recently Mr. Robbins has invested in several valuable gold mines located four miles northeast of Melrose. From one of these have been shipped eight car loads of ore which ran $60 to the ton. It is believed to be a very valuable property.

HON. ALEXANDER F. BURNS, of East Helena, Montana, having been a resident of Montana since 1866, is entitled to biographical mention as one of its pioneers.

Alexander F. Burns was born in Clay county, Missouri, December 7, 1832, of Scotch-Irish descent. Some of his ancestors came to this country and settled in Virginia previous to the Revolutionary war, and grandfather Burns was a soldier in that war. Jeremiah Burns, the father of our subject, was born in Virginia, April 12, 1798. He was married in Missouri in 1820 to Miss Jane Sampson, a native of Kentucky, born May 7, 1802, and in Missouri they spent the residue of their lives and reared their family of nine children, four of whom are still living. By occupation he was a farmer, and both he and his wife were Presbyterians. She died January 4, 1860; he, November 10, 1876.

Alexander F. Burns was the fifth born in his father's family, and was reared to manhood in Missouri. In 1852

(Democrat), who moved that the senate adjourn sine die on Saturday night, January 18, 1890. This motion was intended to destroy the possibility of any bill passed by the Republican house of representatives being acted upon by the senate in recognition of its legality. Being a motion to adjourn it was believed that it would necessarily have to be put, and the Democratic majority present would see that it was promptly carried; but the chair was equal to the occasion and held that a motion to adjourn sine die could not be entertained when the business in hand had not been completed. On motion of Senator Hedges the senate then adjourned until Monday, January 20.

January 28 a resolution to take the joint rules from the table was passed, the eight Republican members voting aye and the Democrats refusing to vote. Baker appealed from the chair, when an affirmative decision was announced, but the lieutenant governor was sustained by eight affirmative votes, the Democrats again refusing to vote. The following day the senate attempted to pass a bill, it being the sixty eighth day of the session. It was moved and seconded that senate bill No. 3 be read. Senator Hoffman (Democrat) called for the ayes and nays. Roll call resulted in eight ayes, nays none, the Democrats refusing to vote.

The president of the senate, Lieutenant Governor Rickards, stated that those who refused to vote violated one of the senate rules, and the secretary was ordered to read senate rule 26 and to call the roll of those refusing to vote, namely, Baker, Becker, Hennessey, Hoffman, McNamara, Parberry, Redd and Thornton. Those Democrats persisting in their refusal to vote, the chair declared the motion lost and the attempt to legislate was defeated. The policy of negation was pursued by the Democrats as to each bill introduced. For several days the Democratic members either absented themselves or refused to vote, thus preventing either the enactment of laws or the final adoption of the joint rules which had been taken from the table. February 6, the seventy-sixth day of the session, every Republican senator was in his seat and every Democratic senator absent. Senator Olds introduced the following resolution, which was adopted:

Whereas, Divers and sundry members of the senate of the legislative assembly of the State he crossed the plains to California, and for two years was engaged in mining in Calaveras county, meeting with fair success. Following his mining experience, he spent one year in agricultural pursuits in California, after which he returned to Missouri, taking with him a snug sum of California gold. Then he was for three years employed as a clerk in the store of Connard & Clark in Missouri, Mr. Connard and Mr. Clark being now well-known merchants of Helena, members of the firm of Clark, Connard & Custen. Mr. Burns' next venture was in Nodaway county, Missouri, where he opened a store on his own account and which he conducted until the outbreak of the Civil war.

In August, 1861, he enlisted in Company H, First Missouri Volunteer Cavalry, for the Confederate service, and with his command was on duty through Missouri, Arkansas, Mississippi, Alabama, Georgia and Tennessee, remaining in the service until the close of the war. He participated in the battles at Lexington, Pea Ridge, Corinth, Vicksburg, and in all the hard fighting in the campaign against Sherman through Georgia. He was in much of the very hardest fighting of that sanguinary struggle. November 30, 1864, he was captured at Franklin, Tennessee, and at the time the war closed he was a prisoner on Johnson's Island. On several occasions he was slightly wounded and at the battle of Atlanta he was shot in the foot. From the rank of private he was promoted from time to time on account of meritorious service until he was Captain of his company.

June 7, 1865, Mr. Burns removed from Missouri to Nebraska, but, not being satisfied with that country, remained there only a short time. In 1866 he crossed the plains to Montana, making the journey with ox teams and in company with a small party of emigrants. At Fort Reno on the Powder river they were attacked by Indians, the loss of the whites being two men and a number of stock, but the brave little party succeeded in driving off the red men. Upon his arrival in Montana, Mr. Burns engaged in mining at Helena for a year, during which time he made fair wages. In 1868 he located 160 of Montana are absent, and whereas it is necessary to compel their attendance; now, therefore,

Be it resolved, By the undersigned, a minority of the members of the senate, that any member of the senate who shall be absent on and after February 6, A. D., 1890, shall be fined for such absence, unless excused by the senate, for the first day $50, for the second day's absence $100, for the third day's absence $200, for the fourth day's absence $400, for the fifth day's absence $800, for the sixth day's absence $1,000; and that upon each succeeding day before the adjournment of the senate for the day the roll shall be called and a resolution levying and confirming the foregoing fines against the absent members severally by name, who are not excused, shall be passed and placed on record by the secretary of the senate.

This was supplemented by the following, introduced by Senator Hedges, and adopted.

Resolved, That the president of the senate be authorized to issue duplicate warrants for the arrest of any one or all of the absent members, to the sheriff or other peace officers in the several counties of the State, as in his opinion may be necessary to execute the will of the senate as expressed in the resolution this day adopted requiring their attendance on or before ten o'clock A. M., February 8.

Thereafter the Democratic senators absented themselves in a body and the fines prescribed were entered up in the records against them. The steps taken by the senate to procure the arrest of absentees through the intervention of peace officers when necessary, led the Democrats to understand that dilatory methods were at an end, and that the Republican members proposed to protect the interests of the State at all hazards and use the extreme measures placed in their hands by the law.

There was a hurried flight on the part of the Democratic senators to get beyond the jurisdiction of the State and out of reach of its peace officers. Five of the Democratic senators fled to Spokane; two, it was understood, hastened to St. Paul, where, fearing extradition, they are said to have gone in haste to Canada; while the eighth, Senator Becker, was captured at Glendive by the sheriff of Dawson county. At Miles City the senator was taken from the officer on a writ of habeas corpus and released. Officer Parker, deputy sheriff and special sergeant-at-arms, re-arrested Becker, and with his prisoner boarded the train at Miles City for Helena, the seat of government. The Demoacres of land in the Prickly Pear valley, devoted his time and energies to its improvement, and resided on it until 1887. That year he sold out and came to his present location just south of East Helena, where he bought 160 acres, which he still owns. Here he erected a comfortable residence and good farm buildings and has otherwise made numerous improvements, now having one of the richest and finest farms in the county. He has a good water right, and the chief products of his lands are small fruits, vegetables and timothy and clover hay.

Mr. Burns was married October 1, 1857, to Miss Ann E. Kinison, a native of Virginia and the daughter of David Kinison. They have had eight children. Their oldest son, Edward B., is at Wolf Creek, Montana. Cora Elizabeth married W. O. Hutchison. She died in her twenty-ninth year, leaving two children that are being reared by Mr. and Mrs. Burns. The rest of their children are at home, and are as follows: Jeremiah, William K., Albert A., Carrie E., Annie V. and Medora.

All his life Mr. Burns has been an advocate of the principles of Democracy, and on several occasions has rendered efficient service for his party and the public. He was elected to and served as a member of the Constitutional Convention that formulated the constitution for the State of Montana. He was also elected a member of the first Legislative Assembly of his State. Such was the exciting status of affairs that year that the session has gone into history as the "Memorable Session." Mr. Burns is an industrious and successful farmer and an intelligent, well-informed gentleman, and has by his own efforts earned the success which he has attained.

SAMUEL SCHWAB, a Montana pioneer of 1863, and one of Helena's successful business men, is a native of Germany, born August 28, 1836.

Mr. Schwab spent the first sixteen years of his life in his native land. In 1852, believing that America with her free institutions afforded better opportunities for an enterprising young man, he emigrated to this country, landing in New York city A few months later he went to New Orleans and then to Natchez, Mississippi, where for a time he clerked in the store of his uncle. This uncle afterward employed him to run a branch house at Meadcratic conspirators took alarm, there was an exchange of telegrams, and Parker was arrested at Bozeman on a charge of kidnapping Becker. They were taken off the train at that point, and every possible scheme short of actual violence worked to get Becker out of the custody of the officer. It is not improbable that some of the plans laid by the Democrats to secure the person of Becker would have succeeded but for the nerve of several local Republicans in that city, who went to the aid of Parker and gave the mob to understand that any illegal step on its part would be resisted by force of arms.

The proceedings against Parker for kidnapping Becker resulted in his acquittal. In the meantime a special train had been sent to Bozeman from Helena and the officer and his prisoner were landed in the capital city in safety. Renewed efforts to get Becker away from the officer were made upon their arrival in Helena, taking the form of subterfuges and deceptions of various kinds, but Parker landed his charge in the senate chamber at 9:30 o'clock P. M., February 8, the seventy-eighth day of the session.

A recess of fifteen minutes was taken to enable the committee on privileges and elections to consider Becker's case. He was purged of contempt and relieved of the fines imposed upon him. A quorum was now present, whereupon the joint rules, so long held in abeyance, were adopted and a joint committee on enrollment appointed. A large number of appropriation bills, deemed essential to the support of the State and its institutions, were passed at that night's session. Unfortunately, through an error or oversight in the house of representatives, the bills had not been properly enrolled by the house, and the action of the senate thereupon proved ineffective.

At a late hour it was deemed best to adjourn until Monday, February 10, rather than encroach upon Sunday. An adjournment was not taken, however, until Senator Becker had pledged his word of honor that he would attend the session of the senate on Monday. With Becker's solemn assurance that nothing but his death would prevent him from being present at the meeting of the senate on the 10th, that body adjourned.

At a late hour the next night, Sunday, Senator Becker stole out the back door of his hotel in Helena and was driven with all possible speed ville, Missouri. Next he and a partner purchasd a store and stock of general merchandise at Union Church, Jefferson county, that State, where he remained one year. At the expiration of that time he sold out and returned to Rochester, New York. Soon afterward, however, in company with three other young men, he again sought a location in the West, this time selecting Watertown, Wisconsin, where he was in business for a few years, and whence he went to Leavenworth, Kansas. Mr. Schwab was at Leavenworth when the Civil war broke out and while there witnessed some exciting events. From Leavenworth he went to Denver, Colorado. He was engaged in business in different places in Colorado until 1863, when he came by stage to Montana.

August 20, 1863, he opened a store at Virginia City, and until the fall of the following year he conducted business there. At that time he started East, but on account of the Indian outbreaks he went no further than Denver that fall. In Denver he was in partnership with Herman & Lobe. In the spring of 1865 he continued his journey East, and returned with an ox train loaded with their own goods, the train being composed of twenty-one wagons, each wagon drawn by six yoke of oxen. They continued in business in Virginia City until 1866, when Mr. Schwab came to Helena. He afterward had a store at Elk Creek and one at Beartown, and from the latter place returned to Helena where he has since remained.

In his various business operations in Helena, Mr. Schwab has been in partnership with his brother-in-law, Mr. Zimmerman. They purchased a frame building on Main street, called the Walla Walla, and did business in it until it was swept away by the great fire. While they lost heavily, they were not disheartened by their reverses. They rented the St. Louis and in a few days were doing a prosperous business. In 1880 they built the Cosmopolitan hotel, a handsome brick block, four stories and basement, containing eighty rooms, and upon its completion rented it to John Ming. After a time Messrs. Schwab and Zimmerman took charge of the establishment, and conducted it successfully until July, 1891, at which time they leased it to H. C. Burgeart, the present genial landlord. This hotel is in a fine location and is run on both to the Northern Pacific depot, where a special engine was in waiting to convey him across the Montana line into Idaho. Before the Republicans were apprised of this movement the special, traveling at a high rate of speed and having the right of way by special arrangement, had passed the limits of the State and Senator Becker was safe in Idaho, out of reach of his senatorial coadjutors, who vainly awaited the redemption of his word of honor on Monday morning.

This cowardly and disgraceful incident, planned and executed by the Democratic leaders, effectually stopped any further attempts at legislation during the session. Thus the new State was not only deprived of appropriations essential to its maintenance, but laws necessary for its well being were throttled upon the threshold of their passage.

The senate adjourned February 20, 1890, by limitation of law, passing the following resolution in its closing hours :

Be it resolved, By the senate, as expressive of the views of every senator who was present at the opening, and is now present at the close of the first session of the senate of the State of Montana, that our presiding officer, Lieutenant-Governor J. E. Rickards, merits and receives our fullest and warmest thanks for his untiring devotion to his official duties. Often under the most perplexing and exasperating circumstances, with courage and patience ready for any emergency and equal to any demand, he has been uniformly courteous, considerate and dignified. None ever tried more faithfully to do his duty and forward the business which the people expected at the hands of their representatives. If we have failed it is not the fault of our presiding officer.

IN THE UNITED STATES SENATE.

Preparations were made by Sanders and Power, on the one hand, and Clark and Maginnis, on the other hand, to contest for seats in the United States senate. The two latter contestants had been named as the choice of a caucus of Democrats, comprising the Democratic members of the State senate and house of representatives and the five claimants from Silver Bow county. All the data deemed essential was compiled in pamphlet form by each party to the senatorial contest and submitted to the committee on privileges and elections of that body. The contest was made in the first session of the Fifty-first Congress, the report of the committee being made thereon under date of March 24, 1890. The report of the commit-the American and European plans. Since leasing it Mr. Schwab and his partner have given their attention to mining and other interests, having invested largely in both gold and silver mines. Mr. Schwab had some experience in the mines at Virginia City at an early day, and has ever since been more or less interested in both quartz and placer mining.

During his long residence in Helena, Mr. Schwab has done his part toward bringing about the present development of the city. He is a member of the Board of Trade; fraternally, is a Blue Lodge, Commandery and Council Mason; politically, has been a Republican ever since the war.

May 1, 1878, he was married, at Detroit, Michigan, to Miss Thekla Feigenbaum, a native of Germany; but their happy married life was of brief duration. Mrs. Schwab died May 12, 1879, leaving an infant son, Levi. Mr. Schwab has since remained single, and now has rooms in the Cosmopolitan hotel.

CLATON RAMSDELL, a Montana pioneer of 1863 and a prominent mining-man and farmer of Deer Lodge county, has resided on his farm five miles north of Deer Lodge since 1869.

Mr. Ramsdell was born in Quincy, Illinois, June 20, 1853, son of Joseph Ramsdell, further mention of whom will be found elsewhere in this work. Claton is the older of the two children comprising his father's family, his sister being now the wife of James Talbott, of Butte City, Montana. At the time the Ramsdell family came to Montana the subject of our sketch was a lad of ten years. His first home here was at Alder Gulch, and his education was received in Deer Lodge county. He began prospecting and mining when he was only fourteen years of age and he was with his father in most of their many enterprises. He has been a discoverer of numerous valuable mines, among them being the Alice, Great Republic, Flag, and the Joseph, and he was part owner of the Orphan Boy and the Ramsdell Parrot, all of which tee embraces 172 pages, covering the ground thoroughly in detail. While the merits of the precinct controversy were fully entered into in this report, and the attitude of the Republican party sustained, the committee maintained as a legal proposition that the State canvassing board, and not the county clerk, was authorized to issue certificates of election to representatives, giving its unqualified approval of the position taken by the Supreme Court of Montana in the determination of a like question in the Thompson case heretofore referred to.

Under the findings of the committee on privileges and elections Sanders and Power were given seats in the Senate of the United States to represent the State of Montana in that body. In determining by lot who should be entitled to the long term and who the short, Power drew the long term, which expires March 4, 1895, and Sanders the short term, ending March 4, 1893.

SECOND LEGISLATIVE SESSION.

The elections of 1890 resulted disastrously to the Republican party in all sections of the Union, Montana not being exempt from the general landslide, although the percentage of Democratic gain in this State was not equal to that in other States. The Democratic claim that the Republican party suffered from the course it had pursued relative to the Precinct 34 matter had no basis in fact. The general election in the State embraced only the election of a congressman, Thomas H. Carter being the Republican nominee and W. W. Dixon the Democratic nominee. The issues of the election were chiefly of a national character, and as neither Carter nor Dixon had in any way been associated with the precinct troubles, that question had no bearing upon the results of the campaign. A bitter warfare was made on Carter on the grounds that he had at a critical time in the house of representatives betrayed the interests of silver. Constant asseverations of this character, added to the powerful effort made in Dixon's behalf by his personal friend and political chaperone, Marcus Daly, brought about the defeat of Carter. The Democrats had an initial advantage over the Republicans in the senatorial elections of this year, and by extraordinary exertions, and the expenditure of large sums of money, succeeded in securing a majority in the Sate senate, that body compris-have been paying mines. The Alice sold for $12,000. Others sold for more, and the Davis estate now owns a number of these mines. The home farm, which Mr. Ramsdell owns and occupies, comprises 600 acres. Here he carries on farming and stock-raising extensively, being largely interested in raising fine cattle and thoroughbred horses. He also raises race horses, is a lover of the turf, and on many occasions his steeds have won the prize.

Mr. Ramsdell was married November 26, 1882, to Miss Julia M. Sconton, a native of Ohio. Fraternally, he is identified with the K. of P. and the A. O. U. W. He is independent in his political views and votes for men and measures rather than party.

JAMES A. HENDRICKS, one of the honored and respected early settlers of Marysville, was born in Kentucky, May 14, 1833. His grandfather, Peter Hendricks, came from Germany to America when a boy, locating in one of the Carolinas. He was a farmer by occupation, became one of the pioneer settlers of Kentucky, and lived to the age of seventy years. His family consisted of two sons and three daughters. One son, James Hendricks, the father of our subject, was born in one of the Carolinas in 1799. He married Miss Sarah Land, also a native of the South, and they made their home in Kentucky, where their six children were born and raised. Only three are now living.

James A. Hendricks, the youngest child in order of birth in the above family, was eight years of age when the family moved to Missouri. He continued to reside in that State until eighteen years of age, and then, in 1852, crossed the plains with ox teams to California. It was the year in which cholera made such ravages among the emigrants, and many new-made graves met the gaze of the weary traveler as he pressed forward to the land of gold, but to many of them a land which they never reached, and from which many others never returned. Mr. Hendricks reached California October 14, and went direct to the gold diggings on the South Yuba river; also mined on Washington creek. He found rich diggings ing ten Democrats and six Republicans. No further fears of a lack of quorum were entertained.

The members of the house of representatives met in two bodies, as at previous sessions, and effected independent organizations. Governor Toole promptly recognized the Democratic house, which was likewise recognized by the senate. The senate and Democratic house met in joint session and listened to the reading of the governor's annual message. But while the two houses of representatives had changed their relations to the State senate, legislation under the new order of things was impossible by reason of a lack of quorum in the Democratic house and the certainty that the Supreme Court, having already determined the status of the Republican house of representatives, as a legal body would not sustain the validity of a law passed by an illegal body. The Democratic house could have no standing in a legal sense, and the partisan action of a Democratic senate and a Democratic governor could not enable it to acquire the dignity of a law-making power. Therefore the dead-lock was continued.

Under such conditions, and with no senatorial ambitions to intervene, talk of a compromise began early in the session and was freely indulged by both Republicans and Democrats, until finally that desideratum so essential to the welfare of the State was realized. Conservative men in both parties more interested in securing legislation to relieve the pressing necessities of the State than in party advantages or the conservation of political pride, made every effort to devise equable plans for breaking the dead-lock. A point had been reached in the history of the new State when the pressing obligations of Statehood must be respected or lasting injury inflicted upon the commonwealth.

Caucuses were held and committees appointed by both houses with a view to effecting a compromise, and plans and suggestions innumerable emanated from both parties. It became clear, however, that party pride and prejudice and the subtlety of leadership were almost insurmountable barriers to the attainment of an end so earnestly desired by the people. When it became evident that the State was bordering on a condition of anarchy, and that the bitter prejudices that inspired the Democratic leadership would hesitate at no extreme, the Republican house made a formal offer to the effect that all the Democrats and all the Republicans and often made as high as $50 a day, but later worked in poorer places, where he lost a part of his savings. After spending four years in the placer mines he engaged in the butcher business in Washington, Nevada county, where he made money rapidly. Three years later he returned to Missouri with a fair supply of the gold for which he had risked so much, and at Stony Point, that State, conducted a store until the great Civil war burst upon the country. From that cause he lost both his goods and money.

Mr. Hendricks sympathized with the South, and enlisted in the Confederate army under Quantrell. Their operations were principally from Missouri to Texas. He was in many skirmishes and hard-fought battles, suffered many hardships, was slightly wounded three times, and at the battle of Prairie Grove was wounded in the leg and had his horse killed under him. He enlisted as a private, but by meritorious conduct was promoted at different times, and at the close of the struggle was First Lieutenant of Shelby's brigade. In 1864 Mr. Hendricks and two companions received a furlough and returned home, and all were married and returned to Texas with their wives on horseback.

Our subject's marriage occurred October 11, 1864, to Miss Ellen Gregg, a native of Missouri, and her brother was one of the soldiers married at that time. Mrs. Hendricks was with her husband in Texas when the war closed, and in July, 1866, they returned to Missouri. Our subject was then engaged in farming and raising mules for four years, then crossed the plains with a drove of cattle to Golden City, Colorado, sold his stock and returned to Missouri. In 1883 he came to Marysville, built the residence where he still resides, was engaged in freighting from Helena to Marysville until the railroad was built, and since that time has been practically retired from business life. He has held the office of Constable for a number of years, and also served as Sheriff. Mr. Hendricks has lived a life of varied and eventful experiwhose seats in the house of representatives were undisputed meet together in joint conference and devise a plan of compromise, leaving out of this conference the five Democrats and the five Republicans whose seats were in dispute. To this the Democrats would not agree.

Finally, Senator Goddard (Republican) and Senator Thornton (Democrat), both representative party men, zealous workers for the welfare of their respective organizations, yet able and distinguished citizens, were mutually agreed upon as a senate committee to devise a basis of agreement between the two houses of representatives. The plan outlined by those gentlemen was fully debated in each house, modified in some respects and finally adopted as follows: Three of the Republicans and two of the Democrats whose seats had been disputed were to be seated as members of the house of representatives, and the Democrats were to name the officers of that body. This compromise involved the surrender of party pride on both sides, but was in response to a demand that towered above all party considerations. Although the legality of the Republican house had been fully established by the court of last resort and the senate of the United States, it assented to the retirement of two of its members and the surrender of the organization of the house in patriotic response to the necessities of Statehood which could be met only by the prompt enactment of much needed laws.

At high noon, January 28, 1891, the two houses met together on the basis of the compromise that had been agreed to and the deadlock was broken. It was an event in the history of the State that ranked second in importance only to the 8th day of November, 1889, when, by virtue of a proclamation by President Harrison, Montana was admitted into the sisterhood of States.

ELECTION OF 1892.

In the election of 1892 the Republicans were victorious in Montana all along the line, sweeping the State with their electoral ticket, electing a representative in Congress and suffering the defeat of but one man on their State ticket. In this election it was clearly demonstrated that the Republican party had been greatly strengthened by its attitude in the Precinct 34 contro-ences, is now in the sixtieth year of his age, but is still hale and hearty, and is considered one of Marysville's most honorable and reliable citizens.

Mr. and Mrs. Hendricks have had the following children: Lydia G., wife of J. M. Halterman, of Marysville; Riley E., engaged in the milling business in Utah; Clarence E., a business man of this city; and Charles J., Arthur J., Harry C., Carrie E. and Bessie, at home.

HENRY DUNSCHEN, a successful farmer of the Bitter Root valley, was born in Germany, June 11, 1827. In 1854 he left his native land for America, and for the following ten years was engaged in farming in Illinois. He then made the long and hazardous journey with horses and mules across the plains to Montana, where he followed mining at Alder Gulch about one year, and then, in 1865, secured 240 acres of Government land at his present location in Bitter Root valley. He built a small cabin and began the improvement of his place, which he has since converted into one of the finest farms in the family. He has now a good bearing orchard, a comfortable dwelling, where once stood his little cabin, and has made many other improvements.

In 1871 Mr. Dunschen was united in marriage with Mrs. Mary Ford. By her former marriage Mrs. Dunschen had one daughter, now Mrs. Andrew Logan. Our subject and wife are members of the Catholic Church. The former has been a life-long Democrat, has always taken a deep interest in the welfare of his county, and is well and favorably known by many of the early settlers of Montana.

JOHN MURRAY, County Commissioner of Jefferson county, was born in county Tipperary, Ireland, June 6, 1843, a son of Bartholomew and Emma (Bowen) Murray, natives also of that country. The parents were married in their native land, where seven children were born to them. In 1846 the father and eldest son came to America, locating in Fulton county, Illinois, where they were joined in the following year by the remainder of the family, and there the eighth child was born. They resided on the farm a number of years, but their death occurred at Macomb McDonough county,—the father in 1886, and the mother in 1889. Of their eight children, two sons and four daughters are still living.

versy and the legislative dead-lock. Wm. E. Hall, a leading member of the Silver Bow canvassing board, and chiefly responsible for the rejection of the alleged returns from Precinct 34, was nominated and elected as a Harrison elector, while Lieutenant Governor John E. Rickards, who presided over the State senate during the dead-lock and thwarted the Democratic conspiracy to secure two United States senators, was nominated and elected governor of the State of Montana by a splendid majority. The entire State ticket was elected with the exception of Henry N. Blake, nominee for chief justice, whose defeat was brought about by a combination of the Democratic and Populist parties, which united on Judge Pemberton for that position. For Congress Charles S. Hartman (Republican) defeated W. W. Dixon (Democrat).

THIRD LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.

Upon the legislative assembly convening in January, 1893, devolved the duty of electing a United States senator to succeed Wilbur F. Sanders, whose term expired March 4, 1893. There was but one contested seat in the assembly. The claim was made by the Democrats that E. E. Leech, member of the house from Choteau county, was elected by illegal votes cast at a certain precinct in that county, whereupon his Democratic competitor, A. B. Hamilton, appeared as claimant to the seat. When it became the duty of the State auditor to administer the oath of office to the members of the house Mr. Hamilton stood up to be sworn in. The auditor, Mr. A. B. Cook, refused to administer the oath collectively, but upon roll call, the result being that Mr. Leech, the duly accredited representative from Chocteau county, was sworn in and sook his seat. Having failed to secure the seat through a technical maneuver, Mr. Hamilton made no effort to lay his case before the house on its merits, and the contest ended practically with a confession that it was not made in good faith or with a view of pushing it to a conclusion upon the facts. The incident excited little interest in either party, and Mr. Leech's title to his seat was never seriously questioned.

The House of Representatives comprised fifty-five members, of whom twenty-six were Democrats, twenty-six Republicans and three were Populists. One of the Populist members, John Murray, the fifth child in order of birth, crossed the ocean to America at the age of five years, was raised on the farm in Illinois and attended the public schools during the winter months. In 1865, filled with the spirit of adventure, he crossed the plains to Montana with a freight train, under the direction of Captain Nasby. They had a large train of oxen, and there were twenty-seven men in this particular outfit, but they were joined by several other trains in crossing the Indian country. At Polo Creek, one of the tributaries of the Platte, they were attacked by Indians, who captured one of their wagons, wounded an ox through the neck, but the emigrants then succeeded in driving them off without further loss. After arriving at Virginia City, Mr. Murray engaged in mining, but, meeting with poor success there, two weeks later he went to Warm Spring creek, and after spending one month there went to Confederate Gulch, where he found all the claims taken. In the early spring he engaged in prospecting at New York Gulch, where he worked the first successful drain, and during the two years spent at that place took out about $15,000. They then supposed the mine was nearly exhausted, but it has yielded an abundance of gold since. Mr. Murray next followed mining and merchandising at Indian Creek, in St. Louis, and three years afterward returned to Warm Spring District, where he has ever since remained. In 1884 he became interested in mining with Governor Hauser and A. M. Holter, of Helena, and they have bought the entire district, consisting of about 600 acres. They work from sixteen to twenty-two miles, and during the past ten years have taken out $125,000 in gold. They expended $30,000 in putting in the Beaver Creek ditch, and $10,000 in building the Indian Creek ditch. It is now one of the most valuable properties in the State. Mr. Murray is also interested in quartz mining, his principal mine being the Iron Mask, from which they have shipped large quantities of ore, and ten car loads lately shipped by them netted from $300 to $889 a car. They have developed the mine to a drift of 335 feet In addition to his mining interests, our subject owns 349 acres of land in the Missouri valley, where he now resides.

Daniel W. Beecher, of Cascade, posed as the product of a combination between the Democrats and Populists. This was urged in justification of his early desertion of the Populist triumvirate and strict adhesion to Democratic interests throughout the great senatorial fight of that session. The State senate stood, Democrats nine, Republicans seven. Thus, with the aid and co-operation of Beecher, the Democrats had a clear majority of three votes on joint ballot, and were able to name not only the successor to Senator Sanders but absolutely control legislation as well.

In their senatorial caucus the Republicans named Senator Sanders as their choice for senator, the Democrats named W. A. Clark, and the Populists named Samuel Mulville. Ten Democrats, however, under the influence of Marcus Daly, who had again undertaken to defeat and humiliate his old-time enemy, as in the Clark-Carter Congressional campaign, refused to enter the Democratic senatorial caucus or be a party to its action. These ten Democrats resolutely refused to vote for Clark, the choice of the party caucus, when by so doing they would have made his election possible any day during the session. Mulville was soon dropped, two of the Populists aligning themselves with the Daly forces, the other (Beecher) swinging in line for Clark. With twelve members of the joint session voting steadfastly for W. W. Dixon, the candidate of Marcus Daly, the election of Clark with Democratic votes became an impossibility. The Republicans were not strong enough numerically to elect their candidate, while the split in the Democratic party prevented their political opponents from scoring a victory. This condition of affairs prevailed throughout the entire session. Clark remained the caucus nominee of his party during the session, but the Republicans decided to drop Sanders, when it became evident that his election was impossible, and in a caucus called to consider the senatorial question it was, after due deliberation, determined to substitute the name of Lee Mantle as the choice of the Republican party for senatorial honors. This was accordingly done, but did not result in the acquisition of new votes. On the contrary, the total Republican vote could not be held to Mantle as it had been to Sanders. Mr. Mantle, however, remained the official choice of his party until the final ballot in joint session was taken.

In November, 1876, he was united in marriage with Miss Annie Sullivan. They have seven children, all born in Montana, namely, Mary, Regina, Maud, Bertha, Silvian, Lessie and ———. In political matters, Mr. Murray has been a life-long Democrat, and in 1889 was the choice of his party for County Commissioner, in which he is now serving his fourth year.

JUDGE ORREN EMERSON, County Treasurer of Deer Lodge county, dates his arrival in Montana in June, 1865, and for nearly three decades has been identified with its interests.

He is a native of the State of Maine, born June 21, 1831, a descendant of English ancestry. Daniel Emerson, his grandfather, emigrated from England to this country at an early day and settled in Maine, where the Judge's father, Samuel Emerson, was born in 1789. Samuel Emerson married Fanny Parlan, also a native of Maine, and they reared their family and spent their lives in that State. Eight of their ten children are still living, Orren being their third-born. The father died in 1849, at the age of sixty years, and the mother passed away in 1875, at the age of seventy. Both were members of the Methodist Episcopal Church and led consistent lives, honored and respected by all who knew them.

Judge Emerson grew up on his father's farm, in Maine, and received his early education in the common schools, attending school during the winter only. When he reached his majority he started out in life for himself. For two years he was employed in sawmill work in the State of New York. Then, in 1854, he went to California, making the journey by way of the Isthmus of Panama, and for eight years thereafter followed the fortunes of a miner in the Golden State. Next we find him in Boise City, Idaho, where he remained two years, mining and also doing a blacksmith business, having a partner in the latter.

In 1865, as already stated, the subject of our sketch arrived in Montana. He brought with him a blacksmith

When it became evident that Clark could not control enough Democratic votes to insure his election, and that the session was likely to terminate without the selection of a senator, the friends of the Democratic nominee put forth the most extraordinary efforts to secure a decisive vote in his favor.

At noon upon the last day of the session the house and senate met as usual to ballot in joint session for a senator, meeting in the auditorium, which was crowded with spectators who came to witness the last and most exciting chapter of the great political drama. A ballot was taken; the six Republicans voted for Clark, creating a tremendous sensation. But this acquisition of strength by the Clark men was not sufficient to elect. Three more Republican votes were needed to insure the success of Clark, and it is by some believed that a second ballot would have given him that additional number. This belief, however, has never been confirmed and cannot be treated with historical accuracy, for the second ballot was not taken; and if any other Republican contemplated voting for Clark he had no opportunity of doing so and has never confessed his purpose.

As soon as the result of the ballot was announced, Senator Matts, as spokesman for the Daly wing of the Democratic membership, made a speech in advocacy of adjourning the joint session sine die. Upon this proposition the Republican members united with the Daly men and the motion to adjourn carried, thus ending the prolonged controversy without the election of a senator to succeed Wilbur F. Sanders.

SENATORIAL VACANCY.

Two days after the adjournment of the legislative assembly the term of Senator Sanders expired, throwing upon Governor Rickards the responsibility of appointing an ad-interim senator. In deference to the will of the Republican party, expressed in the final action of the Republican members of the legislative assembly in senatorial caucus, and in response to letters and petitions of similar import from prominent Republicans in all quarters of the State, Governor Rickards appointed Lee Mantle a senator to fill the vacancy caused by the failure of the legislative assembly to name a successor to Senator Sanders.

Upon technical grounds which reversed the outfit, came by way of Walla Walla, and first located at Elk Creek and later at Blackfoot City, carrying on the blacksmith business at both places. In those days he received good prices for his work. For making a miner's pick he got $16, and for shoeing a horse, $12. From Blackfoot City he removed his business in 1867 to Philipsburg, where he purchased property and built both a residence and shop, and where he met with great prosperity. He was also engaged in quartz mining successfully for a number of years, and while there was one of the discoverers of the Speckled Trout mine and of the Poor Man, and he owned an interest in the Princetown. He parted with his interest in these mines for a few thousand dollars, and they afterward yielded large dividends.

In 1870 Mr. Emerson came to Deer Lodge. Here he soon afterward engaged in business, which he successfully carried on for a number of years. On one occasion while prospecting in the mountains he had the misfortune to lose his right arm, the result of an accidental discharge from his rifle. Finding himself thus disabled he turned his attention to the study of law, and in 1880 was admitted to the bar. About that time he was elected Probate Judge of the county, in which capacity he served efficiently for six consecutive terms of two years each, and in 1892 he was elected to his present office, that of County Treasurer. He has all his life been a stanch Republican, and his election to official position has been a fitting recognition of his worth and ability. His whole public career has been characterized by the strictest fidelity.

Judge Emerson was married some years ago to Miss Elizabeth Vestal, a native of Iowa and a daughter of Taylor Hughes. Esq., of that State.

DENIS HAMEL, a prominent farmer residing on the Mullan Road, a short distance west of Frenchtown, was born in Quebec, Canada, in 1837, and is of French descent. He was raised in his native city, and is a self-educated man. In 1856 he came to St. Paul, Minnesota, where he remained two years; spent six months in Tennessee; was afterward employed by the American Fur Company in St. Louis; came up the Missouri river to precedents that had been established by the senate of the United States, Mr. Mantle was denied a seat in that body. Two causes operated to bring about his rejection. First, his pronounced views in favor of the free coinage of silver, which were distasteful to the reigning influences in the senate; and, secondly, to the belief entertained by some of the Democratic members of that body that his rejection would impel the governor of Montana to reconvene the legislative assembly of this State to elect a senator and that such action would eventuate in the selection of a Democrat who would strengthen the party in the forthcoming contest on the tariff.

The rejection of Mantle was followed by a strong effort on the part of Democratic leaders to induce the governor to convene the legislative assembly in extraordinary session. The Clark forces were abnormally active in this direction, and every possible argument and effort was brought to bear to this end. Responsive to the best public sentiment in the State, and with a clear comprehension of the best interests of the commonwealth, Governor Rickards refused to convene the legislature. The wisdom of the course pursued by the executive became apparent when events demonstrated later on that another senator from Montana would have added nothing to the final determination of the silver question, while involving a great expense for an extra session which the condition of the State treasury did not warrant.

The legislative assembly which convenes in January, 1895, will be delegated with the responsibility of electing two United States senators,—one to fill the existing vacancy and one to succeed Senator Power. An entire new house of representatives will be chosen at the fall election in 1894, and thirteen State senators out of a total of twenty-one will be elected, by reason of the creation of five new counties by the Third Legislative Assembly. A representative in Congress and one member of the supreme court will also be elected. The contest will be a triangular one between the Republican, Democratic and Populist parties.

Montana; during the first winter in this State worked at Fort Benton; worked on a farm one year in Walla Walla; followed mining at the Oro Fino mines in Idaho; six months afterward returned to Walla Walla; in the following spring went to Boise Basin, and while at the latter place, with three others, often took out from $300 to $400 a day. Mr. Hamel was afterward engaged in freighting from Walla Walla to Boise Basin and other places, for which he received twenty five cents per pound. When gold was discovered in Cedar creek, he went to that place, but met with poor success. He next mined at Boise Basin for wages, and in 1876 located on 120 acres of his present farm, three miles west of Frenchtown. Mr. Hamel has since added to his original purchase until he now owns 260 acres of fine farming land, where, in addition to general farming, he is engaged in stock-raising, for which he has a large free range.

In 1874 our subject was united in marriage with Miss Emily Courtwell, who was born in this State, a daughter of one of Montana's earliest pioneers. By this union have been born three children,—Clara, who resides with her father; and Florence and Napoleon, deceased, the former dying at the age of nine years, and the latter at seven years. The wife and mother departed this life January 24, 1881, and her loss proved a severe one to her husband and daughter. Mr. Hamel is a respected, industrious and intelligent farmer, has always been identified with the Democratic party, and both he and his daughter are members of the Catholic Church.

EDMOND LACHAPELLE, one of the successful farmers of Prickly Pear valley, settled on his farm in said valley in the year 1870, and as one of its representative citizens is entitled to mention here.

Mr. Lachapelle, as his name indicates, is of French ancestry. His people were early settlers of Canada. His father, Nelson Lachapelle, was born near the city of Montreal, and spent his whole life on the farm on which he was born, this farm having long since become a part of that great city. He lived to be eighty years of age, and his widow still survives, being now in her seventy-seventh year. They had a family of nine children, six of whom are still living, Edmond being the youngest child.

Edmond Lachapelle was born at Montreal, October 15, 1840. He remained on the farm with his parents until he reached manhood, and for five years was engaged in farming on his own account in Canada. He was married there in 1864 to Miss Mary Chonet, also a native of Canada and of French ancestry. Three children were born to them in Canada,—Edmond, Hennick and Harter.

CHAPTER XXXII.

HISTORY OF THE DEMOCRATIC PARTY IN MONTANA.

BY SAMUEL WORD, ESQ.

THAT portion of the Northwest embraced within the limits of Montana was a part of the Louisiana Purchase, ceded by Napoleon the First to the United States in 1803, during the administration of President Jefferson. No attempt was made to give local government to any portion of the present limits of Montana until March 3, 1863, when Congress passed an act organizing the Territory of Idaho, which embraced within its limits all of the country known as the State of Idaho and a large portion of what is now known as Montana. Soon after the passage of the organic act of Idaho, the president appointed Sidney Edgerton an associate justice for that Territory. In the summer of 1863 he came with his nephew, W. F. Sanders, and stopped at Bannack in Beaver Head county in this State, which was then a lively placer-mining camp. Until gold was discovered in Alder gulch Bannack was the most populous section of the country. In the winter of 1864, Judge Edgerton went to Washington, and, with others favoring the division of Idaho, secured the passage by Congress of the act organizing the Territory of Montana, embracing the limits of country now known as the State of Montana. The president appointed Judge Edgerton Governor of the new Territory, and he returned to Bannack soon after the passage of the act and entered upon his duties.

The organic act authorized the governor to cause a census of voters to be taken, also to divide the Territory into Council and Legislative districts, and apportion the qualified voters as nearly equally as practicable among the several districts. After the census was taken in the summer of 1864, the governor made his proclamation apportioning the Territory, naming the legislative and council districts, and designating the offices to be filled at the general election in September, 1864. Madison county was then the most populous county in the Territory, and was required to return to the legislature more members than any other section. Among other things provided for in the governor's appointment was that all portions of the Territory not Believing that there were better opportunities for a man to attain success in the United States than in his native land, Mr. Lachapelle came to Montana, making the journey alone in order to prospect and see the country before bringing his family hither. He came up the Missouri river, went to Holmes Gulch, near Helena, and engaged in placer-mining. Here he met with fair success. He and three others in a single day got out no less than $250 from the mines. In 1875, having accumulated a nice little sum, he returned for his family, sold his property in Canada, and came back with his wife and children to Montana, this time making the journey by rail. He continued his mining operations until 1878, when the mines gave out. About this time he met with a good opportunity to invest in a farm, which he did, purchasing 160 acres of land, with improvements and stock, including cows and horses, for the sum of $2,800 in cash. To this property he moved, and on it he has since been engaged in the dairy business. At present he milks forty-five cows and finds a ready market for his milk and cream in Helena, the city being only four miles distant from his ranch. Prosperity has attended his efforts here. He has built a good brick residence on his farm, and has from time to time purchased additional farms until he now has 1,500 acres in the Flat Creek country, on which are no less than 6,000 sheep. His two eldest sons have mentioned as being in any legislative or council district named by him were "attached to Madison county for election purposes."

The date fixed for the first election was September, 1864, for the election of a member of Congress for the short session, for members of the legislature and district and county officers. The country was sparsely populated by people from all parts of the Union, from Maine to California, from the South and from the North, who were attracted hither by the desire to better their fortunes in the golden placers of this region, which had become famous throughout the country. Many came from Colorado, California and the Territories west, who were experienced in mining; many from the different States who did not care to enter the armies on either side; some few who had had a taste of war in one army or the other, after the term of their enlistment expired, came here to get away from the confusion and hard times incident to a state of war, and to better their fortunes. They had become generally tired of politics, and seemed contented to be where they could engage in lucrative employment, free from the turmoil and political excitement of communities involved in the rebellion. Without telegraphic or railroad communications with the East or West, twenty to thirty days' time was required, by slow mail service, to get the news from the East. With few exceptions, none cared to talk politics. The acquisition of gold was the prevailing excitement. Neighbors often did not know, nor did they care to know, one another's politics. Realizing their isolated situation in a new country infested with highwaymen and murderers, and liable to depredations of hostile Indians, with no protection from the general Government and little afforded by the law, they were drawn together as a band of brothers in the interest of mutual protection and individual prosperity.

Such was the situation in 1863 and 1864, up to that time, that initiatory steps were taken looking to governmental organization under Montana's organic act. Prior to May, 1864, the laws of Idaho were enforced to a limited extent by officers who had been appointed to their positions by the governor of Idaho, who was a Republican. All such officers were Republicans without a single exception. So little interest, however, was taken in polities at that charge of the sheep business. Four other sons have been born to them in Montana,—Levi, Obert, Docty and Joseph. Their home is within a short distance of the Montana University, and the sons are attending this institution. The farm for which he paid $2,800 is now worth $10,000, the growth of Helena having largely enhanced the value of property adjacent to the city.

Politically, Mr. Lachapelle is a Republican. He is ranked with the early settlers of Montana who have been prospered by coming to the Territory and growing up with the country. During his early career here he worked hard to accumulate property, and now he is able to rest and take life easy.

DAMIEN LEDOUX, a prominent farmer five miles west of Frenchtown, on the Mullan Road, was born at St. Charles, Canada East, February 4, 1826, a son of Peter and Louise (Scenic) Ledoux, of French descent. They had nine children, only two of whom are now living. They were honest, industrious farmers, and both lived to be over seventy years of age.

Damien, our subject, came to the United States when fourteen years of age, and, after spending four years on a farm in Vermont, traveled over the Western States. In 1850 he crossed the plains with ox teams to California, and in 1854 went from Sacramento to Oregon, where he followed farming and sawmilling. He was also one of the discoverers of gold at Fraser river. At that time the Indians were very troublesome there, and Mr. Ledoux was several times shot at, but was never wounded. From Oregon he went to Washington, having been obliged to ferry across the Columbia river; afterward went to Idaho, and then located on 160 acres of land six miles west of Missoula. Five years later he sold his land and moved to the latter city, where he was engaged in tanning until 1884, and since that time has resided on 160 acres of land west of Frenchtown, Missoula county. He has built a good residence on his land, and made many other improvements. At one time Mr. Ledoux harvested 640 bushels of oats from fourteen bushels sown.

In February, 1865, he was united in marriage with time that no attention was paid to it. These officers continued in the discharge of their duties until governmental machinery was put in motion under a new organic act.

After the governor's proclamation calling an election in September, 1864, the people commenced to look around for candidates to fill the several offices. The Republicans got together and named W. F. Sanders as their candidate for Congress, and also named candidates for the legislative and for district and county offices. The Democrats held informal gatherings in the different mining camps and named delegates to a convention to nominate a candidate for Congress. They also got together in county conventions and named candidates for the legislature and district and county offices. At the first Territorial Democratic convention Samuel McLean was named as the candidate of the Democracy to oppose the Republican nominee for the short session in Congress. Up to this time neither party had an approximate idea of its numerical strength.

The campaign opened. Political meetings were held by both parties in all the settled portions of the Territory, and in a short time political excitement ran high, intensified by the peculiar campaign waged by the Republican leaders. Men who were not Republicans were called rebels, copperheads, traitors to their country. As a mass they were designated as the left wing of Price's army. This did not set well with those who were from the loyal States, some of whom had served a period in the Federal army, but did not and would not identify themselves with the Republican party. Threats were thrown out by some of the Republican leaders designed to intimidate voters. This mistaken policy was carried to such an extent that Governor Edgerton was induced to go to Virginia City, where the mass of voters were, and make a speech a few days before the election. He did not discuss political issues, but dwelt in language strong and bitter upon what he called the disloyalty of his audience, and the disloyal demonstrations they had been making, threatening them with the power of the government, with arrest and punishment. This attempt at intimidation failed of its purpose. The opposition to the Republican party resented the intimation of his excellency that their enthusiasm for their candidates, and their

Miss Louise Dainsoro, a native of Canada East, who came to Montana in 1862. They have had eight children, namely: Damien, who died at the age of seventeen years, from the effects of being kicked by a mule; Sarah, wife of Absalom Tumprie, and they have one child; Charles, Mary, Demris, George, Albert and Lawrence. The family are members of the Catholic Church. Mr. Ledoux sympathizes with the Democratic party.

JEAN BAPTISTE ROUILLIER, a well-known farmer of Grass valley, was born near St. John's, Canada, June 3, 1829. He was raised on a farm until eighteen years of age, after which he went to Boston, and a short time afterward returned to his home.

He next sailed around Cape Horn to California, consuming five months and seventeen days in the journey, and during the first winter in that State followed mining at Frenchtown. In the following spring he went to Scott's river, then followed mining at the old town of Shasta until 1859, and in that year, on account of ill health, returned to Canada. Eighteen months afterward Mr. Rouillier went again to Shasta; next removed to the Humboldt mountains, and for the following three years was engaged in prospecting, in which he lost all his former earnings. After spending another year at Shasta, our subject went to the Big Bend of the Columbia river in Oregon, prospected over that entire country; spent the winter in Walla Walla, and in the spring resumed prospecting, but without success. In 1868 he came to French town, Missoula county, Montana, and, meeting with old neighbors, decided to locate at this place. In the following spring Mr. Rouillier purchased a ranch at Lincoln Gulch, where he also conducted a livery stable and had charge of the miners' horses. He spent the winter in Frenchtown; next resumed ranching at Lincoln Gulch, and in the following fall, gold having been discovered at Cedar creek, he followed mining at that place, but with poor success.

Several years afterward, by the death of his father, he acquired property in Canada, and returned to that country. While there he was married, and together they re-opposition to his nephew for Congress, were demonstrations of disloyalty to the Government. It had the effect to intensify the excitement and solidify the opposition to Mr. Sanders, so much so that at the election following a few days later, Colonel McLean was elected to Congress by a large majority over his opponent. The entire Democratic ticket in Madison county was elected by a large majority.

The election over, political excitement gave way to the universal desire for gold buried in our placers. Colonel McLean waited patiently for his certificate of election. It was withheld from him and from those who were elected to the legislature in Madison county so long that it excited comment. Finally it was rumored that the returning board was awaiting the returns from outside precincts that had been "attached to Madison county for election purposes." In that connection it was stated that there was a large vote of from 2,000 to 2,500 soldiers stationed at Fort Union, which was said to be near the extreme eastern limits of the Territory. These returns not appearing within the time limited by law, a messenger was dispatched for them. In this case two men, who are now well known residents of Montana, went on this mission. Their route was by way of Fort Benton. They went accredited to a prominent business man, then located at Fort Benton, for whatever assistance he could give them in their journey to and from Fort Union. The proposed route from Fort Benton to Fort Union was considered more or less dangerous, being infested with thieving and often hostile bands of Indians. These messengers went into permanent camp a short distance below Benton and awaited the return of a sub-messenger dispatched by them to Fort Union. He failed to reach Fort Union and returned to Benton. The two messengers then returned to Virginia City, and it soon became known that the vote from Fort Union had reached the returning board, and that there were over 2,000 votes from there that had been cast for the Republican candidate for Congress and the Republican candidate for the legislature in Madison county.

This vote changed the result and would send Mr. Sanders to Congress if counted. It was transmitted to Governor Edgerton, who resided in Bannack City, the then temporary capital of the Territory. The organic act gave full power turned to Grass valley, spending the first two years with his former partner. In 1881 Mr. Rouillier located on 160 acres of his present farm, to which he has since added until he now owns 320 acres of the best land in the county, where he is engaged in general farming and stock-raising.

March 14, 1879, our subject was united in marriage with Miss Ada Louise Paradis, a native of Canada. They had five children,—Mary, Ada, Louise, Henry and Harry. The wife and mother died March 19, 1890, and her loss has been deeply felt by the husband and children. Mr. Rouillier has been a life-long Democrat, has served as a member of the School Board in his district, and has taken an active interest in all educational work. The family are members of the Catholic Church.

HON. JOHN HORSKY, one of Helena's respected pioneer citizens, dates his birth in Bohemia, Austria, May 16, 1838, his parents being natives of Bohemia.

Mr. Horsky was reared and educated in his native land, and in 1855 came to America to make his fortune and establish his home in the land of the free. He first worked for wages as a farm hand in Iowa, and later learned the trade of brewer. In 1859 he started to Pike's Peak, but returned to Iowa and remained in that State until 1864, when he and his brother Joel came to Montana, making the journey with oxen. Mr. Horsky at that time was still a single man and in search of a place in which he could better his condition. He and his brother arrived in Virginia City on the 31st of August, and all the following fall and winter they were engaged in mining, making, however, no more than good wages. In the spring of 1865 he came to Helena, and in company with George Butz he turned his attention to the brewing business. They built the first brewery in the city, the Helena Brewery. Mr. Horsky continued successfully in the brewing business until 1891, when, having secured a competency, he sold out and retired from active life. During his residence here he has all along been more or less interested in mines and mining, having done much to develop these interests in Montana. He recently built on to the governor in proceeding as follows: "And the first election shall be held at such time and places, and to be conducted in such manner, both as to the persons who shall superintend such election and the returns thereof, as the governor shall appoint and direct." The whole matter was in his hands. The friends of the Republican candidate for Congress announced that he was elected, having received a majority of all the votes cast. Mr. Sanders, while waiting his certificate of election, made some preparations for his departure for Washington. The writer of this has it from N. E. Davis, now a citizen of Madison county, and James Tufts, afterward appointed Secretary of Montana, but now deceased, both of whom were Republican candidates for the legislature in Madison county, that, learning of this Fort Union vote, and believing it to be fraudulent, they repaired to Bannack and told the governor what they believed and protested against being counted into office by a fraudulent vote. It can be appropriately remarked here that both these gentlemen afterward held positions of honor and trust in Montana. Mr. Davis has been several times elected to office in his county by the people, who respect him for his integrity and honor. About the time the governor was visited by Messrs. Tufts and Davis, he was also waited upon by a committee of conservative and law-abiding citizens of Bannack, in company with Colonel McLean himself, and informed of the attempted outrage on the rights of the people, and notified that McLean was legally elected and must have his certificate of election. Suffice it to say that Governor Edgerton, as a wise and good governor should do, at once issued the certificate of election to Colonel McLean, who before the news reached Virginia City was on his way to Washington.

In September, 1865, another Congressional election took place. Colonel McLean was renominated by the Democrats, and Gad E. Upson, who was then an agent of one of the northern tribes of Indians in Montana, was the Republican candidate against him. He was not a strong man, and was badly defeated by McLean. Again the attempt was made to get in that Fort Union vote, but to no purpose. It was soon after ascertained that there was not, and had not been at any time, in 1864 or 1865, more than two or three hundred persons at Fort Union, and most of those were half-breeds, trappers and hunters who knew nothing about

Mr. Horsky was married, in 1869, to Miss Louisa C. Cory, also a native of Bohemia. Three sons have been born to them in Helena, namely: Rudolph, who is attending the Medical College in Philadelphia; Edward, a clerk in the United States Assay office; and John, in a drug store.

In politics, Mr. Horsky has been a Republican all his life. He has served two terms as a member of the City Council, and in 1889 was elected a Representative to the first State Legislature of Montana. In 1892 he was elected one of the County Commissioners. Mr. Horsky is a member of the Masonic fraternity and also of the A. O U. W. He has all his life been an upright, conservative and reliable business man, and he enjoys the good will of his fellow citizens.

DENNIS SHOOLIN, Alderman, representing the first ward in the City Council of Anaconda, is a prosperous contractor and painter. A native of the Emerald Isle, Mr. Shoolin came from the old country to the United States and settled in Pennsylvania in 1862, where he at once began contracting and painting, and where he was successfully engaged in this occupation until 1880. That year he came to Montana and located at Butte. Previous to this, however, he had gone to California and spent nearly four years working at his trade there. In Butte he remained about three years. In 1883, when Anaconda began to build up, he began contracting at this place and that year carried on business at both points at the same time. He permanently located in Anaconda in 1885. Mr. Shoolin is also interested in developing rich mineral property, silver and lead mines, which assay 2,400 ounces to the ton. Ever since he took up his residence here he has been active in political affairs, affiliating with the our elections in Montana; and still later on it was definitely ascertained that Fort Union was not in but was located several miles outside the limits of Montana Territory.

The members of the legislature who were elected in September, 1864, convened at Bannack on December 12, 1864, as directed by the proclamation of the governor, and organized into the First Legislative Assembly. The governor prescribed a certain form of oath which he required members of the legislature to take before he would recognize them as a legislative body. One member, Mr. John H. Rogers, a Democrat, who had been elected to the house from Madison county, could not take the oath prescribed, but offered to take a modified oath, which was not acceptable to his excellency. The house was organized without Mr. Rogers. This gave the Republicans a majority, and Mr. Detwiler, a Republican, was elected speaker, and Mr. Robert Lawrence, a Republican, was elected president of the council. This legislature was Republican. Among the acts passed by this legislature, which was approved by the governor, was an act giving increased compensation to the members and attaches of the legislature and to the governor and justices of the supreme court, which was to be paid out of the Territorial treasury in addition to the compensation given by the United States Government.

One of the duties of this legislature was to pass an apportionment law, apportioning the members of house of representatives and council to the several counties and districts to be created by law. The legislature, late in the session, passed an apportionment law. The governor vetoed it, claiming it was in violation of the organic act. It failed of passage over his veto, and the legislature adjourned without making any apportionment of the Territory. This afterward resulted in much confusion, which the Democratic party rightfully claimed was the fault of a Republican governor and a Republican legislature.

Soon after the general election in September, 1865, Thomas Francis Meagher appeared at Virginia City, having been appointed by the president to the position of secretary of Montana. About the time of his advent into the Territory, Governor Edgerton left Montana and went east, leaving General Meagher acting governor of the Territory. Governor Edgerton did Democratic party. He was first elected to the City Council from the first ward in 1888, and has been continued in the position ever since.

April 25, 1885, the same year Mr. Shoolin located in Anaconda, he married Lucy Mallory, daughter of Phillip Mallory of Indiana. Her mother's maiden name was Amanda Mahoney. Mr. and Mrs. Shoolin have one son, Dr. Edgar B. Shoolin.

Mr. Shoolin is a devout Catholic, having his membership in St. Paul Church, Anaconda. He is also a member of the Ancient Order of Hibernians, of which he is a Trustee.

MERIDITH S. FIFER, of Butte City, came to Montana in 1865, and has seen the wonderful changes in growth and development that have taken place since his advent to this region.

Mr. Fifer was born in the State of Missouri, January 12, 1844. His ancestors came from Germany and settled in Pennsylvania, where his grandfather, John Fifer, was born. He served his country in the war of 1812. He married Miss Trump, and had six children, was a farmer and lived to be eighty-seven years old; his wife died at the age of seventy-eight years. The son, John Fifer, was born in Virginia, in 1812, was married in Ohio to Miss Zelda Jane Smith, and moved to Missouri in 1838, where he was a farmer. In 1850 he made a trip across the plains to California, where he remained three years. Returning to his home he remained there until 1859, and again crossed the plains to the Golden State. Both times he made some money, but the second time he returned with only about $600.

He remained in Missouri until 1865, and, still having a desire to find gold, he came to Montana, bringing with him his family, then consisting of his wife and six children, and making the journey with horse teams. He purchased a farm of 480 acres of land in Deer Lodge valley, twelve miles from Deer Lodge, where he has since resided, meeting with fair success in his undertakings.

His son, Meridith S., the third-born in the family, was sent to private schools and afterward to the public schools not again return to Montana in an official capacity. General Meagher continued to act in the capacity of governor until Governor Edgerton's successor, Green Clay Smith, was appointed and reached the Territory in October, 1866.

General Meagher, soon after entering upon his duties as acting governor, realized the condition the Territory was in by reason of the veto of Governor Edgerton of the apportionment law passed by the first legislature. The Territory was without an apportionment law. While the general election law provided for the election of members of the legislature, there was no law that apportioned its members among the counties and districts, as contemplated by the organic act. The Democrats claimed and urged upon him that the power was inherent in him as acting governor to call the legislature together in extraordinary session by proclamation, to supply this defect in the law. The Republicans contended that he was powerless to act, and that Congress alone could give life to our legislative functions. He hesitated several weeks, and listened to the arguments of both parties, until in February, 1866, he announced his final conclusion that the power rested in the executive branch of the government to convene the legislature together in extra session. Accordingly, in February, 1866, he made his proclamation convening the legislature in extraordinary session on the 5th of March, 1866. For this he incurred the bitter opposition and enmity of the Republican leaders; was denounced by them as an anti-administration man, and a Democrat. His Excellency did not hesitate to say that the chief ground of opposition of the Republicans to the legislative call was the fear that when convened that body would repeal the extra-compensation law passed by a Republican legislature, under which the governor and judges were each drawing from the Territorial treasury $2,500 a year in addition to their salaries from the United States Government. From this time on the Republicans ignored him, and placed him in the ranks of the anti-administration men

The legislature, composed of members recently elected, convened in extra session March 5, 1866, in obedience to the executive proclamation, and soon after passed an apportionment law; and among other acts of legislation of a after they were established. February 19, 1864, he was married to Miss Mary L. Dean, a native of the State of of Virginia and the daughter of George W. Dean, a cousin of Henry Clay Dean and a descendant of one of the old Virginia families. They came to Montana with his father, locating on a ranch of 160 acres of land in Deer Lodge valley adjoining his father's. After residing there five years he located 160 acres near Anaconda, lived there six years, leased his lands and came to Butte in 1876. Here he engaged in teaming, making from $5 to $10 a day. In 1877 he located a mine at Centerville, which he named Old Glory. After prospecting there in order to develop it he sold his interest in it for $1,150. Next he followed gold mining at Bear Gulch, in Deer Lodge county, located leads and built a one-stamp mill with a five-ton capacity. This mine he still owns, and he has prospected since then. He has built a good brick residence in Butte, on the south side of Dakota street, which he now occupies, and he has also another residence in the city.

He is a member of the I. O. O. F., and in his political principles is a Democrat. Personally, he is a quiet, unassuming gentleman, who gives his whole attention to his own business.

THEODORE BEDARD, one of the prominent early settlers of Frenchtown, and one of the proprietors of the Western Hotel, was born at St. Mary's, Canada, August 22, 1843, and is of French extraction. His ancestors were among the early settlers of Canada. His father, Flavian Bedard, married Miss Celes, a daughter of Peter Ponton, and they had five children. The mother died at the age of thirty-six years, and the father survived until forty-seven years of age.

Theodore Bedard was reared to manhood in his native country, where he learned the trade of a blacksmith. In 1865 he crossed the plains from St. Louis to Montana with ox teams, consuming five months on the journey. After arriving at Alder Gulch, Mr. Bedard was engaged in making tools for the miners until 1869, afterward conducted a blacksmith shop in this city for a year and a wholesome character demanded by the people, it passed an act repealing the extra-compensation law referred to. This brought upon the heads of General Meagher and the members of the legislature the united condemnation of the Republican press and leaders, though it met with the approval of the Democratic party and a large majority of the people.

A second and third session of the legislature was held at the call of Acting Governor Meagher, which the necessities and demands of the public seemed to make imperative. The acts of these sessions of the legislature were approved by the people, and were enacted in their interests. They were opposed by the Republican leaders, and especially by those who were affected by the repeal of the extra-compensation law imposed on the people by a Republican legislature. They went to Congress and asked for a law repealing the acts of these sessions, not because the laws were obnoxious to a great majority of the people, but because they did not meet with the approval of Republican leaders. The latter organized a lobby, and sent W. F. Sanders and others to Washington to get Congress to nullify these laws. This was easy work with a Republican Congress, and in March, 1867, the act was passed nullifying all laws enacted since the adjournment of the first legislative session. This repealing act of Congress wiped out all legislation of a public character which had been enacted since the adjournment of the first session, and resuscitated the extra compensation law. Chaotic confusion in public affairs was the result. The people expressed their indignation throughout the Territory at this radical interference with home government, while certain Republican office holders smilingly marched up to the crib and drew their back pay under the law they had thus revivified.

The work of re-organizing and bringing order out of this confusion brought about by the Republican party was at once commenced by the Democracy and carried to a successful issue that year. W. F. Sanders, who had been mainly instrumental in getting Congress to nullify our laws, was nominated by the Republican party that year as their candidate for Congress. James M. Cavanaugh, the nominee of the Democracy, was his opponent. The people signified their emphatic disapproval of Republican half, and then, in company with Edmond Hamel, embarked in the stock business in Grass Valley. The firm have become prominent breeders of horses and cattle, also own 3,000 acres of valuable land, and are proprietors of the hotel and flouring mill. The hotel was built in 1870, and since 1882 has been owned by Messrs. Bedard & Hamel. They have become the leading hotel men of Frenchtown, are obliging and liberal in all their dealings, and are deserving of the prosperity they now enjoy.

July 10, 1869, Mr. Bedard was united in marriage with Miss Maggie Fanthaume, a native of Pennsylvania, but her ancestors were from Paris. They have had eight children, viz.: Theodore, Maggie, Henry, Addie, Alma, Florence, Joseph and Freddie. Mr. Bedard was formerly a Democrat, but is now identified with the People's party, has served for many years as one of the Trustees of the school district, and has taken an active interest in all educational work. The family are members of the Catholic Church, and aided liberally in the construction of the beautiful church edifice in Frenchtown.

HON. O. F. GODDARD, of Billings, Montana, bears a name that is well known throughout the State.

Mr. Goddard was born in Iowa in 1853, son of Richard T. and Elizabeth (Tannehill) Goddard. His father was a well-to-do farmer. Young Goddard received a common-school and academic education, and at an early age began to teach school. In the meantime he began the study of law and was afterward a student in the law office of Tannehill & Fee, Centerville, Iowa. He was admitted to the bar in 1879, and entered upon the practice of his profession at Corydon, Iowa, where he remained three years, and whence in March, 1883, he came to Montana and located at Billings. Here he at once attracted attention as a young lawyer capable of winning his own way to the front in his chosen profession, and was soon in the harness with plenty of business. Ere long he was appointed Prosecuting Attorney of Yellowstone county and Assistant District Attorney of his district, these offices being maintained under Territorial jurisdiction. In 1889 he was a member of the Constitutional Convention, in which he methods by sending Mr. Cavanaugh to Congress by an overwhelming majority, and electing a strongly Democratic legislature. When this legislature met, it again repealed the obnoxious extra-compensation law, and re-enacted, in the main, the laws that had been nullified by Congress, and which were not interdicted by the amended organic act.

From the beginning the Republican party was unfortunate in its leadership. A conservative and temperate course with the people in 1863 and 1864, followed by like policy later, would have given different results from a people who were disinclined to engage in heated political contests. But they were driven together by proscription, bitter and vindictive denunciation and threats, and compelled to take up the gauntlet tauntingly cast at their feet. Without discrimination they were called rebels and traitors, and of late years it has been charged that Democrats early in the history of the Territory on one occasion attempted to tear down the American flag, and were prevented from so doing by a Republican leader. It is well known that no such incident ever occurred in the history of Montana.

Two years later the people re-elected Mr. Cavanaugh to Congress, defeating Mr. James Tufts, the Republican nominee.

The next race was between E. W. Toole, the Democratic nominee, and W. H. Claggett, the Republican. Mr. Cavanaugh was a candidate for a third nomination. A bitter contest arose between the friends of Toole and Cavanaugh for the nomination, resulting in much dissatisfaction and disaffection among the friends of Mr. Cavanaugh. This feeling was carried into the election, contributing largely to Mr. Toole's defeat. Mr. Claggett was chosen by a small majority.

Mr. Claggett was again nominated by his party in 1872, but was defeated by the Democratic nominee, Martin Maginnis. Major Maginnis was an efficient and active delegate in Congress, and became the recognized leader of the Democracy of Montana for a long term of years, defeating Cornelius Hedges by a large majority in 1874, Dr. E. D. Leavitt in 1876, Sample Orr in 1878, W. F. Sanders in 1880, and Colonel Botkin in 1882.

From the very beginning, the Republican leaders, finding themselves unable to control displayed great legal and parliamentary ability, and in 1890 was elected to the State Senate, where his wise statesmanship caused him to be made chairman of several important committees. He was on the Judiciary Committee during the two sessions of the Legislature.

Mr. Goddard was elected by the Republicans of both houses of the Twenty-second Legislative Assembly to negotiate a settlement of the famous dead-lock existing in that session, and it was through his efforts that the settlement was arrived at and the Legislature organized. In the joint session of the Legislature in 1893 Mr. Goddard, by his ability as a parliamentarian, prevented the election of a Democratic United States Senator on the last day of the session, when members of his party had been debauched into voting for the Democratic candidate, and he thus earned the applause of all honest citizens of his State.

His great force of character and his clear and positive expression, together with his many other estimable traits, are destined to win for him still higher positions in a representative capacity. His political affiliations have all these years been with the Republican party. In fraternal circles he is also prominent. He is a member of Aldemar Commandery, Knight Templars, of Billings, and of Algeria Temple, Nobles of the Mystic Shrine at Helena.

Mr. Goddard was married in 1881, to Miss Alwilda Stephenson, daughter of Dr. Stephenson, of Centerville, Iowa. They have two children, Lora and Helen, aged respectively eleven and six years. Mrs. Goddard is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, a quiet, dignified and accomplished lady.

GILMON RIGGS, one of the founders of the town of East Helena, Montana, was born in Meigs county, Ohio, February 5, 1836. His ancestors were English people, one of whom settled in Maryland long before the Revolutionary war. His great-grandfather, Molan Riggs, resided in Washington county, Pennsylvania, and there his son George, grandfather of Gilmon, was born. George Riggs was married in Washington county, Pennsylvania, to Miss Mary Keller, a native of that State, and about the a majority of the voters, endeavored after every election in which they were defeated to set aside by some trick or technicality the will of the people as expressed at the polls. As the national administration was Republican, the Territorial officials were all appointed from that party. They had in their hands all the electoral machinery, and upon them depended the final canvass of the votes and the declaration of the result. Consequently a clamor was raised at each succeeding election by reckless Republican partisans only to be repressed by their own officials, who in all these years never found the slightest pretext to throw out returns or reverse in the count the verdict of the ballot-boxes. Indeed, in all those years the elections were conducted with a degree of purity and fairness that was almost ideal, and cannot again perhaps be approached. Here was a society, scattered in small towns, mining gulches and ranch settlements, nearly every member of which was known to the others. It was an independent society. Almost every man was his own employer. The small proportion of the population who were hired by others received high wages. All were above the necessity that in more crowded communities leads some men to regard their votes as merchantable commodities: consequently the use of money in elections was almost unknown, and the campaign funds of the respective parties rarely consisted of more than a few hundred dollars, collected from general subscriptions, while the expenditures of the candidates were limited to their personal expenses in traveling, and for their entertainment at points where they made addresses to the voters. The entire electorate of the Territory was not as large as that of a single county now is. The candidates knew most of them personally. In each district all the voters were known to the rest. No man could commit an offense against the election laws without its being known to all his neighbors, and bringing down upon his head the reprobation of the community and the penalties of the law. The few frauds that did occur were in the neighborhoods of the Indian reservations, and in the unorganized communities, where the only authorities were the United States marshal and his deputies. As these were appointed by the Federal administration they were of course uniformly Republican; and in some instances the Indian year 1800 they removed to Ohio and settled in Meigs county, being among its earliest settlers and there spending the rest of their lives, his death occurring in his fifty-seventh year, and hers in 1864. They had a family of ten children, five sons and five daughters. Jeremiah D. Riggs, their fourth son, and the father of our subject, was born in Meigs county, Ohio, in 1811, and in 1832 was married there to Miss Isabelle Gilisbie, also a native of Ohio, born in 1816. They continued to reside on the farm on which he was born, there reared their family of eleven children, of whom five are still living, and on the old farm they spent the rest of their lives and died. He was a Presbyterian, and a Deacon in the church, while she was a Methodist. He died in 1875, she in 1884.

The subject of our sketch was the second born in his father's large family. He was reared at the old homestead and was educated in the public schools, the Pomeroy Academy and the De Camp Institute at Downington. After completing his studies he began teaching and was thus occupied in the schools of Ohio until 1863. August 15 of that year he enlisted in Company B, Ninety-second Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and with his company was in the campaign in West Virginia and Tennessee, under General George Cook. They joined the main army at Murfreesborough—or the Fourteenth Army Corps—and served with it until the close of the war. He participated in the battles at Chickamauga and Chattanooga and took part in the great charge which captured Missionary Ridge. He also participated in the series of battles that led up to the battle and capture of Atlanta, and was with Sherman on his march to the sea and back to Washington, where it was his good fortune to take part in the grand review of the victorious army. During all his service in the war he never received a scratch. He enlisted as a private, and was mustered out a First Sergeant.

The war over, he returned to Ohio and at Downington was engaged in merchandising until 1869. That winter he came to Montana, landing here February 22, 1870. After working for some time in the vicinity of where agents and the marshal co-operated together to swell the votes of the party which supported them, by rushing in the half-breeds and squawmen to the precincts nearest the Indian agencies. But these were never of sufficient size to change in any way the result of the general election, and had more influence on the result of the election for local offices in the counties in which they were cast than in the Territory at large.

The governor, B. F. Potts, an extreme Republican, was a man who would countenance no attempt to manipulate the returns in the interests of defeated and exasperated partisans, and the vote of the people as expressed at the ballot-boxes was duly carried out by the Federal officials, who, though not responsible to the people, were entrusted with the duties of making the returns. These officials also had in their hands all the machinery of the courts of justice, and the fact that they never prosecuted or convicted any person for illegal voting was conclusive evidence that the elections were above reproach. Never but once in the history of the Territory was this fact legally questioned and brought to a determination, and then it resulted in the defeat and humiliation of the contestant. In 1882, Alex. C. Botkin, the Republican nominee, who was defeated by Martin Maginnis by a majority of about 1,500, filled the newspapers with a lot of groundless allegations, and followed these up by instituting a contest for the seat before the house of representatives. The Democrats gladly welcomed the contest, as it gave an opportunity to have all these charges investigated and determined. Mr. Botkin took his testimony, such as he could get. It was so trivial and general that Mr. Maginnis considered it unnecessary to take any except some in rebuttal in Custer county, where, in the interest of some candidates for county offices, as especially for county commissioners, some illegal votes were perhaps polled; though this was never established in subsequent legal proceedings against these officials. At all events, the result in the Territory at large could be in no way changed if the allegations were true, except in the slight reduction of Mr. McGinnis' majority. Notwithstanding this Mr. Botkin was diligent in pressing his contest, and gathered what testimony he could. His lawyers argued his case before the elections committee

East Helena is now located, he bought 160 acres of land, for which he paid $1,600, and on this tract he farmed until 1888. That year, in connection with Mr. Clark, he platted the town of East Helena. The first season he sold $40,000 worth of lots. In platting this tract he reserved fifty acres on which his residence is located and where he is raising small fruits and vegetables, and besides this he still owns other property here. He has a perpetual water right of sixty-seven inches of water which supplies him abundantly.

Mr. Riggs was married in 1860 to Miss Julia Stuart, who died in 1888, leaving one son, Francis Marion Riggs, who lives in East Helena. In 1889 Mr. Riggs married for his second wife Miss Mary C. Woodyard a native of West Virginia, their marriage occurring in Downington, Ohio. They have one daughter, Mary Louise.

Mr. Riggs is a member of the G. A. R., and in politics is a Republican. He came to Montana comparatively poor, and by his enterprise and good management has met with satisfactory success.

JOHN A. STEMPLE, a successful miner and an early settler of Montana, was born in Preston county, West Virginia, March 16, 1834. His ancestors were early settlers of Virginia, and were soldiers in the Revolutionary war. His father, Martin Stemple, was born in Virginia, July 27, 1796. The latter married Miss Caroline Bishop, a native also of that State, and they had eleven children, six of whom still survive. The mother died when our subject was a small boy, and the father departed this life November 25, 1888. They were members of the Presbyterian Church.

John A. Stemple, the fourth child in order of birth, remained with his father until twenty-two years of age. In 1856 he went to Iowa, in the spring 1860 crossed the plains by way of Ogden to Oregon, and thence to California. During the journey they had much trouble with the Sioux Indians, and on the Sweetwater river were attacked by 100 redskins. The emigrants corraled their wagons, and succeeded in driving off the Indians. One emigrant was killed, but as the Indians carried off their

of the house, and the result was an unanimous report in favor of Mr. Maginnis, which did not reduce his majority by the elimination of a single vote, and dismissed Mr. Botkin's contest as being groundless and uncalled for. This committee consisted of eight Democrats and seven Republicans. The Republicans were led by the distinguished lawyer, Rufus P. Rainey, of Massachusetts, but it was no eight to seven decision, for all the Republicans on the committee joined the Democrats in signing the report, and sent it to the house as their unanimous decision. Nor was the action of the house of representatives less emphatic in rebuking the contestant and dismissing his case. The report of the committee on elections was adopted, as the Congressional Record shows, by an equally unanimous vote of the house of representatives. There were nearly 150 Republican members on that floor; but Mr. Botkin could not find one to cast a vote to sustain his allegations or sustain his contest. The house, like the committee, unanimously rejected them. As a solace for this rebuke he was afterward allowed a liberal sum for the expenses of the contest, and therewith himself and his attorneys no doubt rejoiced in the fact that the real object of the contest was attained.

In 1884, J. K. Toole was elected to Congress over his opponent, Hiram Knowles, who was the Republican nominee.

Again in 1886, J. K. Toole received the Democratic nomination for re-election to Congress. He was opposed by W. F. Sanders, whom his party put forward for the fourth time for this position, resulting each time in his defeat. Mr. Sanders was and always has been an unpopular leader in his party. He was domineering and vindictive. The venom of his tongue and pen was spent alike on friends and enemies. His personal and political abuse of his opponents solidified all opposition, while his rebukes and sarcastic criticisms of those who were disposed to help him engendered a lukewarmness that inured to his disadvantage. Prior to this election, the Manitoba, now the Great Northern Railway, was seeking to build into Montana, and had applied to Congress for a grant of right of way through certain Indian reservations. In this campaign Mr. Sanders dead and wounded it was never known how many were killed. After traveling through California, Mr. Stemple returned to Baker county, Oregon, and engaged in mining near Snake river. He afterward went to Portland, next to Victoria, thence to San Francisco, returned to New York via the isthmus, went to Iowa in the winter of 1866, and the following spring came up the Missouri river to Montana. After following placer-mining at Trinity for a time, Mr. Stemple prospected in the Virginia creek country, and was elected to the office of Recorder, serving in that capacity until 1871. Later, while hunting at the head of Silver Creek, in the Gloster and Empire mills, he discovered quartz, located several valuable mines, built a ten-stamp mill at the Whippoorwill mine, but in 1877 sold his interest there for $12,000. He next went to the head of Virginia creek, where he erected what is now called the Stemple mill, and that district was also named in his honor. In the fall of 1882 Mr. Stemple again sold his interest, for $12,000. He is now connected with the Pigeon Company. He discovered the mine in 1876, and it is now considered one of the best in the mining district.

Mr. Stemple was married January 4, 1876, to Miss Amanda Ann Miller, a native of Pennsylvania, but was reared from childhood in Iowa. She is a daughter of Peter Miller. They have had four children, all born in Montana,—Harry Oscar, Eddie Roy and Mabel Alice. The eldest child, Carrie, died when seventeen months old. Mr. Stemple is a member of the Baptist Church, and in political matters supports the Democratic party.

ALEXANDER P. GILLIAM, County Assessor of Jefferson county, and one of Boulder's enterprising business men, was born in Asheville, North Carolina, February 13, 1857, a son of William and Elizabeth (Porter) Gilliam, also natives of the South. During the late war the father served as a carpenter in the Confederate army, and was killed by a bushwhacker soon after the close of the struggle, leaving a wife and five children. Mrs. Gilliam survived her husband only a short time.

Alexander P., the third child in his father's family, resided with his uncle, W. Y. Porter, after the death of his parents. When only thirteen years of age he started in life on his own account, having received only a limited education, but afterward spent ten months at the Peabody was charged with having opposed this grant, and having largely contributed to its defeat. This, added to his personal unpopularity, supplemented by the personal popularity of his opponent, who had made an efficient member of Congress, brought upon him a Waterloo, that, up to that time, had had no parallel in the history of elections in Montana. Mr. Toole was elected by a majority of over 3,700. He served his people in Congress with marked ability during this term. It was mainly through his efforts that Congress passed the act admitting Montana into the Union of States.

In 1888, Mr. W. A. Clark was made the standard bearer of the Democracy against T. H. Carter in the race for Congress. Mr. Clark did not ask for, nor did he want, the nomination. It was pressed upon him much against his will, and after repeated declinations on his part. He was defeated by Mr. Carter. He was the victim of treachery in his party. In some way he had incurred the displeasure of J. B. Haggin, who was at the head of the Anaconda Mining Company, and the local manager of the company was instructed by his superiors to defeat Mr. Clark at all hazards. The manager himself was a professed Democrat, and throughout the campaign gave Mr. Clark and his party friends assurances that the undivided support of his company would be given to Mr. Clark. This was given out with apparent zeal up to the day of election, when orders were given to its several thousand employees to support Mr. Carter, resulting in Mr. Clark's defeat. Several other agencies of a smaller character contributed more or less to this result. But the chief responsibility for Mr. Clark's defeat rests with the Anaconda Mining Company, and is largely chargeable to the treachery of its manager.

This is the first time that the Anaconda Mining Company showed its hand in politics affecting the Territory at large. Its manager was much flattered with its exhibition of power, and his ambitions to become a political boss attained such proportions that his company at once entered the arena of politics, and became an important factor in subsequent political contests. Encouraged by success in most of its political ventures, it conceived the idea of get-

Academy, in the Susquehanna valley. Previous to that time he had been employed as a clerk, and after leaving college followed the same occupation in a grocery house at Spartanburg, South Carolina. At the age of nineteen years he owned a small grocery business. In 1877 Mr. Gilliam went to Helena, Texas; in 1879 engaged in the lumber business in Eastern Oregon; in June, 1881, left Walla Walla on horseback for Butte City, where he followed freighting with mule teams; in 1883 took a drove of horses to the British possessions, and in 1884 located at Elkhorn, Jefferson county, Montana. While at the latter place he followed freighting, and was also engaged in the livery, coal and wood business. In 1889 Mr. Gilliam was elected Assessor of Jefferson county, after which he moved to Boulder, and is now serving his second term in that office. When elected Assessor of Jefferson county he received a majority of only six votes, but at his re-election had a majority of 448 votes over the Republican candidate. He purchased Mr. Walter's interest in the Walter & Maxfield meat business in 1888, and the firm is now known as Maxfield & Gilliam. They have the only meat market in Boulder.

In his political relations, Mr. Gilliam has always been a stanch Democrat. Socially, he is a member of the I. O. O. F. and the K. of P. By an honorable and upright course in business, Mr. Gilliam has justly earned the popularity he now enjoys, and has always taken a deep interest in everything for the good of his community.

J. A. Beuschlein, proprietor of the Bon Ton, the leading hotel of Marysville, was born in Dubuque, Iowa, September 20, 1855. His father was a native of Baden and his mother of Bavaria, Germany, but they came to America when young, and were married in Dubuque in 1854. They had six children, four of whom are still living. The mother died at the age of fifty-six years, and the father at the age of sixty-four years.

J. A. Beuschlein was taken by his parents to Minneapolis when six months old, where as he grew up he received his education, and also learned the baker's trade. He followed that occupation in Minneapolis eight years.

In the spring of 1879 he was induced by the Winster Brothers to go with them as cook on a construction train on the Northern Pacific Railroad, where he remained four years. Mr. Beuschlein was next with the same ting control of the machinery of the State government, and to that end has directed its energies for the past three years toward securing the location of the seat of the State government at the town of Anaconda, a village situated near the southwestern boundary of Montana, and which is mainly owned by those who control the Anaconda Company.

The question of the location of the capital of Montana was submitted to a vote of the people at the November election, 1894. Immense sums of money were expended by this company in this contest; every influence that could be reached was enlisted regardless of cost. With immense wealth at its back, its agents were lavish with money, and no agency, whether newspaper or other, that could be influenced with money, was overlooked. It seems, however, that the good people, who have the interests of the State at heart, are in the majority. Fearing that if this company once got its corporate hands on the throats of the people, all interests, political and otherwise, would be subordinated to its wishes; that the material interests of the country would be paralyzed, and the growth and prosperity of a promising young State would be retarded, the people of Montana, at the election just over, sat down upon the pretensions of this corporation, and served notice upon it to keep its hands out of politics in the future.

The admission of Montana into the Union in November, 1889, necessitated another general election to elect State officers and a member of Congress to represent the State in the Federal Congress. T. H. Carter again ran, and was opposed by Martin Maginnis. The former was elected. J. K. Toole was elected governor, and members oi the legislature were chosen in the several representative and senatorial districts to serve in the first legislature assembled under our State organization.

Here must be written a brief chapter in the history of politics in Montana, that no citizen familiar with the facts can attempt without a deep sense of humiliation. Posterity will bow its head in shame as it views the blotch on Montana's escutcheon, placed there by ambitious politicians, whose desire for honors and emoluments was greater than their respect for the laws and the forms thereof.

The returns of elections in the several coun-gentlemen in the East until 1887, then accepted the position of cook for the Cokedale boarding house, for the following year was engaged as cook for the Winster Brothers at the East Pacific mines, afterward worked for the Great Falls Smelting Company, and in 1891 came to Marysville. After arriving in this city Mr. Beuschlein successfully conducted a hotel one year, and then purchased the Bon Ton hotel. Since becoming proprietor, he has made the house the leading hotel of Marysville, and it is now patronized by the best people of the town and the richer class of the traveling public. Mr. Beuschlein is assisted in the management of the hotel by his wife.

He was married September 23, 1885, to Miss Alice Ladd, a native of Minneapolis. They have two daughters —Minnie and Gale. In his social relations, Mr. Beuschlein is a member of the A. O. U. W. at Marysville. He is a capable, reliable and enterprising business man, and the family have secured the good will of the people of this city.

HOWARD H. ZENOR, one of the pioneer business men of Deer Lodge, Montana, was born in Indiana, January 27, 1843.

Mr. Zenor is of German descent. Some of his ancestors came from Germany to this country at an early day, settled in Pennsylvania, and were prominently identified with the early history of that State. Elijah Zenor, the father of our subject, was born there in 1818. When a young man he emigrated to Indiana, being among the pioneer settlers of the Hoosier State, and there he was subsequently married to Miss Elizabeth Rose, a native of east Tennessee. They had a family of six children, all now living except one, and Howard H. being the oldest. Both father and mother were devoted members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and by occupation he was a carpenter and cabinetmaker. He died in the forty-eighth year of his age and she was thirty-five at the time of death.

Howard H. Zenor was educated at Bowling Green, Indiana. He was eighteen at the time the civil war burst ties, certified to the county canvassing boards, showed that the Democrats had elected a majority of the legislature on joint ballot; and, as two United States senators were to be chosen by the legislature soon to assemble, it was apparent that such choice would be made from the Democratic ranks. This was more than the half score of Republican leaders, who had aspired to senatorial honors, had anticipated, and at once a few of the leaders of that party entered into a conspiracy to defeat the will of the people, and secure to themselves, by fair means or otherwise, the fruits of victory that belonged to the Democracy. Looking around them, they discovered that in Silver Bow county there was a precinct, numbered 34, that had been created by Republican county commissioners under the belief that it would give a Republican majority, instead of giving a Republican majority, gave a very large Democratic majority, which, if counted, elected all but one of the Democratic candidates for the legislature, but if not counted, Republicans enough would be elected to change the result on joint ballot in the legislature.

The returns from Precinct 34, with the poll-books, were certified by the judges of election in due and regular form to the county canvassing board. There was no irregularity about these returns, and all that the county canvassing board could do, or under the law had the right to do, was too add up the returns and declare the result. This they did, including the returns from Precinct 34, which showed the election of Democratic candidates. They did not sign the abstract until compelled so to do by writ of mandate from the court. The whole returns of the county were tabulated and added before any objection was made. After all this had been done, and they had received, accepted and tabulated the returns from Precinct 34, an objection was made to counting that precinct, and a motion made to cast it out. Two of this returning board were Republicans and extreme partisans; one was a Democrat. There was no more reason for casting out Precinct 34 than for any other precinct. The return from Precinct 34 was made out in conformity with law, and was less objectionable than the returns from several other precincts. To throw out any other precinct than 34 would not affect the result in the same way. It became necessary then to do something with this precinct. The matter was held under consideration by the upon the country, and in answer to the President's first call for volunteers he enlisted, in April, 1861, in Company F, Fourteenth Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and was in one of the first three regiments that left the State to go to the front. At the battle of Winchester, Virginia, he received a gunshot wound in the leg that caused him to go on crutches for fifteen months. After that he went with the army to New Orleans, in the capacity of sutler's clerk, and continued thus occupied until the close of the war.

After the war Mr. Zenor came up the Missouri river to Montana and landed at Fort Benton, June 2, 1867. He spent a short time at Helena and from there came to Deer Lodge, where he was soon afterward appointed Deputy County Clerk. Later he served a year and a half as clerk of the Probate Court and at the end of that time was appointed County Clerk and Recorder, which office he filled two years. He then engaged in placer-mining at Uncle Ben's gulch in Deer Lodge county, and continued mining three years, his labor being attended with small returns. His next venture was in the hardware business at Deer Lodge, in partnership with R. T. Kennon. That was in 1873. They continued in business together until 1886, at which time Mr. Kennon retired and M. W. Trask took his place in the firm, the name being changed to that of Zenor & Trask. This firm is still doing a most successful business. To Mr. Zenor belongs the distinction of having been in the hardware business here longer than any other man in the city. They own the building in which their store is located. Like most of the prominent and successful business men of Montana. Mr. Zenor has from time to time made investments in mining property and is now the owner of various valuable quartz mines.

He was married February 16, 1873, to Miss Helen M. Witter, a native of Vermont, and they have one child, Howard M., born in Deer Lodge, and now attending returning board for several days. Meanwhile, all the influences and power of Republican leaders was brought to bear upon the board, most prominent among whom were those who afterward profited by the infamy that was committed. It has long since been the established law that the duty of returning boards is confined to tabulating and adding up returns that have been properly certified to them. Their work is purely clerical as to returns properly certified. There was no informality in the returns from Precinct 34. There was in the returns of other precincts in the same county, that were before the same board, but no notice was taken of them. It would not do to touch them, as they had given Republican majorities. This county board finally cast out the returns from Precinct 34 without any substantial reasons therefor. The result, however, as tabulated and footed up, and signed by the board under the mandate of the court, was duly certified by the county clerk, and delivered to the State returning board on November 7, 1889. Prior to that, however, the clerk of Silver Bow county, on the 31st day of October, 1889, delivered to the State returning board the certified returns, as tabulated by the Silver Bow returning board in the first instance.

The State returning board met on November 1, 1889, and adjourned from time to time during the greater part of November, before making up their decision. The State returning board consisted of the governor, the chief justice and one other. Some apology might be offered for the mistakes and shortcomings of the ordinary member of county canvassing boards, who is not supposed to be learned in the law; but what excuse can be offered for the glaring and egregious transgressions of the law made by one who had officiated in the capacity of chief justice of Montana? What did the board do with the Silver Bow returns, as certified to them by the clerk of that county? All the power it had under the law was to deal with the returns as certified to them by the several counties. The board possessed no judicial power. Its duty was purely ministerial, and, while nothing appeared upon the returns of Silver Bow county showing an informality or illegality affecting the vote of any one precinct, it nevertheless took upon itself to eliminate the vote of Precinct 34 from its results. This board say in their certificate that the abstract from Silver Bow county was not duly and properly certified, and yet they count the vote of all the precincts except 34. If the

THE MISSOULA MERCANTILE COMPANY, with headquarters at Missoula, is the largest institution of the kind in the State of Montana.

It was organized in 1876. The old business of Bonner & Welsh was purchased by Bonner, Eddy & Hammond. The firm became Eddy, Hammond & Company, and continued in that form until 1885, at which time the business had grown from $40,000 per annum to an annual business of over $1,000,000. At this time the members of the firm, finding their time considerably occupied with the business of other corporations which they had organized during the construction of the Northern Pacific Railroad, such as railroad building, banking and lumbering, concluded to incorporate the mercantile business and interest employes of the firm in it. The capital stock of the original corporation, in 1885, was $250,000. In 1887 it was increased to $300,000; in 1889 to $600,000; and in 1891 to $1,200,000. The brick store-building in Missoula is 230 x 135 feet, two stories and basement, and in addition to this they have large warehouses. The store is divided into the following departments: clothing, dry goods, boots and shoes, furniture, agricultural implements, hardware, groceries and liquors,—each department finished and furnished in the latest and most approved style and presided over by men of ability and experience in each line.

Mr. A. B. Hammond is president; C. H. McLeod, manager; H. T. Van Wart, treasurer; and G. Mosier, secretary. The firm also have large branch stores in Corvallis, abstract was good for precincts 1, 5, 10, 20, and 30, why was it not good for Precinct 34? This board offered no reason for thus acting, but did their infamous work by main strength. The result was that this board assumed to give certificates of election to members of the legislature elected in the several counties, and, among others, to the Republican members in Silver Bow, that were chosen by the elimination of the vote of Precint 34.

The county clerks of each county, acting in obedience to the law, issued certificates of election to the members elect to the legislature, as to all other county officers. In Silver Bow county certificates were issued to the Democratic members, who, as appears from the returns, was elected with the 34 precinct vote. Thus two sets of certificates were outstanding when the legislature was convened.

On November 8, 1889, the president of the United States signed and issued a proclamation declaring Montana a State in the Union. On November 11, 1889, Governor J. K. Toole, who had been elected and qualified as governor, issued a proclamation convening the first legislative assembly at Helena, pursuant to the act of admission, on Saturday, November 23, 1889, at 12 o'clock, noon.

Grave questions arose as to who had the proper certificates of election as members of the house of representatives elect. The Democrats held certificates of election issued by the respective county clerks under the Territorial statute, and the Republicans held certificates issued by the State returning board. No place at the capital was designated by law in which the Legislature should meet, and none was named in the proclamation of the governor of November 11. The two rival bodies had declared their intention of occupying the county courthouse.

On the afternoon of November 22, the day preceding the time when the legislature was to convene, several delegations of prominent citizens called at the executive office and stated to Governor Toole that in their opinion, if the contending bodies should meet at the courthouse in the absence of a proclamation by the governor designating that as the place for the meeting of the house of representatives, both parties would assume the right to the exclusive occupancy of the building, and that a riot would ensue. They also stated that it was rumored upon the streets of the capital that the United States marshal was in the city; that he had sworn in a large number of deputies, Victor, Stevensville and other towns. They do a vast business, are most liberal in their terms and methods, and have been an immense aid to the growth and development of western Montana.

ASA H. SLOAN, deceased, was born in Ohio, October 26, 1822, a son of Stephen and Rachel Sloan. They were the parents of twelve children, only one of whom is now living. Asa H. grew to manhood in Missouri, and was there married, March 9, 1848, to Miss Mary A. Douglas, who was born in Ohio, December 18, 1827. She is a daughter of Patrick Douglas, a respected Ohio farmer. After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Sloan located on a farm in Clinton county, Missouri, where they resided ten years. Mr. Sloan had learned the cabinet-maker's trade in his youth, and followed that occupation with his farm work. Seven children were born to them in Missouri, viz.: Luella S., wife of Lemuel Bayers, and resides near her mother; William S., of Madison valley; Clinton A., a resident of Butte City; John B., also of Madison valley; Jefferson Davis, who died while on the journey to Montana, aged six years; Anna E., wife of C. F. Berendes, a prominent business man of Boulder; and Seymour D., engaged in the livery business in Boulder.

The family came up the Missouri river to Montana in 1865. While on the river their boat sank at De Soto, where they were obliged to land, and were detained there a month. Their son's death occurred at that place. They also lost nearly their entire possessions, among which was a sawmill, losing altogether several thousand dollars' worth of goods, and were accordingly obliged to begin their Montana life with very little. After arriving in this State the family resided in Helena two months, and Mr. Sloan then purchased a squatter's claim to 160 acres of land, to which he afterward added forty acres more. He who had offered their services to lead an attack upon the courthouse and capture it from the possession of the county commissioners, who at the time had not consented to its occupancy, except under the direction of the governor, with whom they proposed to contract.

Meantime, these rumors were widespread, and many who had become alarmed awaited with anxiety the event of the conflict. Whereupon Governor Toole, taking the advice of Attorney General Clayberg, a lawyer then and since eminent in his profession, as well as the opinion of the ablest members of the bar in the Territory, determined to declare, as he had been advised and believed the law to be, that the persons holding county certificates of election were prima facie members, and as such were entitled to organize the house. Accordingly, in the afternoon of November 22, he issued the following proclamation:

WHEREAS, On the 11th day of November, A. D. 1889, a proclamation was signed and issued convening the first Legislative Assembly of the State of Montana, at the seat of government, on Saturday, November 23, 1889, at 12 o'clock, noon; and

WHEREAS, No provision of the constitution or of the laws provides the place in which the said legislative assembly shall meet, and no officer or person is expressly authorized by the constitution or the laws to designate such place of meeting; and

WHEREAS, It is necessary that such suitable and convenient place of meeting shall be designated and provided: and

WHEREAS, It has come to my knowledge that two sets of certificates have been issued to persons claiming to be elected to said legislative assembly, each emanating from a different source, and not all to the same persons; and

WHEREAS, It is probable that a conflict may arise between the respective claimants to seats in said body, and the organization thereof, which may imperil the peace of the State; and

WHEREAS, One set of said certificates has been issued and delivered pursuant to section 1033 of the General Election Laws of Montana, by the county clerks of the respective counties, and by virtue of section 18 of an act of the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Montana, entitled "An act to provide for the registration of the names of electors, and to prevent fraud at elections," approved March 8, A. D. 1889; and

WHEREAS, By express law, the persons holding such certificates are declared to be entitled to membership and deemed to be elected for all purposes of organization of either branch of the legislative assembly; and immediately engaged in raising cattle and horses, of which he soon had a large drove, and they brought the highest prices. Mr. Sloan had served his country in the Mexican war, and during that time received an injury which afterward resulted in a sore on his leg, and from which he was always a great sufferer. His death occurred of heart disease, August 8, 1888. He had been at work on his farm, but, not feeling well, returned home, and soon expired. He was a kind husband and father, an excellent citizen, and his loss was deeply felt by the entire community, in which he had so long been an upright and honorable citizen. His parents had been adherents of the Christian Church, and he was raised in that faith. In his political relations he was a stanch Democrat. Mrs. Sloan still resides at the old homestead, and is assisted in the management of the farm by her youngest son.

OWEN KELLEY, one of Montana's respected pioneer farmers, was born in county Cavan, Ireland, in 1835, a son of Patrick and Catherine (Evans) Kelley, also natives of that country. They were industrious farmers and devout Catholics. The father died at the age of forty-five years, after which the mother came to reside with her sons in Missoula, her death occurring when ninety years of age.

Owen Kelley, one of six children, four sons and two daughters, received his early education in his native land. When only fifteen years of age he started alone on the long sea voyage to America, to make his own way in the world in the "land of the free." His first work was in Connecticut, in a cotton mill, for which he received 75 cents a day, and boarded himself. He was subsequently promoted until he received $2 per day. In 1858 Mr. Kelley started for the Golden State, and, after arriving in San Francisco, mined on the Yuba river, in Siskiyou county, also in various other places, meeting with fair success. From that place he went to Florence, on the Salmon river, shortly afterward to Boise Basin, Idaho, and in July, 1865, came to Montana, first locating at Hel-

WHEREAS, When so organized, such legislative assembly by the constitution becomes the judge of the qualifications of its own members;

Now, therefore, I, Jos. K. Toole, Governor of the State of Montana, do hereby designate the courthouse of the county of Lewis and Clarke, at the said seat of government, as the place where said legislative assembly, comprising the persons holding and presenting certificates of election from said county clerks, shall meet, to wit: The house of representatives shall meet in the hall formerly occupied by the Territorial house of representatives, and the senate shall meet in the chamber formerly occupied by the Territorial council.

For the observance of this proclamation I invoke the aid of all good citizens, without distinction of party.

On the next morning he issued the following letter of instructions to Captain John Smith, in whose charge the courthouse had been placed:

Sir: At 12 o'clock, noon, to-day, you will open the doors of the house of representatives and admit no person to the floor except persons claiming to be members of that body. When notified by any member whom you have admitted that the house of representatives is temporarily organized, you will turn over your keys to such persons as the house may designate. If the auditor of state appears at the door before you are released by the person designated by the house of representatives you will admit him to the floor of the house. When you are released by such person your employment ceases.

The result of this was that the Republican members refused to meet with their colleagues at the courthouse, organizing a body of their own, and proceeded to adopt a report passing severe strictures upon the action of the governor. When the report was made public, a number of gentlemen, some of them of national reputation, and all prominent in the politics of the State, signed and published in the Helena Independent of December 1, 1889, the following communication, which was a complete refutation of the charges made by the report promulgated by the Republican house:

On Friday afternoon, November 22, it was apparent that there was a determination on the part of both Republicans and Democrats to take possession of the courthouse and hold it for the purpose of organizing the house of representatives. The United States marshal was in the city and it was rumored that he had sworn in a large number of deputies, and that several persons had proffered their services to lead an attack upon the courthouse if the Democrats sought to hold possession as against those Republicans who did not hold certificates

ena. After mining and prospecting for a time, Mr. Kelley went with the Sun river stampede in the winter of 1865, and during the journey many of the miners suffered severely with the cold, a number having been frozen to death. Our subject mined with good success at Beaver Gulch, his largest nugget of gold being worth $56. He also mined at Cedar creek, but, like all miners, found and lost money.

From that place he came to his present location, in the Bitter Root valley, four miles west of where now stands the beautiful and thriving city of Missoula. In that early day Mr. Kelley pre-empted 160 acres of land, also homesteaded 160 acres, has since added another 160 acres, and now owns one of the finest farms in his section of the county. The land is adapted to the raising of wheat, oats and all kinds of vegetables. In partnership with his brother, William, Mr. Kelley is extensively engaged in the stock business.

September 15, 1883, our subject was united in marriage with Miss Susan Madden, also a native of Ireland. They have four children,—William, Nellie, Mary and Owen. Mr. Kelley has always taken an independent course in political affairs, casting his vote for the best man. The family are strong adherents to the Catholic faith, and aided liberally in the construction of the fine church edifice in Missoula. He has always been a man of industry, economy and integrity, and his success is well earned and richly deserved, as is also the good name which such a course in life has secured for him.

DR. LOUIS A. VAWATER, one of the leading physicians of Boulder, was born in West Virginia, October 22, 1840. Edward Vawater, the first of the family in this country, came from England to Virginia in the early part of the seventeenth century. He settled in Essex county, where his two sons, Edward and William, were born, and both served on the Colonial side in the Revolutionary war, from county clerks. Some Democrats were expressing a similar determination on their part. During the afternoon of that day, several delegations waited upon Governor Toole, and brought the above facts to his attention, and gave it as their opinion that if the contending claimants should meet at the courthouse in the absence of a proclamation from the governor designating that place as the place for the meeting of the house of representatives, that both parties would assume the right to the exclusive occupancy of the building, and a riot would ensue. It was urged that the power of the executive was plenary to see that the persons presenting and holding the county certificates (being the lawful certificates), and no other person, should enter the legislative hall. Thereupon, Governor Toole said that, notwithstanding what had been urged, he would not exercise or attempt to exercise any such authority, but that in his opinion the county certificates were prima facie evidence of membership, and that persons holding such under the law were entitled to temporarily organize the house, and that under the circumstances he would declare that to be the law, and designate the courthouse as the place for the meeting of such; but that he would not under any circumstances undertake to prevent any person claiming to be a member of the house of representatives from meeting at such place, no matter what sort of certificate he held. In this determination he was unalterable. He then said to us that he intended so issue a proclamation, which he read to us. It was the same one issued and published Saturday morning. We heard read in the house of representatives the following letter (here follows Governor Toole's letter to Captain Smith). This letter is in keeping with what Governor Toole said to us before the proclamation was issued. We make this statement in justice to Governor Toole, whose action has been criticized by the very persons against whose presence in the house of representatives he refused to interpose objections. The proclamation of the Governor was timely, and in our opinion was the means of preventing a breach of the peace, if not more serious consequences.

The Republican members of the house refused to be comforted, and continued to remain in their separate organization. Later in the session Governor Toole sent a message to the Democratic house, in which this reference was made to the situation then existing:

It is to be regretted that the body wrongfully assuming to be the house of representa-

William, the grandfather of our subject, secured the appointment of Government Surveyor from the Governor of Virginia, moved to West Virginia in 1791, and pushed as far down as the mouth of the Kanawha river, and there met and married Miss Margaret Henderson, a native of Point Pleasant, West Virginia, and a daughter of James Henderson. After their marriage they located on Hans creek, Monroe county, that State, where they lived until death, the husband dying at the age of eighty-six years, and the wife reached the age of ninety years. Six children, three sons and three daughters, were born to that union. The eldest child, Jonah Vawater, the father of our subject, was born at the old homestead in Virginia, in 1800. He inherited his father's estate, and continued to reside there until his death, in 1878, at the age of seventy-eight years. He was a successful planter and prominent citizen, and represented his district several terms in the Legislature. In 1827 he married Miss Clara S. Peck, a native of Giles county, Pennsylvania, and they had thirteen children, twelve of whom grew to years of maturity. The mother died in 1882, at the age of seventy-two years. They were worthy members of the Methodist Church for many years.

Louis A. Vawater, the third child in order of birth, received his primary education under a private tutor, later attended the Union Academy, and then entered the Emery & Henry College, in Washington county, West Virginia, graduating at the latter institution in 1854. He was then for a short time engaged in engineering, after which he turned his attention to the study of medicine, under Dr. E. W. Peck, of Red Sulphur Springs. In 1860 Mr. Vawater received his first course of lectures at Richmond, Virginia. At the opening of the late war, in 1861, he entered the Confederate service, as Captain of volunteer infantry, Thirtieth Battalion; was taken prisoner at the battle of Winchester, September 19, 1864, and held at Fort Delaware until in July, 1865, when he was set at liberty. Returning to his home in West Virginia, the tives, and which met in the place designated by the auditor, misinterpreted the proclamation of the executive, as well as the letter of instruction to Captain Smith, as claimed by the report adopted and promulgated by its committee. Fully appreciating the wide distinction between the executive and legislative departments of the government, and the independence of each as contemplated by the constitution and desiring to be fairly considered by my countrymen, honor bids me forget pride, and will not permit me to conclude this message without putting on perpetual record a solemn and public refutation of the charge, "that the Governor, by his proclamation or otherwise, at the time it was issued or at any other time, ever intended to interfere with the right of any person claiming to be a member of the house of representatives, to his seat," or "that it was the intention of the Governor to conceal the said instructions to the said John Smith until after the temporary organization of the house of representatives, and by virtue of his control of the room in which the people's representatives were to assemble, to dictate who would enter therein."

No person outside of the Republican party, then organized to capture two senatorships from the people, ever construed the letter of instructions to Captain Smith as meaning anything more than its exact purport, or doubted that the Democrats were entitled to organize the house of representatives, and that the action of Governor Toole was right and proper.

The first State senate was equallly divided politically. The lieutenant governor, a Republican, being the presiding officer, on a tie vote would cast the deciding ballot. The senate did not organize at once, awaiting the action of the members of the house.

Two houses were organized, the Republican house meeting in what was called the Iron Front, and the Democratic house convened in the place designated by the governor in his proclamation. The result was a dead-lock lasting many days, but broken at last by the Republican members of the senate ignoring all parliamentary laws and usages, and supporting the rulings of its presiding officer, in declaring, in effect, that seven was a majority of sixteen, and holding that no appeal could be taken from the rulings of the presiding officer. In this way they effected what they called an organization of the senators, without a majority of the senators. They at once recognized the house sitting in the "Iron Front." The two Republican houses thus recognized each other balloted for United States senators, and, without a Doctor had charge of his father's plantation for a time. During the winter of 1867–8 he took a course of lectures at Cincinnati, in the Ohio Medical College, in the latter year began the practice of his profession at Ballardsville, West Virginia, and from that time until 1882 practiced medicine with R. E. Barnett in Hancock county, Indiana. Dr. Barnett died during the latter year, and our subject then received the appointment of Physician to the Round Valley Indian Agency in California. He resigned his position there in 1884 and came to Montana, where he followed his profession at Radersburg, Jefferson county, until 1893. Since that time he has been engaged in the practice of medicine in Boulder. The Doctor is also interested in mining interests in Montana, but has given his undivided attention to his chosen profession. He is a member of the Presbyterian Church. In political matters Dr. Vawater was formerly identified with the Democratic party, but is now decidedly in favor of the free coinage of silver.

JAMES B. MCMASTER, a Montana pioneer of 1864 and now a successful business man of Deer Lodge, is a native of Massachusetts, born in Watertown, July 7, 1839.

His father, William McMaster, was a native of Scotland. He married Miss Sarah Boyd, the daughter of Scotch-Irish parents, and after their marriage they emigrated to America and settled in Massachusetts, first at Boston and afterward in Watertown, where they reared their family of twelve children, eight sons and four daughters, James B. being the ninth born and one of the five who are still living. In 1853 the McMaster family removed to Kalamazoo county, Michigan, where the father spent the residue of his life and died, the date of his death being 1868, and his age seventy years. The mother departed this life in 1890, at the age of eighty-seven.

James B. McMaster received his education in the public schools of Massachusetts and Michigan. March 19, 1864, he set out from his Michigan home en route for Montana, going to St. Joseph, Missouri, crossing the river legal majority in either house, they declared T. C. Power and W. F. Sanders elected to the United States senate. The Democratic senate and Democratic house balloted for and elected W. A. Clark and Martin Maginnis as United States senators from Montana. The last two named gentlemen were accredited to the United States senate by the certificate of the governor, while the Republicans chosen went to Washington with such credentials as the rump houses could give them.

The history of the contest between these gentlemen for the seats in the United States senate is given in full in the Congressional Record of the First Session of the Fifty-first Congress, Senate proceedings. It is too lengthy to find a place in this brief summary of events. During the progress of the investigation, the outrage and villainy of the returning boards was exposed and denounced by the ablest men in the senate. But a Republican senate, true to its instincts and its past history, ignoring the merits of the contest and the right and justice of the case, yielded to partisan bias and the clamor of political leaders, and seated the men selected by an illegal legislature.

There was only one tribunal before whom the matter could ever be fairly and impartially tried. In November following there was to be a general election. The Democratic party was anxious to submit the late controversy to the people. This was the final opportunity. Accordingly, the platforms of the respective parties rung, one with praise, the other with denunciation, of the action of the Democrats and the part taken by Governor Toole. The campaign opened at Helena by a grand meeting ratifying the nomination of W. W. Dixon, the Democratic nominee for Congress. The recorded evidence of current events shows how anxiously the governor and the Democracy of the State awaited the issue, and how fearlssly and confidently it was pressed before the people. In a scathing speech, made by him at the ratification meeting just mentioned, Governor Toole thus arraigned the Montana returning board and its beneficiaries:

"Fellow Citizens: The issue is a plain one. Less than a year ago the political honor and integrity of the State was openly violated and debauched. The men who consummated that crime, which will be swiftly followed by an

on the 10th of May, and from that point making the rest of the journey with ox teams. The party of which he was a member consisted of thirteen men and they had thirteen yoke of oxen, their outfit being held in partnership. Mr. William Jenkins was their leader. After 100 days of travel they landed safe at Virginia City, August 20. Mr. McMaster remained there two years, engaged in placer mining, a part of the time meeting with fair success. In March, 1866, he came to Deer Lodge, and on the 21st of that same month went to the placer diggings at Elk creek and Beaver Gulch. There he obtained good claims and mined for two years, employing about ten men and a part of the time taking out from seventy to 125 ounces per week. In 1868, with a partner, he opened a store at Reynolds City and sold miners' supplies there a year, or until the camp went down. In 1869 the Boone creek excitement in Idaho drew him to that place. This expedition, however, proved a fruitless one and he returned to Deer Lodge. Then for a number of years he mined at Yam Hill, and his operations were attended with fair success. In 1874 he worked a river claim in Jefferson county, but as he did not meet with satisfactory returns he again came back to Deer Lodge, and until 1879 mined at Beaver Gulch. In 1879 he was elected Assessor of Deer Lodge county, on the Democratic ticket, and in 1881, at the expiration of his term, was elected Sheriff. He served two terms as Sheriff, being re-elected in the fall of 1883. Since his retirement from office he has been engaged in mining, farming and other business at Deer Lodge. He owns 173 acres of land adjoining the city, on which property he has an elegant residence which he and his family occupy. A portion of this ranch he has platted, forming what is known as the McMaster Addition to Deer Lodge.

Mr. McMaster was happily married in October, 1882, to Miss Carrie Fisher, a native of Switzerland, and they have two interesting children, a son and daughter, James F. and Florence, the daughter being an adopted child.

avenging Nemesis, are impudently asking vindication before the ink is fairly dry upon their certificates of election that recorded a lie. In the midst of the turbulent and tempestuous time that followed that outrage, when the passions of the people were inflamed by the great provocation that environed them, it was difficult to maintain a conservative course, and prevent a popular uprising of the people. But all things come to him who bides his time. That time has finally come. Justice has traveled with a leaden heel, but is ready to strike with an iron hand. We seize the opportunity with avidity, and challenge every issue that such an enemy can invent. Such men as these, whose leadership dominated and controlled the Butte convention, have honored me with their censure. I predict that when the truth of history shall be told, as told it will be in this campaign, the scurvy politician who uniformly substitutes lies for logic will hang his head in shame. As the law officer who prosecutes, the jury that tries, and the judge who sentences the lawbreaker, each in turn is denounced by the guilty culprit, it is not surprising that I have incurred the displeasure of those who were participes criminis in the late political theft of this State. I here and now declare in the presence of a citizenship to whose interests I am attached by every sentiment of gratitude and duty, which twenty years of continued confidence and support on its part can inspire; and in the presence of Him who, until the judgment day, will have no terrors for the leaders of the Republican party, that no act of my political life is the subject of less regret, and none more defensible upon principles of statesmanship, right and justice, than the humble attempt made by me to uphold the law, the honor and reputation of this State against the combined efforts of men whose leadership contrived that resolution of censure, and whose vicious conduct is only varied to-day by substituting misrepresentation and falsehood, where a year ago fraud and revolution were employed.

"In endeavoring to see peacefully seated members of the legislature, who incontestibly received a majority of the votes cast at the election, I represented the people of Montana. DR. E. D. LEAVITT, Butte City, Montana.—Among the pioneer physicians of Montana is Dr. Erasmus Darwin Leavitt. In some respects unlike what is generally supposed to be the usual type of that useful member of frontier society, we find him a man of unusual culture and refinement, and one whose gentlemanly qualities would always afford him ready access to the best society in the land, and whose professional skill, wide general knowledge and practice place him in the front rank of physicians of the great Northwest. He is a native of the State of New Hampshire. His father, who was also a physician and a native of the same State, had acquired considerable local note in that profession, and was of English ancestry. His mother's maiden name was Frances Mary Powers. She died shortly after his birth, and was buried among the granite hills where she had been born. When he was quite young his father moved to Cayuga county, in the State of New York, and for nearly ten years followed his profession in that locality. Subsequently he moved to Berkshire county, Massachusetts.

Dr. E. D. Leavitt must have carefully improved his early advantages, for at the early age of sixteen years we find him a teacher in the common schools in Massachusetts. At that time, under the inspiration of Horace Mann, the schools of that State began to assume the high reputation which has since been justly accorded them throughout the nation. For several years he followed this vocation, during which time by private study and some academical advantages, he so qualified himself as to be admitted to the sophomore class of the Wesleyan University, at Middletown, Connecticut, and he would have been readily admitted to the junior year in that college but for the rigid rules regarding the age required for admission, his youth being his only disqualification. Here for three years he so faithfully devoted himself to the study of its curriculum that soon after his graduation wise or foolish, every political act of mine in connection with the organization of the first legislature of the State of Montana, is not only approved but honored and applauded by every man whose opinion I regard.

"And so I say to the small, shriveled and arrogant beings who inspired that resolution, who are skillful only to scratch with poisoned weapons, and in seeming to see the things they do not, to take it back to their masters, and tell them that, measuring my words, and holding myself personally responsible to any man who feels himself aggrieved, I denounce their action as a wilful and deliberate perversion of history, and a weak and transparent device to avoid the responsibility of the greatest crime ever committed in Montana against the principles of popular government.

"In this contest we shall not hesitate to explore and investigate with them the domain of national politics; but we do not intend to be diverted from the first great and paramount duty of erecting once again the standard here of constitutional government and home rule, which has been assailed and overridden by the leaders of the Republican party in Montana at the behest of unscrupulous and designing politicians at Washington in order to perpetuate Republican power. Let us first clean out the Augean stables, disinfect and deodorize the senate chamber of this State, revise that arithmetic which declares seven a majority of sixteen before it takes root in our public schools, and administer to returning boards a rebuke that will linger with them as long as life lasts. In short, let us

The men who filched from us the fruits of our first victory as a State, defied her laws, and placed the bar sinister across her bright escutcheon, are now on trial before the great popular tribunal of Montana. On one side stands Liberty robed in law, in her hands the constitution for which we worked and voted, and all the interests of the people; on the other stands selfish, sordid and arrogant leadership, self-constituted and defiant, always repulsed and fairly repudiated at the polls, but resolved by brute force to again break into public office. Hundreds of honest Republicans will join hands he was selected as the principal of the Great Barrington Academy, Massachusetts, where among his duties were the teaching of Greek, Latin and higher mathematics. The reputation he maintained in that institution as its principal induced his alma mater, the Wesleyan University, to confer upon him a few years later the degree of Master of Arts.

While occupying that position the desire to follow the profession of his father rather than that of a teacher took strong possession of him, and as time permitted he began the study of medicine. The first course of medical lectures which he attended was at the Albany Medical College, New York. Subsequently he attended lectures and enjoyed instruction in medicine in the medical department of Harvard University, Massachusetts. While there, in the spring of 1859, the Pike's Peak gold excitement broke out. A friend in Iowa solicited him to join an expedition into the region now known as Colorado, for the purpose of investigating its reputed wealth. There was no time for delay. The expedition must start in a few days. The question was presented, Should he wait a month, during which he should receive little instruction and accomplish little study and secure his diploma? or should he join the proposed expedition, and perhaps acquire in a day the wealth others sought for with a lifetime of toil? The fabulous tales of gold discoveries were too alluring to be resisted. He joined, with his friend, Dr. C. R. Bissell, an expedition which had inscribed upon its banner, "Pike's Peak, or Bust," and the summer of 1859 found him a gold miner, delving in the cañons and ravines of the Rocky mountains for the promised wealth. But the dream of gold which lured so many of the first prospectors to Colorado, across the plains and sands of the Great American Desert, was realized but by very few, and the accomplished young Doctor belonged to the majority upon whom fortune did not lavish any great favors. However, with that courage and energy which characterized his efforts, he followed the fortunes of that section, at times engaged in mining, and at others pursuing his profession.

In 1862 reports reached him that the coveted gold lay with you in discrediting and defeating the dangerous, demoralizing, degrading and debasing methods of such a leadership, but to you and the Democrats of Montana must be entrusted the organization in this great crisis.

"Finally, fellow-citizens, as you love liberty, law, honor and self-government upon the one hand, and abhor deceit, fraud, corruption and venal returning boards on the other, I ask you to organize and work until the election is over; and my word for it, the Democrats of Montana, patient, tireless, vigilant, invincible, will again stand sentinels of the State, guarding faithfully her sacred honor, and proclaiming aloud the glories of constitutional government."

As the campaign progressed this issue was made more prominent and characterized by the fiercest discussion that was ever provoked in the State.

T. H. Carter, who had been elected to Congress the year before by over 5,000 majority, and who in interviews in Chicago and elsewhere had subsequently endorsed the returning board outrage, was re-nominated for Congress by the Republicans against Mr. Dixon. The result of the election wiped out the majority of Mr. Carter of the year preceding, and gave Mr. Dixon a majority, demonstrating that whenever a great principle is at stake patriotism in Montana can be appealed to with a confidence proportioned to the intelligence of the people.

Two years later Mr. Dixon was beaten for Congress by C. S. Hartman. The legislature that convened in January following was on joint ballot Democratic, and would have chosen a Democratic successor to W. F. Sanders, whose term expired in 1893, had it been left free to make a choice, uninfluenced by undue combinations. W. A. Clark, who had never flinched from his duty as a Democrat, and who, on all occasions, regardless of the bad treatment he had received at the hands of the disaffected of his party, responded freely to the call of his party in every campaign, and who had contributed more than any other one man in material aid and personal influence to the success of his party in electing a Democratic legislature, was made the caucus nominee of his party for the position of senator to succeed Mr. Sanders. He would have been properly chosen but for the interference of his old enemy, the Anaconda Mining Company. Obeying the edict of its farther to the northwest, and in its quest, in the fall of that year, he reached what is now Bannack City, Montana, of which place he was one of the founders. It soon after became the first capital of the young Territory. Being among the first arrivals he secured some good mining claims and delved for the golden treasures with pick and shovel, and not without reward. Though some success crowned his labors he soon found that he had more reputation as a physician than as a miner, and that there was greater profit, as well as fame, in allowing some one else to wield his pick and shovel while he attended to his profession. His thorough general education, his professional ability and his tact in making friends gave him pre-eminence among the physicians of the new Territory.

During the time he lived in southern Montana he enjoyed a very extensive practice which often extended, upon important occasions, into adjoining Territories, where his reputation as a physician had spread. He entertained the true Western spirit, with "a heart large enough to enfold all men as brothers." He shared the hopes and disappointments of the early miners, sympathized with them most sincerely in their misfortunes and rejoiced with them in their triumphs. When one of them in sickness called for his aid, no matter whether in poverty, lingering on some bed of pine boughs in some lowly cabin, or in some camp to which access was to be obtained only by some obscure and dangerous trail or up some unexplored mountain cañon, he answered promptly, although it may have cost him a perilous journey amid falling and drifting snows or across swollen mountain torrents. Perhaps never in any country has a physician enjoyed more fully the confidence and esteem of the people than did Dr. Leavitt that of the people of Beaverhead county, during those early and eventful years of common hardship and vicissitude.

In 1869 he returned to Harvard University and after attending another course of medical lectures there received the diploma to which he had been entitled for ten years, and which conferred upon him the degree of Doc-owners, its manager appeared at the capital, avowing his determination to defeat Mr. Clark at all hazards. He called around him a number of Democrats, over whom he seemed to have an unaccountable influence, and induced them to ignore the caucus action of the Democratic party and cast their votes for W. W. Dixon, who was the Congressman from this State, and also the attorney of the Anaconda Mining Company. By adhering to the fortunes of Mr. Dixon until the adjournment of the legislature, this little cabal succeeded in defeating the choice of the Democracy for United States senator, and no election took place, by reason of which Montana has been left for two years past without its proper representation in the United States senate.

The executive, J. E. Rickards, who had largely contributed to this result, sought to remedy this unfortunate condition of affairs by going through the farce of appointing Lee Mantle to succeed Mr. Sanders. It is needless to say that the senate rejected Mantle's appointment, saying that Montana's executive had no authority to make the same. This appointment, made by Governor Rickards, was no less astonishing to his own friends than it was surprising to the friends of the appointee.

Mr. Dixon, the leader in the Democratic party, and Mr. E. D. Matts, who led the faction that defeated Mr. Clark, in placing themselves outside the pale of party caucus and usage, thereby bringing defeat to their party, have relegated themselves to complete obscurity in their party. In the case of Mr. Matts his condemnation was emphasized in the election of November, 1894, when he was a candidate for the legislature in a largely Democratic district, and was badly defeated. His "Voice" will no longer be heard in the councils of the Democracy.

tor of Medicine. Since that time he has been admitted to several of the leading hospitals of New York city, and has there taken observations upon special and general diseases and their treatment. Among the special diseases to which he devoted much time and great attention during these protracted visits were those which pertain to the eye and ear. In pursuing his observations and studies upon these disorders he had the advantage of the instruction and skill of several noted specialists,—among them the celebrated Dr. Knapp. Dr. Leavitt is one of those physicians who not only hold that the profession of medicine is a learned one, but that it is also a progressive one. Upon his table will be found the most approved literary, scientific and medical periodicals, and these show the significant marks of careful examination.

In the struggle between law and order and the road-agents in Montana in those trying early days the Doctor was on the side of the former, but when Plummer and several of his confederates were arrested at Bannack he took the ground that they should have a fair and open trial before being executed. Many of the vigilant committee were disposed to agree with him, but their leader, who will some day, it is said, write the story himself, replied to his plea by unrolling a coil of rope and saying: "Boys, about how long shall we cut these ropes?" Delay and argument were then ended by action.

The Doctor has always taken a considerable interest in politics. When the late civil war commenced he was classed as a "War Democrat," but before it ended he found himself fully in accord with the Republican party. Owing to his recognized popularity that party, in Montana, gave him its nomination in 1876 for Delegate to Congress. At that time the Democrats had quite a majority in the Territory. He made no canvass for the position. It is just, however, to say that the usual Democratic majority in the Territory was considerably lessened that year, in spite of the fact that it was the year of the Presidential election, when partisan lines were most strictly drawn. Beaver Head county, although usually Democratic, gave him a fair majority, and Bannack, where he lived, honored him with more than two-thirds of its vote, although it was usually strongly Democratic, —a fitting tribute by those who knew him best to his individual worth.

In 1881 he was married to Miss Annie Thralkeld, an accomplished and most agreeable young lady, a native of Kentucky. To them have been born three children, two sons and a daughter. The daughter, Frances Mary, alone remains to make glad their household.

In 1884 the growing importance of the city of Butte and its promise of soon becoming the commercial and mining metropolis of Montana induced him to move to that place, where he now resides, an honored citizen and and a successful practitioner.

He is by nature a genial and agreeable gentleman courteous in his personal and professional relations and regardful of the opinions of others, though perhaps withholding his assent: he "takes each man's counsel, but

CHAPTER XXXIII.

A Sample Montana City—In the Cow Counties—Cattle—Horses—Sheep—Schoolhouses—Churches—Peace, Plenty and Universal Progress.

IT IS refreshing to get down out of the fever and fluctuations of the gold and silver and copper mines of Montana, to descend from the head to the heart, as it were. As a few of the leading mines and mining camps in the mountains must represent the story, the struggles and the triumphs of a hundred others which may be called the head, so a few of the pastoral and agricultural centers must speak for the valleys, the heart. It is pleasant, too, to forget the wars. I take first the town or city of Billings, in Yellowstone, a part of Custer county. Yet right here and over across the Yellowstone river you see the saber crossing the saber on all the maps. Here is the "Sturgis battle-ground;" there, across the Yellowstone, is the "Baker battle-ground," of 1872; up yonder in the mountains the "Custer battle-ground," of the fatal and never-to-be-forgotten June 26, 1876; a little further on, the "Crook battle-ground," of the same month and year; "Sibley's fight," "Massacre Hollow," "Fort Phil Kearney," "Fort Reno," forts all along here, up and down and right and left and away across the mountains into Wyoming.

But let us get back. Billings is young, rich beautiful, and heir apparent to untold millions. She was founded early in 1882, has 2,000 inhabitants and is half way between Portland and St. Paul. She is 240 miles from the State capital. Her two banks are in all ways solid The place looks ten times its age, if you take stately buildings as a criterion. It is possessed mainly by people from the maple regions of the north, and it is shaded by these autumnal chariots of fire. It is a city of schoolhouses and churches.

I have before me a newspaper, the Billings Gazette, published in Billings, Montana, July, 1894. It contains only fifty pages. I propose to clip the substance of several of its articles on stock-raising and agriculture.

reserves his judgment." He is guided in the matter of professional ethics not alone by the rules laid down in the printed code, but by the unwritten and fundamental principles of good breeding,—by what the highest courtesy and the most humane impulses require. He is noted for his liberality of views toward other members of the profession and is very popular with them, and they, with commendable cordiality and unanimity, not long since crowned his years of practice with professional honors by electing him to the position of president of the Medical Association of the State, immediately upon its organization. He has been also president of the Board of Medical Examiners, of which he is still a member.

His name will be most kindly recalled not only in the towns and villages and mining camps in the section of the State where he so long lived, but by many dwelling in isolated farm houses, situated on some distant mountain stream or in some lonely mountain gorge,—and this by reason of his prompt attention and his words of cheer and his skillful ministrations in the hour of distress and sickness. The "Old Timers" will always point to him with warmth and pride as their ideal pioneer doctor.

Patrick J. Hamilton, one of the earliest settlers of Butte City, and an enterprising business man in this bustling city, was born in Dublin, Ireland, in 1834, of Irish parents and ancestry. He was educated in his native country, and in 1854, when twenty years of age, he emigrated to the land of broader opportunities to make his own way in the world.

Arriving at New Orleans without money, he began his life struggle digging ditches in the swamp, in that sultry and malarious country, and at length contracted fever;

"Since the early '60s cattle have been ranged on the rolling prairies, broken lands and mountains of Montana, but with the disappearance of the buffalo the range-cattle industry attained its great proportions in eastern Montana. From 200,000 head of stock cattle ranging out-doors in 1877 the number has increased year by year until in 1893 the State auditor's books fall not far short of 1,000,000 head. The cow counties are Custer, Fergus, Dawson, Choteau and Yellowstone, these five counties holding within their lines as many or more than the balance of the State combined. Particularly in the counties mentioned was the raising of cattle on the range conducted in the truly Western mode. Supply stations or ranches were built on some living stream, enough of hay put up to feed the saddle horses of the foreman or range manager, and the brand and range recorded. Thousands of Texas cattle were driven over the trail in those early days under contract, branded and turned loose on the range, perhaps never seen again until the spring round-up.

"Double-wintered Montana Texans commanded a fancy price in 1882-3-4, as much as $6.25 per hundred being paid for these fat, grass steers on the hoof at Chicago during these years. Sections of the State which at one time were the favorite grazing ground of the cattle king are now given over to the shepherds and farmers. * * *

"A number of wealthy cattlemen reside in Billings, which they make their headquarters, and from here issue instructions to their respective range foremen. Stock yards of ample dimensions are built along the railroad right of way a mile east of Billings, from which the fall shipment of beef cattle for Chicago can be easily handled. Supplies for the large outfits of this eastern country are usually purchased in Billings, and the custom of the cow ranches has always been eagerly sought after. The returns from marketing the beef steers are had in the early fall, supplementing the returns from the wool men. These several industries are cited as parts of the fabric, making Billings prosperous and showing why it must grow.

"In latter years the cowmen have fenced claims on the water courses, securing where possible an open range, but invariably running a granger ranch along with the cattle and cutting down expenses. Cattle are known by the brand they carry and every cowboy knows the location and owner of the ranch.

and but for the kind offices of the Sisters of Charity he would have died. The following year, after he had fully recovered, he went to St. Louis, Missouri, where he was employed at the depot of the North Missouri Railroad. After working there a season he determined to break away from civilization, by going to the headwaters of the Missouri river. On his way he was in Kansas, at Lecompton and Lawrence, and at length reached Omaha, Nebraska, where he met Judge Clancy, and engaged in work for him in his brick-yard, at $30 per month. He received his pay for the first month, but for the second the Judge said he had no money, but would give a corner lot or the two inside ones for the wages, saying they would be worth $5,000 a lot inside of five years. He also desired Mr. Hamilton to take up 360 acres of land near by on a hill, saying that the capital of Nebraska would be there! and also that the great transcontinental railroad would pass that point, and in a short time the land would be worth $10,000. At that time several other places claimed the same, and Mr. Hamilton, by not following the Judge's advice, lost one of the finest opportunities of his life.

After this he worked on the Presbyterian mission on the Blackford Hills for a year, completing the work, then returned to Omaha and found the truth of the Judge's prophecy. Next he went to Decatur, Nebraska, took 160 acres of land adjoining the town site; soon afterward he was offere d$3,000 in cash for it, but he held on to it, and in 1857 the crash came and he could not sell it for a dollar! He had taken his oath of citizenship in Iowa, but when he filed on his land he had not obtained his full papers, and he was beaten out of his claim. He then worked at swamp-land ditching, making $10 a day; and as the scrip with which he was paid was worth only half its face he took 160 acres of swamp land for it, and also bought two lots in the flourishing town of Onawa, and nine lots in Decatur, Nebraska.

"In the spring there is a general round-up, ordered by the stock association, during which time the cow stock of all kinds is supposed to have been handled, calves are branded and divided up and the cattle are again turned loose, and, with the exception of the steer cattle, which are gathered in the fall, may not be again seen by their owner until the round-up next year.

"Cattle taken from our ranges in the fall are as fat as stall-fed, and usually command top prices. Average steers weigh 1,300 pounds on the hoof. The fall shipment is nowadays accomplished without any great stir; but, when an outfit used to ship ten train loads of fat steers to market and had a half hundred men looking after the job, there was a great hurrah and jollification among the cowboys.

"Every cow 'critter' or horse must be branded in Montana, or you may not be positive as to its ownership, once out of your possession. The stock association makes rules for the government of the growers, inspectors look after brands that are astray and watch the cattle offered for sale at the principal markets, Chicago, St. Paul and Kansas City, taking note of the number and brands, so that no stolen cattle may be there disposed of.

"Although there is a gradual increase in the number of cattle in the State, it is due probably to the fact of so many small farmers locating, running a small band of cattle and sheep, and keeping their stock close-herded. Stock farms in the vicinity of the Yellowstone valley, where improvement of the breed is extensively practiced, are numerous, and there are some fine dairy farms. For cows, horses, sheep and hogs there is no better feed than alfalfa, which is a principal crop in this valley.

Keeping Montana horses for home market was first induced by the demand for Western half-breeds by the big cow outfits which used them in hundreds on their ranges. When they were bred and raised for this purpose, as wild as antelope on the range, the cow pony, when once roped, choked down, blinded and saddled and hazed around the corral by a dare-devil 'broncho buster,' was declared ready for use and in early days sold for from $40 to $60. This class of horses soon fell out of demand, however, with the decadence of the range cattle business, and owners of horse ranches began to turn their attention more closely to the market demand. A better class of horses have since then been raised and improved upon from year to year, until now there are bands of as fine

In 1861 he did not have money to pay taxes, and he decided to start for the gold regions in Colorado. Crossing the plains to Denver, he met his old friend Judge Clancy, who said, "I have another fortune for you; I will give you a block in Aurora, and you can get work there; and you had not better go to the mines." Aurora was on the opposite side of the river from Denver; and the Judge said it would become an important city,—as big as Omaha before twenty years; but Mr. Hamilton again refused to take his advice, and Aurora and Denver consolidated and became all that the Judge had claimed!

Mr. Hamilton went to the mines and was employed by the firm of Lyons & Pullman, afterward celebrated; and he worked in the California Gulch, now Leadville, and also was employed in all the gulches reported rich along the Salmon river. He left Denver in July, 1862, with eight wagons and twenty-three men, reached Fort Halleck, and the commander there ordered them to stop there, saying that the Indians were very hostile and they would certainly be killed. They asked him to show his authority for stopping them, and he said he had none, but if they went on they would certainly be murdered. But they hired a good half-breed Indian for a guide, and decided to proceed. Part of the time, when there seemed to be special danger, they traveled in the night and lay concealed in the daytime.

At length they reached Salt Lake City, where they had several bitter arguments with the Mormons on the subject of the war, the latter arguing that the South would win. They called on Governor Harding and told him of their arguments with the Mormons. He put his hands to his mouth and said, "Hush! You will be fortunate if you get away with your lives!" They also had the honor of meeting his highness Brigham Young; and he asked American horses, broken or unbroken, as one would expect to see in the 'blue-grass' region of Kentucky. The breed is being improved still by better sires, better blood being infused until Montana horses are world famous. * *

"The number of range horses in Montana last year was 200,000, and of these 180,000 were in the cow counties. In rustling qualities range horses cannot be bettered. No care whatever need be extended a bunch of young horses, if to the manner born, because they can live and thrive just the same as a bunch of deer or antelope; and when the owners desire to drive them up and inspect them it is a job that arouses the country side and probably results in a broken limb for some of the wranglers and several mutilated horses. Not only horses bred on these ranges grow wild when left to run the range, but well broken States horses will in a few seasons forget their early training and flee from man like a wild thing. Given the same care and attention in Montana as in the older countries horses are as tractable and urbane as anywhere else; but in Montana the raiser seems not to have the time; and when a sale is made, a horse picked from the bunch, halter-broken and hobbled, his training is so far complete that the new owner pays a percentage additional for a broken horse. Outside of the towns no provision need be made for feeding horses except in winter; eight months out of the year a saddle horse may be ridden all day and at night. When work is over the saddle is pulled and the horse trots off to drink and munch bunch grass, and is full of life and 'pitch' in the morning. Everybody may not treat horses so, but many do, and the horses do not seem to be suffering any if the pasture is big enough."—Billings Gazette, July, 1894.

Far back in the infancy of these sober pursuits, 1866–7, I set down a table of products of the soil, so far as possible, up to that date. It is time to "round-up" again and see what has been done up to this time, 1894–5, and what is being done at railroad speed. As for the moral and intellectual growth in this center of Montana, the statistics from this publication, the mammoth publication itself, may be taken as sufficient evidence on which to rest the case.

It surely would seem, from the graves of murdered men and the many battle-grounds, that Montana had had quite enough to contend with at home. But far away at the national capital the war-whoop was heard year after year, them where they were going, and they replied, "North, in search of gold." He responded like a gentleman.

When the party arrived at Ogden they found forty large wagons there getting ready to go to the new diggings; the wagons were owned by Woodmansee & Company, Mormons. (While the party were at Ogden, General Patrick Connor's command passed them, on the way from California to Salt Lake City.) Finally, with forty-eight wagons they started north. Among the men in the train was Colonel McClain (who afterward was the first delegate from Montana Territory), Judge Bissell, Dr. Six, Dr. Woodruff and L. M. Lott. Every day something got wrong with the wagons, and they got on slowly. After traveling in that way for a week, twenty-three men and eight wagons pulled out and went on ahead, making a track for the rest. Sometimes they traveled in the daytime and sometimes in the night; and sometimes they did not make a fire, and ate their provisions raw. There were no bridges, and they crossed the rivers in any way that they could, sometimes turning their wagon-boxes into boats by calking them. They were satisfied if they could keep their sugar dry.

When camping within twenty miles of Bannack their sentinels came running in and shouting, "Indians!" They hurriedly prepared themselves as well as they could, but could not make a good corral with only eight wagons. They put out their fires, and James Kennedy went out after the Indians, and the rest followed to save him. They corraled four Indians and their horses and brought them in, intending to shoot them if the other Indians attacked them; but no attack was made, and they held a meeting in the morning to consult what they would do with the prisoners, and it was found that twelve were in favor of letting them go, and eleven for hanging them. So they gave them their breakfast and let them go, with their horses and rifles, and the company moved on.

and continually the savages sang their cruel songs and kept up the ghost dance, with faces toward Montana, till the miner was scalped and his silver mine closed. They descended upon the sheep, and wool shot up, and then shot down —down to 12 from 26! Yet not a moan came from Montana.

A writer in the Billings Gazette says:

"Previous to 1883 the wool grown in the then Territory of Montana was shipped by boat from Fort Benton and Judith Landing, on the Missouri river, to Bismarck, Dakota; thence to be shipped by rail to the wool manufacturing districts of the East. In July, 1883, the first wool to be received in Billings for transportation by rail arrived by two large ox-team outfits, consisting of twelve oxen to each team and carrying 25,000 pounds of the white and light material which we all wear.

"In 1880 the wool industry in Montana was, comparatively, in its infancy, there being but 300,000 pounds of wool shipped from the Territory in that year, but it was a beginning, and as years passed our people gained confidence in the business, until, in 1885, we shipped 2,500,000 pounds of wool,—a gradual increase up till the winter of 1886–7, when nearly one-half of the sheep died from the intense cold and hunger. Up to this time the industry had been carried on upon the open range, the year round, a sheep shed was considered the height of folly, and few of those engaged in the business thought it necessary to provide hay for winter. At that time the new industry received a black eye from which it did not recover for several years, but when people began to look into the matter in earnest, and size it up alongside of other live-stock industries, it was again believed that sheep, if properly handled, were the most profitable stock which could be raised on the range in eastern Montana. The sheep that survived the hard winter were well taken care of; a dear experience had shown the necessity of providing feed for winter, and meadows were improved and hay put up, sheds were built for the protection of the flocks during severe weather, and for use during the lambing season, and from 1888 until 1892 the business enjoyed its most prosperous period. Nearly 3,000,000 pounds of wool went through the Billings warehouses in 1892, and almost as much the succeeding year. This city is the natural depot

On arriving within four miles of Bannack City they went into camp. One man having a considerable amount of whisky along, they tapped a barrel of it, drew some into a wooden pail and drank from it with their tin cups, resulting in a great jollification. They thought themselves all right when they reached Bannack; but they found the people there as much afraid of the Indians as themselves, not knowing what moment their camp might be surrounded and wiped out; and it was the toughest mining camp ever known.

In the spring of 1863 a Californian named Cleveland came to the camp, and next day the captain of the road agents, Henry Plummer, killed him, and nothing was done or said about it! The Indians camped about five miles below them. One day the chief of the Bannacks (a good Indian who had saved many a white man's life), with two of his men, came to the camp. The gamblers and road agents began to fire at them and kill them, and one man in the affray was shot by accident! The lawless characters ruled the town all winter; and here is a sample of the language in which they used to run the gambling business: "Come up, you lazy, lousy Pike's Peaker, and bet your money; you have as good a chance to win as if you were an intelligent Californian."

At length the miners decided that they could not stand it any longer, and rose in their might as one man, saying, "We will run this camp from this on;" then Plummer, Jake Moore and others left in great haste; but the miners organized a company, under Hugh O'Neal, and sent out squads in all directions in search of gamblers, and brought them back, gave them a trial, and by their great efforts they cleaned out the worst element.

Mr. Hamilton followed mining there and obtained considerable gold. Alder Gulch was discovered May 23, 1863, by Barney Hughes, Henry Roys, Bill Sweeny (Irishmen), Tom Coover (Pennsylvania German), and Henry Edgar and Bill Fairweather (Scotch Canadians). Then there was at once a rush for Alder Gulch, and four days later Mr. Hamilton went there. When he arrived at a point within four miles of the gulch, the discoverers went and shipping point for a vast tributary sheep country, and will be greater yet with the completion of the Burlington & Missouri Railroad to Southern markets. Wool grown in Montana is classed as fine to fine medium, and being of lighter shrinkage than that of our Western neighbors commands the highest price in Eastern markets.

"The shearing season commences in early June and continues through that month and well into July. Sheep-shearers operate in crews of from six to a dozen, and during the season make the wool fly. An average day's work for an expert shearer is 100 sheep, the rate per head being from 8 to 10 cents. Double this number of sheep in a day have been handled by experts, but they are not plentiful. A good average crew can clip the fleeces from a band of from 8,000 to 10,000 sheep in a week, and in another week the wool can be rushed to the Boston, Philadelphia or Chicago market. Most of the wool from this section goes to Boston, and from there is divided up amongst the wool manufacturers of the New England States and comes back to us in the form of blankets, carpets and clothing. The highest price ever paid for a Montana clip was 26 cents.

"Usually the sheep are driven slowly over good feeding grounds to a location convenient to the shipping point, where pens for the shearing have been built, and here they are quickly divested of their fleeces by expert shearing crews. The wool is then sacked and hauled by wagon to the railroad. Sacks carry from two to three hundred pounds according to the quality of the wool. The bulk is reduced at the shipping points by means of pressure, three sacks being reduced to the compass of one.

"With the commencement of the wool season representatives of Eastern commission houses locate temporarily in Billings and watch the process of getting the wool into marketable shape, valuing the product according to the pointers gained from an intimate knowledge of the material and individual clip. Besides the Eastern men there are always a dozen wool commission houses represented by local agents, who usually get the bulk of the business. Few clips are bought outright, it being the usual plan to estimate the value and then advance the grower a certain percentage on the clip, the balance being forthcoming after the clip has been sold through the Eastern commission house.

out there and guided them in. Mr. Hamilton obtained a claim in nearly all the districts in the gulch, but while working his claims he was taken sick with malarial fever, and when he recovered, all his claims had been jumped. He had to get work at stripping ground for wages, receiving $120 a week, and continued in this employ during all the summer of 1864.

In December he went to Last Chance, and there again met his old friend Judge Clancey, who gave him his certificate of a claim there; but Mr. Hamilton, bent on stampedes in every direction all the summer of 1865, prospecting for gold, landed in the fall at Confederate Gulch and obtained one of the richest finds ever known in Montana, at Diamond City, and he and his partners averaged there $500 a day for six weeks! and worked it out. Then they purchased adjoining claims, but did not find a quarter of a dollar's worth in them! Such was the miner's luck. A man there named Jack Thompson hauled the dirt with oxen down to the water and took out $1,200 to $1,500 a day! but he afterward died poor, at Phillipsburg.

Again Mr. Hamilton started out prospecting, from one part of the Territory to another, until he finally bought an interest in a claim 2,000 feet wide on Silver creek, in Lewis and Clarke county, and worked it seven years, taking out a considerable quantity of gold, averaging $10 a day. In 1872 he sold his diggings and for a time carried on farming on land that he owned on the creek.

In 1873 he made a trip to Ireland, and engaged in business there, taking beef cattle from Ireland to England, in which he "broke." In 1875 he returned to Butte. Here he built the first log house on Broadway west of Main street, purchased several lots and became one of the active builders of the town. When he came here it was almost impossible for one to obtain work at any wages; the times were fearfully hard until Marcus Daly came from Utah and started Rainbow or Alice lode. Mr. Hamilton followed mining in Park cañon, Horse cañon and west of the town, and he also engaged in digging wells

"A sheep shearing scene is a novel affair to one used to the way of doing that act in the East, where farmers have a few hundred to handle, while our extensive growers have thousands.

"The three months of June, July and August are lively ones for the merchants of Billings. Thousands of wool sacks are sold to the growers of wool, supplies for the shearing crews are sent out by the carload, and the other classes of business begin to be strengthened by the loosening up of money, which is spent freely by the shearers and sheep men during this time. Fully 1,000 men are employed during these months in the handling of the wool clip, directly and indirectly."

I gave an estimate of the water ditches in Montana in 1866–7, and now, a quarter of a century later, set down a new table. But, be it observed, the former table was made out before one of the ditches mentioned in this chapter was even as much as contemplated. The world moves. These new ditches are for an entirely new purpose. The one was for extracting the golden dust from the gulch of the mountains; the other is for extracting the golden grain from the dust of the valleys. The following table and compressed data about water ditches is found in the same mammoth publication, and by I. D. O'Donnell, president of the Montana Irrigation Society:

"The area of Yellowstone county is 3,988,800 acres, having been increased in the fall 1892 by the cession to the government by the Crow Indians of 1,800,000 acres of ther reservation. About 460,200 acres are under irrigation ditches, and nearly 600,000 acres more are susceptible of irrigation at moderate expense. This includes the Lake Basin country, which contains about 345,600 acres capable of being irrigated by a canal from the Yellowstone, starting from near Springdale, the feasibility of which has been demonstrated by actual survey. The area of irrigable lands could be largely increased by storage reservoirs, artesian wells, the use of pulsometers, hydraulic rams, etc. The remainder of the land in the county consists of hills and broken land, useful for pasturage for range stock, which thrive and fatten on the nutritious native grasses.

"The great source of water supply for that portion of the county lying on the north side of the Yellowstone river is that magnificent and cellars and turned his hand to whatever he could get to do. He built the fine house on Broadway, and had five houses where his magnificent brick block, the Hamilton, now stands. This structure, which is 52x100 feet in dimensions, he built in 1892; it is a substantial and valuable building, three stories high, spacious, elegantly furnished, and is used for stores and offices. Mr. Hamilton now has considerable property, and at the same time he has been liberal in giving ground to the city for streets alleys, etc.

In his political principles Mr. Hamilton is independent, as he is indeed in all things, and has never had a "bite from the public crib," and would not take one had he the opportunity. He is a pleasant, kind-hearted gentleman, a member of the church, and a good representative of the pioneer of 1862.

JACOB P. MCCLAIN, a prominent pioneer farmer of the Bitter Root valley, was born near Mount Pleasant, Henry county, Iowa, April 1, 1845. He is a descendant of an old Virginia family, of both Scotch and German ancestry. His father, Jacob B. McClain, was born in Virginia in 1810, was there married, January 10, 1836, to Miss Olive Wilson, who was born in that State in 1817. They lived in Virginia until three of their children were born, then moved to Henry county, Iowa, and seven years afterward, in 1850, located in Polk county, that State. Mr. McClain died there in 1889, his wife having departed this life November 30, 1860. They raised twelve children, eight of whom still survive.

Jacob P., their seventh child, received his education in the public schools of Polk county. When sixteen years of age the great Civil war broke forth upon the country, and, after reaching an age sufficient to be accepted, he enlisted in a Nebraska regiment, to serve nine months or until the close of the struggle. He was stationed in the Indian country, and participated in several engagements. After receiving his honorable discharge, he returned home. February 18, 1865, Mr. McClain was united in marriage with Miss Emily E. Coon, who was born in Indiana, November 17, 1844, a daughter of George Coon, stream, which, having a fall ranging from ten to fifteen feet to the mile, carries an immense volume of water. Other streams of importance are the following:

"Emptying into the Yellowstone from the south: Blue, Duck, Davis, Cottonwood, Five Mile, Blue Water, Sand, Elbow, Bear Gulch, Willow and Red Lodge creeks, Clarke's Fork, Stillwater, East and West Rosebud rivers, Fiddler, Fishtail, Grove, Cow, Jack Stone, Spring, Rock, Bear, Bridger, Work, and East and West Deer creeks and West fork of Stillwater and East Boulder river.

Emptying into the Yellowstone from the north: Hibbard, Cow Gulch, Pompey's Pillar, Razor, Crooked, Twelve Mile, Five Mile, Alkali, Cañon, Valley, Hensley, Keyser and Berry creeks.

"Those tributary to the Musselshell river: Big Coulee, Painted Robe, Dean, Goulding, Half Breed, Barott, Fattic, Hauk and Carpenter creeks.

"In the Lake Basin there are several streams with no apparent outlet, viz.: Whitney, Cedar, Gurney, Adobe, Greenwood and Comanche creeks.

"The silt carried down by these streams and deposited on the land by irrigation ditches contains fertilizing material of great value, so that the land becomes richer year by year as it is irrigated and cropped, even without the addition of artificial fertilizers. Indeed it has been the exception and not the rule to manure land, and those farms which have been cropped the most frequently are to-day the most productive.

"The largest ditch in the county is that owned by the Minnesota & Montana Land and Improvement Company, a company of New York capitalists, which acquired from the Northern Pacific Railroad Company all of its land grant in the valley extending from Young's Point to below Billings, including the townsite of that thriving city. This ditch is forty miles long, twenty-five feet wide at the bottom and carries about 10,000 inches of water. It supplies water to about 20,000 acres of land.

"Our irrigating canals are equal to the best, and water is cheaper than in any section of the west. Water here costs less than 50 cents an acre, while in Utah and Colorado it costs from $1 to $3 per acre, besides paying for a costly water right. The valley tributary to Billings, a native of Belmont county, Ohio. He now resides in Indiana, aged seventy-four years. His wife departed this life in 1891, in her sixty-ninth year.

After marriage Mr. McClain farmed on his father's place, and afterward purchased a small farm. In 1868 he came up the Missouri river, on the steamer Deer Lodge, to German Gulch, in Deer Lodge county, Montana, where he followed mining a year and a half, and took out large quantities of gold during that time. He then returned to his home, but in the following spring came again to Montana, accompanied by his wife and child. The latter, Carrie Virginia, was then two years of age. She is now the wife of David Maclay, and resides near her parents. After spending one year in German Gulch, they removed to Deer Lodge valley, where Mr. McClain was engaged in raising cattle and hay for four years. Three children were born to them at that place, namely: George D., Olive and William Henry. In 1874 the family came to their present home in the Bitter Root valley, fifteen miles south of Missoula. He first purchased 160 acres, on which was a small log cabin, with a board and dirt roof, and their nearest neighbor was four miles distant. The Nez Perces Indians were plentiful, and camped near their home. Mrs. McClain was much loved by the Indian women, and, as the settlers were leaving the valley because of the fear of being massacred, one of the squaws gave her a bracelet, after first pressing it to her heart in token of her love. While in Missoula Mrs. McClain was petitioned by Whitehead, one of the chiefs, to return to them. Mr. McClain now owns 760 acres of fine farming land, and is considered one of the leading farmers of the valley. During the present year he sold cattle to the amount of $5,025. In 1891 their residence was consumed by fire, but they have since erected a large frame building. In political matters Mr. McClain has been a life-long Democrat, and has had the honor of serving his county as Commissioner.

Three children have been added to the family at their present home,—Albert Perry, Charles A. and Frederick Homer. Mrs. McClain died of heart failure during the known as the Clarke's Fork valley, is destined to be the great feeding center of this section of the country, and it is here that range calves will be fed during the winter instead of being left to take their chances on the vicissitudes of the weather and the constantly increasing overcrowding of the range. Alfalfa hay can be furnished at from $3 to $5 per ton, which is cheap feed for the stock man and leaves a handsome remuneration for the farmer. The farmer can raise from four to six tons of alfalfa to the acre and can harvest it for less than $1 per ton. He can feed it to the young stock at a time when labor is cheap, and as an additional profit he will have the manure for his land. Alfalfa is a most excellent feed, stock fattened exclusively on it having turned out equal to corn-fed. Taken altogether, hay farming is a good industry in a country like this where labor is a considerable item.

"A man can buy land on time, and, by irrigating, without further cultivation can raise sufficient natural blue-joint hay to pay for his land in three crops. This is not guess work, but has actually been done and is being done at the present time. By paying $1 per acre down, $1 per acre for fencing, he can purchase land under ditch. For $80 he can obtain water to irrigate the whole farm, and the second year he can cut 160 tons, or one ton per acre of natural blue-joint hay, which will net the farmer $5 per ton on the cars at last season's prices. He will pay for his farm in the three crops, and will have land worth $25 per acre for his profit.

"The land grows magnificent crops of wheat, oats and potatoes, which have been the crops chiefly grown, and the quality is unsurpassed. Barley grows well, and the dry season at harvest time insures it against discoloration, so objectionable to brewers. Bright barley, equal to the best California or Canadian product, will one day be a staple crop. Hops grow wild in many parts of the valley, and it would naturally follow that the hop culture may be an important industry of this valley. Small fruits and vegetables grow to perfection, and always command a good price, as besides the local demand there is a call for these products from Anaconda, Butte, Helena, Bozeman, Red Lodge, etc. Melons do well and have a fine flavor. Corn grows abundantly, 125 bushels having been raised on an acre. Experiments have been present year. She was a loving wife and mother, a kind-hearted neighbor, and a worthy member of the Methodist Church.

THOMAS NAUGHTON, one of the prosperous farmers and stock-raisers of the Big Hole valley, is located three miles south of Melrose. He is ranked with the Montana pioneers of 1864.

Mr. Naughton was born in Athlone, county Westmeath, Ireland, in the year 1837, son of Thomas and Bridget (McCormack) Naughton, both natives of that county. In their family were six sons and two daughters, Thomas being the third born and one of the three who are now living. The father died in his sixtieth year, the mother having passed away some time before. They were honest and industrious people, and were faithful members of the Catholic Church.

The subject of our sketch was married in 1858, to Miss Catherine Cummings, one of his neighbor's daughters, and soon after their marriage they set sail in the De Witt Clinton for America, where they landed after a successful voyage of thirty-one days. They remained in New York three months, during which time he worked at whatever he could get to do. Then they removed to Leavenworth, Kansas. There he was employed with a surveying party, laying out the new towns of the State. After a residence of three years in Kansas he purchased two yoke of oxen and a wagon, and with them made the perilous journey across the plains to Pike's Peak, landing at their destination in safety. In the mines at Black Hawk he secured employment at $3.50 per day, and worked there until 1864, when news of the rich gold mines in Montana induced him to direct his course hither. Again he purchased an ox team and outfit and started on another perilous journey. Ten families formed the company with which he traveled. They camped out every night and swam their oxen across the rivers, and in due time landed at Virginia City in safety. Alder Gulch at that time presented a scene of great activity. It was just after the road agents had been hung, and everything was quiet and orderly. There Mr. Naughton mined for fifteen made with broomcorn, peanuts, ground cherries and sweet potatoes, and they have been grown successfully, but only in small quantities. Among industries that yield splendid results are the raising of poultry and pork and the manufacture of butter and cheese. Butter averaged 35 cents a pound and eggs 35 cents a dozen for the last season. Hogs can be successfully raised on alfalfa, and require grain only to complete the fattening process. The fall exhibition of the Yellowstone Fair Association, of which two have been held, were like a revelation even to many residents of the county, as demonstrating the varied and vast resources of the soil. They were probably the only successful fairs, from an agricultural point of view, held in the State, and each was held without special preparation by the exhibitors. Our next one, to be held September 18th to 21st, will no doubt greatly surpass the former ones, as special efforts will be made to produce exhibits of more than usual merit. Taking it altogether, the farmer who has used irrigation will not willingly return to farming in a country where the climate does not require it or the conditions do not favor it.

"Appended are a few reports from farmers as to what was actually done by them last year:

"Daniel Lamy, Billings postoffice, on his homestead of 160 acres produced in 1893 the following: Alfalfa, 100 tons; 50 tons of blue-joint hay, which he sold loose for from $8 to $9 per ton; 5,000 pounds of potatoes; 22,000 pounds of oats; 240 bushels of wheat off seven acres; sold 780 pounds of butter at an average price of 33⅓ cents; 312 dozen eggs at an average of 30 cents; besides raising all vegetables needed for his family and some to sell. Wintered 50 head of stock. Bought 35 inches of water, at a cost of $70. Himself and small boy did all the work.

George Murr, Billings postoffice, has 160 acres and farms 55 acres, balance to pasture. He raised in 1893 100 tons of alfalfa; 240 bushels of oats on five acres; 41 bushels of wheat on one acre; 150 bushels of corn and fodder. He also raised $1,500 worth of small fruits and vegetables as follows: 2,100 quarts of strawberries; 1,200 quarts of raspberries; 1,900 quarts of blackberries, which sold on an average of 20 cents a quart; 300 dozen bunches of celyears, a portion of the time working by the day and at other times operating a claim of his own. He had the usual luck of a miner, nearly always getting some gold, but as the expense of mining was great his operations were not on the whole successful. Finally in 1880 he decided to quit mining and turn his attention to stock-raising, and accordingly came to his present location. Here he homesteaded 160 acres and pre-empted 120 acres, and to this has since added forty more, all of which he has developed into a fine farm.

Mr. and Mrs. Naughton have three children, Edward H., Mary C. and Catherine, all at home. The family are members of the Catholic Church, and in politics Mr. Naughton votes with the Democratic party. He takes an active interest in local affairs, and has served efficiently as School Trustee and Judge of Election.

J. G. SMITH, one of Montana's earliest pioneers, was born in Georgia, October 7, 1827. His grandfather, Charles Smith, was a soldier in the Continental army during the Revolutionary war. Our subject's father, John Smith, was born in South Carolina, where his ancestors were among the early pioneers. He married a Miss Kittle, a native of North Carolina, and her family were also among the first settlers of that State. They had ten children, four of whom are now living. The mother died while comparatively young, and the father lived to a good old age.

J. G. Smith, the second child in order of birth in the above family, was reared to manhood in his native State, and his advantages for an education were very limited. He began life on his own account when quite young, and also aided in the support of his family until thirty years of age. February 24, 1860, he left his home for the Colorado gold excitement, in company with seven others, secured passage for $60 each, and crossed the plains with horses and wagons, having spent only eighteen days in going from Leavenworth to Denver. After arriving in the latter city Mr. Smith followed placer mining at Gregory Point one year, for the following year mined for wages at Gregory Gulch, went with the Swan river stampede, but, meeting with only moderate success there, returned to the Arkansas river, below California Gulch, where he was engaged in rocking during the winter. After spending a short time at Denver, he came to Monery; 8,000 cabbages, besides potatoes, carrots, tomatoes and several hundred melons. He wintered 3,000 sheep last winter on his alfalfa and pasture.

"Hesper Farm (Bailey & O'Donnell, Billings) consists of 640 acres. In 1893, 100 acres used as pasture; 200 acres to alfalfa, cut 1,000 tons in three crops; 200 acres in blue-joint and timothy, from which were cut 200 tons of hay, which was bailed and shipped at $9 per ton; 100 acres of oats, which produced 168,000 pounds, sold surplus oats at 85 cents per hundred-weight; 100 bushels of wheat; 100 bushels of corn; 30,000 pounds of potatoes; 50 bushels of apples; 320 quarts of currants; 500 quarts of berries, and vegetables needed on the ranch for the year. Bought 150 inches of water, at a cost of $300. One man did all the irrigating, which for the season did not amount to over two and a half month's work. He wintered 10,000 head of sheep at 50 cents; 1,100 head of calves at $2.50, and 100 horses at $10.

"W. O. Parker, Billings, farms 160 acres; crop in 1893—1,300 bushels of oats, 1,500 bushels of corn in the ear. Raised all his vegetables and some to sell; keeps small dairy and poultry, which give weekly income all the year; also keeps from fifteen to twenty-five bushels of wheat, 1,500 bushels of potatoes, hogs, which pay a good profit; buys 75 inches of water, at a cost of $150. This ranch was new three years ago.

"Frank Summers has 100 acres near Forest Siding, Billings postoffice. Farms 70 acres, balance to pasture. Raised in 1893—55 tons of blue-joint and timothy; 70 tons of alfalfa off 13 acres; 200 bushels of shelled corn off 4 acres; sold blue-joint at $9 per ton. Wintered 300 head of sheep and 12 head of horses, and had 20 tons of alfalfa left; also had some butter and eggs for sale; used 30 inches of water, at a cost of $20.

"Edward O'Donnell, farm of 150 acres. Raised in 1893, 125 tons of alfalfa and timothy; sold most of his hay for $7 to $9 per ton, loose; had 150 bushels of wheat; 600 bushels of barley, large yield and bright; 400 bushels of oats; 300 bushels of corn; 2,500 bushels of potatoes;

tana, arriving in Bannack, June 2, 1863, where he worked for wages during the first month. Mr. Smith then had charge of a mining claim for J. M. Wood, at Alder Gulch, for over a year, and during that time took out about $30,000 in gold. He then formed a partnership with Jesse Bean, later mined on his own account; in 1865 purchased claims at Last Chance gulch; also engaged in lumbering, and spent about thirteen years at that place. In 1879 he came to Boulder valley, and at that time the place contained only a hotel and saloon, the former kept by Hiram Cook, and the latter by William Deacy. Mr. Smith immediately purchased claims and mined on the Little Boulder, and has ever since continued in that occupation, but his claims are now leased. Since 1880 he has been engaged in other pursuits in Boulder, and has a valuable lot in the business part of the town, 100 x 150 feet, on which he has erected a brick block and livery stable. Mr. Smith has the honor of having been the first Mason in the Territory of Montana, having joined that order in Nevada City, in 1864, has filled all the offices in his lodge, and is now a member of Boulder Lodge, No. 41, and also a Royal Arch Mason. In political matters he is with the Democratic party.

JOHN S. ROBERTSON, a prominent farmer of the Bitter Root valley, was born in Tennessee, September 25, 1839, a son of James and Nellie (Niece) Robertson, natives also of that State. Five sons and a daughter were born to Mr. and Mrs. Robertson in Tennessee. In the fall of 1845 the family moved to Missouri, where the father died in 1850, at the age of thirty-five years. The mother survived until sixty years of age. She was a worthy member of the Presbyterian Church.

John S., the third child in order of birth, was raised in Missouri, and received only limited educational advantages. He began life on his own account at the age of twenty years, as a farmer, in Missouri, and became a land owner before the great Civil war. September 20, 1861, Mr. Robertson enlisted in the Confederate army, in the Third Missouri Battalion, served in Missouri and Tennessee, and was appointed commander of an expedition to take horses to Texas. After returning home he rejoined his company at Vicksburg, and took part in the battle of Champion Hill, where he was taken prisoner, but soon afterward paroled. Having then served a longer time than his enlistment required, Mr. Robertson returned home, but two months afterward, with a mule 500 bushels of onions; 2,000 head of cabbage, besides small vegetables, etc. Wintered 300 head of his own stock; used 80 inches of water, at a cost of $80. Farm is two miles west of of Billings.

"From one acre of ground, Charles King, near Laurel, produced over 1,200 bushels of potatoes in 1892. The ground and potatoes were measured by three disinterested persons, who made affidavit before a notary public, giving this the actual yield. This is believed to be the largest yield of potatoes ever grown in the United States upon a single acre of ground.

A number of other crop reports from this valley are on file in my office, but the foregoing gives an idea of the result of farm irrigation. The crops are prolific and increase from year to year as the scientific principle of irrigation becomes more thoroughly understood."

The church history of Montana, Catholic and Protestant, early and recent, would alone fill the lids of this book; but, as we approach the conclusion, there is space only for barely an example of what has been done and is being done now, at the end of the nineteenth century of the Christian era. Here, in brief, is the story of the work in this one place, Billings, a spot where battles were fought and buffalo fed on the treeless, alkali plain only yesterday,—this is Billings:

The following review is by the Rev. P. B. Jackson, pastor of the Congregational church, and from the same publication:

"Immaterial forces elude definite measurements. A man's body you may measure or weigh to the fraction, but his love, patriotism, mental power,—these will not submit to such definiteness. Yet these immaterial forces are very real. We feel them, we see their work, we bank on their reality and power. The religious life of a community is one of these forces. It can only be estimated, and estimated from what it has done and is doing. No just estimate of a community can be had until we take into account the religious life of the community. The church is as much an integral team, crossed the plains to Denver, Colorado, having spent two months on the road. After arriving at that city he learned of the discovery of gold at Alder Gulch, Montana, whither he came and where he worked for wages four months. In the fall of 1864 he located on his present farm in the Bitter Root valley, then Government land, and has added to his original purchase until he now owns 406 acres. Mr. Robertson lived in a log house until 1888, when he erected his fine brick residence, one of the best in the valley.

In 1869 our subject was united in marriage with Miss Eva Arnold, a native of California. After her father's death her mother married a Mr. Price. Mr. Robertson was made a Master Mason in Arkansas, in December, 1862. He and his wife are members of the Methodist Church, in which the former has held the office of Steward for a number of years. In political matters he affiliates with the Democratic party, has held the important position of County Commissioner, but resigned that office to give his entire attention to his family and farm. Mr. Robertson is a self-made man, having received his education in the dear school of experience, has succeeded in all his undertakings financially, and has won the good will of his fellow-men.

WILLIAM KELLY, a successful farmer of the Bitter Root valley, was born in Ireland, in 1837. When only a lad of fifteen years he voluntarily left his native land for America, and his first work here was in a factory in Connecticut, for which he received fifty cents a day and boarded himself. Being an active and willing worker his wages were soon advanced to $2 a day. From 1857 until 1861 Mr. Kelly worked in a woolen factory, where he also received $2 per day. In the latter years he crossed the plains to California, via the Isthmus, immediately began gold-mining in Yreka, from 1862 to 1868 mined with good success in Florence, Idaho, and in the latter year joined his brother Owen in Deer Lodge county, Montana. They mined for a time at the head of Deer creek, afterward went to Cedar creek, and then decided to purchase land in the rich Bitter Root valley. The brothers located side by side, our subject securing 320 acres, on which he has ever since resided. For the past three years his wheat has averaged forty bushels to the acre, his oats sixty bushels, and during the present year his potatoes yielded 300 bushels to the acre. Since their residence in Montana, the brothers have been extensively engaged in the stock business, and have met with the success that their enterprise and fidelity deserve.

part of the public life as the bank or the store. Its success or want of success is a pretty fair index to the drift of the moral life of a community. * * *

"There are four churches in the city,—the Congregational, the Protestant Episcopal, the Methodist Episcopal and the Roman Catholic, established in the order named. All except the Catholic have services every week, conducted by a resident pastor. Father Coopman, of Livingston, Montana, supplies the Catholic church once every month. The life of these churches is a fair register of the moral and religious life of the town. A short sketch of each of these is all that can be given in this brief article.

"The Congregational Church was the first church organized. It was started in the spring of 1882, and is, consequently, as old as the town. Hon. A. Fraser, Colonel Lucius Whitney and Edgar B. Camp were the first trustees and incorporators. Rev. Benjamin F. Shuart, a missionary of the Congregational Church, was the first pastor. He began his work in the early spring of 1882 without a church, a congregation or a home. In the latter part of that year the trustees, acting for the young church, had a small frame structure, '20 x 22, with 12-foot posts, six windows and one door,' erected on the lots where the present church building stands. This structure was of the crudest kind, not ceiled or plastered, the cracks being stopped with battens. At the back of this building a 'lean-to' of two rooms was built, and this served the purpose of a parsonage, so that the reverend gentleman could walk out of his bed chamber into his pulpit, after counting the stars through the roof of his 'lean-to' at night. Such was the birthday of the church.

"In 1883 Hon. Frederick Billings, of Woodstock, Vermont, donated $12,000 for the erection of the neat and commodious building. The Minnesota & Montana Land and Improvement Company and the owners of the Foster addition donated the lots, the church raised the rest of the funds necessary, and October of this year saw the dedication of a beautiful church, which cost $14,000, and work begun on a comfortable parsonage. About this time Mr. Shuart resigned and Rev. A Stryker Wallace

When the Nez Perces Indians threatened the lives and homes of the settlers of the Bitter Root valley, Mr. Kelly volunteered in the service, and served at the Lo Lo, under Captain King. They succeeded in preventing a fearful massacre.

Mr. Kelly has never married. His mother made her home with him until her death, at the age of ninety years. The Kelly Brothers are among the many brave sons of Ireland who have sought and found independence and a competency in a foreign land.

CHARLES THOMAS STARK, who resides on a farm near the city of Deer Lodge, is ranked with the early pioneers of Montana and has an extensive acquaintance all over the State.

Mr. Stark is a descendant of Welsh ancestry and springs from a family who were early settlers of the State of Virginia. His father, Lewis Stark, was born in Tennessee in 1808, and was reared and married there, his wife, nee Nancy Lawrence, also being a native of Tennessee and a descendant of one of the old Southern families. Some years after their mrrriage they removed with their family of three children to Missouri, where Mr. Stark was engaged in farming up to 1852, at that time crossing the plains to California. That was known as the cholera year. While the Stark family was en route to California the loving wife and mother was a victim of that dread disease and died within twelve hours from the time she was stricken with it. Her death and burial out on the lonely plains is the saddest event within the memory of our subject. An uncle of his shared the same fate. The remains of both rest near the Little Blue river. From these new-made graves by the wayside the sorrowing family turned away and proceeded on their long and tedious journey, finally reaching their destination in safety and locating in Plumas county. There the father was engaged in mining for a number of years. He then removed to Santa Barbara county and remained there until 1890, when he returned to Plumas county. At the latter place he spent his last days, and died in the eighty-third year of his age. Of his seven children, five are living, Charles T. being the second in order of birth.

Charles T. Stark was born in Tennessee, December 8, 1833. His early life was spent in that State and Missouri, he being nineteen at the time he made the journey with succeeded him as pastor, taking charge of the work November 1, 1883. Mr. Wallace was pastor for eight years, resigning his office in October, 1891. Mr. Wallace is, perhaps, more fully identified with the history of the church than any one else, while Mr. Shuart may be called its founder. In August, 1892, Rev. Charles Hall Cook became the pastor. His pastorate lasted eighteen months. On February 1, 1894, the writer of this article succeeded Mr. Cook, and is the present incumbent. The church now has an active membership of about seventy people, six lots, a comfortable and well-arranged parsonage, and an elegant church building, well-seated, lighted by electricity, and centrally located. The entire property is valued at $20,000. Its history has been one of hard work, with a fair measure of progress, and it is now thoroughly established, and faces the future with courage and purpose.

"In 1883 Bishop Leigh Richmond Brewer, S. T. D., began the work of the Episcopal Church. The bishop organized the work as a mission, and services were held at first by Rev. William Horsfall, of Miles City, and Rev. Frank B. Lewis, of Bozeman, the latter of whom took sole charge of the work in May, 1893. The mission was thoroughly organized and named St. Luke's. A missionary committee was appointed, and eighteen communicants formed the original membership.

"In January, 1884, this mission, with St. Andrews at Livingston, was committed to the care of Rev. Alfred Brown. They had no church building, services were held in the new depot of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, and in such other rooms as could from time to time be secured in the infant city. In July, 1886, a neat little frame church was opened on the South Side, and the congregation took up its home in permanent quarters. In 1887 the work had grown to such an extent as to warrant a resident clergyman, and Mr. Brown gave his entire time to this field. Mr. Brown's labors with the church ended in 1888, and the same year Rev. Charles H. Linley, A. B., of Cambridge, England, succeeded Mr.

his father and family to California. After his arrival in the Golden State he was for some years engaged in placer mining and later turned his attention to packing merchant dise with a mule train, going from Marysville and Bidwell's bar to the different mining camps in the State. Many were the exciting experiences he had while thus engaged. On one occasion one of his mules packed an iron safe weighing 600 pounds, and at another time he freighted in the same way a cannon which weighed 400 pounds. The trail led over a snow-covered mountain. The mule with the cannon on its back made a mis-step and went plunging into the snow, cannon at the bottom and mule on top. It was with great difficulty that Mr. Stark and the only man he had with him succeeded in getting the beast and its burden righted. At one time he had as many as thirty pack mules in his train, each carrying from three to four hundred pounds. After operating in California for some time, he went to Idaho and packed to Boise Basin.

It was in 1865 that Mr. Stark came to Montana, his journey hither being made from Walla Walla with a pack train of flour for Mr. Snow at Helena. He continued in this business until 1866, when he sold out and purchased a dairy farm in Deer Lodge county, settling down on it and selling his product to the miners, receiving a dollar a gallon for milk and a dollar a pound for butter. He subsequently owned 320 acres of land near Pioneer, where he raised hay and stock, and still later had a farm of 320 acres six miles east of Drummond. On the latter place he resided fourteen years. He then sold out for $7,000 and removed to Deer Lodge. Here he purchased thirty-six acres on the east side of the town and on this property erected a commodious residence and made other valuable improvements, its close proximity to the city rendering it a most desirable property. Mr. Stark also owns a stock ranch and is raising cattle in Cascade county.

In March, 1874, Mr. Stark married Mrs. Fidelia Bullard, a native of Iowa, a daughter of David Mayard and a descendant of German ancestry. She has one daughter by her first husband—Fairie, now Mrs. H. Evans—and she and Mr. Stark have two children, Edna Gertrude and Charles Thomas, Jr., both born in Deer Lodge county.

While Mr. Stark is not a politician, he takes a commendable interest in public affairs, votes with the Democratic party, and has served his county one term as County Commissioner.

Brown in the work of the growing mission. His work closed in 1890, and in July of the same year Rev. Herbert Giles Sharpley, B. A., took charge by appointment of Bishop Brewer. Mr. Sharpley was forced, on account of failing health, to give up the work late in 1892. Rev. C. H. Reinsberg, M. A., Princeton General Theological Seminary, New Jersey, by appointment of the bishop, took charge of the work the first Sunday in September, 1893, and is the present incumbent. The communicants at present number 45. The Sunday-school has about thirty members.

"The Methodist Episcopal Church was established some time in 1886. It has a valuable property on the North Side, a brick building for worship, and a good parsonage on the adjoining lots. It has recently lighted the building with electricity. Rev. J. W. Jennings is the present pastor.

"The Roman Catholic Church was organized in the summer of 1887. It has a good property in the western part of the town, valued at $4,000. Its house of worship is built of brick, and is the work of a few of the consecrated Catholic women of the early days of the town.

This much as a specimen of church progress in the eastern part of Montana. The following terse official data of general as well as church history is from the other extreme, and the oldest county in Montana:

MISSOULA, MONT., Sept. 19, 1894.

JOAQUIN MILLER, ESQ., The Heights, Oakland, Cal.

Dear Sir:—Replying to your recent favor I have made as many inquiries as possible, but even now am not in a position to give you very much information.

The first school was opened in Missoula with an enrollment of nine pupils; there are at present about 600 pupils.

The first church was the Methodist, at Missoula, in 1873, the present number of churches being nine.

The number of Indians in this county when first organized, about 1,400; there are now about 2,100; and about 160 United States soldiers.

RICHARD LOCKEY.—One of the early-day business men and one of the most esteemed residents of Helena is Hon. Richard Lockey. He came to Montana in the '60s, arriving in Helena, the present capital city, in 1866, and here establishing himself in the mercantile business in 1871. He has prospered with the city, and is now one of her wealthy, honored and influential citizens.

Mr. Lockey is a native of England, having been born in Yorkshire, in the year 1845. He was brought to America when a child, and was reared to maturity at Dubuque, Iowa. At the breaking out of the late war of the Rebellion he joined the Fremont Hussars at Patterson, Missouri, and served throughout the war, participating in numerous campaigns, notable among which was that of Sherman's expedition into Alabama.

The Union arms having finally proved victorious, our subject laid aside the accoutrements of war, returned to Dubuque, Iowa, and resumed the educational discipline, which he had summarily interrupted to go forth in the defense of the country whose cause he espoused as patriotically as could any native son of the Republic. He attended the Bayliss Commercial College at Dubuque and graduated at that institutton. After coming to Helena he gave his attention for a time to the study of law, bu never engaged in the practice of the profession.

In his business career he has been a merchant and a real-estate conveyancer, and in both lines of enterprise he has been particularly successful. Politically he has wielded a marked influence in shaping the affairs of the city, and of the Territory which has proved worthy of the granted crown of State-hood. He has served as a member of the Legislature, and, in a more local way, as a member of the City Council and the School Board of Helena, besides having been the incumbent in other positions of public trust and responsibility.

Mr. Lockey is a man of broad intellectual grasp, is an advanced thinker, has always been prominent in the discussion of public affairs and has ever given a strong support to such measures and enterprises as tend to conserve the public welfare. He is also an appreciative patron of fine arts and of all other elements which lend to the higher embellishment of life. After his children had completed their preliminary discipline in completing the course of study in the Helena public schools, he sent them to Europe that they might there enjoy the wider opportunities afforded for finishing their education.

The names of a few of the oldest settlers are as follows: Frank Woody, date of arrival, 1862; Dwight Harding, 1856; J. K. Rinehard, 1867; W. H. H. Dickinson, 1869; Capt. C. P. Higgins, 1862; and W. J. McCormick, 1868.

Yours respectfully,

JAMES BURKE, Co. Clk. and Rec.

The following, copied from the same source, shows that the enterprising breeders of thoroughbreds come legitimately by "Spokane" and the gold cup of Kentucky. They are now reaching out for the gold cup of the globe. The peaceful picture of the once warlike and treacherous Crow Indian is pleasant to contemplate:

"The Yellowstone Fair Association has outstripped its competitors elsewhere in the State, increasing year by year its agricultural exhibits and in no way diminishing its encouragement for racing events. The fair and races have kept well along together, and it has never been the case, as so frequent elsewhere, that horse-racing has detracted from the other features of the annual meeting. Everybody in the Yellowstone valley takes a peculiar interest in the fair; nearly every land-owner is a shareholder in the association and looks to its success as he would to his own, so there is no likelihood of the interest abating.

"To an Eastern man the regular visitation of the Crow tribe of Indians to these annual exhibitions is a source of great interest. The aborigines move their belongings, pony herds, dogs, squaws, pappooses and entire camp equipage from the reservation to the vicinity of the fair-grounds every year and go into camp for a week. Their larder is kept well supplied by the fair association, many cattle and sheep being butchered for their entertainment, and wagon-loads of melons, in which the Crow rejoices to an almost African joy, are donated by the association. The Crows have many good race horses and ponies and every day of the meeting they are given opportunities to race in their own uncouth manner, besides foot races and hurdle races in which only the Indians are permitted to join. Each year they have a big dance in the camp and the monotonous boom-boom of the tom-toms is heard all night."

He has a most attractive home, on Eighth avenue, where Mrs. Lockey, formerly a Miss Jeffrey, of Leavenworth, presides over a model family circle. They have had five children, but only two—Miss Mollie and Mr. Richard—survive.

THE WILSON BROTHERS Frank K. and Hugh J. Wilson, who compose the firm whose name initiates this review—are two of the most prominent and highly respected business men of Butte City, Montana, natives of Portage county, Ohio.

John Wilson, the father of these gentlemen, was born in Ireland and when he was seven years old came to America. He was reared in Ohio and was married in Mahoning county, that State, to Miss Sarah Doherty, a native of Ohio and a descendant of Irish and German ancestors. After their marriage they settled on a farm in Portage county, where they reared their family of nine children, all of whom are still living, where the father died in 1892, at the age of sixty-five years; and where the mother is still living, now in her sixtieth year.

Hon. Frank K. Wilson, the senior member of the firm of the Wilson Brothers, was born June 15, 1861. He attended college at Valparaiso and graduated there, and after his graduation he came direct to Butte City, Montana. For two years he was principal of the Walkerville schools, at the end of which time he resigned his position in order to engage in merchandising with his brother at Walkerville. They still run the store there, he having full charge of it; and they are also interested in various other enterprises. In 1892 he was elected to represent Silver Bow county in the State Legislature. At that election he received the largest vote of any Democrat in the district.

Hugh J. Wilson, the junior member of the firm, was born October 14, 1864. He was educated in the public schools and in the Ada Normal College, of which institution he is a graduate, and for five years he was engaged in teaching school, up to 1886, at which time he came to Montana and embarked in business with his brother at Walkerville. They have since done a wholesale and retail grocery business and have met with excellent success.

In 1889 the Wilson brothers, in company with others, became owners of land on East Broadway in Butte City, on which property, in 1893, the Messrs. Wilson and J. L. Hamilton completed the erection of the Butte Hotel.

CHAPTER XXXIV.

THE BENCH AND BAR—CHANGES ON THE BENCH—ACQUISITIONS TO THE BAR—MINERAL LANDS AND LAWS—IMPORTANT DECISIONS—DEFECTIVE LAWS—COMMENTS ON THE CONSTITUTION.

1880–1894.

BY EX-CHIEF JUSTICE WADE.

SOON after the January (1879) term of the Supreme Court, Justice Knowles resigned for the purpose of resuming the practice of his profession, and was succeeded by William J. Galbraith, of Iowa, as associate justice.

The services of Justice Knowles had been of the highest value to the jurisprudence of the Territory. Slow to form opinions, conscientious, full of the courage that comes from honesty of intent and purpose, of strong convictions, a careful thinker, patient and plodding, his judgment was broad and comprehensive, and he always had the full confidence and respect of the people. After practicing at the bar for ten years, he was appointed, by President Harrison, United States District Judge, for the district of Montana, upon the admission of the Territory as a State.

The term of Justice Blake having expired, he was succeeded as Associate Justice in March, 1880, by Everton J. Conger, of Illinois.

The services of Justice Blake on the bench, though not for so long a period as Justice Knowles, were marked with great ability and care. Born and reared in Boston, a student by nature and education, familiar with all the history of Montana and one of its pioneers, having a perfect knowledge of every statute of the Territory and of every decision of its courts, he could not fail to perform good service on the Supreme Bench. He served his country faithfully in the war of the Rebellion. He was Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the Territory from March, 1889, until its admission as a State in November, 1889, and was elected Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the

This building is 100 x 120 feet, has four stories and a basement, and its location is one of the best in the city. Its 120 guest chambers are arranged singly and en suite and with baths. All the rooms are exceptionally large, light and airy, have outside exposure and are provided with fire escapes. The dining room, reception rooms and writing and reading rooms are tastefully designed and beautifully furnished, and office accommodations and corridor space are alike ample. The incandescent system of electric lighting has been used throughout the building, and the newest and most artistic designs in brass fixtures have been adopted. The furniture in the house is of the very best and compares favorably with that of any hotel in the Northwest. The chamber suits are of oak and are perfect in finish and design. The carpets are velvet, Axminster and Brussels. Every bedstead is equipped with Bushnell springs and the finest curled-hair mattresses. There are also commodious and appropriately furnished sample rooms. Indeed, the greatest care and most exquisite taste have been used in the fitting and furnishing of the whole establishment, and the most fastidious guest can find every comfort and luxury here. Mr. Hugh J. Wilson is president of the company which built the hotel, and is also it smanager, giving it his entire attention. He and his brother are also members of the Silver Bow Sheep Company, and have an interest in several large ranches.

Both gentlemen affiliate with the Democratic party and are members of the Knights of Pythias and other fraternal organizations.

State, which office he held until January, 1893, when he was succeeded by W. Y. Pemberton as Chief Justice.

At the date of the succession of Justices Galbraith and Conger, in 1879-80, the population of the Territory had greatly increased, and with it the number of the lawyers and the business of the courts.

Besides those already named, the lawyers in active practice in the Territory at this time were Robert P. Vivion, George F. Cowan, J. A. Kanouse, H. M. Porter, I. R. Porter, Benjamin T. Porter, H. R. Comly, Merritt C. Paige, United States attorney, from 1872 to 1877, drowned in the Madison river May 13, 1877; Thomas M. Pomeroy, Frank H. Woody, John J. Donnelly, Patrick Talent, John F. Forbis, H. Hunt, Horace R. Buck, F. J. McBride, George C. Randolph, James S. Dryden, United States attorney, J. W. Strevell, John T. Baldwin, William O. Speer and W. T. Piggott.

And among those who commenced the practice during the years 1881-2-3-4, and later, during the Territorial period, were M. Kilpatrick, Max Waterman, W. B. Settle, William C. Casterline, Henry F. Titus, Andrew F. Burleigh, I. D. McCutcheon, W. H. Trippett, John H. Duffey, E. D. Edgerton, Thomas H. Carter, M. H. Parker, B. D. Powers, W. A. Burleigh, R. B. Smith, William Wallace, Jr., L. J. FRANCIS M. MCGUIRE, one of Fort Benton's successful business men, was born at Sweet Springs, Pettis county, Missouri, November 23, 1854, of Irish ancestry.

His parents, John and Betty (Phips) McGuire, were natives of Kentucky, who after their marriage moved to Missouri, locating upon a farm which he (John McGuire) had purchased, and where they raised their children, five sons and three daughters. Mr. John McGuire served in the Union army, under General Sigel, was captured at the battle of Lexington and paroled. His wife died in his forty-fifth year, and he lived to be seventy-five years of age.

Francis M., their fifth child, remained in Missouri until her sixteenth year, and then, in 1871, came overland to Montana, with horses and oxen. He rode a saddle horse and drove stock all the way through. For a number of years afterward he made the herding of stock his entire business, being for several years in the employ of the Fort Benton & St. Louis Cattle Company, in which the Conrads were largely interested. In 1890 he came to Fort Benton, engaging in the butchering and meat market business. The firm is now McGuire and Collins, who own the Central Meat Market and have the exclusive business of the town. Mr. McGuire is an obliging and competent man in his business, and enjoys the good-will and trade of the whole city.

He was married January 25, 1888, to Miss Kittie Whalen, who was born at Fort Buford, Montana, the daughter of Patrick Whalen. Mr. Whalen is a Montana pioneer and was a soldier of the United States army. Mr. and Mrs. McGuire have one child, born at Fort Benton, namely, Francis Marion, Jr. They are members of the Catholic Church, and he is a member of the A. O. U. W. In politics he is a Republican. He is an active business man, giving his whole attention to his calling, and being rated as one of the most reliable citizens of Fort Benton.

P. F. RILEY, one of the representative business men of Elkhorn, was born in Ireland, December 29, 1849. His father, Hugh Riley, was born and raised in that country, and was there married to Miss Ellen Matthews. In 1853

After the retirement of Justices Knowles and Blake, as before that time, mining litigation continued to occupy a large share of the attention of the courts, and little by little the system of the mining law continued to grow.

In the case of Pardee vs. Murray (4 Montana, 234) the Supreme Court, by Wade, C. J., held that possession of the surface of a lode claim is possession of all veins, lodes and ledges whose tops or apexes are within the surface lines; that no adverse possession could become operative by going outside the surface boundaries and sinking a shaft upon what was claimed the family emigrated to America, locating at Brooklyn, New York, where they remained until the father's death, in 1872, at the age of seventy-three years. The mother departed this life in 1881, aged eighty years. They had ten children, nine of whom are still living. Three sons served in the Union army during the late war, and one in the navy.

P. F. Riley, the subject of this sketch, received his education in the public schools of Brooklyn, where he also learned the copper and tin smith's trade. He followed that occupation several years in Brooklyn, and in 1867 went to San Francisco, via the isthmus, where he remained nine years. In 1872 Mr. Riley removed to Diamond City, Montana, immediately engaged in mining, and while at Eldorado Bar made as high as $25 a day for one year. In 1882 he engaged in silver mining in Elkhorn, and is now the owner of the Diamond claim, located on old Baldy. Ore taken from this mine has assayed 300 ounces to the ton, and when put in operation will no doubt prove a very valuable mine. Mr. Riley has built a good residence and business building in Elkhorn, also owns five other buildings in this city, and has been engaged at his present occupation since 1889.

November 12, 1877, he was united in marriage with Miss H. H. Lloyd, a native of Townsend, Montana, and a daughter of John Lloyd, who came to this State in 1862. He now resides on a farm in Townsend, on which he located soon after coming to this State. Mr. and Mrs. Riley have eight children, born in Montana, Frank, Irene, John, James, Jesse, Blanche, Peter and George. During his entire political history, Mr. Riley has been a stanch Democrat. In his social relations, he is a charter member of the I. O. O. F. and the K. of P.

William Francis Kirby, proprietor of the Windsor Restaurant and Northern Pacific Livery and Feed Stables, also a prominent contractor and builder, is actively identified with the business interests of Livingston, Montana.

Mr. Kirby is a native of Missouri, was born in Linn county, in the year 1842, son of William and Mary (Fen-as another location, but which the jury found to be the same, and that in case of a cross vein the prior locator is entitled to all the ore or mineral within the space of intersection, but the subsequent locator has the right of way through such space. (See State Supreme Court, by Dewitt, J., in King vs. Amy and Silversmith Con. Mining Co., 9 Montana, 543, and the Supreme Court of the United States, by Field, J., in the same case, 154, U. S.; also, Iron Silver M. Co. vs. Elgin M. Co., 118 U. S. 196; Flagstaff S. M. Co. vs. Tarbet, 98 U. S., 469; Argentine M. Co. vs. Terr. Mining Co., 122 U. S., 485; Iron Silver M. Co. vs. Cheeseman, 116 U. S., 533; The Eureka Case, 4 Saw., 311.)

In the case of Russell vs. Chumasero et al., the court, by Wade, C. J., held that what are, or what are not, permanent objects or monuments as contemplated by the act of Congress, is properly matter of proof, and cannot be determined by the court simply by an inspection of the location notice. (See Liddell, J., in Flavin vs. Mattingly, 8 Montana, 242; McConnell, C. J., in Gamer vs. Glenn, 8 id., 371.)

In Hausworth et al. vs. Butcher et al. (4 Montana, 299) the court, by Wade, C. J., held that before there can be a valid location there must be a discovery; that the right to possession comes only from a valid location, and that if there is no location there can be no possession; that to make the grant effectual the location must be distinctly marked on the ground and the record must contain such a description as will identify the claim by reference to some natural object or permanent monument; that a mining claim 2,000 feet in length will not protect claimants against intervening claims of third persons for the 500 feet more than the law allows, and that it is essential that the proper length be marked on the ground as stated in the record, and that the two should correspond. (See McLeary, J., in Mining Co. vs. Mining Co., 7 Montana, 356; Leggett vs. Stewart, 5 id., 107; Ormund vs. Granite M. M. Co., 11 id., 303.)

In the case of McKinstry vs. Clark and Cameron (4 Montana 370), the court, by Conger, J., held that in a case where defendants claim by virtue of two locations made from a single discovery, when only one could be valid, it was error to instruct the jury that the plaintiff, in an action of ejectment claiming the premises nell) Kirby. He is one of a family of seven sons and two daughters, all of whom are living except the youngest. William Kirby, his father, was an active man during life, in both business and political circles, nearly all the time holding an elective office in the county where he resided. He was killed in the prime of life by being thrown from a horse. The Kirbys are descended from the English and the Welsh, and the family are heirs to a vast estate in England. The untimely death of his father left William F. dependent upon his own resources at the early age of fourteen years.

When the war between the States broke out, the subject of our sketch, having been reared in the South, was fired with the spirit of Southern patriotism, and in June, 1861, at the age of nineteen years, he enlisted in the Sixth Missouri Confederate Volunteer Infantry, under Col. Congrave Jackson, a veteran of the Mexican war. Mr. Kirby served until June, 1864, participating in all the hard-fought battles and privations through which that famous regiment passed.

After the war Mr. Kirby learned the trade of stone mason, which he followed in connection with farming for several years. In 1885 he came west to Montana, and has since been identified with the interests of Livingston, having taken an active part in building up the town. Many of the most substantial buildings have been constructed by him. His handsome brick residence, one of the finest in Livingston, is located on Second street. He contracted for and put in the city water works. While Mr. Kirby has done an extensive and successful business in contracting and building, he seems to be more especially fitted for the position of landlord. He has the largest restaurant patronage in the city, his tables being neat and well filled, and served by lady attendants. He also does a large livery and feed business.

Mr. Kirby affiliates with the Democratic party, but is not active in politics. He has served the working men well in the years past as arbitrator in business differences, giving justice and satisfaction to all. He is a member of both the Woodmen of the World and the A. O. U. W., [illegible] and location, should bear the burden of proving which one of the two locations was invalid. In Noyes et al. vs. Black et al. (4 Montana, 527), the court, by Wade, C. J., held that by virtue of actual possession alone mining ground could not be held against a valid location.

In the case of Tibbetts vs. Ah Tong, the court, by Wade, J. C., held that the exploration and purchase of the mineral lands are free only to citizens or to those who have declared their intention to become citizens; that an alien can neither locate, possess, purchase or acquire title by patent to such mineral lands; that the right of possession cannot be held by one incapable of holding by purchase from the Government, else the government might be deprived of its power to sell forever; and that possession and the right and power to purchase are indispensable. (See Quigley vs. Birdseye, 11 Montana, 439.)

Hopkins et al. vs. Noyes et al. (4 Montana, 550), was a controversy between placer and quartz lode claimants, and the court, by Wade, C. J., held that the possessory title to a placer claim was real estate and must be conveyed by deed, and that a mere verbal transfer from one to another would not hold as against a valid quartz-claim location.

In Wolverton et al. vs. Nicholas et al. (5 Montana, 89), the court, by Wade, C. J., held that actions to determine the right to the possession of mining ground must be according to the forms and practice in the jurisdiction where the suit is brought; and that in Montana the plaintiff, if in possession, brings his action to quiet title; if out of possession his action must be in the nature of ejectment.

About this time Justice Conger retired from the bench. He had served with courage and distinction in the Union army in the war of the rebellion, and assisted in the capture of John Wilkes Boothe, the assassin of President Lincoln. When appointed to the Montana Supreme Court he was suffering much from wounds received during the war. The labor and confinement consequent upon continued holding of court proved to be more than he could endure, and he therefore retired from the bench and resumed the practice of his profession in Beaverhead county, Montana. He was succeeded as associate justice by John Coburn, of Indiana, in February, 1884.

having passed all the chairs in the latter organization.

In the fall of 1864, soon after leaving the army, Mr. Kirby married Miss Paulina Parks, a daughter of James Parks. They had three children, one son and two daughters: James Francis, Hattie Bell and Alice Gertrude. Hattie Bell died at the age of six years, and the mother of these children died in 1880. In 1882 Mr. Kirby married Mrs. Mary A. Hoff, daughter of Andrew Kirkland. She was born in Canada and resided there until she was sixteen years of age. Their only son is named Clyde Earl.

HON. CHARLES S. HARTMAN, Congressman from the State of Montana, has entered upon a career that promises to be one of marked success. His recent brilliant speech in Congress more than met the expectations of his most ardent friends and received compliments from the press all over the land. A typical self-made man, he has made rapid strides along the pathway of honorable fame, as will be disclosed in this brief sketch.

Charles S. Hartman was born in Monticello, White county, Indiana, March 1, 1861, son of Sampson and Mary Caroline (Hichendorn) Hartman, his mother being left a widow about the time of his birth, his father dying at the age of thirty years. His maternal ancestors were pioneers of Pennsylvania, while his father's people had long been residents of Indiana.

Mr. Hartman was educated in the Monticello high school and at Wabash College, Crawfordsville, Indiana, after which he entered upon the study of law in the office of Owens & Uhl in his native town. Before completing his legal studies there, his hopeful ambition led him to seek a new field of action in the far West, and in January, 1882, he landed in Bozeman. Here he applied himself diligently to a thorough preparation for his chosen profession, and in August, 1884, was admitted to the bar. From the very first his career has been attended by success. The same year he was admitted to the bar he was elected Probate Judge of Gallatin county, in 1889 was elected a member of the constitutional convention, and in 1892 he was honored by a seat in Congress. Few members of the present Congress represent as large Change of judges did not change the character of litigation. The case of Mantle et al. vs. Noyes (5 Montana, 274), was an important case, and, as most of the mining cases did, required the determination of new and untried questions. It was a contest between the owners of a patent to placer mining ground and the claimants of a quartz-lode mining claim within the same boundaries. The court, by Wade, C. J., held that a patent to a placer claim issued under the provisions of the act of Congress of May, 1872, passes no title to a previously located quartz vein or lode claim included within its boundaries, and whether or not the placer applicant knew of the existence of such lode or quartz claim was immaterial, and this upon the theory that the valid location of a quartz-lode mining claim carries with it a grant from the Government to the locator for the ground located; that ground thus held and claimed cannot be relocated or taken by any other person, for that the Government cannot sell the same ground to different persons, and that a quartz-lode mining claim thus located, held and owned, is "known" to exist within the meaning of said act, by reason of the record thereof, and the marking on the ground so that the boundaries might be readily traced; and whether the placer claimant, when he makes his application for a patent, which takes in and includes within its boundaries the quartz-lode location, had personal knowledge of the quartz location or record thereof, is immaterial.

The decision and judgment in this case was affirmed on appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States. (127 U. S., 348.)

In the case of McBurney vs. Berry (5 Montana, 300), the court, by Coburn, J., held that the Territorial statute which requires that the declaratory statement or notice of location of a quartz-lode claim in manner prescribed by the laws of the United States must be in writing and on oath, is valid, and that a notice of location which does not conform to the requirements of the statute is void, and its admission in evidence error. (See McConnell, C. J., in O'Donnell vs. Glenn, 8 Montana, 248.)

The case of the Silver Bow M. & M. Co. vs. Clarke et al. (5 Montana, 378), involved a large amount of property, and in consideration of a district as he, and few have attained in such a brief time so marked a degree of popularity. He is a thorough and energetic worker in whatever he undertakes, and, judging the future by the past, he is destined to accomplish greater things and occupy a still higher position in life. While he is an emphatic Republican in his political views, his frank and genial manner and his many estimable traits of character have made warm friends for him among both the Republican and Democratic ranks. Indeed, many of his Democratic opponents supported him for Representative in Congress. Associated with him in his immense law practice is his brother, W. S. Hartman. They have the largest business of any firm in the Gallatin valley.

December 2, 1884, he married Miss Flora B. Imes, daughter of William Imes, Sr., of Monticello, Indiana. They have two children, Louise and Flora.

M. KAISER, proprietor of the Kaiser House, the leading hotel of Phillipsburg, is one of the prominent and influential citizens of the town. He is also an early pioneer of Montana, and as such we take pleasure in presenting the following sketch of his life in this work.

Mr. Kaiser was born in Switzerland, November 21, 1828; was educated in his native land and there learned the trade of shoemaker. In 1846, when merging into manhood, he sailed for America to make his future home in this land of the free. He landed in New York. The first few years of his life in America he spent successively in Albany, Cleveland, St. Louis, New Orleans, and in Jackson, Mississippi, working at his trade in all those places. In 1852 he went to California, via the Nicaragua route, and from there went to Nevada, where he was engaged in the butchering business. He also mined, successfully, for a time. In 1858 he was among the number who made a rush for the gold regions of the Fraser river. On that expedition, however, he made no more than his expenses. In 1865 we again find him in Nevada, where he continued the butcher business until the spring of 1866. While there he made some money, but unfortunately invested it in town property, which depreciated in value, and thus he lost it all.

It was in 1866 that Mr. Kaiser came to Montana. His first stop here was at Virginia City. From there he went to Helena and opened up a restaurant and hotel business, other like cases was of vast importance. It was a contest between the claimants of a quartz-lode location and parties who claimed the same ground under the Butte townsite patent. The court, by Wade, C. J., held that the valid location of a quartz-lode mining claim gives to the locator the right to the exclusive possession of the surface of the ground located; that such a location is not affected by a subsequent entry of a townsite, although the mining location is situated within the boundaries of the townsite, and consequently that the owners of such mining claim are under no duty or obligation to file an adverse claim to the entry of the townsite; that the land department of the United States is only authorized to issue patents to the probate judge or other officer in trust for townsite purposes for lands which have not been previously granted and sold or reserved from sale; that there cannot be included in such patent any mine, mining claim or possession, and if there is the patent to that extent is void; that a patent to a mining claim relates back to the location and is the consummation of the purchase then made; and that no unauthorized act of the land office in issuing the townsite patent could defeat such title.

This was the case of the Pawnbroker lode mining claim located on the 16th day of November, 1875, and for which a patent was issued on the 15th day of January, 1880, containing this clause: "Excepting and excluding from said patent all townsite property rights upon the surface, and all houses, buildings, lots, blocks, streets, alleys or other municipal improvements on the surface of said Pawnbroker Mining Claim"; and the claimants of such streets, lots and alleys under the Butte townsite patent, issued on the 26th day of September, 1877, which contains this provision: "No title shall be hereby acquired to any mine of gold, silver, cinnabar or copper, or to any valid mining claim or possession held under existing laws of Congress."

Upton vs. Larkin (5 Montana, 600), was a case presenting another new question, which was whether the location of a quartz-lode mining claim before a discovery had been made was where the Herald office is now located. He built a hotel there. In the fall of 1867 he went to Cable and built another house, and continued in the hotel business at that place until 1870, since which time he has been identified with Phillipsburg. He built the Kaiser House here in 1880. This is a brick building, 30 x 150 feet, located on the corner of Montgomery and Broadway, and is fitted and furnished in first-class style. Mr. Kaiser has also erected a number of other buildings in the city and is the owner of a large amount of real estate, and, like most of the prosperous citizens in Montana, he is interested in mining operations. In 1886 he established the Phillipsburg Water Company, of which he was made president. In 1892 he organized the J. M. Kaiser Water Company. Both these enterprises are now owned and controlled by him and his two sons, Herman and John, Herman now being president of the former, and John superintendent of the latter. They bring the pure mountain water from Stuart Gulch, a distance of five miles, and furnish an ample supply for the whole city. Among other interests, Mr. Kaiser has two ranches, amounting to 280 acres, where he raises grain and vegetables and keeps some horses and cattle. Politically he is a Republican.

He was married in St. Louis, Missouri, in 1850, to Miss Louisa Wagner, a native of Prussia, who landed in America the same year he did. She has been in the true sense of the word a faithful helpmate. She has accompanied him in all his travels, with the exception of his trip to Fraser river, and by her aid and encouragement has helped to bring about their present prosperity. They have had six children, of whom only two, John and Herman, are now living. Two of their children died of diphtheria while they were at Marysville, California, and the other two died in infancy.

H. BINDEWALD, agent for the Northern Pacific Express Company, Bozeman, Montana, was born in Prussia in 1851, son of Frederick Bindewald, a prominent manufacturer of boots and shoes.

Mr. Bindewald received excellent educational advantages in his native land, studying French, English, chemistry, drawing, bookkeeping, etc., fully preparing himself to fill any position, his education costing him the small sum of $2 a year; and with a view of coming to America he gave special attention to the English language. It was in 1869 that he crossed the ocean and landed in New York city. There he was at once em-cured by a subsequent discovery. The court answered the question by Wade, C. J., and held that a location to be effectual must be good at the time it is made (see Belk vs. Meagher, before mentioned), and that a location void at the time it is made, because of no discovery, or because the discovery was made on a claim already located and patented, continues and remains void and is not cured or made effectual by a subsequent discovery on the claim located. (See Bach, J., in Upton vs. Larkin, 7 Montana, 449.)

In Alder Gulch Con. Mining Co. vs. Hayes (6 Montana, 31), the court held, in relation to placer mining, by Galbraith, J., that in a mining gulch, when water appropriated by a ditch for the purpose of being used upon a mining claim has served its purpose upon such claim, it must be discharged therefrom for use by the owners for claims below. The mining claimant below is entitled to the water of the stream flowing down the gulch, subject to the prior appropriation of the water by the owner of claims above him for use upon such claims, and subject only to the reasonable diminution and deterioration by such use.

In Saunders et al. vs. Mackey (5 Montana, 523), the court, by Wade, C. J., held that a tenant in common of a mining claim, who enters into an agreement with his co-tenant whereby the latter promises to do the annual work necessary to hold the claim, forfeits his interest in the claim if such representation work be not done. The claim thereupon becomes open to relocation and a valid location thereof may be made by the tenant who made default. In such case the remedy of the other co-tenant is by an action for breach of contract, or to establish and enforce a trust in the claim located.

In the case of Garfield M. & M. Co. vs. Hammer (6 Montana, 53), the court, by Galbraith, J., held that in the absence of evidence to the contrary, the locators of a mining claim will be presumed to be citizens of the United States, or to have declared their intention to become citizens.

Talbott et al. vs. King et al. (6 Montana, 76), was a conflict between the owners of a ployed by a firm engaged in the manufacture of surgical instruments, having served an apprenticeship to that trade in his native country. He continued thus employed in New York until 1873, when he came west as far as Dakota, and that year enlisted in the regular army, as a private in the Seventh United States Cavalry, General Custer's famous regiment. He served through his term of enlistment, a period of five years, and was honorably discharged, being First Sergeant at the time of his discharge. He then spent six years as master mechanic in the Government gun shops at Fort Abraham Lincoln, North Dakota.

In the fall of 1881 Mr. Bindewald entered the employ of the Northern Pacific Express Company as messenger; was agent for the company at Jamestown, North Dakota, for a year and a half; and since May, 1890, has served as the company's agent at Bozeman, Montana.

Mr. Bindewald was married in 1883 to Miss Elizabeth A. Stack, daughter of William Stack, of Binghamton, New York. Mrs. Bindewald is a Catholic, while Mr. Bindewald is a member of the Lutheran Church. He is also a member of the Masonic fraternity, Jamestown Lodge, No. 6, A. F. & A. M., Jamestown, North Dakota. Politically, he is a Republican. A man of excellent business qualifications, courteous and obliging to all with whom he has any dealings, he is universally popular.

JOHN B. HERFORD, a resident of Billings, Montana, and Prosecuting Attorney for Yellowstone county, is a native of Sheffield, England. He was born in 1857, son of Rev. Brooke and Hannah (Hankinson) Herford, his father being now a noted Unitarian minister in Boston, Massachusetts. The Herford family came to the United States in 1875. The subject of our sketch had received a classical education before leaving England, and although still a boy in his 'teens was qualified to engage in any line of business he might choose.

Locating in New Mexico, and believing that the stock industry offered larger and quicker returns than could be assured in mining ventures, he accordingly turned his attention to the stock business, in which he has been interested ever since 1876, and which he has followed with success, the most of his time acting as manager for large cattle companies. In the meantime he studied law and was admitted to the bar in Billings, Montana, in May, 1891. He soon gained a large acquaintance here and so popular did he become that in 1892, when he ran on the quartz-lode mining-claim location and a large number of lot owners, claiming under the Butte Townsite patent, and in addition to the questions determined in the case of Silver Bow M. & M. Co. vs. Clark, above mentioned, the court, by Wade, C. J., held that a patent to the mining claim is conclusive proof of a discovery and location according to law, and that a townsite patent cannot operate to cut off the right of a prior locator of a mining claim, the patent to which relates back to the date of location.

In the case of Remington vs. Baudet (6 Montana, 138), the court, by Wade, C. J., held that the annual representation work to be performed in order to protect a mining claim must be done either within the boundaries of the claim, or, if off of it, as a necessary means of extracting the ore therefrom, and that the erection of a boarding-house without the boundaries of the claim for the convenience of the miners, cannot be considered as a part of such representation work. (See Coleman vs. Curtis, 12 Montana, 301.)

In the autumn of 1885, Charles R. Pollard, of Indiana, was appointed associate justice to succeed Justice Coburn, who returned to Indianapolis and resumed the practice of his profession. Coburn held high command in the Union army during the Civil war, and for a long time has been one of the leading lawyers of his State. He was learned and able as a judge and added strength to the Supreme Court while he remained in Montana.

Pollard failed to be confirmed by the Senate, and on August 6, 1886, James H. McLeary, of Texas, was appointed associate justice; and on the same day, under an act of Congress giving an additional judge to Montana, Thomas C. Bach, of Butte City, Montana, was appointed associate justice.

Litigation concerning mining claims still went on. The hard-fought cases known as the Smokehouse lode cases—there being thirty-three of them decided in one opinion (6 Montana, 397)—were contentions between lot claimants under the Butte townsite patent and claimants under the Smokehouse lode mining claim location, and involved property in the city of Butte of very great value. The court, by Wade, C. J., after reviewing and re-affirming Democratic ticket for County Attorney, he was elected, notwithstanding the fact that the Democratic party was in the minority in Yellowstone county. He is a man of general information and broad and progressive views, has won many friends regardless of party lines, and thus far has made an excellent record as Prosecuting Attorney.

Mr. Herford was married in 1886 to Miss Susan Whitney, daughter of Lucius Whitney, who was for several years Treasurer of Yellowstone county and who is now filling a position in the State Treasurer's office at Helena. Mr. and Mrs. Herford have two children: Helen B. and Whitney B. Mrs. Herford is a member of the Congregational Church.

DR. CHESTER B. LEBCHER, managing physician of the Keely Institute at the Boulder Hot Springs, was born in Pennsylvania, February 22, 1850. His ancestors on the paternal side came from Sweden in an early day, and on the maternal side they were of German origin. His parents, David and Lucinda (Snyder) Lebcher, were respected citizens of Akron, Ohio, and devout members of the Methodist Church.

Chester B., the third of four children, three now living, received his early education in the Akron public schools and at Mount Union College. His medical education was obtained at the Michigan State University at Ann Arbor, and at Jefferson, Pennsylvania, where he graduated in the class of 1874. He began the practice of his profession in Indiana; a short time afterward began work in the hospitals of Philadelphia, and from that city went to Baltimore, where he served as physician of the Baltimore Inebriate Asylum. He afterward came West in the employ of the United States Government, as physician to the Crow Indians, arriving at their agency on the last day of 1875, and remained there fifteen months. Mr. Lebcher has the honor of being one of the founders of Miles City, and practiced his profession there until March, 1893, when he accepted his present position at the Boulder Hot Springs. The Keely Institute is devoted to the cure of liquor and all narcotic habits. The Doctor has made a special study of all these diseases, and, with the honest co-operation of the patient, there is no question as to the result. This is one of the grandest blessings that could be conceived for the unfortunates who are slaves to these the doctrines laid down in Silver Bow M. & M. Co. vs. Clark, and Talbott vs. King et al., before mentioned, held further that lot claimants, claiming under a townsite patent which extends over a mining claim, are not relieved, by reason of their title under the townsite patent, from setting up their adverse claims on notice of application for a patent to the mining claim, and their failure to assert their claims before such patent is issued and before the sixty-day period of publication has expired, forever bars them from so doing, while the owner of a valid mining-claim location, over which a townsite is extended by United States patent, is not required to file an adverse claim to the procuring of such townsite patent, as by the law the mining claim is expressly excepted; that the land officers have no right to insert in a patent any exceptions or reservations diminishing or controlling the rights acquired by the valid location of a mining claim; that there is no law authorizing the United States Land Office to exclude from a mining-claim patent the right to surface ground, and a reservation in such a patent excluding therefrom the right to all lots, blocks, streets, alleys, houses and municipal improvements on the surface of the claim, is void, and that the issuance of a patent to a quartz-lode mining claim is conclusive, in an action at law, as to the title to the land within its limits.

In King vs. Thomas et al. (6 Montana, 409) and two other cases decided in the same opinion, the court, by McLeary, J., after re-affirming the decision in the Smokehouse cases, held further that the statute of limitations cannot run against a mining claim until the patent thereto has been issued, any State or Territorial legislation to the contrary notwithstanding.

In the case of Weibbold vs. Davis (7 Montana, 107), Bach, J., rendered an opinion following King vs. Thomas, upon the theory that the facts were identical. On appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States the court, by Justice Field, approved of the decisions of the Supreme Court of Montana in the cases of Silver Bow M. & M. Co., vs. Clark, Talbott vs. King and the Smokehouse cases above mentioned, but held, as applicable to the Weibbold-Davis babits. The institute is located at the Hot Springs, adjacent to the commodious hotel.

Dr. Lebcher was married, September 15, 1888, to Miss Mattie Wooster, a native of Indiana, and they reside in a pleasant cottage at the Springs. The Doctor sympathizes with the Democratic party, is a member of the Montana Medical Association, and of the Masonic fraternity.

WILLIAM BOWE, a Montana pioneer of 1864, and one of the founders of the town of Melrose, was born in Ireland, March 17, 1844, fourth in the family of five children of Lawrence and Margaret (Delany) Bowe, both natives of the Emerald Isle. His parents emigrated to America in 1848 and settled in Connecticut. In 1859 they removed to New Britain, that State, where the father died in his eightieth year, and where the mother still lives, she having reached the advanced age of eighty.

William Bowe spent several years of his early life at Cromwell, on the Connecticut river. When he was only fourteen he was employed to run an engine in a manufacturing establishment, and after the family moved to New Britain he worked on a farm for some time. In 1863 he went to Denver, Colorado, spent the winter there, and in the spring came to Montana, arriving at Virginia City, July 8, 1864, with a capital of $100. The history of his life for the next few years was that of a miner going from camp to camp, sometimes owning an interest in a mine himself and at other times working by the day until he had visited nearly all the mining districts in this section of the Northwest, and on the whole his mining career was an unsuccessful one. He then turned his attention to freighting, which he continued until the fall of 1873, when he came to his present location at Melrose. In the spring of 1875 he bought out two squatters, giving one of them $100 and the other $150. At that time there were only two other settlers in the valley—John Stone and Jefferson McCauley. When the land was surveyed Mr. Bowe pre-empted 160 acres of land, to which he subsequently added eighty acres of desert land. In the fall of 1875 he built a small log house which served for a home until he could get a better one. Finally he purchased a house at Ricker, took it to pieces and moved it to his place, and this house now forms a part of the hotel building. He has kept hotel here since 1876, it being the stage station until the railroad was built. With the coming of the railroad he platted the town of case that a townsite patent of an earlier date covering the same premises embraced in a junior mining patent carries the title in absence of proof establishing the known existence of the mine at the date of such townsite patent; that the claimant under the townsite patent may offer evidence to prove that the premises were not known to be valuable for mineral at the date thereof, to rebut the presumption contra, indulged without proof, solely for the issuance of the mineral patent.

In the case of Wulf vs. Manuel (9 Montana, 279), defendant, at the time of his purchase of a mining claim and at the time of his application to the United States for a patent, was an alien, but was made a citizen on the day of the trial. It was held by the court, DeWitt, J., delivering the opinion, that under the law only citizens of the United States, and those who have declared their intention to become such, can apply to purchase the mineral lands of the Government, and that as such lands are not open to exploration, occupation or purchase by aliens, the defendant's acts of naturalization could not retroact to his purchase or possessory right to a mining claim upon the public lands. This case was reversed on appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States. (See 153 United States.)

In Murray vs. City of Butte (7 Montana, 61), the court, by Bach, J., reaffirmed the principles laid down in the Smoke-house cases.

In Hartman vs. Smith (7 Montana, 19), the court, by Galbraith, J., decided that the location of a mill-site, like that of a quartz-lode mining claim, operates as a grant by the Government of all the surface ground included within its limits.

In Wenner vs. McNulty et al. (7 Montana, 30), the court, by McConnell, C. J., treats of the sufficiency of the affidavit to the declaratory statement; whether in the location of a mining claim the Territorial Legislature can lawfully impose burdens in addition to those prescribed by the laws of the United States; and of what constitutes a discovery.

In Hope Mining Co. vs. Brown (7 Montana, 550), the court, by Liddell, J., defined the right Melrose and at once sold off a number of lots. Much of the town, however, he still owns. In 1880 he made further additions to his hotel, which has since enabled him to entertain comfortably all who stop here.

December 25, 1876, Mr. Bowe married Mrs. Lucia Fleser, widow of Adam Fleser and daughter of Elihu Phillips. She was born in Strongsville, Ohio, February 16, 1837. By her first husband she had children as follows: George E., Melrose; Charles A., Melrose; Calista I., wife of James Mackboy, Phillipsburg; and Rose A., wife of Sherman W. Vance. Mr. Vance and his family reside with Mr. Bowe. Mrs. Bowe crossed the plains with her first husband in 1864, and on that journey met with many thrilling experiences and narrow escapes, a detailed account of which would fill a volume of no small proportion and would be more thrilling than many a romance. The company with which they traveled was composed of twenty men, four women and five children, all well armed. At the South Platte river they were delayed on account of storms and high water. One man was drowned and one man and a child were killed by lightning. Further on in the journey they had trouble with the Indians, and it was with difficulty that they escaped with their lives. Mrs Bowe is the daughter of a physician, and by her knowledge of curative powers made herself very useful in taking care of the sick and wounded on this journey, as she also has during her long residence in Montana. After their arrival in Virginia City, Mr. Fleser engaged in mining, and later moved to German Gulch, where he kept a station. On account of his dissipated habits she left him and obtained a divorce, after which, as above stated, she became the wife of Mr. Bowe. During their long residence at Melrose, Mr. and Mrs. Bowe have made a wide acquaintance throughout the State, being noted far and near for their genial hospitality.

EDDA LEE LOWREY, County Superintendent of Schools of Jefferson county, is a native daughter of Montana, born in Meagher county, near Townsend, May 16, 1867, a daughter of B. F. Lowrey, a Montana pioneer of 1864, and now a miner and stock-raiser in St. Louis. He was born in Missouri, in 1833, and in 1859 married Miss Jennie Thestle, a native of Maryland. One son, Charles N., was born in that State. In 1864 Mr. Lowry left his family and braved the dangers of crossing the plains to search for gold in Montana, in which he met with fair success, and accordingly sent for of a tunnel claimant to vein or lodes discovered in his tunnel. (See same, 11 Montana, 370.)

In Mattingly et al. vs. Lewissohn et al. (8 Montana, 259), the court, by De Wolfe, J., held that the rights of an adverse claimant are forfeited if he fails within the prescribed time either to file his adverse claim in the Land Office where the application for a patent is pending, or to bring a suit in the proper court to decide the same. (See as to action upon adverse claims, Hoffman vs. Beecher, 12 Montana, 489.)

In Flick vs. Gold Hill & L. M. Co. (8 Montana, 298), the court, by DeWolfe, J., held that an instruction to the jury, which declared that the recorded notice of location of a quartz-lode mining claim prima facie established the facts and matters therein stated, and required a preponderance of evidence to overthrow them, was erroneous as shifting, improperly, the burden of proof.

The foregoing are the principal cases that found their way to the Supreme Court during the Territorial period, arising under the rules and regulations of the miners in the mining districts and under the acts of Congress. They have been mentioned because they are of public importance in showing the foundation and the growth of the system of mining law in Montana. After the admission of the Territory as a State, the litigation concerning mines and mining claims was mostly transferred to the United States courts and thereby the State district courts and the Supreme Court were relieved of much labor.

There are other branches of the law of public interest and importance whose foundations were laid during the Territorial period, and one of them is the law growing out of the land grant to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, and other questions arising under the charter of that company. Since the admission of the Territory as a State this class of litigation has also been transferred to the United States courts.

The Territory of Montana and the Northern Pacific Railroad Company came into existence at about the same period (1864), but it was not until the year 1883 that the company's railroad reached and was completed through Montana.

his family. The mother and her little son made the long journey up the Missouri river, and they located on a farm in Meagher county. While there they had four children, of whom our subject is the only survivor. Her parents and the eldest brother are still living.

Edda L. Lowrey was raised in Jefferson county, Montana, where she attended the public schools, also the St. Vincent's Academy at Helena. When only seventeen years of age she began her life-work as a teacher in St. Louis, where she met with so good success that she taught for five terms in succession. She followed that occupation until 1890, and in that year was appointed County Superintendent of Schools, to fill a vacancy, serving in that capacity eighteen months. She was then elected to the office, on the Democratic ticket, and received the flattering majority of 600 votes, running far ahead of her ticket. She entered on the duties of the office in a sensible and practical way, is enthusiastic in her work, and is putting forth her best endeavors for the advancement of the thirty schools of her county. In addition to the stated visits to the schools of the county, Miss Lowrey also attends the teachers' conventions, and takes a deep interest in all that pertains to the educational affairs of the county. She is a member of the Baptist Church, of the Young People's Christian Endeavor and of the Eastern Star. She has made a number of good investments, and is adding her mite to the building up and improvement of Boulder. Our subject is widely known in her own and other counties of her State, and has hosts of true friends.

WILLIAM O. MALLAHAN, foreman in the Northern Pacific Railroad shops at Livingston, Montana, and City Alderman from the Third ward, dates his birth in Hancock county, Ohio, near Findlay, December 10, 1846.

He is a son of Rolly and Drucilla (Reese) Mallahan, the former being a descendant of Irish ancestors, and the latter of German, both families having settled in America at an early day. Grandfather Mallahan was a soldier in the war of 1812. Rolly Mallahan removed with his family to Iowa in 1854. He was a schoolteacher, and also did various kinds of contract work. While inspecting a well it caved in upon him, killing him instantly. This occurred near Cedar Rapids, Iowa, in 1870.

When the Civil war came on William O. Mallahan was only a boy in his 'teens and was attending the public

The land grant to this company in Montana was equivalent to a tract of land forty miles wide by eight hundred miles long, being every alternate section of the public lands, not mineral, designated by odd numbers, to the extent of forty miles on either side of said company's road.

When did this land grant take effect? Was it at the date of the passage of the act of Congress incorporating the company, or when the line of the road had been definitely located? or when the road had been completed? Did the exemption of mineral lands from the operation of the grant apply to lands known to be mineral at the date of the act incoporating the company or that were known to be mineral at the date of the definite location of the road, or did the exemption apply to all mineral lands whenever discovered or found to be mineral? What belonged to the right of way, so as to exempt it from taxation under the charter of the company?

It was not long after the arrival of the road in the Territory before the courts were called upon to consider these and other questions.

In the case of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company vs. Majors (5 Montana, 111), the court, by Galbraith, J., after reviewing the decisions of the Supreme Court concerning land grants to other railroads, and the decisions of other courts, held that the title of the plaintiff to the lands included within its grant took effect at the date of the approval of the act of Congress incorporating the company; that the location of the route and the survey of the lands gave precision to that title and caused it to attach to the particular section, as of the date of the approval of the act, as fully as if such particular section had been designated in the act; that the character of the title is that of a grant upon condition subsequent; and that the office of the patent is to confirm the title, as certain designated portions of the road are completed and reported upon by the commissioners, and render it absolute and unconditional; that this grant, being an act of Congress, is the highest evidence of title, importing, in the case presented, possession and livery of seizin, and is sufficient, in connection with the other allegations of the complaint, to sustain the ejectment.

schools of his native State, but, boy as he was, his patriotic spirit asserted itself, and in 1862, at the age of sixteen years, he enlisted in Company A, Eighteenth Iowa Volunteer Infantry, at Cedar Rapids. His service was in the Seventh Army Corps, in Missouri, and among the numerous engagements in which he participated were those of Newtonia, in December, 1862, and the battle near Springfield, in January of the following year. He was honorably discharged at Davenport, Iowa, at the close of the war.

Soon after the war Mr. Mallahan went to Salt Lake City and was employed in staging across the plains by the Ben. Holliday Stage Company until 1869, when the completion of the Union Pacific Railroad dispensed with stage travel. He then secured a position as fireman on a locomotive on the Union Pacific, and later served his time with that company as a machinist, remaining in their employ until 1871. That year he returned to Iowa, and until 1887 was in the employ of the Burlington, Cedar Rapids & Northern Railroad Company. In the fall of 1887 he accepted a position with the Northern Pacific Railroad Company at Brainerd, Minnesota, and the following year was transferred to the company's shops at Livingston, Montana, where he has since been general foreman, filling the position to the entire satisfaction of his employers. During his whole railroad career, extending from 1869 up to the present time, September, 1893, he has never missed but two months' work, a record equaled by few railroad men.

Mr. Mallahan was married in 1872, in Cedar Rapids, Iowa, to Miss Artemissa Loyd, daughter of George W. and Lucinda (Skinner) Loyd. Her father was a resident of Missouri at the beginning of the war, and soon after the opening of hostilities removed with his family to Iowa, from which State he entered the Federal army and served in the Union ranks until the war closed. Mr. and Mrs Mallahan have two sons and one daughter. Their daughter, Mary, is the wife of Robert L. McManus, of Livingston. The sons are Rob Roy and William. The former is now learning the trade of machinist in the railroad shops. Mrs. Mallahan is a member of the Baptist Church.

Politically, Mr. Mallahan affiliates with the Democratic party, and on the Democratic ticket he was elected Alderman in the spring of 1892.

In the case of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company vs. Carland, treasurer (5 Montana, 146), the court, by Wade, C. J., held that the Territorial district courts, sitting to hear and determine causes arising under the constitution and laws of the United States have the same jurisdiction as the circuit and district courts of the United States; that a suit commenced by or against a corporation chartered by Congress is properly brought in the United States side of the Territorial district court; that the plaintiff's right of way is an easement, and that personal property attached to the soil and annexed to the easement, like a fixture, becomes a part of the land and is therefore exempt from taxation; that the act of Congress incorporating plaintiffs is a contract between the Government and the incorporators, and that a Territorial legislature has no authority to impair the obligations of this contract; that it is within the Constitutional power of Congress to exempt the property which it grants from taxation; that it was competent for Congress to charter the Northern Pacific Railroad Company; to grant to it public lands and to exempt its right of way through such lands from taxation; that county assessors, in order to have jurisdiction to assess property, must follow the law; that an assessment that values real and personal property in a mass is void; that a tax will not be restrained upon the ground that it is irregular and erroneous; that to entitle a party to relief against an illegal tax he must bring himself under some acknowledged head of equity jurisdiction; that courts of equity will enjoin the casting of a cloud upon a title in a case wherein a cloud itself, when cast, would be removed; and that any encroachment upon the quiet enjoyment of an easement, whether created by grant or prescription, will be prevented by injunction.

In the case of Wilkinson vs. Northern Pacific Railroad Company (5 Montana, 538), the court, by Coburn, J., held that the exception of mineral lands in the grant of land to the company did not apply to the grant of the right of way, and that if at the time the right of way attaches such mineral lands are unoccupied, a JOHN BEAN, Clerk of the District Court, Helena, came to Montana in 1883, and has since been identified with its interests. He was born in York, England, June 1, 1860, in which city he was reared and educated, first attending the common schools and afterward the Lord Mayor's College, of which institution he is a graduate. At the age of thirteen he began the study of stenography, studying under the best teachers and becoming proficient therein. He also learned telegraphy, and as an operator was for four years in the employ of the Northeastern Railway Company, of England. At the age of nineteen he came to America, and is to-day the only member of his family outside of Great Britain. He is one of six children and the remaining brother and sisters reside at the old homestead in York, where the father, who was a successful merchant for many years, is now retired from active business, being a learned scholar and an accomplished linguist, and having amassed a fortune. Mr. Bean's mother is also living. She is a sister of James Carter, of Carter, Redfern & Company, the noted Liverpool merchants and importers.

When he reached America Mr. Bean at once entered the employ of D. W. King & Company, wholesale glue manufacturers, at Boston, Massachusetts, with which firm he remained three years. Growing weary of mercantile pursuits he began reporting the lectures delivered at Tremont Temple, Boston, for publication in book form. Leaving the East he came as far west as Chicago and was with George M. Pullman, at Michigan avenue and Adams street, for six months, at the expiration of which time he came to Helena. Here he became private secretary of General Agent Stokes, of the Northern Pacific Railway. At the end of a few months he received the appointment of Court Reporter for the First Judicial District of Montana, under Chief Justice Wade, and when the latter retired from office Mr. Bean resigned his position and went into the law office of Carter & Clayberg and continued the study of law which he had hitherto begun. He was admitted to the bar from their office and at once entered upon the practice of his profession. Subsequently he formed a law partnership with C. B. Nolan, which lasted until 1889, when Mr. Bean was elected Clerk of the District Court of the First Judicial District, being elected by a handsome majority. The term of office was for three years. In 1892 he was again nominated for the same office and was re-elected for a term subsequent location thereof followed by a patent to the locators, is inferior to the right of way, and must yield to the superior legal title, without a resort to a court of equity to set the patent aside.

In the case of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company vs. Lilly (6 Montana, 65), the court, by Wade, C. J., among other things, held, under the act of Congress granting lands to the company, that whenever the general route of the road had been fixed, the lands granted were reserved from sale and held for the company, whether before or after the same had been surveyed.

In the case of Northern Pacific Railroad Company vs. Shimmell (6 Montana, 161), the court, by Wade, C. J., held that the plaintiff had the right to operate its road through the Territory of Montana; that the road is a military and post road for the benefit of the Government, and made so by its charter, and whatever is necessary or useful in operating the road belongs to and goes with the franchise, and hence that if an office safe at a depot, in which the agent keeps his daily receipts, and deposits his valuable papers, is necessary or useful in operating the road, it could no more be seized on execution than could a section of the rails or road-bed, or a water tank. These things are incident to the franchise and cannot be disturbed. They are the means by which the franchise is exercised and are necessary to its use.

As to selection of lands by the Northern Pacific Railroad Company in lieu of lands lost, the court, in Elling vs. Thexton (7 Montana, 330), by McConnell, C. J., held that under the acts of Congress the Northern Pacific Railroad Company does not acquire title to land selected in lieu of lands lost until such selections have been approved by the Secretary of the Interior.

In Northern Pacific Railroad Company vs. Patterson, Treasurer (10 Montana, 90), the court, by Blake, C. J., held that in action by the plaintiff to restrain by injunction the collection of a tax complained of as erroneous, a complaint that does not aver that the plaintiff sought the redress provided for in the statutes of the State or tendered the amount admitted to be due, is bad, on demurrer.

of four years, by a still greater majority. His present term will expire in January, 1897. He is a member of the Masonic fraternity, the A. O. U. W., K. of P., Sons of St. George and the Montana Bar Association.

Mr. Bean was married in Boston, in 1880, to Miss Ida F. Parsons. They have had six children, four of whom —three sons and one daughter—are living.

In addition to his official duties Mr. Bean is interested in real estate and mining. He is a prominent Republican and is as popular with his associates here as he was in Boston, where his fellow employés tendered him a banquet on the eve of his departure to visit his old home in England.

JUDGE ALEXANDER FRASER.—Few men of Montana have had a more varied and eventful life than has Judge Fraser, and few, if any, save a sturdy Scotchman, could have survived some of the experiences through which he has passed.

He was born in northern Scotland in 1842, son of James Fraser, a noted civil engineer and railroad contractor. Young Fraser received a liberal education in his native land, and at the age of twenty-three engaged with a company of English contractors who were going to South America to construct a railroad. Upon their arrival in South America they found the country harassed by internal revolution, in consequence of which the contractors were diverted from their plans and returned to England. Mr Fraser, however, desiring to see and learn more of the country and its resources, accepted the position as bookkeeper for a large sheep-raiser, some distance from Montevideo, with whom he remained three years and a half. At the end of that time he returned to Scotland for "the girl he left behind." That same year, accompanied by his wife and father, he again crossed the Atlantic, this time landing at Nova Scotia. There he was engaged in constructing a railroad between Nova Scotia and Quebec. He continued in business there until 1881, when he engaged with H. Clarke & Company, railroad contractors, who were then constructing the Northern Pacific line. In the capacity of assistant paymaster and accountant he remained with them until 1883, when the road was completed. He then went with them to British Columbia, where they were constructing the Canadian Pacific Railroad, and where he remained until the fall of

In reviewing this case, on writ of error to the Supreme Court of the United States, the writ was dismissed upon the ground that no Federal question was raised giving that court jurisdiction. (153 U. S.)

The question as to what, if any, mineral lands the Northern Pacific Railroad Company might hold under the land grant by the Government to the company, became a serious question soon after the advent of the road in Montana,—and finally, in consequence of the quantity of mineral land included within the boundaries of the grant, a question of almost national importance. If the company could hold, and if the grant covered all lands not known to be mineral at the date of the grant, or at the date of the general or definite location of the route of the road, it would give to the company a vast quantity of mineral land, and some of the richest mines in the world. Cases more or less involving this question, arising in Montana, are Northern Pacific Railroad Company vs. Cannon, 46 Fed. Rep., 224; same vs. Amacker et al., id., 233; same vs. Sanders et al., id., 239; same vs. same, 47 Fed. Rep., 604; same vs. same, 49 Fed. Rep., 129.

But it was not until the case of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company vs. Barden had been determined by the Supreme Court of the United States (154 United States, 288), which took place on the 26th day of May, 1894, that the question was authoritatively and finally settled.

The company claimed the land in question as a part of the land granted to it by the act of Congress of July 2, 1864, and Barden, the defendant, by virtue of the discovery and location of a quartz-lode mining claim in August, 1888. Not often, even in the Supreme Court of the United States, was a case more ably argued. The magnitude of the interests involved demanded from counsel and court alike the most thorough, searching and patient consideration of the case, and such it received in the argument and re-argument before the court.

James McNaught and James C. Carter represented the plaintiff, and their names are sufficient to show with what consummate skill and learning they labored for the interest of their client in their arguments and briefs. The defendant Barden was represented by W. W. Dixon and Warren Toole, employed by the

the following year. After making a short visit to his home in Canada, he was called by the same company to Billings, Montana, to take charge of their large mercantile interests, as bookkeeper. In that position he continued until 1887, when he severed his connection with the company in order to engage in the grain, feed and wool commission business for himself. In this business he is still engaged, and has thus far met with signal success. He was elected Police Magistrate for Billings in 1892, and Justice of the Peace in November of the same year.

Judge Fraser was married in Scotland, in 1869, to Agnes Elizabeth Manson Ogilbie, daughter of Rev. John Ogilbie, of Scotland. They have five children living,—Nettie, James, Christine, Jack and Eddie. They lost one child, Willie, who was drowned in the Yellowstone river, aged eleven years. He had gone to the river to fish.

Judge Fraser is a member of Ashlar Lodge, No. 29, A. F. & A. M., of Billings, and also of the chapter and commandry, and of Algeria Temple, Helena. He was reared a Presbyterian, but now has his membership with the Congregational Church at Billings. Politically, he is a stanch Republican.

DANIEL TEWEY, one of the enterprising and successful men of Butte City, Montana, and the builder and proprietor of the Southern Hotel, is a native of New York, born at Jamestown, March 26, 1858.

His father, Timothy Tewey, was born in Ireland, and was there married to Catharine Curren, a native of England. In 1841 he emigrated to America, and in 1844 he sent for his wife, who joined him in New York, and together they worked and saved until they were able to buy a farm near Jamestown, where they lived and reared their family of nine children, six of whom are still living, and there the father died in the seventy-eighth year of his age. The mother still resides at the old home place, she being now in her eighty-second year.

Their son Daniel, the subject of this sketch, was next to the youngest of the family. He attended the public schools and remained with his parents until he was thir-

State of Montana, and by W. H. H. Miller, Attorney General of the United States, George H. Shields and Martin F. Morris.

The argument of Mr. Dixon and the written brief and argument of Mr. Toole have not been surpassed. Attorney General Miller incorporated the speech of Senator Wilbur F. Sanders, delivered in the United States Senate, on the same subject, which attracted the attention of the nation, in his brief and argument on behalf of the defendant.

The opinion of the court, by Justice Field, seems clear and unanswerable. It is held that the North Pacific Railroad Company cannot recover under the grant to it by the act of Congress, any mineral lands from the persons in possession thereof who have made locations, although the mineral character of the land was not known until the year 1888, no patent having been issued to said company therefor; that there is no merit in any of the positions advanced by plaintiff in support of its claim to the mineral lands in controversy. The language of the grant to the plaintiff is free from ambiguity. The exclusion from its operation of all mineral lands is entirely clear, and whether the mineral character of the lands was known at the date of the grant or afterward was of no importance.

This case settled a question of vast importance to the people of Montana, and it is somewhat remarkable that the railroad company should have so persistently claimed the mineral lands included within the boundaries of its grant, when by the positive and unequivocal terms of that grant all mineral lands were excluded.

The fourth term of Wade as chief justice expired in the spring of 1887, and he was succeeded by N. W. McConnell, of Tennessee, as chief justice, on the 2d day of May, of that year.

The second term of Galbraith as associate justice expired in January, 1888, he having served eight and one half years. Galbraith was succeeded by Stephen DeWolfe, of Montana.

McLeary resigned as associate justice April 2, 1888, and was succeeded by Moses J. Liddell, of Louisana. McConnell resigned as chief justice in March, 1889, and was succeeded by Henry M. Blake, of Montana, formerly associate justice.

teen, when he was employed as bell-boy in a hotel in Saratoga, New York. As soon as he was large enough he worked out on farms, at first receiving $4 per month and board, and later commanding $13 per month, the highest price then paid for farm hands. He was not satisfied, however, to remain thus employed, and soon went to the oil regions of Pennsylvania, where he was employed in drilling and shooting wells. Later he held the position of night clerk in the St. James Hotel at Bradford, Pennsylvania. While residing at Bradford he was married, October 12, 1878, to Miss Eliza Cross, a native of Dunkirk, New York, and daughter of John Cross, of that place. She is of Irish descent.

After his marriage, Mr. Tewey removed to Leadville, Colorado, where for some time he mined and prospected, meeting with varied success. After this he was in business in Denver for three months. He then returned to Leadville and ran a boarding house for the American Mining & Smelting Company, remained there three years and made considerable money. Then he made a trip to Texas, returned to Chicago, and from there went to the Coeur d' Alene country and prospected for some time, and on the 15th of April, 1884, he landed in Butte City, Montana. Here for two years he worked with pick and shovel in the mines. He then rented the old United States House, improved it considerably and gave it the name of the Southern Hotel. Almost from the first he had a good business. After he had been in the old building three years he found it necessary to enlarge his facilities, and accordingly in 1889 he bought the ground on which the building stood and erected a new and more commodious house. This is a brick building, 52 x 100 feet, has three stories and a basement, and is furnished with steam heat and electric light. Such has been the prosperity which Mr. Tewey has attained that he has not only filled to its utmost capacity this commodious house but he has also had to rent other rooms for the accommodation of his guests. He now uses two stories of the two buildings immediately south of the hotel. Mr. Tewey himself is obliging and generous to a fault, and he has surrounded himself with an efficient force of clerks, cooks and waiters, so that everything necessary for the convenience and comfort of guests is provided. That his efforts are appreciated is shown by his large patronage.

The long and useful service of Justice Galbraith contributed much to the steadiness and character of the courts and judicial progress of the Territory. Of Scotch parentage, aggressively honest, learned in law, having a high sense of the dignity and decorum that should pertain to courts and the administration of justice, he looked upon the office of judge as second to no other in responsibility, and was alive to the labor and study the office demanded and imposed. He had been a brave soldier and officer in the Union army during the war for the preservation of the life of the nation, and when he retired from the bench he carried with him an unblemished record. He resumed the practice of his profession in the Territory of Washington.

His successor, Stephen DeWolfe, an old practitioner before the courts of Montana, brought to the bench a wide knowledge of the law and perfect familiarity with the statutes and decisions of the courts of the Territory. Courtly and polished in manner, a fluent and elegant speaker and writer, his opinions are without fault or blemish. Upon the admission of the Territory as a State he retired to the practice of his profession in the city of Butte.

The services of Justice McLeary, though short in point of time, were brilliant in quality. Before taking his seat upon the Supreme Bench of Montana he had been a lawyer of extensive practice in the State of Texas, and those qualities which made him successful at the bar contributed to his popularity as judge, and when he resigned in order to resume his practice in Texas he cut short a career in Montana full of promise.

Liddell, trained in the practice and proceedings of the civil law as administered in Louisiana, was not slow in adapting himself to the principles of the common law, to code pleading and practice and to the mining law, as known in Montana. He had a broad and comprehensive mind, clear judgment, and great sincerity of purpose. Upon the admission of the Territory as a State he resumed the practice at Bozeman, in Montana, with the brightest prospects, but died there on the 4th day of October, 1891.

The Supreme Court lost an able judge in the retirement of Chief Justice McConnell. Experienced as a judge before leaving Tennessee, active and energetic, capable of great labor, experienced and trained as a lawyer, he added

Indeed, he is doing by far the largest hotel business of any man in the city.

Having spent his youthful days on the farm, Mr. Tewey still retains his love for farming and domestic animals and since he has become able to indulge himself in it he has purchased a valuable ranch of 500 acres in the Deer Lodge valley. This property is located thirty miles from Butte City. On it he is making improvements to his fancy and is indulging himself in raising fine horses and cattle and St. Bernard dogs. Mrs. Tewey joins her husband in these rural pastimes and they spend much of their time in their country home. They have one son, Daniel.

Mr. Tewey is a member of the Masonic fraternity, and in politics is a Democrat. His warm genial manner and his great generosity together with his many other estimable traits of character have won for him hosts of friends and have contributed largely toward his success in life.

ALEXANDER MILTON WALKER, who now owns and occupies a fine ranch in the vicinity of Anaconda, has long been identified with various interests in Montana. He is a son of David Walker and a brother of D. D. Walker, mention of whom, together with the family ancestry and traditional pioneer characteristics, appears elsewhere in this work.

Alexander M. Walker was born in Lee county, Iowa, January 14, 1839. He left his native State in the spring of 1863, in company with his older brother, Joseph C. Walker, and Dr. Allen Hardinbrook, their intention being to go to California. When they arrived at Denver, however, the news had spread there of the rich gold discovery at Bannack, Montana, and instead of going on to California they directed their course toward Bannack, where they arrived in June, without having encountered any serious difficulty on the way. Their journey from Denver here was made with mule teams and in company with forty other men. Upon their arrival at Bannack, strength and character to the decisions of the court. But he preferred the bar, and retired to resume the practice at Helena.

Bach reached the Supreme Bench while yet a young man, and before he had much experience at the bar, and his career illustrates the fact that long practice is not necessary to success on the bench. His more than three years as associate justice next preceding the admission of the Territory as a State, added lustre and learning to Territorial jurisprudence.

During the long period of service of Wade as Chief Justice,—from March, 1871, to May, 1887—he had seen the Territory grow up from a few scattered settlements to a strong and rich commonwealth, having all the conveniences and comforts of modern civilized life; he had seen the log cabin give way to homes of comfort, culture and luxury, and mining camps become thriving cities with electric railways and lights, with free public libraries, schools and churches; the ancient pastures of the buffalo and antelope become covered with domestic cattle, sheep and horses; the Indian trail and wigwam vanish away as public roads and comfortable homes appeared; he had seen the overland freight wagons and emigrant trains disappear from the plains and mountain passes before the all-conquering iron rail and locomotive, whose thundering roar and shrill whistle awoke the slumbers of the desert and the silence of the rugged range; he had seen the ancient trail of the adventurous captains, Lewis and Clarke, through unexplored regions occupied by hostile Indian tribes and wild beasts, and blocked by majestic and unknown rivers and mountains, become the highway of commerce from ocean to ocean, through a land richer in gold and precious stones than Ophir or India; he had seen the log courthouses supplanted by imposing temples of justice; he had seen how commonwealths grow, how a great State spends its youth, how laws and institutions are planted and take root, and how the American spirit and civilization builds, and with what fibres holds together, a nation. During his term as Chief Justice many young law-rumors were coming in with fabulous stories of a rich discovery of gold yet further on at Alder Gulch. One of their number, Captain Brookey, advised them to wait until he made a trip on horseback and reported, which they did, and a few days later they received word from him to come on. After their arrival at the gulch, however, there was no lumber with which to work, and after a fruitless delay of three weeks they returned to Bannack. At Bannack they purchased a claim, worked it for a few days, and as they only took out $16 they called it a bad investment and gave it up. Again they tried Alder Gulch, where they prospected for a time, and where they purchased another claim, paying for it $600. The first six hours they worked in this claim they took out $125, and during the next two months it netted them $1,200. Feeling, however, that mining was an uncertain business, and having an opportunity to sell out, they disposed of their claim for $1,200. With the money thus made they purchased an interest in a sawmill, deeming this the best investment they could make as lumber was in great demand. This mill was propelled by horses, twelve on a shift, the other twelve being turned out to grass, which was their only food. The capacity of the mill by this process was about 1,200 feet of lumber per day. The following spring they changed to water power and soon thereafter sold out. That fall they purchased an interest in a mill and machinery, for which they agreed to pay $2,000, with interest at ten per cent per month until the debt was paid. The amount was paid in full within two months, and soon afterward they sold out at a good profit.

In December of the same year in which they sold their mill, the Walker brothers and Dr. Hardinbrook returned East, going by stage from Virginia City to Atchison, Kansas, their stage fare being $600 apiece. And while on this return trip they paid $2 for each of their meals. In the spring of 1865 they outfitted with wagons and teams, and, taking such commodities as were in demand in the mining regions, they again started West. After four months of travel they reached the present site of Deer Lodge, where they remained during the winter. In the spring they packed their goods on horses to Elk creek, a new mining camp just opened, where they disposed of their provisions at the following prices: bacon, 90 cents a pound; nails, 75 cents a pound; beans, 75 cents a pound; coffee, $1.40 a pound; sugar, $1.25 a pound; flour, 35 cents a pound.

After disposing of their goods they went to Helena, then a lively placer camp, where they again invested in a portable steam mill, and proceeded to cut lumber to fill the growing demand. They sold their product for from $40 to $50 per thousand feet, and notwithstanding they sold immense quantities of it the lumber accumulated from year to year in their yard until in 1869 they had nearly 500,000 feet of lumber. Then came a fire which swept away nearly all the new town and created a market for all the lumber they had, and for their daily output, which was then about 8,000 feet. This increased demand caused an advance in prices and they sold their product for from $50 to $60 per thousand feet. In the fall of 1872 they disposed of this mill and all their lumber interests. Dr. Hardinbrook had not been in the firm after the Deer Lodge transaction, the milling business being conducted by the brothers, J. C. and A. M. Walker. While engaged in lumbering they also carried on a freighting business with teams, which they continued until 1873. A Mr. Brown was connected with this branch of the business. Their train consisted of sixteen teams, with a capacity of 100,000 pounds. The Walker brothers also ran a train of eighty mules and twenty wagons, freighting in Nevada. In 1872, after a year and a half in Nevada, they disposed of their freighting outfit, and A. M. Walker returned to Montana and for one year was again engaged in lumbering in Helena. His next venture was in the sheep business. He purchased 2,500 sheep, and gave his attention to this enterprise for three years, at the end of which time his flock numbered 4,500, besides having sold a large number for mutton in the meantime. The wool he sold during these three years brought him a fair income, the last clip alone netting no less than $4,600. He disposed of his sheep interests at a good profit, and in 1881 we find him again dealing in lumber, this time at Butte, where he was associated with William Thompson for a few months. Afterward he was with Thomas Newton, with whom he continued until 1884. Then he sold out his interests there and invested in a mill at Empire. In September, 1888, he leased a new hotel at Carroll, the lower smelting works of the Anaconda Mining Company, the lease to run for five years. In this hotel, known as the Walker House, he did a successful business, but before his lease expired he sold it, together with the furnishings of the house.

McIntire, attorney for the Great Northern Railroad Company at Helena; S. H. McIntire, late city attorney of Helena; John A. Luce, prosecuting attorney; J. L. Staats and W. A. Imes, of Bozeman; Thomas H. Carter, late delegate in Congress for Montana and commissioner of the General Land Office at Washington; John B. Clayberg, late attorney general of Montana and lecturer in the law department of the University of Michigan; R. E. Howey, late probate judge of Lewis and Clarke county; Arthur J. Craven, an accomplished orator and member of the constitutional convention; George R. Milburn, judge of the Seventh Judicial District court; O. F. Goddard, State Senator and leading lawyer of Yellowstone county; A. R. Joy, member of the constitutional convention and leading lawyer of Park county; Cornelius Hedges, late United States district attorney and State senator; J. A. Johnston, for several terms prosecuting attorney for the Third Judicial District,—all were admitted to practice for the first time by the Supreme Court of Montana, or, soon after their admission elsewhere, commenced practice before the Montana courts during the official period of Chief Justice Wade. Even Warren Toole, Wilbur F. Sanders and William Dixon, the three foremost lawyers of the great Northwest, earned their exalted positions as lawyers either before Judge Wade or before his associates during his term of service. Of these Sanders was for ten years attorney for the Northern Pacific Railroad Company in Montana, and upon the admission of the Territory as a State, he was elected Senator for Montana. Dixon was elected first State representative and served a term in Congress; but Toole, wedded to his profession, having no political ambition, with marvelous memory and profound judgment and reasoning with mathematical precision, has for thirty years stood peerless at the bar, the pioneer and pathfinder in Rocky mountain jurisprudence.

Mr. Walker now resides on his ranch of 600 acres, which is located a mile and a half east of Anaconda. He was married in April, 1871 to Abbie B. Creel, daughter of Robert and Mary A. Creel. Their only child, David Creel Walker, was born February 22, 1872. Mrs. Walker and her son are members of the Presbyterian Church.

Frank L. Mann, Clerk of the Court for the Seventh Judicial District, and a resident of Billings, Montana, is a young man who has already made his mark in this growing State.

He was born in Granville, New York, in 1860, son of Charles R. and Maria (Brown) Mann. His father was a prominent farmer and merchant, and for many years was Judge in Washington county, that State. Frank L. grew to manhood in his native town, receiving his education at Granville Military Academy. In 1882, feeling a desire to push out and embrace the opportunities offered in the great West, he came to Montana, selecting Billings for his place of location. Here he was for some time engaged in mercantile pursuits. He was County Surveyor for Yellowstone county in 1888-9, elected to that office on the Democratic ticket; served for some time as Secretary of the County Democratic Central Committee; and in November, 1892, was elected to his present position, that of Clerk of the Court for the Seventh Judicial District.

Mr. Mann was married in 1889 to Miss Mary Ohland, daughter of Fred and Mary (Renecke) Ohland of Billings. They have two children, Harry T. and Clarles F. He and his wife are members of the Congregational Church.

George Tighe, a member of the Copper City Commercial Company of Anaconda, and its business manager, is one of the most popular and successful merchants of the city. A brief account of his life and business career is as follows:

George Tighe was born in the State of Illinois, November 8, 1861, of Irish descent. His father, Michael Tighe, is a native of the Emerald Isle, his birth having occurred in county Mayo in the year 1829. When he was eighteen Walter F. Chadwick, the learned code practitioner and great trial lawyer, and William Chumasero, learned in the form and practice of the common law and an eminent counselor, under the name of Chumasero & Chadwick, were one of the strong firms during all the official life of Judge Wade and J. W. Strevell, the father of the law in eastern Montana; L. A. Luce, member of the constitutional convention; Charles S. Hartman, member of Congress; J. J. Davis, at Bozeman; F. W. Cole, Silver Bow county; James A. Calloway, late Territorial secretary and member of the legislative assembly from Madison county; George F. Cowan and M. H. Parker, of Jefferson county; W. J. Stephens and Thomas M. Pomeroy, of Missoula county; James H. Garlock, of Miles City; Walter M. Bickford and George W. Reeves, of Missoula; William Scallon, of Butte City; George F. Shelton, A. K. Barbour, J. W. Kinsley, H. B. Smith, James U. Sanders, of Helena; Thomas J. Galbraith, of Dillon; H. R. Whitehill, of Deer Lodge; Thompson Campbell and J. H. Duffy, of Butte; George W. Taylor, of Great Falls; George D. Greene, of Jefferson county, and C. B. Nolan, prosecuting attorney of Lewis and Clarke county, were all able practitioners during the same period.

Sample Orr, H. M. and I. B. Porter and Andrew Burleigh and C. W. Turner, who subsequently left the Territory, were prominent lawyers during the time they resided in Montana.

On the 8th day of November, 1889, Montana was admitted as a State. Its Territorial jurisprudence covers a period of more than a quarter of a century. There were nine volumes of Supreme Court reports and more than 1,300 published opinions and decisions of the Supreme Court during that period, which probably do not represent more than one-tenth of the number of cases tried and determined in the District Courts of the Territory during the same time.

The literature of the reports is perhaps equal to that of other Supreme Court decisions. Many of the justices of the Supreme Court were college-bred men and logical thinkers and writers. The opinions show study and care, and are generally enriched by the citation of numerous authorities. Perhaps a severe critic would pronounce against the length of many of the opin-years of age, Michael Tighe emigrated to America and settled in Connecticut. For twelve years he was in the employ of the Sayers Woolen Mills at Pawtucket, Rhode Island. From there he removed to Illinois and a little later purchased a farm in Wisconsin, upon which he settled and which he cultivated for a number of years. He was married in Illinois, in 1860, to Miss Margaret Noon, who is also a native of Ireland. They have had nine children, seven of whom are living, George being their second-born.

After receiving a common-school education, George Tighe attended a Chicago college, where he completed his studies. He then entered upon his mercantile career as an employe in the famous house of Marshall Field & Company of Chicago. That was in 1881. He remained with them continuously for eleven years and during that time acquired a thorough knowledge of goods, values and business methods. In 1892 he resigned his position there in order to identify himself with this prosperous Western city and assume the management of the business with which he is now connected. Notwithstanding the financial embarrassment of the country for the past two years, the business of his house has shown a constant growth and increase of trade.

Mr. Tighe was married November 12, 1883, to Miss Ellen Kirchen, a native of Illinois and a daughter of Thomas Kirchen, a merchant of that State. They have three children, namely: Nellie, Evangeline and George Gratton.

In politics, Mr. Tighe is a Republican. Fraternally, he is a member of the C. B. L. of Chicago, and of the Elks in Montana. Personally, he is a man of fine physique and pleasing address, and by his many estimable qualities he has won hosts of friends since he came to Montana.

THE COPPER CITY COMMERCIAL COMPANY of Anaconda, is one of the great business houses of Montana. It was organized February 22, 1892, by Messrs. Marcus Daly, D. J. Hennissy, D. F. Halishan, M. Donahue and J. S. Dougherty, with a capital stock of $150,000.

After the company was organized, its first step was toward the erection of a fine brick block in Anaconda. This block is located on the corner of Main street and Commercial avenue; is 76 x 130 feet, with two stories and ions, but when it is remembered that the three justices of the Supreme Court were required to hold district court in the several counties of the Territory for eight or nine months of the year, besides two terms of the Supreme Court, it will be realized that they did not have time to make their opinions brief. There were but few dissenting opinions, and the influence of the court was maintained and strengthened by that fact. Montana, though younger than the other Territories, was foremost in the number of Supreme Court reports and in judicial influence in the Northwest. The briefs and arguments of the lawyers will compare favorably with those of any other set of reports. Congress at an early day provided the Supreme Courts of the Territories with suitable libraries, and Montana, each year since then, has added to this library until now it is equal to that of most of the States. The lawyers, even in the early times and before the coming of railroads, generally had good libraries, and it was only when holding court in the distant counties where there was no local bar that the dearth of law books was severely felt.

The Territory is the parent of the State. As the Territory has been so the State will be. The admission of the Territory as a State did not change the foundations or structure of the Montana judicial system. The State constitution continued the Territorial laws in force, when not in conflict with that instrument. Precedents and decisions remained authority, and that greatest event in political history—the birth of a sovereign State, and its admission into an imperishable Union—did not cause a ripple or jar in the pursuits of the people, or in the jurisprudence of the country.

It brought an increase in the number of hands to run the same machinery, and to do the same kind of work. But this was necessary, as the work had increased. The three Territorial judges tried the causes arising under the constitution and laws of the United States, held the Territorial district courts, and tried the causes arising under the Territorial laws, and held Supreme Court for the hearing of appeals from the district courts. When the Territory became a State this work was divided up, and the United States district judge tries the causes a basement; is arranged for a department store and is filled from top to bottom with an elegant stock of merchandise, the departments being as follows: dry goods, carpets, boots and shoes, clothing, furnishing goods, hats and groceries. The clothing, furnishing-goods and grocery departments show the largest sales, and as they do both a wholesale and retail trade their business is very large. In addition to this establishment they have a branch store at Carroll, where they employ four men. At Anaconda they employ thirty-four men.

The whole business is under the competent management of Mr George Tighe, who was formerly with the well-known firm of Marshall Field & Company, Chicago. Mr. Tighe is a stockholder in the company, and brings to its management the enterprise and successful methods of business used in the best Eastern houses. As he is one of Anaconda's most popular business men, we make further mention of him on another page of this work.

THOMAS M. ROBBINS, a prominent stockman residing near Melrose, Beaver Head county, Montana, was born in Sullivan county, Indiana, April 25, 1834.

His father, Thomas M. Robbins, Sr., was a veteran of the war of 1812 and a pensioner of that war; was twice married, and by his second wife, nee Elizabeth Hinkle, had three sons and four daughters, of whom our subject was the fourth born. The father died in 1861, in the seventieth year of his age, and the mother died in 1854. During the early part of their lives they were Methodists, but later united with the Universalist Church.

Thomas M. Robbins, Jr., was reared in his native State, and May 9, 1855, enlisted in the regular army as a private, and served five years. In 1856 he was sent to British America to guard an exploring expedition, after which he was located successively at Fort Snelling, Fort Leavenworth and Salt Lake. In 1859 he was on detached service on Snake river, and while there buried a number of emigrants who had been killed by the Indians. He remained at Camp Floyd until his time expired, when he was honorably discharged. Then he went to Denver, Colorado, and remained in that part of the country for about a year. In the fall of 1861 he started back East, intending to enlist in the Union army, but when he reached Council Bluffs he changed his plans, returned to Fort Bridger and was employed by Benjamin Hadley on arising under the constitution and laws of the United States. Twelve State district judges try the causes arising under the State laws and three Supreme Court judges hear appeals from the State district courts.

After the revision and codification of 1871–2 by Warren Knowles and Symes, the statutes were again revised or compiled in 1879, and again in 1887. At the session of 1889 an act was passed authorizing the creation of a code commission, whose duty it should be to prepare for submission to the legislative assembly four codes, viz.: a civil code, a penal code, a code of civil procedure and a political code. This commission expended two and one-half years' labor in the preparation of these codes.

It was required that the civil code consist of the body of the common law reduced to the form of a statute as far as possible, the penal code to treat of crimes and punishments, the code of civil procedure to treat of the procedure and practice in civil actions and proceedings in all the courts, and the political code to treat of the sovereignty of the people, of political rights and duties, of the political divisions of the State, of the government of counties, cities and towns, and of such other general laws as to the commission should seem best.

Judge F. W. Cole, of Butte City, ex-Gov. B. P. Carpenter and ex-Chief Justice D. S. Wade, of Helena, composed the members of the code commission.

Judge Cole had every qualification for the work. He was familiar with the code of civil procedure of the State of New York, in which State he graduated at college, studied law and commenced the practice; with the laws and decisions of the State of Nevada, in which State he practiced his profession and for five years served as judge of the district court; with the codes of California, in which State he practiced for several years; and with the statutes and decisions of the courts of Montana, where he also practiced and became eminent in his profession.

Ex-Governor Carpenter had for many years been a practitioner in the State of New York and judge of one of its courts. He came to Montana as Governor of the Territory in December, 1884, and after his retirement as governor, in July, 1885, resumed the practice of his profession, and by his great legal knowledge and clearness of statement and expression was the overland stage route, acting as local agent and stock-driver about one year. In the spring of 1863 he heard of the gold discoveries at Bannack and directed his course to this point, arriving June 14. He became associated with the California Company, with whom he mined successfully until 1865; but, like many other miners, he made investments in claims whereby he lost his hard earnings. The winter of 1865–6 he spent on Rock creek in the Big Hole valley, far remote from civilization, as at that time his nearest neighbor was ten miles away. In the spring he went to Moose creek in Deer Lodge county, where he was for two years engaged in the stock business and was successful. In 1868 he removed to Rocker and began selling goods and keeping a boarding house, and here, too, he made money. The following year, however, he went to Rochester, where he met with financial loss and soon found himself "broke" again. Then he went to Silver Bow and engaged in the hotel business and was there off and on until 1875. In 1876 he came to his present location and took claim to a tract of Government land, 120 acres at first, on which in 1870 he built a comfortable residence. Here he has since resided, engaged in stock-raising. Aside from his ranch he has various other interests. He owns a store at Rochester, has two houses in Melrose, and has invested considerably in copper, lead and silver mines.

Mr. Robbins was married March 14, 1864, to Miss Ester Whitney, a native of Jackson county, Michigan, and a daughter of Price Whitney. Their only son, William L. Robbins, is the proprietor of the Central hotel at Melrose.

Mr. Robbins is a member of the I. O. O. F. and in politics is a Republican.

CHARLES S. MARSHALL, ex-Judge of the Fourth Judicial District of Montana, was born in Paris, Bourbon County, Kentucky, January 19, 1821. He is of English origin, and his ancestors came to the colony of Virginia in the early history of the country. The grandfather, Humphrey Marshall, was born in that State, but afterward removed to and became a life-long resident of Kentucky. He represented his State in the United States well qualified to aid in bringing order out of the contradictions, obscurities and imperfections of the statutes.

The experience of Judge Wade was not without value for such a work.

This commission completed the four codes named in February, 1892, which were by the governor submitted to the legislative assembly of 1893, with the recommendation that they be enacted into law, but the session expired without action upon the proposed codes, and so the statutes of the State still remain in a confused condition, and but imperfectly carry into effect the provisions of the constitution.

Upon the admission of the State, Henry N. Blake, of Virginia City, became chief justice and Edgar N. Harwood, of Billings, and William H. DeWitt, of Butte City, associate justices of the Supreme Court.

The judges of the State district courts now are: First District, William H. Hunt and Horace R. Buck; Second District, John J. McHatton and John M. Spear; Third District, Theodore Brantley, successor to David M. Durfee; Fourth District, Frank H. Woody, successor to S. C. Marshall; Fifth District, Frank Showers, successor to Thomas J. Galbraith; Sixth District, Frank Henry; Seventh District, George R. Milburn; Eighth District, Charles H. Benton; Ninth District, Frank K. Armstrong; Tenth District, Dudley Du Bose.

The opinions of the State Supreme Court are contained in part of the ninth, the tenth, eleventh and twelfth volumes of Montana Reports.

Among the important cases determined by the State Supreme Court are the following: State ex rel. Thompson vs. Kenney, auditor, 9 Montana, 23, involving the subject of mandamus to State Auditor,—certificate of election and canvassing board: opinion by Harwood, J.; St. Louis M. & M. Co. vs. Montana Co., 9 id., 288, involving the question of right to examine mining property: opinion by Blake, C. J.; First National Bank of Helena vs. Roberts, 9 id., 323, as to sufficiency of complaint in ejectment, affirming McCauley vs. Gilmer, before mentioned: opinion by Harwood, J.; Chadwick et al. vs. Tatem, 9 id., 352, concerning wills and dower: opinion by Harwood, J.; Gans vs.

Senate from 1794 until 1800. He married his cousin, Mary Marshall, a sister of United States Chief Justice John Marshall. To that union were born two sons, John J. and Thomas A. The latter, the father of our subject, was born in Woodford county, Kentucky, in 1794. He married Miss Eliza Price, a native of Lexington, Kentucky. Mr. Marshall was a prominent lawyer and politician of Bourbon county, was elected to the State Legislature a number of times, also represented the Bourbon District of Kentucky in the United States Congress, and in later life was Associate and Chief Justice. His death occurred at Louisville, Kentucky, in 1871. Mrs. Marshall died at the age of eighty-one years. They were members of the Episcopal Church, and were respected and esteemed citizens.

Charles S. Marshall, one of seven children, four now living, was educated in the Bourbon Academy, and in March, 1842, graduated in the law department of the university at Lexington. For many years thereafter he was successfully engaged in the practice of his profession in western Kentucky, where he enjoyed the highest esteem of the bench and bar and also of the citizens of the State. Mr. Marshall was chosen by his fellow-citizens to fill the offices of County Attorney, County Judge, Circuit Judge and Registrar in Bankruptcy. The Judge's eldest son, Judge Thomas C. Marshall, acquired a large law practice in Missoula, Montana, and in 1888 induced his father to locate in this city. The latter purchased the pleasant and commodious residence where he now resides, and intended to retire from active life. But in October, 1889, he was chosen Judge of the Fourth Judicial District of Montana. He brought to his office much legal ability and ripe experience, his decisions gave good satisfaction, and his entire life has been one of high integrity and honor. Judge Marshall was also chosen a member of the Constitutional Convention of Montana, and aided in forming the present constitution. In political matters he was raised a Whig, but voted the Democratic ticket for James Buchanan as President, and afterward for Stephen A. Douglas. When the question of secession arose, Mr. Marshall opposed it with all his power, and in spite of all opposition maintained his allegiance to the Government of the United States. Being a strong Union man, he joined forces with the Republican party, to which he has ever since adhered. The end of the war and its results upon his country all combine to confirm the wisdom of his judgment and course, and every lover of his country, when he looks into the noble face of this patriot, cannot help admiring the nobleness of character which dictated and actuated such an independent and upright life.

Judge Marshall was married in Ballard county, Kentucky, August 30, 1848, to Miss Emma V. Corbet, a native of that State, and a daughter of Jacob Corbet, for many years Clerk of the Circuit Court of Ballard county. Seven children have been born in this family, namely: Susan Alice, widow of A. P. Hall and a resident of Missoula; Mary E., deceased in November, 1889, was the wife of George W. Reves, an attorney of this city; Thomas C., a prominent lawyer of Missoula; Lucy E., wife of Dr. W. W. Richland, of Kentucky; Jacob C., also a resident of that State; and Emma Kate, of Missoula. Mr. and Mrs. Marshall have seventeen grandchildren. Judge Marshall was made a Master Mason in 1855, and has taken the Royal Arch and Council degrees.

GEORGE SLOAN MILLER, a resident of Deer Lodge, Montana, may properly be classed with the pioneers of the State, he having come across the plains with his parents when a boy of nine years, in 1864.

Mr. Miller was born in St. Joseph, Missouri, March 17, 1855, son of Finis Barnet Miller, an honored pioneer mention of whom will be found elsewhere in this work. At the time the Miller family emigrated to Montana, George S., was at an age to appreciate the novelty of such a journey and yet not realize the dangers which attended it Many emigrants who went before and came after them were murdered by hostile Indians, and the safe arrival at their destination of this Christian family Mr. Miller attributes to the loving care of a Heavenly Father.

In Helena and Deer Lodge, George S. attended school, and after the removal of the family to California he took a course in the State University at Oakland. He also attended Heald's Business College, San Francisco, of which he is a graduate. After completeing his commercial course, he returned to Deer Lodge and engaged in mercantile business as an employe of W. W. Higgins,

Then he became a stockholder and secretary of the Lyon Mining Company, and at the same time bookkeeper and secretary of the N. J. Bielenberg Company, in which he still continues. He is interested in both placer and quartz mining. For the past thirteen years he has also done an insurance business, representing some of the largest companies in the world, among them the Royal of Liverpool, England.

Mr. Miller was married April 27, 1881, to Miss Eva J. Fox, of Minneapolis, Minnesota, and they have three children, all born in Deer Lodge—Guy E., Orofino and George S., Jr.

Mr. Miller is a member in good standing of the Masonic fraternity, holding an important office in the order, and he is Past Master Workman in the A. O. U. W. Politically, he has always been identified with the Democratic party. Both he and his wife are worthy members of the Episcopal Church.

EDWARD CARDWELL, of Cold Springs, Jefferson county, was born in 1832, in the village of Glenavey, county of Antrim, Ireland, being the eighth born of a family of ten. His father, Edward Cardwell, was a farmer in moderate circumstances; his father was a non-commissioned officer in the English army, together with five brothers, two of whom were killed at the battle of Waterloo.

The subject of this sketch attended school while in Ireland, and after the death of his parents emigrated to America, then being sixteen years of age; went to Canada, where he experienced all the vicissitudes of fortune that young emigrants usually experience in a country without friends or money; returned in the spring to Rochester, New York, and there learned the trade of carriage painting, which business he followed for some years through the State of New York and in Canada. In the meantime he attended the high school at Rochester and when short of funds was compelled to work at his trade. When in possession of the sum of one thousand dollars he decided to go West, and in the spring of 1857 ports show that the courts have consumed much time and study in an effort to make known what the legislative assembly intended by the statutes enacted.

The statutes of Montana have always been imperfect, confused and incomplete. One cause of confusion and lack of system is the fact that members of the legislative assembly have generally been men who came to Montana from widely separated States, and they brought with them recollections of the statutes in force in the place of their former homes, and thereby have been enacted into the statutes of Montana detached, fragmentary and incomplete portions of the statutes of other States. For instance, our statutes in relation to the estates of deceased persons is a collection of fragments, part of them coming from California, part from Missouri and part from New York and Ohio.

No branch of law ought to be more sacred than that which relates to the estates of deceased persons. No larceny is so wicked or cruel and no neglect so culpable as that which absorbs or permits the spoliation of the property of widows and orphans, in the form of fees and charges. Our constitution creates the office of public administrator. There never was any necessity for such an office, for, in the absence or disability of those otherwise entitled, the court would always find a suitable person to act as administrator. There must be something inherently wrong in a system that tempts men to commit murder for the sake of administering upon the estate of the victims. There must be something inherently wrong in a system which permits the absorption of estates without leaving anything behind. An office that is a perpetual menace to the property of citizens and that offers more temptations than ordinary human nature can stand, ought to be abolished.

We have statutes giving to the widow and to the surviving husband "community property," but we are not informed as to what "community property" is. Our sections in relation to this kind of property are detached fragments of the California system, which with us has no meaning and performs no office except to confuse and obscure the law.

went to Leavenworth, Kansas. At that time Kansas was in a state of turmoil, owing to the feeling that existed between the Free Soilers and the border ruffians, as they were called. Leavenworth at that time was the outpost of civilization, as all west of the river only the Indian, the buffalo and wild animals were to be found. He secured employment at his trade in the Quartermaster's Department at Leavenworth, where he remained for three years, going to Colorado in the spring of 1860, being attracted by the discovery of gold. From there he followed the throng to Pike's Peak and after prospecting for awhile he became superintendent for P. D. Casey, a prosperous miner and quite a noted character in those days. He was attracted still farther west by the Alder Gulch gold discoveries, arriving in that camp November 7, 1863, where he met many of the men he had become acquainted with in Colorado. He entered into partnership with John Caplice and Peter Ronan and mined at Central City, Virginia City and at Bummer Dan's Bar, passing through the exciting times where the road agent made life uncertain. He witnessed the hanging of Ives, Boonhelm, Gallagher and many other lawless men by the friends of law and good society generally known as the Vigilantes. After the hanging of those murderous wretches, Mr. Cardwell ventured to return to the States and succeeded in getting out without being molested by the highwaymen. The trip was a hard one, as it took six weeks to reach Salt Lake. The party left their wagons at Port Neuf cañon and have never seen them since. After a visit in the States he returned to Montana, and again engaged in mining, stock-raising and farming in Jefferson county, his present home, which occupation he has since followed.

Senator Cardwell is well known throughout the State both in public and private life, having served his country in the Council, in the Ninth Assembly; was also a member of the Twelfth, Thirteenth, Fourteenth and Fifteenth Territorial Assemblies; was a delegate to the Constitutional Convention; was a candidate for the Senate on the Democratic ticket at the first State election, and was defeated, but at the election of 1890 was more successful, and again occupied a seat with the State law-makers. He is a bachelor.

estate of her deceased husband, or what interest a surviving husband is entitled to in the estate of a deceased wife? Is the widow entitled to dower? May she make her election under the will of her husband? What is she entitled to as heir? Our statute of 1876 gave to the widow dower, authorized her to make her election under the will of her husband, and abolished tenancy by the courtesy. This act, without ever having been repealed, or suspended, was left out of the revision of 1879. That revision purports to contain all the laws of a general nature in force at the expiration of the eleventh regular session of the legislative assembly on the 21st day of February, 1879.

This revision also provided that the homestead selected by the husband or wife during coverture and recorded should vest, upon the death of either, in the survivor, but does not provide how or in what manner the homestead should be selected, or where the certificate of selection should be recorded.

This revision also provided, in one section, that there should be no imprisonment for debt, and in another section authorized such imprisonment; in one section it provided that the county superintendent of schools should appoint school trustees to fill vacancies, and in another section that such vacancies should be filled by election. There is one whole chapter upon the subject of county roads, but we are nowhere informed what a county road is.

The statutes relating to private corporations have many imperfections, and under the language used corporations are authorized for almost every conceivable purpose, until our people, instead of being men and women, responsible for their acts and obligations, are walking corporations and responsible for nothing at all.

The statutes upon the subject of eminent domain, the right of way through mining claims for roads and highways, for railroad, and for irrigating and mining ditches, are conflicting, confusing and incomplete. We have no statute regulating assignments for the benefit of creditors, but assignments for that or some other purpose are constantly going on.

After the revision of 1879 four regular sessions of the legislative assembly intervened, GEORGE BICKERTON WINSTON, attorney at law, Anaconda, Montana, is a native of the State of Missouri, born in Jefferson City in 1861. His father, Dr. George D. Winston, was one of the prominent physicians and surgeons of that city.

In the schools of his native city and in the high school of St. Louis George B. Winston received his early education. The higher branches he studied under a private tutor. He read law in the office of Ewing & Huff, a prominent law firm of Jefferson City, and for a time he was assistant State Librarian, concluding his course of study while filling that position. In 1884 he was admitted to the bar and to practice in the Supreme Court of the State, in Jefferson City, and soon after his admittance he came west to Montana and located in Anaconda. Here his qualifications and his special adaptation for his chosen profession soon gained for him the recognition he deserved, and he rapidly won his way to the front. He now ranks with the able counselors and successful attorneys of this part of Montana.

Mr. Winston was married in 1881 to Miss Alice Shepard, of Jefferson City, Missouri. Her parents, natives of New England, are deceased. Mr. and Mrs. Winston have one daughter, Frances A. He and his wife are members of the Episcopal Church, of which he is a Trustee.

Mr. Winston was a member of the Constitutional Convention in 1889, which framed the constitution on which Montana was admitted to the Union. He was also the first City Attorney for Anaconda. The only fraternal organization with which he is connected is the Order of Elks, Anaconda Lodge, No. 239, a benevolent and protective body. In this he is the Esteemed Leading Knight.

CHARLES SCHATZLEIN, a prominent paint and wall-paper merchant of Butte City, Montana, dates his birth in Pennsylvania, in 1857. His parents had emigrated to this country from Germany and settled at Mauch Chunk, Carbon county, where the father was a tradesman. They were members of the Lutheran Church and were highly respected people.

At Mauch Chunk the subject of our sketch was reared and received a common-school education and there also he learned the trade of painting and house decorating. In 1880 he came to Montana, and since the spring of that year has been identified with the city of Butte. For nine and then came the compilation of 1887; but neither the subsequent legislation nor this compilation did very much toward curing the defects contained in the revision of 1879.

Chapter XXII of this compilation, relating to municipal corporations, has been hammered at, wounded and butchered by five successive legislative assemblies, and is left in a sickly, dazed and hopeless condition.

Special legislation—the enactment of laws not for the public good or to promote the general welfare, but to promote the welfare of particular persons, or to promote particular enterprises or speculations at the public expense—disfigure our statutes.

By such kind of legislation as this has the legislative assembly been the breeder of litigation, the promoter of lawsuits, the feeder of the courts and consequently the cause of high taxation, for every lawsuit that is tried costs the people money, whether the controversy arises from an imperfect statute or other cause.

But the legislative assembly has not always been so much to blame for the confused and imperfect condition of our statutes or their lack of symmetry and completeness. It was a mistaken idea of economy during the Territorial period, that the organic act limited the session of the legislative assembly to forty days, once in two years, and the time given to legislation by the State constitution is not much better. No doubt there is too much legislation; but the brevity of the session does not seem so much to have affected the quantity as the quality of the laws enacted.

There are other causes which have contributed to the weakness and imperfections of our statutes. In theory, the best and wisest men are selected to make laws, but in practice the office of law-maker is secured, not by the best man, but by the best wire-puller and professional politician; and the member thus chosen, in order to show that in some miraculous manner and in a night he has become a statesman, finds at once that existing statutes are wrong, while his real purpose is to offer himself for sale to those who are using the legislature to promote their private schemes, and at the same time he must attempt to do something for the people of his district, in order to secure a re-years he worked at his trade. In 1890, in partnership with Governor Rickards, he established his wall-paper and paint business. Subsequently he purchased the Governor's interest in the establishment and has since been sole owner. His store is located on West Broadway at No. 14. Here he occupies two floors, each 36 x 100 feet, has a large stock and does both a wholesale and retail business, his business extending not only throughout Montana but also into Idaho. He manufactures a fine quality of liquid paint, for which he has a large demand. In Butte City he still conducts his painting and house-decorating business and in this line of work constantly employs a large force of hands.

Ever since he located in Butte City Mr. Schatzlein has taken a deep interest in its public affairs. He is now serving his second term as Alderman, having been elected to the position by the Republicans of the Second Ward. He is an active member of the I. O. O. F., having passed all the chairs in both branches of the order; is also a member of the Grand Lodge of Montana.

Mr. Schatzlein was married in 1885 to Miss Emma Martin, a native of his own State. Since coming to Montana they have made many warm friends and are held in high esteem by all who know them.

COLONEL TIMOTHY O'LEARY, a prominent citizen and lawyer of Anaconda, Montana, was born in Queenstown, Ireland, December 15, 1846, of Irish parentage. He attended the Christian Brothers' School and also took a college course.

In 1862, when a boy in his 'teens, Mr. O'Leary came to America to join the Irish Brigade, but they were not recruiting, so he joined the United States Regulars, as a private, and served with the Fifteenth Army Corps, participating in the battles of Stone River, Chickamaugua, Missionary Ridge and Kenesaw Mountain, and in various skirmishes. He was twice wounded,—first, at Chickamaugua, where he received a gunshot wound in the breast, and, second, at Kenesaw Mountain, where he was shot through the foot. He continued in the service until the close of the war, being mustered out in July, 1865. Soon after this he became connected with the Fenian movement, and participated in the battle at Ridgeway, June 2, 1866, against the Queen's Own. Later he was military organizer of the Fenians, holding the election; and so each session brings forth numberless bills concerning everything but the public good. The desire for re-election demoralizes and controls both national and State legislation. Other members have the old-fashioned notion that they were elected to enact general laws for the general welfare, and despise all efforts to make the legislature the polluted instrument of private gain and speculation.

With these conflicting aims and purposes it is no wonder that in a forty or sixty days' session vicious or imperfect statutes are hurried through the legistature before sober reflection has revealed their character or pointed out their errors. As a matter of fact, most of the legislation of Congress and of the State legislatures is rushed through during the last hours of the session.

After a complete system of statutes has once been enacted it ought to be let alone, except to correct such errors and abuses as experience and time bring to light. After such a system has once been established, though imperfect, it would be better to have no legislatures at all than to have the statutes mangled and made more uncertain by further legislation.

If sufficient time and study were given to the task, statutes might be made so simple and plain as to be their own interpreters, without the aid of courts and lawyers, and by the same means systems of statutes or codes might be made so clear and certain as to require no revelation or rules of interpretation to understand them.

The people of Montana are entitled to a complete system of statutes free from contradictions or inconsistencies, and such a system as will carry into effect and put into active operation every provision of the constitution of the State; and it is the duty of the bench and the bar of the State to aid in bringing about this result.

The legislative assembly must cease to be the breeder of lawsuits; it must cease to levy taxes to pay for the interpretation of its own statutes or for explaining its own blunders. None but shysters and legal brigands and vampires hope to add to their gains by lawsuits that arise from confused and imperfect statutes.

Besides those already named, the lawyers who have practiced in the State Supreme Court are as follows:

W. M. Cockrill, F. N. McIntire, W. L. Hay, M. S. Gunn, G. O. Freeman, C. P. Drennan, James R. Goss,, H. C. Cockrill, James Forbis, position of Adjutant General, with headquarters in New York, and during this time he also studied law. In 1870 he came west to Minnesota and settled down to the practice of law, in which he was engaged there up to 1885. That year he received from President Cleveland the appointment of Post Office Inspector, and was inspector in charge at Philadelphia. In 1889 he came to Anaconda and opened his law practice in this city, where he has since continued, meeting with satisfactory success. Since coming to Montana he has also become interested in various mining operations.

Colonel O'Leary was married in 1876 to Miss Kate Ahern, a native of Brooklyn, New York. They have one son, Howard, who is now aiding his father in the law office.

The Colonel is a prominent member of the A. O. U. W. and of the Elks, having filled important offices in both orders. He is a man of wide experience and ability, and both he and his family are among the most highly esteemed people of Anaconda. They are members of the Catholic Church.

FRANK BELEY, Mayor of Livingston, Montana, is one of the enterprising and progressive young men who came from an Eastern home to Montana a few years ago, and has already attained a success here, of which he may justly be proud. The following biography is of interest in this connection:

Frank Beley was born in the State of New York, July 22, 1859, son of George and Catherine (Levens) Beley, descendants of French ancestors who were early settlers of the Empire State. His father is engaged in agricultural pursuits in New York, still owning and occupying the farm on which Frank was born.

The subject of our sketch left the farm and began business for himself when he was quite young, his first venture being in the manufacture of picture frames in the city of Brooklyn, New York. He there met with misfortune in the way of fire, and lost everything he had.

In the new counties created by the legislative assembly of 1893, there are lawyers of prominence and among them, in Flathead county, Sidney M. Logan, prosecuting attorney, Wilbur N. Noffsinger, Henry W. Heideman, Frank H. Nash, William J. Brennan, Frank L. Gray, E. J. Crull, Charles H. Foote, Edward C. O'Donnell, Byron J. McIntire, Robert L. Clinton, John F. Duffy, Scott N. G.

After that event he returned to the farm and was engaged in farm work until 1886, when he resolved to try his fortune in the great West. He accordingly came to Montana. For a few months he worked on a ranch near Deer Lodge, from whence he went to Butte, where he engaged with the Centennial Brewing Company, and remained with that firm until October, 1888. His next move was to Livingston. Here he established a bottling enterprise, which his able management has succeeded in increasing to a large capacity. He bottles all the drinks, with the exception of beer, that are bottled in Livingston.

Upon taking up his residence in Livingston, Mr. Beley soon grew into popular favor, and his popularity was shown by his being elected to represent the first ward as Alderman, in which position he served two years. And in the spring of 1893 he was elected Mayor of the city of Livingston. Mr. Beley is a member of Yellowstone Lodge, No. 10, K. of P., and also of the A. O. U. W., Livingston. Politically, he is a Democrat.

In 1882 Mr. Beley was married to Miss Amelia George, daughter of Methurian and Antoinelle (Sayer) George, of New York State. Mr. George was a harness manufacturer, and a man highly respected by all who knew him. Mr. and Mrs. Beley have two children,—Ernest and Fred.

DAVID P. RANKEN.—Few men have been more active and successful in developing the mining and stock interests of Montana than has David P. Ranken. Briefly, a sketch of his life is here presented.

Mr. Ranken is descended from sturdy Scotch ancestry, although born in the north of Ireland, October 11, 1884, son of John and Mary A. (Laughlin) Ranken. He is one of a family of seven sons and one daughter. The daughter married, and several years afterward died, leaving a family of six children. Two of the sons died when young, and of the other five we record that David P. is in Montana; John D. is at the head of the foundry and machine firm of Ranken & Fitch, St. Louis, Misssouri; H. L. is a capitalist of St. Louis; and the other two died after reaching manhood.

David P. Ranken began frontier life at an early age. When he was nineteen he went to Texas and from there explored and prospected among the Rocky ranges to their northern bounds. He first engaged in mining in Meagher

Bair and J. E. Erickson; in Granite county, Wingfield Brown, prosecuting attorney, D. M. Durphey, W. H. Rogers and W. E. Moore; in Ravalli county, L. J. Knapp, prosecuting attorney, H. L. Myers, J. R. McLaren, S. A. Ammon, R. A. O'Hara, George Baggs and C. B. Calkins; in Valley county, J. J. Kerr and I. H. Lewis.

On January 1, 1893, William Y. Pemberton, he who wrote down the testimony at the celebrated Ives trial, in December, 1863, and who for more than a quarter of a century had practiced his profession in Montana, after serving a term as district judge of the Second Judicial district, succeeded Blake as Chief Justice of the Supreme Court. The first of his opinions will appear in volume 13 of the reports. Genial, able and experienced, with a keen sense of right and justice, and having for his coworkers on the bench Associate Justices Harwood and DeWitt, who received their baptism of practice in the courts of Montana, and who, though younger than their chief, are of high character, learned and capable, the promise is that the succeeding reports will maintain the same high position and influence as those that have gone before.

And so Montana jurisprudence enters upon its enduring life. Judges and lawyers disappear, but others take their places; generations march across the narrow stage in endless procession; parties are forgotten; the throbbing, pulsing life of the court-room, with its hopes and fears, subsides; time sends to oblivion the actors in the scene; lawyer and client, friend and foe, the trembling criminal and the judge who pronounces sentence—all vanish into shadows, but the decisions and opinions become precedents, and, if they speak the language of justice, live forever. And thus Montana jurisprudence is linked to all the past and will live in all the future. It has become a part of that marvelous system of national and State jurisprudence, each supreme within the sphere of its own jurisdiction, the admiration of the world, which extends to and covers every foot of territory and protects the rights and liberties and prescribes the duties of every person within the limits of the United States. The life-giving spirit of that system is the common county, Montana, near its county seat, Diamond City, and was the first who invested largely in placer mining. In this enterprise he invested $20,000 for pipe alone, the freight on his iron piping from St. Louis being eighteen cents a pound. He built a water ditch that was seven miles long, and when his works were completed he had a water capacity of 2,000 miners' inches, the whole plant costing him no less than $100,000. The profits were at times large. Frequently he realized $2,000 from the expenditure of $100. He owns a valuable quartz lead in the same mining belt, which assays $600 per ton. This he is now developing and will operate it on a much larger scale as soon as railroad transportation is afforded, and it is now expected that a road will be built to these mines in the near future. Mr. Ranken also owns valuable copper deposits in the same region, near Copperopolis, and has sixty acres of valuable placer field. He sold his first placer mine some years since. In 1876 he located valuable grass lands on the Yellowstone fifteen miles south of Livingston, and now owns a section and a half on the east and one section on the west side of the river. On the east side, where he resides, is a valuable spring of water clea as crystal, and from this spring the water meanders through his ranch to the river, and never freezes, thus making a great resort for water fowls in winter. The peculiar situation of his land and its water resources enable him to produce vast quantities of hay without irrigation. He has long been extensively interested in stock and is classed with the successful stock men of the State.

Personally, Mr. Ranken is a man of excellent judgment, broad and progressive views, and is given to hospitality. None are ever refused shelter and food at his home. While he has entertained hundreds since he took up his abode in Montana, he has never accepted one cent from any of those who have lodged with him. He is an interesting converser and never fails to make his guests feel comfortable and at home. Fraternally, he is a member of George Washington Lodge, No. 9, A. F. & A. M., and Chapter No. 8, both of St. Louis. Politically, he is a Republican.

James R. Boyce, Jr., a highly respected citizen of Butte City, has been identified with Montana since 1865. He was born in Missouri April 20, 1844, and comes of an old Virginia family, his father being Hon. James R law, which ever has been the guardian of the achievement, the progress, and the civilization of the English-speaking race.

Constitutions and statutes are but the outlines—Magna Charta itself was but a framework—while that which gives life and strength to the system, that which makes it the guardian of liberty and property, that which takes hold of and unravels every complication of human affairs, that which adapts itself to every novel and strange condition of country or people, are those eternal principles of right and justice which the common-law judges have announced and applied in their opinions in the decisions of cases.

The common is case-made law, and is now contained in about 8,000 volumes of reports in which are more than 1,000,000 opinions and decisions, extending over a period of a thousand years.

In our country these volumes of reports are increasing and accumulating at a rate never known before. As to the United States courts we have one Supreme court, nine circuit courts of appeals, nine circuit courts, and about sixty district courts; and as to State and Territorial courts we have forty-nine supreme courts, or courts of last resort, besides the inferior State courts, whose decisions are reported and published, and each year these courts, taken together, produce 200 volumes or more of reports!

From this great reservoir of the common law will continually flow commentaries, text books, digests, law dictionaries and cyclopædias, and it is safe to predict that by the year 1950 a complete law library in the United States will contain at least 30,000 ponderous volumes.

In 1886 Judge John F. Dillon said (Report of the American Bar Association, vol. IX): "The Roman law, by means of commentaries on the text of the XII Tables, by imperial constitutions, decrees, edicts and rescripts, had, before Justinian, attained to such proportions that it was said to be the load of many camels. The Roman situation was tolerable compared with ours. Our judiciary law, which embraces that of England and America, now runs back through several centuries to the reign of Edward II, without revision or authentic restatement. It is scattered through volumes so numerous that the memory is taxed to its utmost to remember even their names, that only Boyce, Sr., further mention of whom is found elsewhere in this work.

The subject of this sketch was reared and educated in his native State, and in 1865 came up the Missouri river with his mother and the rest of the family to join the father in Montana, the father having come to Virginia City the year before. He met them with teams at Fort Benton and brought them across the mountains to Virginia City, where he was engaged in the mercantile business. James R., Jr., had just arrived at maturity and he was given employment as a collector by the firm of which his father was a member,—Tootle, Leech & Company. When the firm moved their business to Helena he went with them and continued in their employ until 1875. He then succeeded his father and the firm name was changed to Sands & Boyce. In 1879 they removed the business to Butte City and Mr. Boyce continued in charge of it. In 1887 another change was made, Mr. Boyce and Mr. A. J. Davis becoming equal partners in the business, which was done under the firm name of J. R. Boyce, Jr., & Company until after the death of Mr. Davis. In 1891 the First National Bank of Butte City, through a misunderstanding, and, as Mr. Boyce believes, in an unavoidable way, attached Mr. Davis' interest, and in that way the business was wrecked. The matter has since been in the courts, Mr. Boyce suing for damages, and it is firmly believed that he will get his rights.

Since 1891 Mr. Boyce has been retired from mercantile business. He resides with his family in their commodious residence, No. 523 West Galena street, and gives his attention to looking after his real-estate interests, he having invested in both city and country property. He owns a large and beautiful ranch at the mouth of Black Tail cañon, nine miles south of Butte City, which for beauty of scenery is unsurpassed. It is well improved with good buildings, etc., is supplied with an abundance of pure spring water, and its chief products are vegetables, he having sold no less than $3,000 worth of vegetables from it last year (1893). He keeps a tenant on this place.

the rich can buy them, and that the practical industry and strength of no human being can examine, much less study and digest them."

Every year adds to this great, unwieldy mass, and when we look into these volumes to ascertain what the law really is, we find decisions contradictory and irreconcilable; decisions overruling, modifying, limiting or enlarging the scope and meaning of other decisions; right decisions supported by wrong reasons, and wrong decisions supported by good reasons, by technicalities or by no reason at all; verbose and involved decisions, obscured by obiter dicta and speculative theories; broad and learned decisions, and narrow and ignorant ones; and decisions that decide the same thing and repeat the same principle over and over again. Hence it is that this multiplication of reports contributes more or less to the uncertainty of the law.

Notwithstanding the number and cost of these volumes, their inaccessibility and their contradictory decisions, in our country, all persons of full age and of sound mind and memory, except judges and lawyers, who make the law their life study, are conclusively presumed to know the law. As to judges and lawyers this presumption holds good concerning their own rights and liabilities, but when they come to determine and to adjudicate upon the rights and liabilities of other persons, the presumption vanishes, and they are compelled to study and learn the law before they know it, and even then their conclusions are often contradictory and uncertain. There is no person in our country, however learned he may be, who knows all the law, but there is no person, however ignorant he may be, even though he never saw a law-book and cannot read or write, who is not presumed to know all the law and to regulate his conduct accordingly. He is charged with knowledge he does not possess and cannot acquire; he must observe rules that he cannot see and obey commands that he cannot hear. Without an opportunity to study or examine these massive volumes, and not having the necessary training to understand if they should read them, our people are presumed to know all the law they contain, though hidden away and covered up by the accumulated rubbish of centuries! The theory that the people are presumed to know the law is undoubtedly correct, for it would not do to determine the rights of

Mr. Boyce was married, April 26, 1870, to Miss Bettie Fant, a native of Missouri, who died at the age of thirty-three, after nine years of happy married life, leaving four children,—Lyman F., Wilber, Thomas and Bettie. Her's was a beautiful Christian character. She was greatly beloved by her husband and little family and her untimely death was a source of great bereavement to all who knew her. March 6, 1881, Mr. Boyce married Miss Lynnie Fant, a sister of his first wife, and they have two sons, Owen and Alvin.

Politically, Mr. Boyce is a Democrat; fraternally, a Knight Templar Mason. He is a man of broad information, is modest, unassuming and genial in manner, and in a business way is all that is honorable and upright.

ALBERT J. CAMPBELL, attorney-at-law, Livingston, Montana, is ranked with the promising young men of the Northwest.

He is a son of Milo R. and Ruth A. (Perkins) Campbell, and was born at Pontiac, Michigan, in the year 1857. His ancestors originated in Scotland, but for several generations have been residents of America, his great-grandfather having served as a soldier in the Revolutionary war. Albert J. was educated in the Agricultural College of Michigan, and studied law under the instructions of Colvin & Harrington and Robins & Colvin, at Pontiac, where he was admitted to the bar in 1881. That same year he began practicing law at Oxford, Michigan, and the following year he removed to Chase, Lake county, that State, where he conducted a successful practice until 1889.

In 1889 Mr. Campbell came to Livingston, Montana, and purchased the law library of Judge Frank Henry, whom he succeeded in business, Henry, a popular attorney, having just been elected to the position of District Judge. Mr. Campbell's abilities at once secured him the recognition he deserved and he became widely and favorably known as a successful lawyer, which reputation he has since sustained. For three years he served as Prosecuting Attorney of Lake county, Michigan, resigning that position when he came to Montana. He was one by the ignorance of another, but the wrong about it is in permitting the law to remain in such a condition that neither lawyers nor laymen can determine just what the law really is or exactly where it may be found. The law must not be lost in an ever-increasing multitude of reports. The common law, the law of the land, of which every man is charged with knowledge at his peril, must not be hidden out of sight by being scattered through so many books that it cannot be found.

In his day Blackstone thought to rescue the common law from the oblivion of the reports, and produced his wonderful commentaries, which for more than one hundred years, in all common-law countries, have been sacred books. He was followed, in our country, by Kent, Story, Greenleaf, Parsons, Cooley, Wharton, Bishop and others, all of whom have produced great works in attempts to reduce the principles of the common law, as found in the reports, to system and form. But now the reports of decisions have so increased in number and are being added to so rapidly, from year to year, that the material for making law-books is never wanting, and they seem to be produced as if manufactured by machinery, and instead of tending to make the law more certain they but repeat its uncertainties, and bury it still deeper in the ocean of books.

Common-law judges and lawyers spend their lives searching the reports for decisions that will determine the question in hand, but as precedents may generally be found on both sides of the question, the law, even to the most learned, is rendered doubtful and uncertain; and as to the common people, who by intuition are presumed to know it in all its length and breadth, with its thousand variations, limitations and exceptions, it is a dark and insoluble mystery. It would be better to break down the authority of precedents altogether and to burn up the reports than to have the obscurity and uncertainty of the law increased by their continued, unlimited publication.

Montana, in the morning of its jurisprudence, young, vigorous and strong, is in condition to aid in any needed law reform, whereby certainty as to what the law is, and facility in ascertaining where it may be found, is secured.

All these principles of the common law which the decisions of the courts have settled

City Clerk and Attorney for Livingston in 1891–2, receiving the office by appointment. Quick to see a point, persevering and active in all his undertakings, Mr. Campbell is destined to fill a prominent niche in his chosen profession, as well as in the political arena of Montana. He affiliates with the Democratic party. He is a member of all the Masonic bodies, from the blue lodge to the Mystic Shrine, and is also a member of the B. P. O. E., having filled all the chairs in the last named order.

Mr. Campbell was married in 1879 to Miss Ella J. Mann, of Lapeer county, Michigan. They have two children, Roy and Grace.

Hon. James R. Boyce, a venerable pioneer of Montana, was born in Logan county, Kentucky, October 11, 1817.

He is descended from early settlers of the Old Dominion, three generations of his ancestors having been born in Virginia. His grandfather Boyce fought in the Revolution for American independence. Richard Boyce, the father of our subject, was born in Virginia in 1780, and was married there to Miss Mary Smith, also a native of that State, her birth having occurred in 1786. They removed to Logan county, Kentucky, where they spent the residue of their lives, there rearing a family of five children, three of whom are still living. He was a man of considerable prominence in the frontier settlement where he lived. He owned a large plantation, served as County Court Judge, and was also Sheriff of Logan county. Both he and his wife were members of the Baptist Church. She died at the age of forty-two years and he lived to be sixty-seven.

James R. was the first-born in his father's family. He was reared and educated in Kentucky, and was married there, in 1837, to Miss Maria L. Wright, daughter of William Wright, of Russellville, Kentucky. The Wrights were also an old Virginia family. In 1842 Mr. Boyce and his family moved to Columbia, Missouri, where he was engaged in merchandising until 1863. During the early part of the Civil war he was in the Quartermaster's Department of the Confederate service, and by the ravages of war he lost his property. In 1863 Mr. Boyce crossed and about which there is no dispute, might, if sufficient labor were applied to the task, be sifted from the mass of the reports and written down in the form of statutes. These principles would not lose any of their grandeur, strength or beauty or any of their vigor in regulating the affairs of men by being so reduced to the form of statutes.

All those principles which have been made doubtful and uncertain by contradictory decisions might be rendered certain by the same means. If all this could be done, even though it required the best learning of the country and the labor of many years to accomplish it; and then, if the reports should be made to contain no repetitions, no reciting of well established principles, no decision which turns upon the facts, no dissenting opinions, and only new principles or the novel application of old ones; and if the opinions of the courts and the briefs and arguments of the lawyers were made shorter, more compact and consequently more able, then the two or three hundred volumes of reports which are now produced each year would be reduced to a small compass and would be within the reach of all who wished to read them. A very few volumes of reports, even if it required more than one volume, would be sufficient to contain all the new principles developed by all the courts in any one year.

In this age of the world the discovery of new principles of law is rare, but there is a constant application of old principles to new facts and conditions. Nothing is added to the law by repeating the precedents thus established when similar facts arise, and as to other new and dissimilar facts the precedents are of no value.

And so, if the published reports were stripped of all useless matter, and made to contain only that which would add to the body and substance of the law, then the fountain from which flows superfluous reports containing nothing new, compilations, digests, cyclopædias and machine-made text books, would become dry. If the unlimited publication of the reports and law books manufactured therefrom continues, each year will contribute to the uncertainty and obscuration of the law until the condition becomes hopeless.

It is for the bench and bar of Montana, with the co-operation of the legislative assembly, to enter the twentieth century with such a system the plains to Denver, Colorado, where he was engaged in merchandising for a year. Hearing of the gold excitement in Montana, he set out for this place, making the journey hither with a pair of mules and a wagon loaded with provisions, and after seventy-two days of travel, landing at Alder Gulch, June 14, 1864. Soon after his arrival here he became a member of the firm of Tulle Leach & Co., and opened a store. They hauled goods in wagons from St. Joseph and Denver and did a prosperous business, getting fabulous prices in gold dust for their goods, and continuing there for a period of three years. The business was then removed to Helena and he continued in that place until 1880, when he sold out and went to Omaha. He conducted business in Omaha four years. At the end of that time he returned to Helena and invested some in city property, which he still retains, and has since been retired from active business.

In 1875 Mr. Boyce had the misfortune to lose by death the companion of his life, she being fifty-five at the time of death. Of their children, be it recorded that they are all settled, mostly in Montana, and are occupying honorable and useful positions in life. The oldest, William R., is a farmer of Silver Bow county. Mattie is the wife of Col. Thomas L. Thuroughman, a distinguished lawyer of St. Louis. James R., Jr., is a retirêd merchant of Butte City. Annie is the wife of Hon. William Thompson, of Butte City; and Lee, the youngest, is a printer, engaged on the Montana Methodist. Mr. Boyce makes his home with his son, James R. and his daughter, Mrs. Thompson, alternating between the two places at his pleasure. The passing years have left their traces, his hair is white as snow, but notwithstanding that age is creeping upon him he is still well preserved, both mentally and physically, showing that his life has been one of temperance in all things.

In his early life Mr. Boyce, like his father before him, was a Whig, both being great admirers of Henry Clay. When the Whig party died he became a Millard Fillmore American, and afterward belonged to the "Know Nothing" party. At the outbreak of the Civil war of statutes and law reports as will with clearness and certainty, so far as human knowledge can provide, determine what the law is, and leave no doubt as to where it may be found.

If Montana would rescue the benign common law from the chaos of the reports and the oblivion and obscurity of too many books, and extract therefrom all of the principles which a thousand years has developed and brought to light, reduce them to form and classify and arrange them without repetition, contradiction and confusion, then our noble commonwealth will have accomplished something for American jurisprudence and the rational administration of human justice.

STATISTICAL—GOLD—SILVER—COPPER—LEAD—IRON—COAL—HORSES—CATTLE—SHEEP—WHEAT—OATS—BARLEY—ACREAGE—WATER DITCHES—IRRIGATION—GARDEN AND ORCHARD—STAPLE PRICES UP TO 1892–3.

I AM not certain that the wiser course has been chosen in deferring these figures till near the conclusion; but as it was deemed advisable to have the latest official dates obtainable, it was decided as best on the whole not to break the flow of routine by their too frequent insertion.

We will now give a table touching the first industry of Montana. It will be observed that silver is not enumerated for the first few years, although it was followed from the first. Nevada miners were early on the ground, and silver mining was not new to them; but the gold product outweighed and overshadowed that of silver till, as related in the chapter of Silver Bow and Butte, they learned how to extract it from the peculiar black veins there, so unlike those of Nevada. I am indebted to the Montana Board of Managers at the World's Columbian Exposition,* Chicago, 1892–3, while he was a Union man at heart and loved his country, his home was in the South. His friends and kindred were there, and he had no alternative but to take the side of the South. In 1873 he was elected a member of the Territorial Legislature, and on the first ballot was chosen Speaker of the House, which position he filled in a most capable and satisfactory manner.

As a Mason, Mr. Boyce is well known in lodge circles all over the State. He was made a Mason as early as 1840, and has been presiding officer in the various lodges to which he has belonged for thirty-three years. He is now a Knight Templar. In 1866 he had the honor of organizing the Grand Lodge of Montana, and during his long connection with the order he has helped to initiate into it many of the prominent men of the State.

During the early years of his residence in Montana, when the lawless element prevailed and the lives and property of the citizens were in danger, Mr. Boyce allied himself with the Vigilants and did his part toward putting a stop to the depredations that were being committed on all sides. Indeed, in all the walks of life he has ever cast his influence and his support on the side of justice and right. For many years he has been identified with the Methodist Episcopal Church, in which he has served as Steward, Class-leader and Trustee. Of this church his wife was also a devoted member, and her life, like his, was characterized by deeds of Christian kindness.

The above, although a brief and imperfect sketch, will serve to show something of the active and useful life of this good man.

largely for these tables; as they are official they are more reliable and ought to command greater confidence than figures from sources of my own.

Of course there is some guessing resorted to in the estimate of gold for the first five years—1862–7; but experience, as an old expression of those days, authorizes me to say that these early estimates entirely fell below the actual yield; for miners were,—and you can easily understand why,—very closely watched in those days:

While silver did not come conspicuously to the front in Montana till our centennial year, it will be seen that copper was still a greater laggard, and came upon the tables six years later even than silver.

Wages were high at first,—$10 per day, as a rule, in the early '60s; but the latest official reports establish the under-ground miners' wages at $3.50, uniformly throughout the State. The inspector of mines, in his annual report for 1892, asserts that, notwithstanding the fall in the price of silver, the total product of the mines of Montana is greater than ever before. He says that the percentage of accidents is much below that of other States. This is partly because a higher class of intelligence prevails here than elsewhere, and partly because the miners here have had long training in these and the California and Nevada mines.

Of the 10,000 men underground, 1,500 are mining coal. These coal miners are paid, not REINHOLD HENRY KLEINSCHMIDT, one of the most prominent merchants in the State, a member of the firm of Kleinschmidt & Brother, of Helena, was born near the city of Magdeburg, Prussia, November 4, 1847, son of Carl and Elizabeth (Kuphal) Kleinschmidt,—the former from the Hartz mountains, of Hanoverian birth, the latter a native of Prussia.

After the demise of the father, the mother with her children came to America, landing at Baltimore in 1856. The family first located on a farm in Allegany county, Maryland, and later removed to Bloomington, Illinois, where young Kleinschmidt obtained employment in a nursery. In 1859 the family removed to Hermann, Missouri, where they also resided on a farm, and Reinhold being again employed in a nursery. In 1860 the family located at Booneville, same State, where our subject attended school about six months. Before arriving in America he had received excellent school privileges, and his extensive business experience has made of him a well informed man. Lexington, Missouri, was the next home of the family, and there Mr. Kleinschmidt found employment in a printing office, doing all kinds of work connected with such an establishment, until the commencement of the war of the Rebellion. The family removed

To sum up, as a lawyer would say, when laying his case before the jury, we have the following (also official) for the total mineral product of Montana for the year 1892; and I may add that it seems fixed at about this figure so far as I gather data for the year and a half following, and it is pretty safe to set the mineral product of Montana for years to come as touching the beam at little, if any, short of an annual output of $50,000,000. Little wonder that she can boast the possession of one, if not two, of the richest cities on the globe.

RECAPITULATION OF VALUE OF METAL PRODUCTS OF MONTANA, YEAR 1892.

Gold	$ 2,966,571.90	Lead	$ 990,035.08
Silver	22,593,554.75
Copper	19,105,464.36	Total	$42,565,626.06

The Engineering and Mining Journal of January 4, 1893, publishes the total dividends paid by eighty-six mining companies of the United States during the calendar year 1892, the sum being $13,443,918. Thirteen of these are Montana companies, the following:

Rocky Fork Coal Co.	$100,000	Heckla Con	$ 180,000
Parrot Co	216,000	Helena & Frisco	20,000
Bald Butte	20,000	Iron Mountain	135,000
Bannister	6,000	Jay Hawk	33,375
Bi-Metallic	200,000	Moulton	30,000
Elkhorn	362,500	Pandora	3,000
Granite Mountain	500,000
		Total	$1,805,875

It will be noticed that the great Anaconda copper mine is not set down. Nor could I get any statement from its managers. Says this same authority:

"These dividends do not show the profits of the companies named, as usually a large portion of the net earnings goes into the purchase of additional mining ground, the development of properties, construction of additional mills or smelters, etc. Neither is the list of dividend-paying mines complete. Besides, some of the largest companies—as, for instance, the Anaconda, which produces more copper than any other company in the world—do not make public their profits, nor is their stock listed on any mining exchange.

"The next largest copper-producer in the State is the Boston & Montana Company of Butte. It is not in the list of dividend-payers for 1892, but this company has expended about $2,000,000 in the last two years in the construction of a new smelting plant and electrolytic refinery at Great Falls, Montana.

"The Sand Coulee Coal Company, which produced in 1892 300,000 tons of coal, is not found in the list of dividend-payers, but the profits of the company for that year were not less than half a million dollars."

The iron mines, great as they promise, are not yet sufficiently to the front to give them the important place to which they are approaching, but like silver and copper they will probably astonish the world; and when they do come fairly to the front will come to stay. They are in the mountains, almost everywhere. Hayden, in his Geological Survey, says they have been found to assay by his assayers sixty and seventy per cent. pure metallic iron.

Says the same authority, touching coal: "The principal coal deposits of the State are found in Cascade, Choteau, Park, Missoula and Gallatin counties. The extent of these deposits is very great, covering a considerable portion of the State. * * * The general character of the coal is semi-bituminous, and for general domestic uses and as a steam generator it is finely adapted. A lighter coal, or lignite, and of poorer quality, is found in the eastern portion of the State. Coking coal is found in parts of the coal district. At Coked dle, in Park county, 100 coke ovens are in constant operation, and employment is given to about 300 men by the company. At Horr, in the same county, there is another coking plant of nearly the same capacity. A ready sale for the coke is found at the various smelters of the State. The Sand Coulee coal mines, in Cascade county, about twelve miles from Great Falls, are the largest producers in the State. When working to their full capacity they can produce 1,500 to Liberty, that State, whither he followed later, and where he obtained a position as clerk in a store, remaining a year. Leavenworth, Kansas, next became the place of his abode, and for a short time he was employed in a hotel. Returning home, he and a brother enlisted in the United States army, but on account of his extreme youth he was discharged from the service, being then under fifteen years of age.

After this Mr. Kleinschmidt secured a position in a confectionery at Liberty, Missouri, where he continued until the end of 1863. Desiring that his labors should more directly benefit himself, he, in partnership with his brothers, established a store in that town, but soon after removed to Leavenworth, and subsequently to Lawrence, Kansas, at the close of the war. In 1865 the brothers extended their business to Las Vegas, New Mexico. From there they removed to Montana in 1867, where Reinhold and his brother Albert, the newly formed firm of Kleinschmidt & Brother, entered upon a business career which has no parallel in the commercial annals of Montana, and their prosperity has continued uninterruptedly up to the present time. The members of the firm are reliable business men, possessed of excellent executive ability, sagacity and far-sightedness and strong organizing powers, which have enabled them to carry on successful business interests at various places, having at one time control of thirteen commercial houses in various localities in the State, and mule and cattle transportation capable of moving 250 tons to a trip. Honorable dealing has won them a most excellent reputation, which extends throughout the West, and has given to the firm of Kleinschmidt & Brother a name most enviable.

On the 19th of May, 1880, Mr. Kleinschmidt was married, at San Francisco, California, to Miss Amelia H. Mau, daughter of H. Albert Mau, an estimable lady of culture. Our subject holds membership with Wadsworth Post, G. A. R., and in politics is an unswerving Republican, and stanchly advocates his party's principles.

tons per day, but the output could be largely increased, if desired. The average production of these mines for the year 1892 was 1,000 tons daily."

I have not said anything about precious stones, because, in the first place, I do not know anything about them, and in the second place I find nothing official on the subject of Montana gems. But as I find quite an item on this theme in a publication issued by the Montana State Board of Managers at the Columbian Exposition, I give it place for what it is worth.* At the same time it should be added that the story about precious stones in Montana is not a new one; nor have I heard the story questioned. I only say I have no official authority to advance on the subject further than the slight reference by Dr. Swallow in a previous chapter.

Although his business interests require constant attention, yet he has found time for recreation in travel, in which he takes great pleasure. From 1870 to 1880 he made yearly business trips to the principal Eastern cities, buying goods and looking after the varied interests of the firm, when he took the opportunity of also visiting the various points of beauty and interest. Once every two years he visited California, and during those years became familiar with the scenery and life of the Pacific coast. In 1872 he visited the Exposition at Vienna (traveling a year), and in 1876 the Centennial Exposition.

In 1880 he again crossed the Atlantic, accompanied by his wife, and they traveled leisurely through England, Ireland, Scotland, Germany, Switzerland, France and Italy. In 1883 Mr. and Mrs. Kleinschmidt made a general trip throughout the United States to almost every State in the Union. Later they visited Alaska, and in 1893-'94 the Columbian Exposition at Chicago and the Midwinter Fair at San Francisco. In speaking of his travels, Mr. Kleinschmidt says: "We saw many wonderful sights, but for natural phenomena and picturesque beauty, nothing that I have seen can compare with the romantic beauty of Yellowstone Park, where we sometimes go for a short summer recreation."

The present business conducted by Mr. Kleinschmidt and his brother Albert is very extensive, the firm carrying the largest wholesale stock of heavy hardware and groceries at Helena. Their real-estate and mining interests are scattered, as they own fruit farms and mining interests in California; a large interest in the most exten-

* "Several years ago the Spratt Brothers got hold of a deserted mining claim, long reported to contain what might be precious stones, and in prosecuting this work they found these crystals in great quantities. Some of them they had cut, and they proved to be handsome gems. Then they had them tested by experts and chemists, and the reports were invariably of the most favorable character. Believing that they had discovered a valuable property, they continued prospecting, and acquired title to, or options on, about 8,000 acres of sapphire ground, on both sides of the Missouri river, securing at the same time control of the water that could be used for mining, for a distance of thirty or forty miles along the stream.

"In 1891, the Spratts and others interested with them, sold their property to the 'Sapphire and Ruby Company of Montana,' the new company being composed principally of English capitalists. This corporation was actively engaged during the season of 1892, in constructing water ditching and flumes and making general preparations for extensive mining. The present year they begin operations on a large scale, and besides the sapphires to be secured, it is estimated that a profit will be realized on the gold alone that still remains in El Dorado and other bars.

"As to the sapphires and rubies, they exist in large quantities, and time and tests have proven that they are

I here quote the learned Dr. Hayden on the "Chinook" winds, before described, and with it the report of the president of the medical board of Montana for 1893, as this rare health seems to be the sequence of the climate:

"The official report (Dr. Hayden's) makes the mean of average height of Montana above the sea, 3,000 feet; that of Nevada, 5,600 feet; of New Mexico, 5,600; of Wyoming, 6,000, and of Colorado, 7,000. Montana possesses an average altitude of 2,260 feet less than the general average of the before named States and Territories, equal to more than seven degrees of lower latitude, and thus, compared with them, the lower altitude of the grazing lands more than compensate for their higher latitude.

"Coming more directly to the question of climate, we find that the isothermal line of 50 degrees Fahrenheit, which passes through the wheat-growing districts of southern Russia, southern France and westward through Harrisburg, Cleveland and Chicago in our own country, rises north of Montana, into the British possessions. This apparently extraordinary phenomenon is readily explained by the influence of the great Japan ocean current flowing northward from the equator, with a temperature of 86 degrees, which pours its heated sive copper mines in the world, situated in Idaho, and real estate, mines, lands, irrigating canals in the various counties of the State of Montana. Both brothers took a very active part recently in the permanent location of the State capital, assisting financially and giving much of their time to the campaign, the elder brother being one of the most active members of the Capital committee, and the favorable outcome of the contest is largely attributable to the energy displayed by them.

ANTHONY JACQUES, the elder of the Jacques brothers, who are prominent farmers and stock-raisers in Deer Lodge valley, Deer Lodge county, Montana, was born in France, February 27, 1834, son of John and Catherine (Kribling) Jacques, both natives of that country.

Mr. Jacques spent his early boyhood days in his native land, and in 1847 came with the rest of the family to America, first settling at St. Louis, Missouri, and subsequently removing to a farm in Pike county, that same State. The father was a cooper by trade and worked at it in connection with carrying on his farming operations. They were honest and industrious people and were worthy members of the Catholic Church. Of their family of six children, three sons and three daughters, only, two are living,—Anthony and George,—Anthony being the oldest of the six. The mother passed away at the age of fifty-seven, and the father was seventy-three at the time of his death.

Anthony was reared to farm life and also learned the gems of a high order and of considerable value. The stones were fully tested by some of the best experts in the world, before the sale heretofore mentioned was consummated. To show what is thought of these gems by experts high in authority, we submit, herewith, brief extracts from reports made:

"Edwin W. Streeter, of London, who is an author of several works on precious stones, and who is regarded as an authority on the subject throughout the world, says: These stones have a wide range of color, and I note frequent occurrence of this, hitherto rarely obtainable in this valuable gem. I unhesitatingly say of these different colored sapphires and rubies, that in hardness and brilliancy they excel any others known to the trade, and many of them are even more brilliant by artificial light than by daylight, which increases their value for jewelry.

To find these stones in the unprecedented quantities indicated by your engineer's report, is a discovery of the greatest importance to the gem trade. Excepting only the South American diamond fields, I consider the sapphire and ruby mines of Montana to be the most important gem discovery of modern times.'

'Mr. J. D. Yerrington, the leading gem expert of New York city, has no less a decided opinion: 'Speaking from a practical experience of over thirty years in the precious stone business, I do not hesitate to say that the sapphires breath against the low coast lines of Oregon and Washington, and thence inland over plains and mountain tops, even east of Montana's eastern border. This warm wind from the Pacific, known as the 'Chinook,' often causes the deepest snows on the benches and valleys of Montana to disappear very rapidly. The westerly winds are more prevalent in winter than those from the cold northeast quarter, and therefore the country, as was first observed by Governor Stevens in his survey, although so far inland, partakes of the well-known milder climate of the Pacific coast."

The following paragraphs are from the report prepared by C. K. Cole, M. D., president of the board of medical examiners of Montana:

"During the year ending May 1, 1893, the death rate in the city of Helena was 9.93 per 1,000 inhabitants, in Butte 13 per 1,000 inhabitants. These figures are obtained from the official records of Vital Statistics, and represent the death rate from all causes.

He served six months in the militia at one time and a year at another. In 1863 he and his brother, George, crossed the plains to Montana, and from that year up to the present time their history has been almost identical. They traveled together, carried on mining operations together, and together came to Deer Lodge valley, and each took up 160 acres of land where they have since lived. Anthony has added to his tract until he now owns 465 acres, which he has improved with nice buildings and pleasant surroundings. of Montana belong to a high order of gems, and equal in beauty, hardness and brilliancy the sapphires from the celebrated mines of India. The intrinsic value of these gems cannot be questioned, and in my opinion many rank second only to diamonds. Many specimens of these gems, both cut and in the rough, are on exhibition in Montana's mineral department, and they will not fail to prove both interesting and attractive."

Anthony Jacques was married in 1870 to Miss Susan E. Horn, a native of Pike county, Missouri, and a daughter of John Horn, of that State. She was a woman of most amiable qualities, beloved by all who knew her, and her untimely death, in 1887, was a source of great bereavement to her family and many friends. She left two daughters, Mary E. and Georgia May, both of whom are with their father.

MRS. MARY SPEELMAN, residing near Melrose, Montana, came to the Territory in 1863, arriving at the Alder Gulch mining camp about a month after gold was discovered there, thus being one of the early pioneer women of the State.

Mrs. Speelman was born in Missouri in 1848, daughter of Joseph Parker, a Kentuckian, the Parkers having been residents of America for many generations. Her father removed from Missouri to Kansas and settled on a farm in the Cherokee country, where he was killed by one of the roughs in that vicinity. He left a family of eight children, Mary at that time being quite small. Five of the eight are now living. In Kansas in 1863 the subject of our sketch was married to Mr. James Morman, and soon after their marriage they started across the plains to Montana, their wagons being drawn by two yoke of oxen and two cows. They had no trouble with the Indians, as did many of the other emigrants, and on the whole the trip was a most enjoyable one.

After their arival at Virginia City Mr. Morman secured a claim and took out some gold, but as he did not understand mining he found the business an unprofitable one and sold his claim. Then he came to Twin Bridges and rented the Lott farm, which he ran two years. After this they spent some time at Silver Bow, Blackfoot and French Gulch. In 1867 they went to Boise City, where they were engaged in farming for nine years. Mr. Morman died there, of epileptic fits, in 1882. The year following his death Mrs. Morman came with her nephew to Melrose, Montana, and he worked in the Hecla mines. Here, in 1886, she was married to James Speelman, and in 1888 he purchased the farm on which they now live, 160 acres adjoining the town of Melrose.

Mr. Speelman was born in Iowa, July 26, 1855, son of James N. and Mary (Creeghbaum) Speelman, natives of Maryland. His parents removed to Pennsylvania, thence to Iowa, and in 1861 crossed the plains to Oregon and settled in Baker county. In Baker county, Oregon, their son James continued to reside until 1878, when he came to Montana and engaged in mining in Beaver Head county. He worked at the Hecla about four years, and while there became acquainted with Mrs. Morman, and they were married, as before stated. They are rated among the successful and respected farmers and stock-raisers of this portion of the county.

F. L. St. Jean, M. D., C. M., one of the prominent members of the medical profession in Anaconda, Montana, dates his birth in the city of Montreal, Canada, March 9, 1864.

Dr. St. Jean comes of French ancestry. His parents, Ledger and Sophia (Beauvenue) St. Jean, are both natives of Canada, and the father was for many years a Montreal merchant. After he had reared his family and had retired from active life, Ledger St. Jean removed in 1879 from Montreal to Anaconda, and here he and his wife are still living, aged respectively fifty-eight and fifty one years. Both are members of the Catholic Church, and are highly esteemed by a large circle of friends in Anaconda.

Dr. Felix L. St. Jean is the oldest of the family. He was educated in his native city, graduating in the normal school there with the degree of A. B., and in 1889 he graduated in the medical department of the Montreal Loval University. After his graduation he at once came to Anaconda and entered upon his professional career, and here he has since met with eminent success, standing high as a physician and surgeon. For the past five years he has been physician and surgeon for the St. Ann's Hospital at Anaconda. While he conducts a general practice, he makes a specialty of surgery, in which department he excels.

Since coming to Anaconda, Dr. St. Jean has invested in city property and has contributed to the growth of the city by having several buildings erected, among them being a fine two-story block, 50 x 80 feet, on East Park

Dr. St. Jean was married September 14, 1893, to Miss Roselia Madeau, a native of the State of Rhode Island, of French ancestry, and they have one daughter, Aline R., born in Anaconda.

The Doctor is a member of the State Medical Society, and is a member and Medical Examiner of the following societies: A. O. U. W., D. of G., National Union, and the Young Men's Institute. Politically, he affiliates with the Democratic party.

DANIEL J. HEYFRON, ex-Sheriff of Missoula county, has maintained an identification with the far West from an early period in his life, and is worthy of representation in this volume. In 1867, at the commencement of the building of Cheyenne, Mr. Heyfron went to that place. He next followed the building of the Northern Pacific Railroad to its terminus, having conducted meat markets in all the towns along its route. The road was completed in 1869, and Mr. Heyfron then located his shop at Corinne. In 1871 he made a prospecting tour to southern California, returning to his home on horseback, and resuming business at Cheyenne, where he also became a prominent dealer in horses and cattle. He conducted, shops in all the towns on the Utah Northern when tha road was being built to Dillon, Beaver Head county, Montana, remained in the latter place two years, and since that time has resided in Missoula.

In 1886 Mr. Heyfron was elected Sheriff of Missoula county, and his first term was one of such efficiency in capturing and bringing to justice the criminals who at that time made life and property so insecnre that he was elected and served a second term with equally good results. The Indians had been very lawless and troublesome to the whites prospecting in the mountains, and the remarkable manner in which our subject followed and captured the redskins had much to do with the security that has since continued. The new jail was built during his administration, and he was the first man to turn the key in its door. In addition to his other interests, Mr. Heyfron owns a large quarry on the south side of the Missoula river and has furnished stone for nearly all the fine blocks in this city. At one time he owned 160 acres of land in connection with the quarry, but sold the same to the Electric Light company, of Missoula. He has always been largely interested in teaming and freighting, and still owns many teams, giving employment to a number of men.

Mr. Heyfron was married November 8, 1870, to Miss Josephine Thomas, a native of Burlington, Vermont, and a daughter of William Thomas, of that city, but a native

The horses of Montana, even before the date of these tables, had passed into history and were famous the world over, "Spokane" having wrested the golden cup from Kentucky to the amazement not only of the entire Union but all Europe.

Of the "cattle on a thousand hills" enough has been already recorded, and we pass to the report of the State Superintendent of Instruction for 1892:

of Canada. They have ten children, five of whom,—three daughters and two sons,—died in infancy. The surviving children are: Daniel J., Gilbert J., Josephine, Francis and Franklin, J. Mr Heyfron has been a life-long Democrat, and has always been an active worker in his party. In his social relations, he is a member of the I. O. O. F. and the Masonic fraternity, John A. Leggat, prominently connected with the mining interests of Montana, and a resident of Butte City, dates his birth in Glenn Loose, Scotland, November 28, 1832.

Mr. Leggat's parents, both natives of Scotland, were William and Margaret (Main) Leggat. With their family of three sons and one daughter, they emigrated to America in 1833 and located in Albany, New York, where the father was engaged in mercantile pursuits and where he spent the rest of his days, his death occurring in 1852, at the age of fifty-two years. His wife survived him several years, the date of her death being 1881. Five children had been added to their family in America. All are deceased except three sons and a daughter. The latter is the wife of Colonel James G. Butler, a prominent citizen of St. Louis, Missouri.

John A. Leggat was fifteen months old when the family landed in America. He was educated in the public schools of Albany. When he was fifteen he entered the old Albany Journal office to learn the trade of printer. From 1849 until 1854 he was engaged in a foundry and manufacturing establishment in Connecticut, and in 1854 he went to Chicago, where for one year he was assistant clerk in the McCardal House, then one of the finest hotels in the West. While in Chicago he was offered the position of purser on the Ottawa, a steamer plying between Chicago, Grand Haven, Muskegon and St. Joseph, which he accepted, and continued thus occupied for two years. At the end of that time he became interested in the sawmill and lumber business at Grand Haven, Michigan, and also in real estate. During the financial depression of 1857 he sold out and returned to Illinois, and settled down to farming near Quincy. He was, however, inexperienced in farming and was unsuccessful.

In 1880 the population was 39,159. The next ten years showed an increase of 237 per cent. At this rate of increase—and it has not fallen off, for the same authority puts the population on New Year's of 1893 at 200,000—we can safely say that the end of 1894 will find the population of Montana close to a quarter of a million.

Following is the population of the State by counties as shown by the last census:

Beaver Head	4,655	Lewis and Clarke	19,145
Cascade	8,555	Madison	4,692
Choteau	4,741	Meagher	4,749
Custer	5,308	Missoula	14,427
Dawson	2,956	Park	6,881
Deer Lodge	15,155	Silver Bow	23,744
Fergus	3,514	Yellowstone	2,065
Gallatin	6,246
Jefferson	6,026	Total	132,159

In the following census report (1890) of the population of the principal cities of Montana you search in vain for Bannack, the first capital of Montana; and you stop to ask, Where is Alder Creek, Virginia City, the second capital of Montana, with her 15,000 souls, creaking derricks, ropes like a fleet of stranded ships, roar of water flumes and dash and clang of pick and shovel? Gone! All gone! The grasshopper chirps in the untrodden grass on the hillsides, little alder trees are beginning to sprout up again where the busy streets ran up and down Alder creek, and silence is supreme. There is a touch of tenderness in all this, and we leave the dear old dead city hat in hand and with bended head.

The population of the cities of the State, by the same census is as follows:

Helena	13,834	Butte	10,723
Great Falls	3,979	Anaconda	3,975
Missoula	3,426	Livingston	2,850
Bozeman	2,143	Walkerville	1,743
Marysville	1,489	Deer Lodge	1,463
Granite	1,310	Meaderville	1,075
Phillipsburg	1,058	Dillon	1,012

The miles of railroad in 1892 was found to be 2,662; number of roads, 29; assessed value, $9,287,532.

The war coming on, Mr. Leggat was appointed a Quartermaster in the Department of East Tennessee, under General Steel and continued in that position until the war closed. Afterward he had a store in Tennessee for a short time. From there he went to St. Louis, Missouri, to engage in the manufacture of tobacco, in company with his father, his twin brother Alexander, and Colonel James G. Butler. They bought out the large business of the Mepham Brothers. There our subject continued successfully for five years. Then he sold his interest to N. C. Hudson & Brother, returned to Grand Haven, Michigan, and again turned his attention to milling and real-estate business, continuing the same there until 1876.

In 1866 Mr. Leggat had sent a steamboat load of merchandise, with his brother, R. D., in charge, to Highland Gulch, Montana, and this venture finally resulted in bringing him to Montana and in turning his attention to mining operations. In 1876 he made a tour of Montana, became convinced of the richness of its mines, returned to Michigan and settled up his affairs there, and since 1877 has been a resident of Montana. In 1877 he commenced active mining operations and has since been assiduously engaged in the same. He began in the Vipond district in Beaver Head county. In 1880 he erected a mill for the reduction of the ores. This mill had been in operation only a few months when it was destroyed by fire, and as it was then too late in the season to rebuild he came to Butte City and began operations here and has since continued his business at this place. For two yea he owned and operated the Champion, which he sold for $20,000 to the Parrot Company. For the past six years he has been operating the Gambetta, which is 100 x 20 feet, and which has been developed to a distance of 565 feet. Thirty men are employed at this mine. Mr. Leggat has recently purchased, at a cost of $50,000, the Washoe, another valuable property, from which he wil no doubt make a large fortune.

In 1879 Mr. Leggat, his brother R. D., and Mr. Lee Foster purchased and platted fifty acres of land, known as the Leggat and Foster addition to Butte City. Much of this property has been sold and greatly improved.

Fraternally, Mr. Leggat is both an Odd Fellow and a Mason, having been identified with the former organization since 1854, and with the latter since 1862. In Masonry he has attained the Royal Arch degree. He helped to organize the Republican party, of which he has ever been a stanch member.

Mr. Leggat was married in 1876, to Miss Clara Ament, of Owosso, Michigan. Her untimely death occurred after only five years of happy married life. She left two children, Alexander and Clarabel.

CHARLES ROWE, a prominent early settler of Montana, now proprietor of the Grand Union Hotel at Fort Benton, is a native of Cornwall, England, born August 8, 1842.

His parents, James and Julia (Williams) Rowe, both natives of Cornwall, had eight children, and with their family emigrated in 1845, to this country, locating in Chicago. Being a miner by occupation, the father worked

This was Montana's first voice on a national matter. It will be curious to note that her cold-water vote surpassed, comparatively, that of a majority of the other States, giving my friend, General Bidwell, of California, the biggest half of 1,000 votes.

The two sons, Charles and his brother, turned the windlass for their father, who worked below. After Charles had located in Montana, his father, when seventy-six years of age, started up the Missouri river to make him a visit, but died at Fort Buford on his way. His good wife died three months later, aged fifty-seven years. They were Methodists, and active, faithful Christians, the salt of the earth. They had thirteen children, of whom only five are now living.

Charles, their youngest child, had but limited opportunities for an education. He was only thirteen years of age when he began to take care of himself, working for his own living. He was first employed by his brother-in-law two years, for his board and clothes; next he worked three years at a livery stable, at $10 a month, then a year at painting, in Galena. Next he hired out to the Minnesota Stage Company and for four years handled the "ribbons" for a four-horse stage.

April 11, 1867, he bade adieu to his friends, starting for Montana, and telling his parents that he would return when he "got rich." Leaving Omaha on the 25th of April, on board the Deer Lodge, he landed at Fort Benton June 3, his wealth consisting of $750, in greenbacks, worth at that time only half their normal value. Meals here were $1.50 each, and he made a lunch on crackers and cheese. He was offered $100 a month for driving stage, but this he declined, as he desired to work in the mines. Accordingly he proceeded to Helena, where he tried his luck in the mines but without much success. Returning to Fort Benton he drove stage for the Wells-Fargo Company, at $75 a month, from July till May, and then opened a saloon, where the Grand Union Hotel now stands. In the winter of 1869 he purchased the Overland Hotel and continued the hotel business until 1876, when he bought a ranch twelve miles below Fort Benton, where he now has 472 acres of improved land, with a good residence. In 1883 he returned to the hotel business.

February 26, 1876, is the date of Mr. Rowe's marriage to Miss Anna Binkman, and they went to the farm to reside. They had two sons; and January 7, 1880, Mrs. Rowe died: she was a most amiable wife and mother, and her loss was a severe blow to her husband and little boys, Charlie and Leslie. Mr. Rowe then left the farm and returned to Fort Benton, as already stated; and his sister came and kept house for him; but she had a son and daughter at Philipsburg; and her son, while on a prospecting tour, dropped dead. Being anxious to visit her daughter, she took the little boys with her, and during the visit they both died of diphtheria. After their mother's death their father's heart was all wrapt up in them, and this second bereavement was almost fatal to him. His sister returned to him, they took back the Overland Hotel and resumed the management of it. In 1884 the sister died, of paralysis, but he continued with the hotel until the spring of 1891, when he took the Grand Union, of which he has since been the host. Since July, 1894, the firm has been Rowe & Davis. This house is the first-class hotel of the town. It is a brick structure, three stories high, has fifty-five rooms, and is managed in a most satisfactory manner.

Rr. Rowe has built a good residence in Fort Benton, is a half-owner with T. C. Power of the Flint Lock mines, in the Baker district. Also he has $50,000 worth of stock in the marble quarry at Sweet Grass Hill. The marble is of fine quality and the property is believed to be very valuable. Mr. Rowe has also other mining property.

In 1892 Mr. Rowe was married to Miss Annie Martin, who was born at Fort Benton, the daughter of James Martin, a Montana pioneer. Two sweet, bright children have come to bless again the home of Mr. Rowe, named Mabel E. and Alfred Lewis.

Mr. Rowe is an active worker in the Republican party, has been a member of the Common Council of the city for eight years and is now serving his second term as Mayor of Fort Benton. He takes a deep interest in the welfare of the town, and is both liberal and public-spirited. He has a wide acquaintance and is well spoken of everywhere. He was prominent in securing the passage of the bill providing that Fort Benton might issue bonds to provide water-works, and this has been of immense value to the city. Mr. Rowe was made a Master Mason in 1881, and has since held various offices in his lodge. He is an exemplary member of society and a citizen of the commonwealth.

CHAPTER XXXVI.

HISTORY OF THE HELENA BANKS AND BANKERS—THE FIRST NATIONAL BANK IN MONTANA—SOME PRIVATE BANKS AND BAD MANAGEMENTS IN THE EARLY HISTORY—PRESENT SOLID BASIS OF HELENA BANKS—HOW BRAVELY THEY ENCOUNTERED THE FINANCIAL CYCLONE.

BY D. G. EDGERTON.

1864 to 1894.

WITHOUT again descending into the weary details of statistics, let it suffice to say that a careful polling of the counties of Montana finds them, old and new, practically out of debt; and when debt is found there is either a stately schoolhouse, courthouse or roads in a high state of perfection for a county so new; or, from whatever cause, or wherever debt of any degree prevails, there is something substantial to show for it. It would be of but dull interest, however, to set down details, for while work is going forward all the time a district or country that is not in debt to-day might be in debt to-morrow; and the reverse.

The fall in the price of silver closed several mines during the years of 1893–4, and many good men were out of work. The financial embarrassment and an effort at retrenchment of the great Northern Pacific system of railroads during these years also contributed to the number of idle but industrious men. Added to these came the usual drift of nomads found in all our States, new or old; and a crowd of a few hundred men, good and bad, but mostly the latter, set out for the national capital in 1894. But they did not start quite empty-handed as in other States at the same time. Their professed mission was in the interest of a wiser course of legislation in the interests of silver. What be-

HUGH J. MILLER, one of the prominent citizens of Livingston, Montana, and the Prosecuting Attorney for Park county, dates his birth in Genoa, Minnesota, December 31, 1866. He is one of the four sons of Hiram and Mary (Vaughan) Miller, his brothers being Harlan E., Herbert B. and Hiram A. Hugh J. and Herbert B. are twins, the latter being a traveling United States mail clerk. The Millers are of Scotch and English descent, while the Vaughans originated in Germany. Hiram Miller, the father of our subject, was a minister in the Freewill Baptist Church, and for many years was also engaged in the mercantile trade. Until he was eighteen years old Hugh J. was engaged in farm work and as clerk in his father's store when not attending school. Then he taught several terms of school, after which he entered the University of Michigan, at Ann Arbor, where he received the degree of LL. B. in March, 1891. About that time Allen R. Joy, a prominent young lawyer, and then Prosecuting Attorney of Park county, Montana, wrote to the law faculty of the University of Michigan to recommend a graduate of that institution who would be suitable for his associate. They immediately recommended young Miller, who at once came to Livingston and entered the office of Mr. Joy, becoming assistant prosecutor, and during Mr. Joy's absence having charge of the entire business, which was then large. He remained with Mr. Joy one year. His ability to dispatch business with accuracy and rapidity, together with his congenial and obliging manner, soon made him very popular. The Republican County Convention of 1892 nominated him as their candidate for County Attorney, he receiving sixty-four votes in the convention to his opponent's eighteen. His popularity was such, and was so conceded by his opponents, that they made no opposition whatever, and he was elected unanimously. Mr. Miller has indeed made phenomenal progress in his profession, and with his characteristic energy and push we feel safe in predicting for him a bright future.

For several years Mr. Miller was interested with his older brother in a mercantile business at Douglas, Min-came of these misguided men is hardly known; but they did not go far. They probably melted away by degrees along the railroad lines and found work, such of them as wanted work, on farms that lie on almost every hand from Helena to the lakes.

When we recall the vast army that set out for the same place and for similar impossible and vague purposes from San Francisco, under the lead of one Kelly, the 1,000 under a Mrs. Smith, of Sacramento, and the march under Coxey, of Ohio, and also the crowds from Colorado and other places, we see that Montana contributed less to the disturbing element of these two severe years of financial depression than almost any other State.

An inquiry addressed to the financial heads in Montana's money centers brought me the laconic answer, "All solid in Montana;" and the substance of every one of the answers, ranging through the year 1894, was solid. Montana has a right to say for herself and all her children as well, young or old, in the language of the apostle, "I owe no man."

I know nothing of banks or bankers, but have been most fortunate in securing from one of the carliest and ablest bankers of Montana a terse and compact history of Helena's banks and financiers. As Helena had the first national bank, and as she is not only the capital and main money center, to say nothing of her repute as the wealthiest city in the world, I gratefully give this chapter up to the clever and compact history of the banks and bankers of Helena.

In western communities we have a better opportunity than is presented in any other section of the known world to appreciate and thoroughly understand by example the great development and improvement that has taken place in the world, in its exchange and interchange of values through the means of banking.

In the brief sketch that is purposed to be given in this article of the banking interests of Helena, it may be well to say that it is only thirty years since there was not an inhabitant in the town. During that thrty years we have seen developed from a barbaric interchange of nesota, under the firm name of Miller Brothers. He has, however, recently disposed of his share in the establishment and his brother now carries on the business alone. Mr. Miller's father had four brothers in the Federal army during the late war, and his mother had five brothers in the Union ranks.

January 9, 1889, Mr. Miller was married to Miss Georgianna Cole, daughter of Oscar and Laventha (Gordon) Cole, of Iowa. Her mother is a niece of William J. Gordon, of Cleveland, Ohio. Mr. and Mrs. Miller have one son, Vilroy, born March 4, 1890. Mrs. Miller is a member of the Congregational Church.

WILLIAM L. FARLIN.—Among the personages that were intimately associated with the early history of Montana was W. L. Farlin, of Butte, whose biographical history in brief is here published. He was a pioneer of 1862, and one of her citizens who has done his full share in the discovery and development of her rich mines, was born at Meadville, Pennsylvania, of Scotch ancestry, his great-grandfather being one of the early settlers of Portland, Maine, and indeed the owner of the tract which became the original site of that great city. He sold his land and removed to New York; and the party who purchased the land platted the town of Portland. After residing in New York a number of years he was murdered for his money.

His son, Joseph Farlin, the father of William L., was born in New York and married Miss Lydia Thomas, a native of Connecticut and of Welsh-English ancestry; on one side of the family she was a descendant of the Olcutts. They had two daughters and five sons. He moved to Iowa, where he was a farmer and a cabinet-maker, and died, in the fifty-third year of his age. His wife survived him twenty years, dying in her seventieth year. They were Baptists, but later in life he became a Universalist. He was a man of ability and took considerable interest in public affairs. Of their children only three now survive.

The subject of this sketch, the next to the youngest of the family, was brought up in Ottumwa, Iowa, and began the business of life for himself at the early age of sixteen years. He was carrying on farming, burning lime and mining coal, having a number of men in his employ. In 1862 the news of the discovery of gold at Florence had reached the East, and he at once determined to go there. He started from his home to take the steamer at Shreveport, but it had passed Council Bluffs before he arrived; and he employed a party to bring him to the point where commodities, representing money, a complete and thorough clearing-house system, representing all the modern ideas of interchange of values of the most concise, condensed and advance practices of all modern metropolis cities of the known world,—a system that has all the requirements and safeguards that can be found in the great moneyed centers of the world, representing, as it does, a larger amount of banking facilities than is possesed by any other town of similar position and size in the United States.

For some years after the discovery of gold in 1864, at or near the present site of this town, all the exchange and interchange of values was practically done upon a gold basis, the gold not even being refined or representing any manipulation of man whatsoever, being taken just as it came from the earth, having been separated practically from all other commodities by the action of nature, either by the washing of gravel, or, as is frequently claimed, by glacial action; and, after the establishment of banks, both private and national, for many years their chief business consisted in handling gold dust, which was the general accepted medium of exchange of values, gauging the value per ounce by weight and degree of fineness. Twenty dollars was taken as the standard of valuation per ounce, which value varied according to the fineness, the average price for which gold was sold then being $17.60 per ounce.

There was no provision made in the Territorial law for the organization of banks, which gave rise to the fact that the Montana banks for many years were either national banks or private banking houses; and it is only in Montana since she became a State that provision has been made for the incorporation of State banks.

The first national bank organized in Helena was the First National Bank; its original charter dated from March 17, 1866, and its number was 1,649. This was followed by the Montana National Bank, organized by James King and W. Gillette. The operations of this bank were somewhat brief and not entirely certain, and, owing to some technical failures to pay capital in in cash, it came in contact with the comptroller's requirements, and settled the difficulty by dissolution. Then followed the People's National Bank, which, according to the memory the emigrant trail to Oregon branches to go to the north mines; but the man was quarrelsome, and at Fort Kearney Mr. Farlin left him and came on alone, on a cayuse. He was often stopped by Indians, but they let him pass; and at one point, on the other side of Green river, a shower of arrows were shot after him, but he escaped uninjured by running his horse past the ambushed Sioux. At Green river he found friends, and they proceeded to Fort Lemhi where they learned that the Florence mines were overrun with men, and Mr. Franklin decided to go with a party on a prospecting tour to the Salmon river country. In August they discovered Pioneer Gulch and named it. It was not far from Gibbons' battlefield. It was the first paying gulch in the country, yielding from $6 to $18 a day in gold. Gold had been discovered at other places, but not in such paying quantities. Grasshopper was struck about three weeks afterward and Bannack started, and they proceeded to that place, where Mr. Farlin located the first quartz mine that was placed on record in the whole northern country; it was called the Ottumwa. He worked it some, but not with paying results. He remained there over winter, working placer mines during the fall, and rocked out from $10 to $75 per day.

He planned to go with Stuart's company to the Yellowstone, but was unable to find his cayuse and they went on without him. But five days later a company of twenty-one persons was formed to go to Snake river, and Mr. Farlin sold ground there that afterward made the purchasers a fortune. They started on the 16th of April, 1863, and when they reached Snake river they went up the north fork until they reached the snow. Returning, they went to the south fork and up the cañon, finding some prospects. Mr. Farlin was the youngest of the company and only a boy, and a part of the company were very dishonest men, while a portion were honorable. As the war was raging the desperate men of the company were waiting to capture a train of goods, and Mr. Farlin was approached by them on the subject, being urged to take a part in the scheme. He of course declined and for a while heard nothing of it; but one night soon after he had made his bed, a little aside from the rest, he was of the early settlers, also came to grief with its associate bank at Bozeman, which was largely caused by its capital stock having been contributed by notes rather than cash.

These early attempts at financiering were perhaps excusable, having been, undoubtedly, more the result of misapprehension than any intentional wrong, except in the subsequent management of the People's National Bank, which had many marks of rascality.

The First National Bank was organized with ex-Governor S. T. Hauser as president and T. H. Kleinschmidt as cashier. This institution has continually held the front rank in the banking efforts of the town, and was the first national bank organized within the confines of the Territory as well as the city.

There were several private banks and banking offices, which might be called minor institutions, that held sway during these early days, only one of which remained permanent, being that of Messrs. L. H. Hershfeld & Brother, which ultimately merged in, and proved the foundation of, the Merchants' National Bank, in 1882. Up to this time it is to be noticed that from 1866 there had been no successful national bank organized, excepting the First. During the year 1882 L. H. Hershfeld & Brother nationalized under the name of the Merchants' National Bank, with a capital of $150,000.

The Montana National Bank was organized with a capital of $250,000, and the Second National Bank with a capital of $75,000.

The presiding spirits or leading geniuses of these several banks in 1882 were: ex-Governor S. T. Hauser, of the First National Bank; Col. C. A. Broadwater, of the Montana National Bank; L. H. Hershfeld, of the Merchants' National Bank; and E. D. Edgerton, of the Second National Bank.

These banks were respectively capitalized: $500,000 for the First National; $250,000 for the Montana National; $150,000 for the Merchants' National; and $75,000 for the Second National, with relatively large surpluses and undivided profits.

Later on Thomas Cruse organized, and became the principal stockholder of, the Cruse Savings Bank, which was organized under the awakened by heavy footsteps stealthily approaching him; he arose on his elbow, clutched his revolver and asked what was wanted, and the approaching man quietly withdrew. Mr. Farlin imagined that an effort was being made to put him out of the way.

The following day the party broke camp and traveled until they arrived at the south fork of the Yellowstone, where they found that their leader knew nothing of the country. They held a meeting and appointed Ed Sanders as the leader. George Hilderman, the old guide, tried to ignore this action, packed up and said, "Come on, boys," going up the cañon, thinking the rest would follow; but only one went with him, a man named Ritchie, a flour dealer. The rest were consulting what to do to get new supplies with which to pass over to the Big Horn country. They waited until the next morning and then went to the ferry for supplies. Proceeding, they crossed over the head of the Yellowstone river and secured some prospects; and the word went to Bannack that they had struck gold; and companies followed them. Among them was De Lacy, and he discovered the Fire-Hole basin, and they followed the Gallatin valley and went to Virginia City, while Mr. Farlin's company came down the Yellowstone and descended to Yellowstone lake. A few days afterward they struck the upper falls, and from this point went east to strike the mountains in order to prospect them. They reached a creek which they named Stampede, because their horses were stampeded there by the Crow Indians; but the Crows ran away and left some of their articles in the camp. Then the company turned down the creek until they reached the cañon of the Yellowstone Having a cross-cut saw with them which was difficult of transportation, they cached it; and it was found by the Indians, who made arrow-heads of it, as was proved by pieces afterward found.

Proceeding until they reached the upper mountains, they found numerous parks of grass and groves, and an abundance of mountain sheep and black-tailed deer. From this point they went in an easterly direction and came to a river leading down the mountains, which they followed down and ascertained it to be Clark's fork. At the head of this they got some ore. This point is now known as Cook City. Proceeding still further down the stream, they had numerous scrapes with bears. A day's laws of the State with a capital of $100,000, Cruse acting as president. The Montana Savings Bank, the leading spirit of which was J. Tucker, who acted as its cashier, was also organized, with a capital of $100,000, among the prominent men of the stockholders being the Lombards, of Boston. Still later, and in the year 1890, the Helena National Bank was organized with $500,000 capital, and the American National Bank with $200,000 capital.

In 1893, by reason of changes and increased capital, the respective banks in Helena stood as follows, being, in number, seven national banks and two savings banks: The First National, with practically the same officers and a capital of $500,000 and surplus of over $700,000. The Montana National, with T. A. Marlow as president and A. L. Smith as cashier, with a capital of $500,000 and a $250,000 surplus. The Merchants' National, with $350,000 capital, and about an equal amount of surplus,—the Messrs. Hershfeld being respectively president and cashier. The Helena National, with $500,000 capital, and E. D. Edgerton president and F. Baird cashier,—that bank having consolidated with the Second National during the season. The American National, with $200,000 capital,—both the latter banks having reasonable surpluses. The Montana National Bank was organized by Col. C. A. Broadwater, who acted as president, and E. Sharpe, of Indianapolis, who acted as cashier, and was followed by L. G. Phelps, and subsequently by A. L. Smith, the presidency having fallen upon T. A. Marlow. The American National Bank was organized by Senator T. C. Power, who acted as president, and A. C. Johnson as cashier, with George F. Cope as assistant cashier.

These banks collectively represent $2,125,000 capital, with nearly an equal amount of surplus and undivided profits; while their deposits represent about $7,500,000.

When we consider that Helena only has a population of twelve to fifteen thousand people, we are prepared to say that no other town in the United States has the same representation per capita of banking capital, banking surplus or banking deposits.

It is true that the strain of the past twelve months has told somewhat upon the general journey below this they crossed Prior's Fork and camped on the river, on the north side. Here they saw vast herds of buffalo.

Next morning they passed down and camped where Livingston now is. They noticed that the Snake Indians were showing camp fires, and at 12 o'clock at night they were attacked. The Indians fired a volley from rifles and muskets at them from the bluff, the horses stampeded and one man was wounded. The white party jumped up, seized their arms and without thinking to put out their fires were discussing what to do when a second volley of balls passed over their heads. Then they put their fires out, fell back a little and lay down in the grass and sage-brush, not knowing the number of the Indians. They lay there until the dawn of day, and, seeing their indefensible position, they packed six horses that had not got away, with supplies and the blankets, and followed down the river to the point where it receded from the bluff, the Indians following down on the bank. The prospectors stopped at a large tree that had blown down, which would have served as a breastwork. A detachment of Indians came off from the bluff through a little cañon. As soon as Mr. Farlin's party had halted, Ed Sanders, Pat Gaffey and Mr. Farlin pulled the packs from off their horses and on they went after the redskins. Mr. Farlin's rifle, a sixteen-shooter, had become wet and he could not use it; so he had only his revolver, and the others had both guns and pistols. The Indians had made the cañon, and for fear of being ambushed they decided not to follow but rather to go back after the horses at the old camp; and sure enough found the horses, and were getting off from a little island when the Indians came upon the bank. When Mr. Farlin and his comrades had gone about 350 yards from the bank they halted, and the Indians began to come down the cañon. Mr. Farlin made one shot, which however did not reach them, and then he ran his horse out toward the Indians, to a point within eighty feet of them, the chief of whom was standing with gun in hand looking at Mr. Farlin as if in amazement. Mr. Farlin then raised his revolver pistol and shot him through the body and he fell dead. The other Indians, who were behind the chief, then came on, and Mr. Farlin dropped his pistol on the nearest one and he also fell in his tracks; then pulled on another, but this one didn't business of these respective banks, and still the clearing-house balances show that, as compared with other western towns and cities, the decrease is far below the average of the Pacific coast towns; and, while several changes have been made and two of the larger banks were closed for a brief period, owing to the inability to realize on assets so far removed from commercial centers, it is clearly shown that in 1894 the presentation of the banks of Helena as compared with other sections of the country, particularly the Northwestern country, is quite as good as the presentation of 1892; and it is only fair to say that we have withstood the effects of the recent financial disturbance in better proportion, and have recovered more rapidly, and are in better condition than any other section of the country, situated at all similarly,—that is to say, any section of the country west of the Mississippi river.

CHAPTER XXXVII.

MONTANA MINING—BURIED TREASURES—THE MARVELOUS WEALTH OF MONTANA—HER COUNTIES IN ORDER—EACH COUNTY A KINGDOM RICHER THAN WAS SOLOMON'S.

BY DR. G. C. SWALLOW.

BEAVER HEAD COUNTY.

THIS county was the theater of some of the earliest and most hazardous mining operations in Montana,—not as hazardous on account of the uncertainties of mining products as from the depredations of thieving Indians, and of the marauding and robbing "road agents," and the cost and risk of transportation. While the little band of pioneer miners were a thousand miles away from friends and the protecting arm of the Government, and under scant civil authorities improvised for temporary use, nearly all of which were in the hands of desperadoes, combined with all the bad as against all honest workers and producers, these miners had a sharp struggle for life and food as well as for gold. All old-timers feel a thrill of manly pride in that triumph of fearless and quick justice which made Montana mining possible, when they recall the wild and dangerous adventures that marked the early history of Bannack and the surrounding camps.

Nothing in history can surpass the cool courage and sturdy resolution with which these pioneer miners conquered and punished the thieving and scalping Indians, and the celerity and drop, as the cylinder of the revolver had passed too far, so that the ball was crushed in passing out. From the camp they saw the shooting, and Reese, Smith and Allen came to his assistance, and the Indians got away.

Returning to camp, the prospectors got breakfast, and moved on up the river, but never saw the horses again They traveled all day and could see the Indians skulking at a distance; so they traveled after night set in in order to escape them. The ground was covered with prickly pears, and some of the men, having only moccasins, suffered intolerably; afterward it required hours to get out all the prickles.

On arriving at Gallatin, where they found a few cabins, they camped. Hearing then of Alder Gulch, they proceeded thither and located good claims. A little later the Butte discoveries were made, and Mr. Farlin and Ed San-precision with which they captured a score or more of the marauding "road agents" and their confederate official robbers, all combined to kill and steal, and the quick and unerring justice with which the guilty were executed or banished from the little camps in this vast wilderness. These adventures of our pioneer miners will ever form the most interesting and instructive chapter. The pioneer citizens of Bannack still point with pride to the humble capital of the budding mountain State, and to the more commodious and substantial pioneer courthouse erected by Beaver Head county. But for once eastward was the march of empire, and Virginia City became the capital of Montana, and Dillon the seat of Beaver Head county. But Bannack is none the less historical, and her reviving mining industries will restore and keep up her early prosperity.

The placers of the Grasshopper at Bannack, once so productive, are still worked. Pioneer, Excelsior, South Side, Golden Leaf, and other placers still have rich gravels. Productive placers also exist high up the Grasshopper, on Dice creek and at French Bar. The Pioneer is now worked at the rate of 1,000 cubic yards a day by water pumped from the Grasshopper to the height of seventy-five feet.

Quartz mining followed close upon the heels of the placers. Gold, silver and copper veins were discovered and recorded in large numbers and at various points in Beaver Head county; and the pioneer mill was erected on the Grasshopper near Bannack, and the pioneer smelter on the Rattlesnake at Argenta. This mill, with its wooden stamps shod with wagon tires, worked the free gold quartz from the mines in the Bannack district, and the St. Louis Smelting furnace ran out the argentiferous galena at Argenta into base bullion, which their cupel furnace reduced to disks of pure silver as large as new moons. As these broad disks of white metal were displayed in the bank windows of Eastern cities, the fame of Golconda and El Dorado paled before the rising glories of Argenta.

Still this successful mining did not pay. The high price of labor and all needed supplies, the cost of separating the worthless lead, and the enormous expense of shipping the silver by the ders came over and camped at the foot of Parrot Hill, in the fall of 1864. Allison Humphrey was the first discoverer, and in the meantime Cogswell and party discovered gold at Silver Bow; and the first claim was located by P. Darce, James Stuart, Caleb Irvin and Major Galen. In the autumn of 1863, at the Deer Lodge claim, the Porter brothers had put up a cabin, and also Jo Bowers. At Butte Messrs. Farlin and Sanders erected the fourth cabin there, and Mr. Farlin located a number of valuable claims, being the first to exhibit gold in the camp; it came from the Blue Wing. A grove of timber was near, and procuring a whipsaw they sawed out the first lumber in the camp; and Mr. Farlin hauled the logs and sold the lumber.

But, hearing soon after this, of a little gold being found in Gopher Gulch, in February he quit whipsawing and went there and located Blackfoot City and 160 acres of land. He followed mining there until the ensuing autumn, then returning to Butte with a few hundred dollars. In the summer of 1866 he located a number of claims west of what is now known as the Trivonia, and he also discovered the value of Gray Rock, and discovered also the Anglo-Saxon, the Trivonia and the La Plata; but he did not make known his discoveries until the law passed providing for the re-location of 600x1,500 feet; he then located various claims.

He had 350 acres of the old Butte town in one block, and he assisted others in locating valuable claims. In June, 1875, he began the erection of the Dexter ten-stamp mill, which had five reverberating roasters. The silver mine there yielded sixteen per cent gold. He ran this mill about nine years. It was located three-fourths of a mile southwest of the corner of Broadway and Main street, and from it a large amount of treasure has been taken. He is now operating the Tzarina, having fifty acres in the group. It is eighteen per cent gold, counting silver at eighty-two cents; but, counting silver at sixty-three cents, it is forty per cent gold; and the ore has more than doubled in value as it goes down; and should silver increase in value—which it is certain to do—it will yield large returns and furnish employment to many miners.

Mr. Farlin is now writing upon scientific questions, being a man of rare intelligence and an extraordinary amount of experience and close observation. It is hoped overland coaches, beset, as they were, by "road agents" and hostile Indians, largely overbalanced the value of the silver produced. But numerous mines have been discovered at Argenta- Some have furnished large quantities of good ores; three smelters have followed the pioneer smelting and cupel furnace, and yet the heavy freight on fuel and base bullion consumes too much of the profits. But still the owners of the hundred mines in this old camp are hopefully working and waiting for the locomotive to bring them cheap coke and coal and to take away the train-loads of bullion they could easily produce every week. Meanwhile the miners delve and rest. The furnaces and mills have a sort of spasmodic life; sometimes they glow with the melting ores, sometimes they take a long, hopeless sleep. Silver is down, and Argenta must wait the better market for the white metal. Her hundred mines must rest and their timbers decay. Her furnaces will scarcely glow with the flowing metal until silver becomes a "precious metal" once more.

But gold became the principal attraction to the pioneer miners, as it is likely to be to the ante-mortem miners of these memorable '90s. Still the miners of Bannack are full of courage and hope. They are surrounded by numerous mines. On the Grasshopper near the city are the Golden-Leaf, Washington, Pioneer, Wallace, French, Empire, Montana, Excelsior, Junction, Silver Arrow and many others. The Wight mill was erected long ago to work the ore of this district. This mill is now silent, and the Golden-Leaf mill is busy with its ten stamps and two amalgamating pans on the ores of the Golden-Leaf. The Golden-Leaf is a rich mine, well worked for profit and safety. Every part is dry and well supplied with pure air. The wall rock is limestone intersected with syenite and trap-rock, and the ore is rich and abundant.

The Elkhorn district has a large number of promising mines. Some of them well proved up as true veins carrying silver, gold, copper and lead. The Magnet Group, the Lake Creek Group, the Lost Cloud District, the Bald Mountain mines, the Comet Mountain mines, the Dice Creek mines, arastra and mill, are all worked with varying success. The fall in silver has taken the prosperity out of many of these districts.

that he may live to complete his works. He is endowed with a remarkably good memory, being able to call to mind a few experiences he had as far back as when he was but two years of age. During his pioneer life in Montana he was a man of great courage, absolutely knowing no fear. He is now a quiet, peaceable and pleasant gentleman, enjoying the high respect of the best pioneers of Montana.

Hon. Conrad Kohrs, of Deer Lodge, Montana, is a pioneer of 1862, and one of the most prominent cattle men of the State. As such he is entitled to more than a passing mention on the pages of this work, and a sketch of his life will be read with interest by many.

Mr. Kohrs was born in Holstein, Germany, August 5, 1835, son of Carston Kohrs, a native of Hanover, and a farmer and distiller by occupation. Carston Kohrs died when his son Conrad was seven months old, so that the latter never knew a father's care.

In his native town young Kohrs received his education. When he was fifteen years of age he went to sea and for four years his life was that of a sailor, his chief ports being those of South America. In 1854 he made his way to Iowa. Then for a time he was on the river, rafting and flatboating. Later he joined his brother in the buchering business, and continued thus occupied up to 1856, at which time he made the voyage to California, via the isthmus of Panama, and engaged in mining in Siskiyou county. In 1858 the Fraser river excitement drew him to that place, and while there he made an average of $14 per day. Late in the fall of that year he returned to California, where he remained until 1861, engaged in different mining enterprises, in which he lost nearly all his money. He then went East, and in the spring of 1862 started for Montana, landing in Deer Lodge valley after a journey attended with many difficulties. Here he prospected and mined until the discovery of gold at Bannack, when he went there and was employed in the butchering business by "Hank" Crawford, at $25 per month. In June, 1863, he went to Alder Gulch and secured similar employment, and later opened

Hecla is the largest mining camp in Beaver Head. The plant of mining machinery is large and complete. The camp contains numerous mines and mining claims. Some twenty-five belong to the Hecla Company: of these the Cleopatra, Ariadne, Hecla, Lion, Trappa, Mountain Sheep, and Cleve are on Lion mountain, and are worked as one mine. The shafts, inclines, tunnels, levels, and stopes made in extracting the ores are very extensive, making miles of underground work. The incline on the Cleopatra is down over 3,000 feet, and the tunnel to this lode is 3,200 feet long. These items will give some idea of the work in this mine. The ores are crushed and separated in the 150-ton concentrator near the mines and smelted at the reduction works at Glendale. The Hecla Reduction Works at Glendale produced $808,251 worth of bullion in 1890. Their concentrator near the mines at Hecla was doing good work. It is reported that this company had paid regular monthly dividends of $15,000 up a butcher business of his own, remaining there until the spring of 1865, buying stock and furnishing the miners with meat. In this he was very successful.

Like all good citizens in this part of Montana at that period, Mr. Kohrs took a hand in helping rid the country of the road agents that infested it. Indeed, he had good reason to do his part in that laudable work, as he came near being waylaid and robbed by them himself. One time, in 1864, while on his way back to Deer Lodge from a trip he had taken, he camped for the night at Camp creek, six miles below where Melrose is now located. In the early morning, while looking for his horse that had strayed out of sight, he met a half-breed who was stopping on the place now owned by Hon. Joseph Brown, and who said to him, "Kohrs, I think you had better get out of here. Two of 'the boys' stopped at the house last night. They are after some one, and I think it is you." Mr. Kohrs replied that he would, if he could find his horse. The half-breed said he had seen him and would bring him up, which he did. Mr. Kohrs had $5,000 in gold dust with him, and felt anxious for the result. No sooner was the horse brought up than he mounted him and dashed away on the road toward Deer Lodge. After he had ridden about half a mile, he looked back and saw two horsemen coming after him at a fast gallop, so he gave his horse the reins, determined to outride them if possible. On he dashed like mad, casting his blanket and overcoat away in order to make the load lighter for his horse, and with the two desperadoes in hot pursuit. It was a race for life. The distance, sixty-seven miles, was made in six hours, Mr. Kohrs riding into Deer Lodge fifteen minutes before his pursuers. The road agents had a station at Deer Lodge. Later, Mr. Kohrs was with the Vigilants on their expedition to capture the highwaymen, which they succeeded in doing at Big Hole, Missoula and Deer Lodge; and among the rest, Bill Bunting, the man who kept the station at Deer Lodge, paid for his crime on the gallows.

In 1865 Mr. Kohrs came to Deer Lodge valley to live, and soon widened his business operations. He not only operated a meat market himself, but he also purchased large herds of cattle and supplied stock to the various butchers of the mining camps. In the spring of 1865 he was the purchaser of all the cattle that were to be had in this part of the country. The following spring he bought of John F. Grant the farm on which he now resides, located three-quarters of a mile north of the city of Deer Lodge. And it was also in 1866 that he purchased his first herd of breeding cattle and began the breeding of fine stock, in which he has since been so successful. He is the pioneer in this line. His first purchase of shorthorn cattle was in Illinois in 1871, and in 1880 he introduced the Herefords here.

Mr. Kohrs' half-brother, John N. W. Bielenberg, has been his partner in all his business enterprises. They have not only made a success of life themselves, but they have also done much to advance the interests of their State by the introduction of thoroughbred stock, both horses and cattle.

While dealing largely in stock and giving much of their attention to this business, they have still kept up their interest in mines and mining. In 1867 they built the Rock creek ditch, which is thirteen miles in length. It has a lake at its head, and it carries 3,000 inches of water. They now own all the mining ground at Pioneer, and they also own the whole of this large ditch and water supply. In short, they are running the most extensive hydraulic mining in Montana. They also own no less than 10,000 acres of land in Deer Lodge valley, near the town of Deer Lodge. On this tract they annually make 800 tons of hay.

Mr. Kohrs was married February 23, 1868, to Miss Augusta Kruse, a native of Altona, Holstein, Germany. They have three children. The eldest, Anna, is now Mrs. J. M. Bordman, and the other two, Catharine and William John, are at home. Mr. Bielenberg is unmarried and resides with Mr. Kohrs. Their residence is one of the most commodious and attractive in the whole State of Montana.

Politically, Mr. Kohrs is a Republican. He has served as County Commissioner, was a member of the Fourteenth Legislature of the Territory of Montana, and was also a member of the Constitutional Convention which formed the present State constitution. Fraternally, he is a Master Mason.

each, and that the whole amount thus paid to that date was $1,620,000 more than the capital stock.

Dewey's Flat and the Lone Pine mines are becoming a very important factor in the mining business of Beaver Head county, The Lone Pine mill is running ten stamps and crushing some twenty-five tons of ore per diem The ore yields about fifty ounces of silver per ton. A large amount of development work has been done in this district, and the mines promise very good returns when silver returns to its real value.

The Vipond group embraces many promising mines. The output of the mines of Beaver Head county has been very large, even in the times of depression. Strikes have hardly reached the old-fashioned people of Beaver Head, who have been the more prosperous during these years of depression.

DANIEL J. HENNESSY was born at Fredericton, New Brunswick, Canada, in September, 1854. At the age of thirteen he quit the collegiate school to which his parents had sent him and went out to battle with the world.

He was first employed in a grocery store, then in a dry-goods establishment, where he remained until he caught the Western fever, and came to Montana in April of 1879. After a month in Helena he visited Butte and secured a responsible position with E. L. Bonner & Company, where he proved his worth as a man of business.

In September, 1886, he started out for himself and established the firm of D. J. Hennessy & Company, on Main street, above Broadway, moving shortly afterward to the corner of Main and Granite streets. His venture proved an unqualified success. In the summer of 1889 its scope was enlarged and the firm changed to a corporation, with a paid-up capital stock of $250,000, under the title of The D. J. Hennessy Mercantile Company. At noon on Sunday, September 29, 1889, a fire started at the intersection of Granite and Utah streets, and in a few minutes the building he occupied, together with his dry-goods stock, valued at over $125,000, was a mass of flames,—his books alone left, everything else being totally destroyed; but his ledgers were in such good shape that the full insurance carried was promptly settled by all companies without any quibble. Plans were at once drawn for a new building upon the old site, and before the end of the year, owing to his indomitable push and energy, it was completed and filled with an immense stock of goods, worthy a place in any large Eastern city. Prosperity has since crowned his every effort, and as a business man his name is second to none in the Western States.

In the following November, 1889, he had the honor of being elected to the first Senate of the new State of Montana, on the Democratic ticket, in Silver Bow county, leading his opponent by a large majority. In 1890 he was re-elected, but after serving two years he resigned, and has since successfully devoted himself to the building up of the largest dry-goods trade in the West. The D. J. Hennessy Mercantile Company has branch houses in Missoula and Granite, together with the large establishment in Anaconda, now known as the Copper City Commercial Company.

In Mr. Hennessy's vocabulary there is no such word as "fail," and as he is still a young man, his prospects for the future are exceedingly bright.

CAPTAIN WILLIAM HARMON.—Prominent in business and social circles in Miles City and Custer county is Captain William Harmon, a retired army officer who has had an eventful career in army life. He was elected to the Board of County Commissioners of Custer county in the fall of 1892, by the Republicans, he being an able advocate of the principles of that party. He was born in the State of Maine, in June, 1835. His remote ancestors were noble Scotch. He is the son of Allen and Charlotte (Boobar) Harmon.

Three brothers—Harmons—came from Scotland in 1642, two of whom settled in the Massachusetts colony and one in South Carolina. One of the number was Captain John Harmon, from whom Captain William Harmon descended. His mother descended from English and French stock, His grandmother on his mother's side was a Johnson. whose father was a resident of London when the colonies declared their independence. He was impressed in the English army against his will, was wounded and taken prisoner by the Colonial army, and when able to enter the field again joined the Colonial forces and fought gallantly for independence, and became a Captain. The English confiscated all his property. He lived an honored citizen of the republic and reared a large family. Captain William Harmon's parents, when he was fifteen years of age, moved to the then Territory of Minnesota and located at St. Anthony Falls, now Minneapolis. This was in 1850. The following year he shot buffalo near where the West Hotel now stands in Minneapolis. He received an academic education, and when twenty years of age engaged in the hardware business, and had constructed a steamboat, the H. M. Rice, at a cost of $21,000, of which he was Captain, and which plied between Minneapolis and St. Cloud, and did a large and profitable business.

During one season he had all he could do with three boats. He was doing an immense business when the war broke out in 1861, when he dropped everything to fight for his country, and responded to President Lincoln's first call for troops. He enlisted in the First Regiment of Minnesota Volunteer Infantry in April, 1861, and was

CASCADE COUNTY.

Though Cascade county has no important quartz mines, Great Falls has by its railroads all the business advantages of Neihart and Barker; and by the most direct communication, the Spotted Horse leads Maiden and the mining camps of the Little Belt to this city. Great Falls still holds the great river, its vast powers, the smelters, and extensive reduction works.

CHOTEAU COUNTY.

Choteau county has been more noted for its broad rich pastures than for its mines. Still the various coal deposits have attracted some attention, and later the little mountains in the county have shown veins of the precious metals.

For many years we have heard rumors of rich discoveries of placer and quartz veins in the Sweet Grass Hills away off on the borders of mustered in as Sergeant, and participated in all the hard-fought battles of the Army of the Potomac, and was promoted from time to time until he reached the rank of Captain. He was First Lieutenant at the battle of Gettysburg, then in General Hancock's corps, where he was severely wounded. It was in that battle that his regiment sustained the heaviest loss of all the regiments in the Federal army during the war, having lost eighty-two per cent. killed and wounded! Not one was taken prisoner.

Captain Harmon remained with the army until peace was restored, when he returned to Minneapolis, where his father held the position of Revenue Collector, in which he for a time assisted him. While thus employed, and without solicitation on his part, he was appointed Second Lieutenant in the Eighteenth United States Regular Infantry: this was in 1866. In 1868 he was promoted as First Lieutenant and assigned to the Thirty-sixth United States Infantry. In 1867 he had command of troops conducting and protecting the engineer corps surveying for the Union Pacific Railroad. They had frequent skirmishing with the Indians. One sergeant was killed, one corporal wounded and two engineers mortally wounded. One of the unfortunates was a young man of a prominent New York family (Clark), a nephew of Thurlow Weed. There were a number of prominent New York families represented in the engineer party. They were anxious to explore the new country and enjoy the sport of shooting wild game then numerous in that region. Among the number were a son of Judge Hilton and a nephew of ex-Governor Seymour, of New York. The battle with the Indians, in which Clark received his fatal wound, was in May, 1867, near Rock creek, Wyoming.

When in camp near the summit of the Rockies, on that expedition, General Gibbon and General Rawlins, the latter then Secretary of War, came up with a large force, and all were in camp together for several days. When the officers were mounted and shaking hands to part, General Rawlins with a body of troops was going to Salt Lake City, General Gibbon to return, while Captain Harmon was to proceed westward on his mission. The question was asked, "What shall we call this camp?" Captain Harmon suggested "Separation." When the Union Pacific Railroad was completed to that point, there was a station established there, and named "Separation."

Captain Harmon resigned his position in the regular army in 1870, and engaged as post trader at Forts Rice, Lincoln, etc., with success. While residing at Bismarck, Dakota, in 1882, he was elected to the Board of County Commissioners. He engaged in the live-stock business in Montana in 1882, on O'Fallon creek, 100 miles from Miles City, where he has an excellent, well-furnished residence and farm buildings, and a water tank for irrigating a large garden, where he grows all garden vegetables for family use. He also keeps carriages for driving, and spends the summer months here with his family, enjoying the vigorous country atmosphere and fine scenery surrounding. Here he has large herds of cattle and some of the finest blooded horses in the State. He is now making a specialty of breeding mules for Southern markets. Mrs. Harmon is an expert scenic artist, and has many sketches unsurpassed, one of which represents their country ranch. Her art work should have been exhibited at the World's Fair at Chicago, where it would undoubtedly have taken a prize. Their country post office is Ekalaka, Montana. Captain Harmon was married in Sioux City, Iowa, July, 1870, to Miss Zoe Picott, of French ancestry. Her father was a member of a St. Louis fur company, and a prominent man on the frontier in early times. She spent nine years at an educational convent in Chicago, and four years completing her education in a St. Louis institution. She was an apt student and received high honors at school. Captain Harmon and wife have four sons: Leo C., who was educated and received a gold medal at Montreal, Canada, is now employed in the Stock Growers' Bank, Miles City; the other three are respectively Milan T., William E. and Joseph R. Captain Harmon cast his first Presidential vote for Abraham Lincoln, and has voted for every Republican candidate since. He is a member of the G. A. R., Grant Post, No. 14, Miles City, and has been Commander of the post. He is also a member of the Patriotic Order Sons of America. He is a genial, social gentleman, a good business man, and his residence is the finest and best furnished in Miles City. Mrs. Harmon is a member of the Catholic Church.

JOHN K. HOUK, one of the honored pioneers of Montana, was born in Ohio, November 18, 1828, and is of German descent. The grandfather resides in Maryland, and the father of our subject, Bela Houk, was born in that State, from which he emigrated to Ohio. In the latter State, British America, where Piegans, Blackfeet and Big-Bellied Indians keep guard over mines and game. But the evidence is now conclusive that good placer and quartz mines have been discovered in this pleasant region "forever dedicated" to the use and profit of the indigenous red man. Many rich veins of gold, silver, copper, lead, and iron have been discovered and partially opened. Placer mines have also been worked with varied results. When this county is opened and cheap transportation furnished, the Sweet Grass Hills will be the seat of a prosperous mining camp.

All remember the famous stampede to the Bear-Paw mines in 1878, which ended in disappointment to many and disaster to a few. Those who remained to prosecute the work of discovery and development were driven away by the primitive landlords, who deemed this most like those "Celestial Hunting Grounds" promised to all "good Indians." he married Miss Charlotte Johnson, a native of Ohio, and they located on a farm in Seneca county, where seven children were born to them, three of whom are living. The father died at the age of forty-five years, and about 1838 his widow became the wife of William B. Mathewson, of Rhode Island, by whom she has six children, two yet living. Her death occurred at the age of fifty-five, and Mr. Mathewson passed away at the age of seventy-two.

In 1850, Mr. Houk accompanied their family on their removal to Kent county, Michigan, and in 1852, attracted by the discovery of gold in California, he made his way to the Pacific slope, paying the sum of $100 for the privilege of walking and driving a herd of cattle. That was the year in which the cholera raged so severely, and every camping place was lined with the graves of the victims of that dread disease. Mr. Houk escaped that but suffered much from erysipelas, his eyes being swollen shut. The doctor bathed his eyes in liniment, and our subject, who thought it spirits of turpentine, insisted upon his comrades applying that liquid again, and the turpentine did what the liniment had failed to do—effected a cure.!

On reaching California, Mr. Houk sold his cattle in the Sierra Nevada valley, and on the 28th of September, 1852, arrived in Downieville, where the party with which he had traveled separated, never to meet again. With a partner, John H. Frees, he built a miner's cabin, at a cost of $40, two miles below the town, and with their blankets upon their backs made their way on foot to Sutterville, about forty miles south of Sacramento. There they were employed in various ways until the latter part of August, 1853, when Mr. Frees started for his old home and Mr. Houk was left alone.

Mr. Houk was then among strangers and was quite ill, but he resolved never to leave the mountains until he had made $5,000; and in the fall he made his way to Weaverville, and after engaging in prospecting south of that place for a time, he purchased a fourth interest in a claim and water ditch for $500, to be paid when he had secured the gold. He afterward bought and sold different claims, and in connection with John W. Winslett purchased Burnt Ranch, fifty miles below Weaverville and began farming, blacksmithing and hotel keeping. In 1858 Mr. Winslett joined a volunteer company to fight the Indians and in an encounter was wounded. The next year the Redwood Indians became so troublesome that the Governor ordered out a volunteer company to keep them in subjection, and Mr. Houk and his partner, renting their claim, joined this company. In an engagement, the former was wounded in the hand and side, and from his injuries has never yet recovered. Subsequently, he engaged in carrying the mail from Weaverville to Arcata, California, for one year, a distance of one hundred miles, and thirty miles of this he traversed in the night, as it was unsafe to make the trip in the daytime. He several times narrowly escaped with his life, being on one occasion met in a narrow trail by two notorious robbers, but drawing his six shooter upon them they fled.

On abandoning his work as mail carrier, he purchased some mules and engaged in packing between Arcata and Trinity river, and in the spring of 1862 took his train of eight mules to the Florence mines in Washington Territory. In the last of June of that year, he reached Lewiston at the mouth of Clearwater river, and on the 4th of July got to Florence, in the midst of a snow storm. During the succeeding two years, he followed packing between Lewiston, Elk City, Florence and the Boise mines, and was then joined by his old California partner, whose home had been burned by the Indians and who had to flee with his family for their lives. In 1864, in connection with Robert Johnson, Mr. Houk went to the Bitter Root valley with pack trains and established a store at Fort Owen, after which they located the town of Stevensville, Mr. Houk building there a log house, which is still used by the Missoula Mercantile Company as a storage room. The town was named in honor of Mr. Stevens, who made the first treaty with the Flathead Indians. Our subject then ran a pack train, purchasing goods at Lewiston, and in 1866, Mr. Johnson sold out his interest in the store to Mr. Winslett before mentioned. This venture did not prove very successful, and in 1868 Mr. Houk began prospecting, spending nearly two years in that way but not finding any great quantity of gold. Going to Blackfoot City, he then engaged in burning charcoal, chopping cord-wood, and for two winters carried the mail from that place to Lincoln Gulch, a distance of thirty-five miles, making the trip once a week, on Norwegian snow-quartz deposits of great promise have been discovered at different times and sundry places in these mountains, sufficient to give strong hopes. They will become the seat of active mining operations when the white man can have legitimate claim to his discoveries.

Mines of Little Rocky mountains have scarcely advanced beyond the stage of prospecting and discovery; still, enough is known to show that these, like nearly all the mountain regions of Montana, are intersected with veins of the precious metals. Now, since these mountains have been added to Uncle Sam's dominion, we may expect to hear good things of the Little Rocky mountains in the way of profitable mining. We have abundance of evidence that these mountains contain very rich mineral deposits.

DEER LODGE COUNTY

has had a full share in making up the history of Montana mining. The first gold discoveries in the State were made on Gold creek in this coun-shoes. He worked for three years but could collect no pay for his services, so once more prospected and secured a claim, which he sold lor $400. Returning to Stevensville, he then joined his old friend, Mr. Winslett, and began buying cattle for the San Francisco market. He next bought sheep, but suffered the loss of his flock, and in the spring of 1877 they left Bruno, Idaho, with little more than a thousand head, coming to Montana. In the spring of 1878, Mr. Houk began working in the ground sluice for the Pioneer Company, at $4 per day; and in the fall came to Bitter Root valley and located at his present home, Paradise Ranch, which he began improving in the spring of 1880. He is now engaged in raising Galloway cattle, some horses and a fancy breed of chickens, and also cultivates fine fruits and berries, also has many beautiful flowers upon his place. In connection with these interests, he also has an apiary of Italian bees, and the fine yield of honey adds not a little to his income.

The life of Mr. Houk has certainly not been an uneventful one; on the contrary it has been filled with many exciting and thrilling adventures from the time when he first crossed the plains in the early days of California's prominence. He has met with hardships and trials and encountered many dangers from the ruffians of the West, from the wild animals and still wilder Indians. He has several times won the victory in encounters with huge grizzly bears. On one occasion since coming to his ranch, he was sleeping near the corral in which was a cow and her calf, and was awakened by the noise of a bear attacking the calf. Planting the muzzle of his gun upon the animal's head, he fired, and old Bruin fell dead. After waiting about ten minutes, another bear attacked the calf and was shot by Mr. Houk. The night was very dark, and in the morning he found one dead bear in the corral and the other in a brush near by, both weighing at least eight hundred pounds. This is only one of the experiences which come to the pioneer of the West, but the life has its attractions, and the school of experience has been a valuable and interesting one to him. He now has a pleasant home, which he is rapidly placing under a high state of cultivation, and in the community where he lives he is held in the highest regard for his honesty and strict integrity.

GEORGE SEYMOUR LEWIS came to Montana in 1866 and is now ranked with the wealthy men of Butte City.

Mr. Lewis dates his birth in Syracuse, New York, November 13, 1824. His great-grandfather, William Lewis, emigrated to this country from Ireland and was one of the earliest settlers at Canistota, New York. He served as a brave Continental through the Revolutionary war, snrvived that struggle and lived to the advanced age of ninety-two years. His son, Oliver Lewis, was born in Onondaga county, New York; became one of the wealthy and respected farmers of that county, was a stanch Presbyterian, and lived to be eighty-five. He reared three sons and three daughters, one of whom, Leonard Lewis, the father of our subject, married Miss Catharine Van Vleet, a descendant of one of the old Holland Dutch families who were the first settlers of New York. He died at the age of forty and she lived to be sixty-eight. Both were active members of the Methodist Church. They had six children. One of their sons served as a soldier in the Union army and it is supposed that he now fills an unknown grave in the South. One of the daughters died at the age of eighteen years. Four are still living.

George Seymour Lewis was the second born in his father's family. He received a common-school education and learned the tailor's trade, and when he was twenty years old removed to Medina, Ohio, remaining there two years. Following that he traveled from place to place, working as a journeyman tailor. He was in Springfield, Illinois, in 1842, and while there made a suit of clothes for Abraham Lincoln, and a little later, at Decatur, a suit for Richard J. Oglesby. Among other cities in which he stopped about that time were St. Louis, Chicago, and Jefferson, Wisconsin, and he finally settled in La Harpe, Illinois, all this time working at his trade. While in La Harpe he was married, March 24, 1845, to Miss Sophia Gardner, a native of that place, and they continued to reside there until 1849.

In 1849 the California gold excitement allured Mr. Lewis to the Pacific coast, the journey being made by way of the Isthmus and date of his arrival in San Francisco being March 15, 1850. A few months of hardship and privation in the mines satisfied him that mining was not his forte, and he returned to Illinois. Soon afterward he ty, by an enterprising trapper. Gold Creek, Little Blackfoot, Washington Gulch, McClellan Gulch, Nevada creek and Pioneer were prominent mining camps in the early days. These and numerous others are still yielding up their deposits of gold. Gold Creek, Pioneer, Little Blackfoot, Ophir, Snowshoe, Washington Gulch, Elk Creek, Bear Gulch, Lincoln, Jefferson and Henderson contain many of the very early placers which made Montana so famous for gold mining in the '60s and '70s. Deer Lodge had the first silver mill in Montana, the Hope at Phillipsburg; and one of the first gold mills, the Cable; and has one of the largest reduction works in the county, at Anaconda. This county has had twenty-five mills; but, like the Hope, many others have gone with the new counties. Some of them continue to give their regular supply of bullion, but the change in silver has silenced the stamps of others.

Every mountain range which helps to enclose the beautiful Deer Lodge valley, and almost every established himself in business in Des Moines, Iowa, where he remained two years, and from whence in 1855 he went to Clarinda and engaged in mercantile pursuits. He was at the latter place during the financial panic of 1857 and at that time lost all he had. Next we find him at Nebraska City. He then began to freight on the plains, at first in a small way with one wagon, making trips from St. Joseph to Denver. As he prospered he enlarged his business and ere long his freight train was composed of ten wagons and forty yoke of oxen. In this business he continued for about five years. In 1866 he started from Nebraska City with an ox train of five wagons loaded with provisions for Montana, landed at Bozeman on the 14th of August, and since that date has been identified with Montana.

At Bozeman Mr. Lewis readily disposed of his goods and then turned his attention to farming in the Gallatin valley. His son Leonard, then twenty years of age, was with him. They took claim to a tract of land fourteen miles from Bozeman, on the West Gallatin river, and there on a large scale began raising wheat and were very successful. They had their wheat ground at Springville and marketed it at Helena, a hundred miles distant. In 1868 Mr Lewis opened a hotel in Diamond City which he ran for five years, his son carrying on the farming operations all this time. In 1875 he returned to Gallatin and purchased the Union Flouring Mills at Spring Hill. For a number of years he had most of the Government contracts to furnish flour to the forts in the Territory and to the Indian agencies, his ox trains taking up flour to Fort Benton and bringing back supplies to Butte City.

In 1880 Mr. Lewis located in Butte City and established a general merchandise store here. He also handles large quantities of wood and coal. For ten years he was engaged in these enterprises. In 1889 he met with a heavy loss of wood, it having been ignited by sparks from a Northern Pacific steam engine. This loss amounted to $28,000. Mr. Lewis has sued the company and has got judgment in all the lower courts, and the case will soon be reviewed by the Supreme Court of the United States.

During his mercantile career in Butte City Mr. Lewis accumulated a large amount of valuable property here. He has erected many buildings, both business houses and residences, and in 1890 he added to the city the Big Butte Addition, a tract of sixty acres, much of which has been sold and is being rapidly built up. Since 1890 he has been retired from active business, and is now giving his attention to the collection of his rents and the care of his property.

After a happy married life of forty-seven years, Mrs. Lewis departed this life March 24, 1892, leaving a husband and four children to mourn their loss. She was a most amiable woman, was devoted to her family and loyal to her friends and was loved by all who knew her. Of their family we record that Leonard is engaged in the stock business in Meagher county; Annie is the wife of J. O. Hassy, White Sulphur Springs; Irene is the wife of John Moore, Meagher county; and John G. is also a stock man of that county.

Mr. Lewis has been a Republican all his life. Since coming to Butte City he has served two years as a member of its Council. He is now seventy years of age, is well preserved both physically and mentally and is a fine representative of the successful pioneers of Montana. Long may he live to enjoy the wealth that has come to him through his honest and earnest efforts.

James McCormick, County Clerk and Recorder of Dawson county, residing at Glendive, is a patriotic son of the Emerald Isle, and gave many years of his life to the defense of this Union, his adopted country.

He was born in Londonderry, Ireland, in 1836. When two years of age he came with his parents to the United States. They resided in New York city until James was eleven years of age, when they removed to Connecticut, where James resided when the Civil war broke out. He answered the call for defenders of the Union by enlisting, in July, 1862, in the Nineteenth Connecticut Infantry. After one year's service he was transferred to the Second Heavy Artillery, and served in the First Division, Second Brigade, Sixth Corps, Army of the Potomac, and continued in the service until the close of war. Was with General Sheridan in the Shenandoah valley, and participated in all the campaigns, engagements, etc., of the Army of the Potomac from the time he enlisted until the war closed. Afterward he enlisted in the regular army, in the Seventeenth United States Infantry, where he stream and gulch in those mountains have furnished placers and veins of gold, silver, copper and lead. New discoveries of placers and veins of gold and silver and copper have been made every year for more than a quarter of a century; and even as late as 1890, 1,184 new quartz claims and 147 placers were recorded in this county.

While in the early days of Montana mining placers alone were sought and worked, quartz mining has gradually come to the front and is now commanding the attention of most mining men. It may be said that Deer Lodge quartz mining began in earnest with the erection of the Hope mill at Phillipsburg to work the rich ores of that camp, and the Cable mill to work the rich ores of the Cable mine. Deer Lodge county has some fifty gulches containing placer and quartz mines. All of these have been more or less worked, many with great profit.

The Cable mill was erected in the early '60s to work the gold ores of the Cable mine, and served as a non-commissioned officer. Was in Texas from the spring of 1866 to the spring of 1869, then for several months in Richmond, Virginia. His term of service expired at Fort Keogh, Montana, in 1879, where he was engaged in the Commissary Department.

After leaving military service he was for a short time engaged in agricultural pursuits. In June, 1881, he located at Glendive, where he was appointed Justice of the Peace by the Board of County Commissioners. He filled the office until the fall of 1882, when he was elected Probate Judge of Dawson county, and filled the position for four years, giving such general satisfaction that in the fall of 1888 he was elected to the office of Clerk and Recorder of Dawson county, and has been continuously re-elected ever since. He is a member of Thomas L. Kane Post, G. A. R., at Glendive. He is a stanch Republican, and a social favorite among all who enjoy the privilege of his acquaintance.

PHILIP DODSON, senior member of the firm of Dodson & Henke, cigar manufacturers and dealers in cigars, tobacco, and smokers' supplies, Bozeman, Montana, forms the subject of this biography.

Philip Dodson was born in Cambridgeshire, England, June 15, 1845, son of Philip Dodson, Sr., a farmer and stock dealer. In 1862 young Dodson came to the United States, and from that time until 1866 was engaged in railroading in Illinois, working on several of the lines running out of Chicago. In October, 1866, he came to Bozeman, Montana, and entered the employ of the McAdow Milling Company, for whom he was engaged in teaming until 1869. He then spent a few months in Helena, but soon returned to Bozeman and opened a restaurant on Main street, which he conducted until 1871. This enterprise not proving a profitable one, he again went to Helena, where he was variously employed until July, 1875. That year he directed his course toward Washington Territory, located on a ranch of 160 acres and engaged in farming and stock-raising. This occupation, however, not proving congenial to his taste, he sold his land for $1,000 and for some time thereafter traveled throughout Idaho and other parts of the West. The winter of 1879-'80 he spent in Helena. The following spring he went to Deer Lodge, a few months later to Butte, and from there came again to Bozeman, landing in Bozeman in September. From that time until 1883 he was engaged as clerk in the northern Pacific Hotel. In 1883 he opened a tobacco and cigar store in the May building on Main street. In 1887, while doing business in a frame building on the opposite side of the street from the May block, the frame structure and his entire stock were burned. He immediately erected his present commodious brick store room, and since 1888 has been doing a successful business here.

Mr. Dodson was elected to the office of City Treasurer of Bozeman for four terms, three of them consecutive. In politics he is a stanch Republican. Fraternally he is a member of the Western Star Lodge, No. 4, I. O. O. F., of Bozeman, being Secretary of the lodge and Grand Instructor for the Order in this State; he is also a member of the A. O. U. W.

Mr. Dodson was married in 1882 to Mrs. Elnora Werfield, a daughter of Samuel Griffith, a resident of Fayette county, Illinois. They have one child, Philip Griffith Dodson. Mrs. Dodson is a member of the Episcopal Church.

WILLIAM M. COCKRILL, Clerk of the Eighth Judicial District Court of Montana, located at Great Falls, has the honor of being the first Clerk of this district under the State constitution.

He was born in Glasgow, Barren county, Kentucky, June 17, 1856. His grandfather, Joseph Cockrill, removed from Virginia to Barren county, Kentucky, at an early day, became one of the prominent pioneers and large landholders of that place, and there reared his family and spent the residue of his life. In his religious views he was a Baptist. He had four sons and two daughters. One of the sons, Travis Cockrill, the father of William M., was born at the old homestead in Barren county, Kentucky, in 1822. He married Miss Elizabeth Maupin, a native of Columbia, Boone county, Missouri, where their marriage occurred. He took his bride to his home in Glasgow, Kentucky, and there he was for a number of years engaged in the practice of law and became eminent in his profession. For many years he was Clerk of the County Court of Barren county, and was the candidate of his party—the Democratic party—at the time of his death, October 26, 1868. His widow is still living has been doing some good work up to the present time. The ten-stamp mill on the Poorman near the Pyrenees, is now reported idle. The ten-stamp mill on the Southern Cross has lately made an excellent run. The Red Lion mill is running its ten stamps on the Red Lion mine, six miles north of Georgetown. A group of rich gold mines has been discovered in the Eddy district, south of Pioneer. Ontario, Red Nell, Crapps and other good prospects are located between Georgetown and Phillipsburg. There are several mines near Anaconda. A good mining plant has been obtained for the Silver Crown, on Foster creek.

The whole western slope of the main range of the Rocky mountains, from the Big Blackfoot on the north to the Dry Cottonwood on the south, is intersected with veins rich in gold, silver, copper and lead. Nearly every creek and gulch has its groups of quartz claims, some of which have been developed into productive mines. The Oro Fino District, on now a resident of Great Falls. They had ten children, William M. being the fifth born and one of the six who are still living.

William M. Cockrill was educated in private schools and at Bethel College, Russellville. After leaving college he accepted a position in the County Clerk's office at Glasgow, and while there spent his leisure time in the study of law. In April, 1876, he was admitted to the bar. He then entered upon the practice of his profession, and later served as County Attorney and also as Master in Chancery of the Circuit Court of Barren county, continuing in the latter position until 1888. At that time, becoming convinced of the great future of Montana and the bright prospects of the then new city of Great Falls, he came out West and located here. Soon after his arrival he was appointed by Judge Thomas C. Bach as Clerk of the Fourth Judicial Circuit, which position he held under the Territorial government until Montana was admitted into the Union, and he was then elected Clerk of the Eighth Judicial District, which embraces Cascade county. He was re-elected to this office in 1892, and is still serving efficiently in it.

Upon coming to Great Falls he made investments in both city and county real estate, and he built one of the finest residences in the city. He is a stanch Democrat and has rendered his party much valuable aid in its campaigns. Fraternally, he is a member of the Order of Elks and of the I. O. O. F.

William Berkin, one of the first settlers of Boulder valley, was born in Leicestershire, England, in 1830. He received his education in his native land, where he also learned the machinist's trade. In 1856 he married Miss Jane Hall, a native also of that country, and three children were born to them in England. One child died, and the living are Frances May and John. In 1860 Mr. Berkin came to America, landing at New York, and afterward followed his trade in that city, Canada and St. Louis, at the same time looking for a location in which to settle. While at St. Louis he held the position of superintendent for the firm of John J. Roe & Company, known as the American Fur Company. In 1862 Mr. Berkin came up the Missouri river to Montana, landing at Fort Benton. He brought the first pack train of miners' supplies from Fort Benton to Virginia City, having sixty mules in his train. His supplies were in good demand, and brought very remunerative prices, shoes for $5 a pair, flour for $50 a sack and all things were equally high. Mr. Berkin was also the first to engage in freighting with wagons. He became superintendent of the Diamond Freight company, freighting from Fort Benton to other points in the Territory, and while in that business employed the Hon. C. A. Broadwater as assistant. Our subject also has the honor of having located one of the first ranches in the Territory, which is in the Boulder valley, near the present site of Boulder, and is now owned by a Mr. Belcher. Mr. Berkin wintered his many ox teams on that place, and continued his freighting operations. To that new home, in the then unsettled Territory of Montana, he brought his wife and children from England, they arriving June 17, 1865. The Indians were then plentiful in the country, and Chief Joseph and about 1,300 of his tribe often camped near them. Mr. Berkin assisted in building the Spring Bar and Boulder ditch to bring water to the placer mines near Boulder. The ditch was five miles in length, and carried 500 inches of water. He put about $22,000 in the enterprise, but, as it proved unsuccessful, afterward sold his interest for $2,800. In 1872 he discovered the Rumley quartz mine, in which he sold his right for $3,500, and it afterward yielded a large amount of silver ore and proved to be one of the best mines in that region of the country. In 1881 Mr. Berkin sold his property in Boulder, purchased a farm near Cottonwood, Meagher county, took an active part in the welfare of that country, and for several years held the important office of County Commissioner. In 1892 he sold his Cottonwood property and removed to Livingston, where he is now living a retired life.

Five children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Berkin in Montana, as follows: William A., Thomas, Sarah (now Mrs. William McCullam, and resides in Livingston), Eliza and Hattie. In political matters, our subject is a stanch Democrat, and socially, is a member of the Masonic fraternity. He was one of the founders of Montana, took part in all the exciting times of the early settlement of the country, and, with other good pioneers of the State, was always arrayed on the side of law and order and the best interests of the Territory.

Gospel mountain, has a large group of mines which in many particulars resembles the mines on Granite mountain. The mines are in veins in granite, and the ores are brittle silver, ruby silver and native silver, as are those of Granite mountain. The Champion, American Ruby, New State, Silver Crown and Mountain Lion are the most noted mines in this new camp. These have steam hoists and pumps, and are developed by shafts down 200, 300 and 400 feet, with crosscuts and levels enough to prove them valuable mines. The ores shipped and worked have made good returns.

A twenty-stamp mill to work the ores of the Champion was erected at Deer Lodge. The Phoenix, Oro Fino, Keystone and Silver Coin have steam hoists and good working plants. One hundred and forty claims have been located on Gospel mountain. The Zorsel District is six miles east of Deer Lodge. It has many prom-

ROBERT H. CHILDS, one of the early Montana pioneers, was born in Virginia, June 22, 1836. His ancestors were among the early settlers of the South and his father, Richard Childs, was born in North Carolina, in 1808. At the age of eight years he went with his parents to Virginia. He was there married, in 1831, to Miss Margaret Snell, a native of that State and a descendant of one of the old Virginia families. They removed to Missouri in 1846, and in 1849 crossed the plains to California. Mr. Childs began mining in Coloma, and at the end of the year returned to his family with $3,000 in gold. In 1871 he went to Missoula, Montana, where he died in 1876. His widow still survives, aged sixty-four years.

Robert H. Childs, their third son in order of birth, remained in Virginia until nineteen years of age. In 1855 he crossed the plains to California, starting from the Missouri river May 10, of that year, and arrived at Downieville on August 10, the journey having been a safe and successful one. He mined in Shasta and Siskiyou counties, with three others, taking out $400 in one pan of dirt and $300 in another, both on Scott's bar. Mr. Childs followed mining four years in Nevada, and while there, with others, took out $1,500,000, which, however, was used in paying expenses and lawing. He next went to Owyhee, Idaho, where he served as superintendent of a New York mining company one year, after which he became snowblind. In 1865 he began mining near Blackfoot, in Deer Lodge county, Montana, where he had heavy drains for drospecting gulches, one of them costing $50,000, and the others, which run to Lincoln Gulch, $30,000. The company was composed of fourteen men. After losing money in that enterprise, Mr. Childs purchased 400 acres of land near Florence, in the Bitter Root valley, and in 1890 settled down to the life of a farmer. He converted that place into one of the most valuable farms in the county, and resided there twenty years, when he sold it for $6,560. Since that time he has resided in Missoula, and is now engaged in running the Reality House, one of the largest and best furnished boarding and rooming houses in the city.

Mr. Childs was married August 1, 1881, to Mrs. Mary E Kent, a daughter of Daniel Boyce, a native of Milwaukee, Wisconsin. Two of her brothers were Union soldiers, and one lost his life in the battle of Fort Donelson. The other, H. H. Boyce, served through the entire struggle, and for meritorious conduct was promoted to the rank of Colonel. For a number of years he has been proprietor of the Los Angeles Times. Mrs. Childs' former husband was O. C. Kent, who left one son at his death, D. D. Kent, now of Missoula. Mr. and Mrs. Childs have two children,—Harvey and Nora,—both born in Bitter Root valley. Mr. Childs still continues his interest in mining, owning the O. K. and Eureka lead mines at Cedar Creek, and has a fine gold prospect in the same locality. He has been a lifelong Democrat, and both he and his wife are members of the Presbyterian Church.

GEORGE JACQUES, a Montana pioneer of 1863 and a prominent farmer of Deer Lodge valley, is a native of France, born March 4, 1843. Further mention of the Jacques family will be found in this book in the biography of his older brother, Anthony Jacques, who came with him to Montana and who resides on a farm adjoining his.

George Jacques was next to the youngest in his father's family, and was three years old at the time they emigrated to America. After stopping for a time in St. Louis, Missouri, they moved to a farm in Pike county, that State, where he was reared and educated. When he was nineteen he and his brother Anthony made the long journey to Montana, traveling in company with two families and being from April until August on the road, finally landing in safety at Bannack. They mined at Alder Gulch and Silver Bow, working hard in the placer mines, but not meeting with the success they had anticipated. Next we find them at French bar, engaged in hydraulic mining. At that place they remained four years, and during that time they took out $20,000. Expenses were high, however, and they saved only about $8,000 each. The subject of our sketch then returned to the States for a visit, and upon coming back to Montana he took claim to 160 acres of land in Deer Lodge valley. This first claim was Government land. He afterward added to it by purchasing railroad lands until now he has a splendid ranch of 630 acres. In 1892 he built a good frame residence on this property, and here he now resides in peace and contentment with his family, surrounded with all the comforts of life. He annually cuts about 100 tons of hay and raises 3,000 bushels of grain, and he is also largely inising mines, which will go up with silver. On Bison mountain, sixteen miles south of Elliston, is a copper group of which the Monarch claims to be the principal mine. The country will hear of this camp in more emphatic terms than can now be used. The Walker creek group includes the Lucky Baldwin, Lady Fischer, Mint and Mystery, which are reported as looking well.

On Nigger Hill, eight miles southeast of Elliston, we find the Veracious, Ontario, Lily, Comstock, Big Dick and Bunker Hill worked by an arastra. These claims and mines are held in high estimation. On Little Blackfoot are located Wall Street, Fairview, Big Dick and numerous other claims, many of them proved to be very valuable. Some have paid from the grass-roots down.

The Bald Butte mill is running and making its owners rich. The Brooke mill is in this neighborhood. The Penobscot mines and ten-stamp mill will doubtless come to the front before long as continued producers. On the terested in raising sheep and cattle, his brother being in partnership with him in the stock. They keep as many as 10,000 head of sheep. Mr. Jacques has imported from France a Norman-Percheron horse, which cost him $2,000, and he has thus been instrumental in improving the breed of horses in his section of the valley.

In 1883 Mr. Jacques returned to Missouri and married Miss Celestia Arthur, a native of that State and a daughter of William Arthur. They have two children, Annie May and George Oliver.

Mr. Jacques has been a Democrat the most of his life; but, not liking the position of his party on the silver question, he is now an independent. He is of a genial and hospitable nature and delights to see his friends, all of whom are sure of a cordial welcome and the best his home affords whenever they visit him.

Such is a brief sketch of one of the representative men of Deer Lodge valley.

J. Harry Beals, one of the representative citizens of Montana, was born in Maine, in 1854, a son of Isaac Beals, a prominent farmer by occupation. Our subject read much of the great possibilities awaiting young men in the West, and accordingly, at the age of nineteen years, arrived in Grand Rapids, Wisconsin, where he applied himself to the blacksmith's trade. He came to Fort Custer, Montana, in 1880, where he spent eighteen months, and from that time until 1886 was engaged in hunting and trapping in the Black Hills, Wyoming. He became one of the skilled shots of that region, and was appropriately called the mighty hunter of Wyoming. Mr. Beals has had many thrilling experiences with wild animals, and his first hunting on the plains was for buffalo of which he frequently killed twelve a day. He worked at his trade in Billings from 1886 to 1890, when he again engaged in hunting in Wyoming. At one time he encountered two old bears with three young ones, and, after exhausting his ammunition, secured four as trophies, one young one having escaped. Mr. Beals returned to Billings in 1892, and since that time has applied himself industriously to his trade.

He was married in September, 1888, to Miss Gertrude Schmidt, a daughter of John Schmidt, a mining broker of Helena. They have two sons, Clyde and William. Mr. Beals is a stanch Republican, is well informed on the passing public issues, and is genial and courteous to all The family reside in a comfortable home in Billings.

Peter Ovren, a contractor and painter at Billings, was born in Norway, in 1855, a son of Ole and Martha Ovren. The father was a prominent farmer and mill-owner in that country. Peter received a liberal education in his native land, but when sixteen years of age decided to seek larger fields for work, and accordingly, in 1871, came to America. He worked at his trade principally in Iowa until March, 1882, when he came to Billings, but at that time the place contained only one house. He has taken an active part in the welfare of the city, has decorated all the principal buildings, and has a good and comfortable home. Mr. Ovren is a well-informed gentleman, but unassuming, and is an interesting conversationalist.

In 1875 he was united in marriage with Miss Mary Thompson, a native of Cheyenne, Wyoming, and they have three sons,—Oscar C., Theodore M. and Arthur. Mr. Ovren is Permanent Secretary of the I. O. O. F., and is Overseer of the A. O. U. W. In his political relations he is independent. Both he and his wife are members of the Lutheran Church. Mr. Ovren is well and favorably known, and has the confidence and respect of all who know him.

David Davis Walker, of Anaconda, Montana, has been prominently identified with the interests of this town during the whole period of its existence, and of his life we make biographical mention as follows:

The Walkers are of Scotch-Irish origin. The grandfather of our subject came to this country from Scotland, and the grandmother from Ireland. Their respective families settled in Virginia during Colonial times, and when Kentucky was opened up by Daniel Boone, grandfather Walker moved with his family to that frontier settlement. In Kentucky David Walker, the father of our subject, was born, reared and married. About the time of his marriage Illinois was being settled, and, true to the pioneer characteristics of his ancestors, he moved westward and located in Sangamon county, that State, in 1827, where he was engaged in agricultural pursuits until 1835. Again seized with the spirit of emigration, he packed up North Fork of Big Blackfoot is located a group of copper claims but little worked. They look well. On Big Blackfoot there are some mines of gold and silver which have been worked to some considerable extent, and the ores shipped with profit.

On the divide between Ophir and Carpenter are the Mountain Queen and other claims; between the Mexican and Nugget gulches is the Armilda; and at the head of the Ophir are the Roaring Mountain and several other mines. The Poorman District has several good mines and many bright prospects. Among them are the Rochester, North Star, Snowflake, and the mines of the Silver Bell Mining Company. Some of these mines are well developed, and show large quantities of milling gold ores. Over 3,000 acres are still held as placers in Carpenter, Ophir and Snowshoe gulches. In Washington Gulch are a good number of quartz claims and mines, and the Michigan mill was erected to work them. The Jefferson, Amerihis effects and removed with his family to a place near West Point, in Lee county, Iowa. That, however, was before there was any sign of the town. There he spent his life on a farm, and there he died at the age of seventy-four years. His wife passed away in 1845. They had twelve children, seven sons and five daughters, eight of whom reached maturity.

David Davis Walker, a member of the above family, was born in Lee county, Iowa, in 1843, and amid pioneer scenes was reared to manhood and received only a limited education. Then the prevailing characteristic of his ancestors, namely, the desire to emigrate, caused him to seek a home in the new West. Accordingly he arranged for a journey to the mining regions of Montana. At that time there were no railroads west of Des Moines, Iowa, and an overland trip meant something very different from what it does at the present day. He and a party of others were five months in crossing the plains with teams. His first location in Montana was at what was called Cottonwood, now known as the pleasant little city of Deer Lodge. There he engaged in stock-raising and did a successful business until, on account of his father's declining health, he returned to Iowa to remain with and care for him, and he remained in Iowa until after his father's death.

While in Iowa he was married to Mary E. Hall, a native of Tazewell county, Illinois, and a daughter of Ira B. and Mary E. (Thurston) Hall, descendants of English ancestors who were among the early settlers of New England. Her parents are now residents of Illinois. Mr. and Mrs. Walker have an only child, Ira B. Walker, born in 1873.

After his marriage, Mr. Walker, accompanied by his wife, again came West, and for some time was successfully engaged in the stock business. The town of Anaconda was laid out in June, 1883, and business was begun there in tents. Mr. Walker was one of the first men to purchase a town lot, and in the fall of that year he, in connection with N. J. Bielenberg and J. K. P. Mallory, opened a butcher shop and meat market, their location being at what is now No. 19 Main street. They slaughtered as many as 1,800 cattle per year, besides a large number of hogs and sheep. Mr. Walker continued in the business with marked success for nine years, when he sold his interest to Mr. Mallory. Mr. Bielenberg also retired from the firm, leaving Mr. Mallory sole proprietor.

Politically, Mr. Walker is a Democrat, and while he has never sought office, office has sought and found him. He was elected a member of the Board of County Commissioners of Deer Lodge county in 1886, of which he was chairman, this being the last Board of Commissioners under Territorial government. His executive ability in that position brought him to the front in the new town of Anaconda, and in the spring of 1890 he was elected its Mayor. He served one term as Mayor with credit to himself and to the entire satisfaction of his fellow-citizens. He and his wife are active members of the Presbyterian Church, of which he has been a Trustee for several years.

Wingfield L. Brown, Prosecuting Attorney of Granite county, Montana, and a resident of Phillipsburg, is the junior member of the prominent law firm of Durfee & Brown.

Mr. Brown is a native of Virginia and a descendant of prominent and influential families of the Old Dominion who had their origin in Scotland and England. The Browns emigrated to America during Cromwell's time and settled at Jamestown, Virginia, where they took a leading part in public affairs and became prominently identified with its history. Colonel John Brown, great-grandfather of our subject, was Clerk of the General Assembly of Virginia, and his son James was the second Auditor of the State of Virginia and served in that capacity for thirty years. Ludwell Harrison Brown, the son of James and father of Wingfield L., was born in Richmond, Virginia, in 1818. He married Margaret Washington McClellan, daughter of Thomas Stanhope McClellan, and Margaret (Cavel) McClellan, his wife, the former a native of Montezuma, Virginia, and the latter of Union Hill, that State. General Winfield Scott, General McClellan and General Harrison were all connected with some branch of their family. General Scott's name was at first Wingfield, popular usage changing it to Winfield. Mr. Brown's father followed the profession of civil engineer. He died in 1859, at the age of forty-one years, and his wife was fifty-seven at the time of her death. Both were members can, Chimney, Buffalo, California, Deer Creek and McClellan gulches are rich in quartz claims and mines. On the mountains back of the Nevada creek placers are numerous and small veins of quartz rich in free gold.

California Gulch has the Jim Crow, Etta and other claims. Lincoln Gulch has numerous quartz claims and mines, and the Leiser mill. Deer Creek has the North Star and other good quartz lodes. Jefferson Gulch has many quartz mines, and McCloud's mill to work them.

On the Big Blackfoot are the Trappa and a number of other excellent mines. On the mountains east of the Nevada creek placer mines, some thirty claims have been located on the small rich veins of free gold in those mountains. Some of them have been worked for many years. These mountain veins furnish the rich deposits now worked in the Nevada creek mines. Bear Gulch has a good show of rich quartz claims, and mines well proved up. It has the Homestake, Climantha, Sierra, Forest, of the Episcopal Church. They had a family of four sons and four daughters, Wingfield L. being the youngest.

Wingfield L. Brown was educated in his native State and pursued his law course at the university in Charlottesville, where he graduated in 1886. From the time of his graduation until 1890 he practiced his profession in Virginia, and in 1890 he came West and located at Phillipsburg, where he has since resided. When the county of Granite was formed he was appointed by the Legislature as Attorney for the new county. In April, 1893, he and Judge Durfee became associated together in their law practice, under the firm name of Durfee & Brown, and they have since done a successful business.

Mr. Brown sprang from a family of illustrious Democrats and was himself a Democrat until recently. Being displeased with some measures advocated by that party, he left its ranks and since 1892 has been a Populist. He is an active campaign worker and is frequently in demand as a stump speaker. When his term of County Attorney expired he was elected to succeed himself and is now serving his second term.

Mr. Brown is a man of family. He was married in February, 1888, to Miss Sally P. Lewis, a native of Virginia, and they have two sons: Wingfield L., Jr., and Robert Lewis, both born at Phillipsburg.

Rufus B. Thompson, one of the most successful stock men of Montana, was born near Burlington, Vermont, in 1857, a son of Samuel and Marion (Buell) Thompson, of Scotch ancestry. The father was a prominent farmer in Vermont. The grandfather, Josiah Thompson, was a soldier in the war of 1812, and had Rufus been of sufficient age would have been numbered among those who fought for the Union in 1861–5. He was reared to farm life, and attended the high school of Burlington, where he prepared himself for a course in the University Business College. But the Western fever changed his bent of mind, and in the spring of 1880 he arrived in St. Paul, intending to secure a position as bookkeeper. As no vacancy could be found in that line, Mr. Thompson answered an advertisement for help wanted on a dairy ranch. As he approached the place many were ahead of him, but he was accepted, his employer being Colonel C. A. Broadwater, later a millionaire of Montana. He asked our subject if it was true that sheep had to be rough shod in Vermont to enable them to stand on stones and pick grass between crevices in the rocks. This came near causing young Thompson to leave in disgust, but the Colonel soon informed him it was only a joke. Rufus was placed in charge of a large dairy at Fort Assiniboine, Montana, where he remained three years, and during that time made a record for competency and trustworthiness which afterward enabled him to engage in business that has proven both famous and profitable. In 1883 Mr. Thompson was induced to engage in the sheep industry, and he located 1,300 acres of land on Willow creek, in what is now Fergus county, fifty miles from Lewiston and sixty miles from Billings, which he stocked with 1,500 sheep. He purchased the best grade for breeding purposes, and his sheep now yield each season an average of ten pounds of excellent wool each. He now owns 10,000 sheep, and also harvested 200 tons of hay on his ranch this season.

Mr. Thompson is a thirty-second degree Mason, also a member of Algeria Temple at Helena, has been connected with the order of Good Templars, and is a member of the Patriotic Sons of America. In religion he is a member of the Methodist Church, and politically is a Republican. Mr. Thompson is a social favorite wherever he is known, and is one of the most popular stock-raisers in the State.

Hon. Abraham S. Blake, one of the earliest living Montana pioneers, and a prominent farmer and stock-raiser near the village of Victor, of which he was one of the founders, was born in Vermont, November 29, 1837, of Puritan ancestry. They located in New England in the early history of the colonies, and Levi Blake, the grandfather of our subject, was a Captain in the Continental army during the Revolutionary struggle. His son, Abijah Blake, was born in New Hampshire in 1801. He married Miss Maria Belding, who was born in that State in 1803, and soon afterward they moved to Vermont, where Mr. Blake was employed as agent for the Howe Scale Company for twenty years. In his youth he had learned the trade of tanner from his father. His death occurred in Vermont at the age of eighty-six years, and his wife departed this life in 1840, at the age of thirty-and an arastra and a stamp mill. On Williams Gulch, a tributary of Bear, is found a group of excellent mines. Among them are the McDermott, Minnie Palmer and a number of others. On Elk creek are the Aparandy and a ten-stamp gold mill.

Many of the mines and mills in Deer Lodge county are now (1894) idle.

FERGUS COUNTY.

Almost every mining camp in Montana has its leading mine, which attracts the attention of the outside world. Marysville has its Drum Lummon, Castle its Cumberland, Pardee its Iron Mountain, Granite its Granite Mountain, and Maiden has its Spotted Horse. In years past the Maginnis was the leading mine of Maiden; but the Spotted Horse, after its ups and downs, incident to the effects of rich and poor streaks found in all mines, had been for many months supplying a twenty-stamp mill with ores rich enough to enable them to turn out such results in bullion as to give this mine a place in the first rank of the world's bonanzas. But the Spotted Horse must look well to its laurels; for there are other mines at Maiden which will tread close upon its heels when capital works them, seven pears. She left a family of seven children, five of whom are still living.

Abraham S., the sixth child in order of birth, attended the public schools of his native State. In 1855, at the age of seventeen years, he went by the Nicaragua route to California, making the journey from New York to San Francisco in twenty-four days. He spent the first six months in his brother's store, in the latter city, and was next engaged in mining at Forbestown, Butte county, and near New York Flat, in Yuba county, where he met with good success, often making as high as $100 a day. In 1861 Mr. Blake and his brother, the latter having returned from the Fraser river, went to the Oro Fino mines, afterward came on a prospecting tour up the Columbia river to Lewistown, Montana, and from there went to the Bitter Root valley, and continued prospecting in this State from 1861 to 1867. Mr. Blake is credited with having found the first gold in paying quantities in the Territory of Montana. While mining at Deer Lodge he took out $65 in one day. In 1867 he located 320 acres of his present farm in Missoula county, to which he has since added until he now owns 400 acres. He first engaged in raising hogs and cattle, having found a ready sale for all his products to the miners, and for his first bacon received fifty-five cents a pound. Mr. Blake is one of the discoverers of the Curlow mine, is still one of its owners, and they have taken out $500,000. The corporation is known as the Helena & Victor Mining Company, the principal owners being S. T. Hauser, A. M. Holter, Mr. Hackett and Mr. Blake. The last named has property adjoining the mine, which, when developed, may prove equally valuable.

Mr. Blake was married, in 1872, to a native daughter of Montana, and they have five children,—Julia, John A., Annie L., Eddie and Bertha. Mr. Blake was made a Master Mason in 1858, and has been a Republican since the formation of that party. In 1889 he was elected member of the first State Legislature of Montana, and has always taken a deep interest in the welfare of the State, of which he has the honor of being one of the founders.

W. P. BEACHLY, County Auditor of Cascade county, Montana, and a resident of Great Falls, is a native of Somerset county, Pennsylvania, born March 18, 1849.

Mr. Beachly is descended from the Germans on his father's side, while his mother's people were English. The Beachlys settled in Pennsylvania about the year 1694. They acquired lands in Somerset county, and in that county several generations of the family were born and died, their lives being passed as industrious and honest farmers. Our subject's grandfather, Jacob K. Beachly, was born in 1795, and his father, Peter Beachly, was born March 3, 1824. The latter was married in 1848 to Miss Phebe Cover, daughter of J. P. Cover, her birth having occurred in the same county in 1828. Her mother was a Putnam, a descendant of the famous General Putnam. After their marriage, Peter Beachly and his wife settled down at the old Beachly homestead, where they still reside, he being now seventy and she sixty-six years of age. They are strict adherents to the Baptist faith. They had eight children, William Peter being the oldest of the family and one of the five survivors.

W. P. Beachly was reared on his father's farm, receiving his early education in the public schools. When he was eighteen he began teaching in the winter and attending normal school in the summer, and was thus occupied until the spring of 1870. He then removed to Iowa. There he improved a farm and spent two winters in teaching school. Returning East, he next turned his attention to the lumber business, being a partner with others, and in 1873, owing to the failure of other parties, he met with business reverses. Then he began farming again, later was employed as clerk in a store for two years, and about 1880 removed to Johnstown, where for some time he was connected with the steel works of that place, first as a common laborer and later as foreman in charge of a crew of men. In the spring of 1882 we find him in Pueblo, Colorado, where he was also employed as foreman in steel works.

and when the whistle of the "iron horse" shall wake them from their long sleep.

But in some respects Maiden is one of the most remarkable mining camps in the world. Maiden is in the midst of, and claims for its mineral kingdom all the peaks and ridges and foothills of the Judith mountains; for nearly all of them are literally covered with vast quantities of good float and must be intersected with numerous veins of rich ores. Hundreds and hundreds of mining claims have already been opened in these mountains, and new discoveries are the order of the day. Many of these discoveries have been so developed as to show they contain vast quantities of good ores.

The Judith mountains must have been, are now and must continue to be, the paradise of prospectors. In many places I saw large bodies of iron ores so charged with gold as to make them most desirable fluxing ores. And above all, the valleys and gulches and mountain slopes were strewn with fragments, great and small, rich in gold and silver. So abundant is the float from the veins of these mountains that it

In July, 1884, Mr. Beachly came to Great Falls and joined his brother Silas in opening a stationery store.-Paris Gibson was at that time postmaster,—the first postmaster of the town,—and he employed Mr. Beachly as his depusy. He and his brother continued in partnership for three years, at the end of which time the latter retired. Our subject conducted the business alone for two years longer, and then took in as a partner Mr. C. F. Fullerton, to whom in 1890 he sold out his interest. In 1890 Mr. Beachly accepted the position of Under Sheriff of the county. He served in that office two years and then for a short time was Deputy Assessor. In 1892 he was elected County Auditor, and is now serving most acceptably in this important position.

Mr. Beachly has been twice married. His first wife, whom he wedded in 1874, and whose maiden name was Kate Gumbert, was a native of his own county. Her untimely death occurred after two years and a half of happy married life, and she left a little son, Orren. In 1880 he married Miss Kate C. Salter, also a native of Somerset county, Pennsylvania.

In fraternal circles Mr. Beachly is prominent and active, being a member of the I. O. O. F. and having taken all the degrees in Masonry. He is one of the organizers of the blue lodge at Great Falls, was elected its first Treasurer, and was for five years its efficient Secretary. He has also held a number of offices in the Chapter and Commandery and is now Prelate of the latter. Both he and his wife are members of the Eastern Star. Politically, he is a Republican. Besides the offices already named that he has held, we mention that of City Councilman, he having served as a member of the first Council of Great Falls.

SAMUEL J. REYNOLDS, Sheriff of Silver Bow county, is a native of England, born on the 1st of January, 1850, of old English ancestry. His parents, William and Mary (Tippett) Reynolds, remained in that country until the mother's death, and in 1856 the father emigrated to America, bringing two of the children, and settling at the Bruce mines in Canada. In 1859 he crossed the plains to California, where he remained several years, during which time the great Cariboo gold excitement occurred. He secured a considerable amount of the shining metal, and finally died at San Francisco, May 22, 1880, in consequence of a surgical operation. His son, Samuel J., then in Nevada, hastened to San Francisco and performed the sad duty of burying his father. He was the second-born of the children, and he and one other are all that now survive.

Mr. Reynolds of this sketch began to work in the mines when only nine years of age, carrying tools for the men and doing such things as he could. For his first month's work he was paid fifteen shillings. He continued in the mines until he was sixteen years of age, picking up his education as well as he could at night schools. In 1866 he went to Pennsylvania, where he was employed in the mines for four months, then went to the Lake Superior country, in Michigan, and next to Virginia City, Nevada, where he worked eleven years, a part of the time engaged in putting in the larger pumps which are now in those mines. In March, 1881, he came to Butte and began work in the Lexington shift, after becoming a lessor of mines, and among the rest he worked the Burlington, out of which he made considerable money.

When John Lloyd was elected Sheriff, he made Mr. Reynolds Under-Sheriff, and he served in that capacity three years, when he received the appointment of Warden of the Penitentiary, in which position he served a year, and then returned to mining. In the fall of 1892 he was elected Sheriff of Silver Bow county, and in this office he is now serving.

Mr. Reynolds takes pride in the fact that he has always been an ardent and active Republican, and that he cast his first Presidental vote for James A. Garfield. At the time of his election as Sheriff he had two opponents, a Democrat and a Populist, and he received 107 votes more than the former and 114 more than the latter. During the twelve years he was in Nevada he was connected with the Washington Guards, holding the commission of First Lieutenant during nearly all that time, his term in that office being a longer one than that of any other officer of his rank. When he came to Montana he bewill be gathered up with great profit at no distant day. So numerous and varied were the float ores as to bewilder the prospector in tracing them up to the leads from which they came. But hundreds of those leads have been discovered and opened and represented from year to year to hold them till such time as a railroad will give cheap transportation and make their ores valuable. This mining region is very large, covering the entire group known as the Judith mountains for miles in every direction from Maiden to the Occident, six miles west, to Deer Creek north, to Cone Butte and east to Fort Maginnis. In all this vast area, in every valley, on every mountain side, from base to summit, and every foothill, we find shaft and tunnel in upon veins of ore which everywhere intersect these mountains.

There are three classes of veins in these mountains: contact veins between the limestone and porphyry, or igneous rocks; crevice veins, cutting the highest ridges and the lowest valleys; and blanket veins, lying between the rock strata and on the surface of the strata. So far the con-came the organizer of the first military company in the State, namely: Company A, Union Guards, was elected its Captain, and later the first Colonel of the regiment, receiving two votes more than Hon. W. A. Clark. He also has the highest record in the State as a sharpshooter. In a match at off-hand shooting 200 yards he made ninety-two points out of a possible 100. He has participated in a great many shooting matches, and was never beaten but once, and then through neglecting to train for the match.

Mr. Reynolds has connected himself with numerous fraternal societies, some of which are the Miners' Union, the Sons of St. George, the Knights of Pythias, Freemasons (among whom he has taken all the degrees of the York rite and eighteen degrees of the Scottish), the Odd Fellows for the last twenty-three years, the United Workmen, etc. In addition to his insurance in the last-mentioned, he has $10,000 in the Sioux City Insurance Company, of Iowa. In his business relations he has been remarkably successful: is now the possessor of various houses and lots at Deer Lodge and also in Butte City.

April 27, 1880, he married Miss Mary Hannah Gary, a native of Australia, who was brought up in Montana from her fourth year. Their children are Lillie R. and Archie B. They have a nice residence in Butte City.

Mr. Reynolds is a pleasant, capable gentleman, enjoying a wide acquaintance in Montana and a circle of many friends.

JOHN H. GREEN, a prominent stockman of northern Montana, is a pioneer of this Territory in 1864.

He was born at Norwalk, Huron county, Ohio, January 18, 1836. His parents, Philip and Clarissa (Wood) Green, were natives of the State of New York. His father, born in 1850, served his country as a soldier, was with Kit Carson in New Mexico, and died in 1880, in the fifty-seventh year of his age. His wife died in 1893, at the same age as her husband at his death. They had eight children, of whom only two now survive.

John H., their third child, spent his young life in Ohio and Michigan, attending school in Detroit. In 1859 he went to Colorado, where he sold goods until 1864, at which time he came to Virginia City, Montana, and engaged in the live-stock business. In 1867 he went to Silver City and opened a miners' supply store, and for seven year supplied the miners at that prosperous camp with their merchandise. Next he removed to Helena, three years afterward to Rock Creek, near Prickly Pear cañon, and in the latter place he followed the business of raising cattle for three years. In August, 1880, he came to Fort Benton, purchased ground and built his present residence and became more extensively engaged in the stock business than ever, pasturing his stock on the Shankland tract, where he has a large, free range and he has had as many as 40,000 head of cattle at one time. As he has been prospered in his business he has invested in real estate in Fort Benton. He has erected several houses and business blocks in the city. He was one of the organizers of the Stockmen's National Bank, at Fort Benton, and is one of its directors. Mr. Green is thus a gentleman of upright, honorable character, has made a success of life in Montana, and has acquired the reputation of being one of Fort Benton's most wealthy and valuable citizens. In politics he is independent.

He was married June 28, 1863, to Miss Isabella Morrow, who was born in Canada, October 10, 1847, a daughter of Markham Morrow, a Montana pioneer of 1863. Mr. and Mrs. Green have had six children. Two have died,—little Genette in her fifth year, and Eben Ward at the age of three years. The surviving children are Charles, Walter M., William J. and Frances E.

E. H. GAGNON, an architect, contractor and builder of Billings, was born in Maurice county, Canada, in 1854, a son of Mitchel and Marguerite (Revard) Gagnon, of French descent.

Our subject resided in Canada until seventeen years of age, and received a liberal education in the graded schools. After completing his education he learned the cabinet maker's trade, afterward followed carpentering and is also an expert architect. He has drawn plans for many of the best buildings in and around Billings. Mr. Gagnon began contracting at the age of twenty-three years, after which he spent six years at the Black Hills, one year of that time having been devoted to placer min-tact veins have been most developed and have shown vast quantities of ores in deposits somewhat irregular, as might be expected. The crevice veins have not appeared so large and have not been so much worked. Of the blanket veins but little is as yet known: those seen have not been much developed.

The ores of this mining region are very variable in both the characters and quantities of the metals they carry. We find regular quartz carrying gold and silver, good milling ores. We also find soft material like mud, rich in gold, sometimes silver. Galena and carbonate of lead, copper pyrites and carbonates of copper, carrying silver and gold, are abundant. There are also various ores of iron and manganese rich in the precious metals. These lead, iron and manganese ores will be valuable as fluxing ores for those more refractory. All the mines and bright prospects in and around Maiden in the Judith mountains would make a very long list as they appear in my notes; but we can give only some of the districts, with a general idea of the value of their mines.

ing. He is in the strictest sense one of the fathers of Billings, as he began with its birth in 1882, and has been a prime factor in its improvement ever since. The most important feature of a town is its buildings, and Mr. Gagnon has performed his part well in constructing residences and business houses for the citizens of Billings. He owns a fine brick residence and valuable real estate in the city, manufactures large quantities of brick, and owns a ranch of 229 acres of land on the Yellowstone river, three and a half miles from Billings. In political matters, Mr. Gagnon has cast his vote with the Democratic party during former years, but is now undecided as to what party will best represent his principles. He is a favorite with all who know him, temperate in his habits, and liberal in his views.

DR. I. M. ROCKEFELLER, of Anaconda, is one of the reputable members of the medical profession of Montana.

He is a native of the State of Pennsylvania, born November 6, 1842. His people were early residents of New Jersey, his grandfather, William Rockefeller, having been born there. William Rockefeller had five children, four sons and a daughter, and he lived to be seventy-six years of age. One of these sons, Godfrey Rockefeller, the Doctor's father, was born in Pennsylvania in 1821. He and his wife, nee Mary Ann Neice, had two sons and two daughters. He continued to reside in Pennsylvania all his life, and died in the seventy-third year of his age. His widow is still living, now at the age of sixty-eight years.

Irvin M. is the oldest of their children. He was educated in the public schools of Elysburg, Pennsylvania, resided on his father's farm until he attained manhood, and was reading medicine in the office of Dr. Joseph Robbins when the Civil war began; and in 1862, when it became evident that the war was to be a great one and the country needed her loyal sons to defend her, he enlisted in Company C, One Hundred and Thirty-first Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry. He served in the Army of the Potomac and fought at Antietam, Fredericksburg and Chancellorsville, after which, his term of enlistment having expired, he received an honorable discharge and resumed the study of medicine, graduating in the Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, in the spring of 1865. He then served as assistant surgeon in the regular army one year. At the end of that time he settled down to the practice of his profession at New Columbia, Pennsylvania, where he did a successful practice until 1888, when he decided to make his home in the mountains of Montana, and came to Anaconda. Here he has since been a successful practitioner. Upon coming to Anaconda, he formed the partnership with Dr. Leisler, his brother-in-law, which has since continued with marked success.

Dr. Rockefeller was married, in 1871, to Miss Harriet Leiser, a native of Pennsylvania and a daughter of Mr. Jacob Leiser, of that State. She is the sister of Dr. Leiser, of Helena, and also of Dr. Leiser, of Anaconda. Dr. and Mrs. Rockefeller have one child, Howard, a graduate of the department of pharmacy, in the Northwestern University, of Chicago.

Dr. Rockefeller is a member of the G. A. R., and in politics is a Republican. He is a skillful physician, and a citizen of the highest integrity of character.

E. S. HOLMES, agent for the Northern Pacific Express Company at Billings, was born in New York, in 1843, a son of Sylvanus and Mary (Stone) Holmes. The maternal ancestry are of German descent, and were among the early settlers of New York. When our subject was quite young his parents moved to Pennsylvania, where his father served as Circuit Judge and United States Marshal for many years. The son was well qualified for public position had he settled his mind in that direction, being of strong, vigorous physique as well as large mental capacity.

He became ambitious to move westward, but, when the disruption of the Union was threatened, his patriotism overcame pleasure, and accordingly, in 1864, he enlisted in the One Hundred and Ninety-ninth Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, Company H. He filled the important as well as hazardous position of Color Sergeant. At the close of the struggle Mr. Holmes was discharged at Richmond, Virginia, and returned to Pennsylvania. Again the Western fever beset him, and in the spring of Maiden has the Spotted Horse and many other good mines. Cave Butte, six miles northeast of Maiden, has a large number of good discoveries in the porphyry, limestones and slates of the district. Near Fort Maginnis are the St. Paul, Crescent, Judith and others. On Red mountain we saw the Northern Pacific, Silver Reef and Tom Paine. On Sheep Mountain is the Big Four. The Occident is six miles southwest of Maiden. On Deer creek are the Iron Duke, Elk Horn and Big Horn. There are a million feet of good pine lumber and a good stream of water on these claims. Silver Wing is on Crystal mountain. Large bodies of iron ore, limonite, were observed in Arnell Gulch and in other localities.

Limestone is found in all parts of this region; so there will be no lack of fluxes and fluxing ores for the furnaces which shall pour out the precious bullion contained in these hundred mines. Placers have been discovered and worked with greater or less success in various 1867 he arrived in St. Paul, Minnesota, where he had opportunities to invest a small sum, which long before this would have yielded millions of dollars by increase in value, but, like many others, he treated the offer with disdain. Mr. Holmes worked for wages in the construction of the St. Paul & Mississippi railroad, afterward engaged in business at Fergus Falls, was employed for a time as express messenger on the Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad, and held the same position on the Northern Pacific Railroad prior to accepting the local agency at Billings, assuming the duties of the latter office in 1884. Mr. Holmes is liked by all who know him, and has had a wide experience in frontier life.

He was married in 1868, to Miss Lizzie Walrath, a native of Illinois, and they have one son, Robbie. Mr. Holmes has filled the chair of Noble Grand in Star Lodge, No. 41, I. O. O. F., and is also a member of the A. O. U. W. He was reared under the influences of the Congregational Church. In political matters, he acts with the Republican party.

WILLIAM W. MOORE, a prominent furniture dealer of Billings, was born in Washington county, Ohio, in 1860, a son of Sampson and Margaret (Wilson) Moore. The father, a farmer by occupation, moved with his family to Iowa when our subject was eighteen months old, where the latter grew to manhood on a farm, and received a good education at Oskaloosa College. After attaining his majority he engaged in farming in Iowa, but afterward embarked in agricultural pursuits and stock-raising in Kansas, raising principally horses, of which he is an excellent judge. In December, 1891, Mr. Moore brought a number of fine driving horses to Billings, and immediately opened a livery stable. In the following year he sold his stock and purchased a herd of sheep, which he also soon afterward sold at a handsome profit. In June, 1893, he embarked in the furniture business in this city, and in this line he enjoys a large and lucrative trade, and has a well filled store.

Mr. Moore was married, in 1880, to Della Cummings, a daughter of William Cummings, formerly a prominent farmer of Indiana. In political matters our subject is a stanch Republican.

HON. FRANK H. WOODY, of Missoula, may justly claim to be one of Montana's pioneers. Coming to what now is Montana, in October, 1856, when the western portion of Montana was a portion of Washington Territory, he has resided in the country ever since, and nearly all of the time in Missoula county, thus giving him a residence in Montana of thirty-eight years. During those thirty-eight years he has, without removing, been an inhabitant of three Territories and one State. The western portion of Montana was, in 1856, Washington Territory, then Idaho, then Montana Territory, and finally the State of Montana.

Mr. Woody was born in Chatham county, North Carolina, on December 10, 1833, and upon his paternal side was of Quaker descent, and upon his maternal side of good old Revolutionary stock. His early life was that of a farmer, with only very limited educational advantages. At the age of eighteen he entered New Garden Boarding School (now Guilford College), a Quaker institution of learning near Greensboro, North Carolina. After remaining at this institution one year, he left and went to the eastern portion of the State and secured a position as a teacher in the public schools of that State, and taught for six months, and then removed to Indiana, and attended another Quaker school during the summer of 1853, and was then engaged in teaching in the public schools of that State until April, 1855, when, catching the Western fever, he removed to Kansas; but, not being satisfied with that country, and still eager to see more of the great West, he joined a merchant train bound for Great Salt Lake, and remained with the train until it arrived at a point west of old Fort Laramie. He afterward traveled with an emigrant train bound for Shoalwater bay, in the Territory of Washington, and remained with it until it reached Independence Rock, a once noted point on the Sweetwater river, near the South Pass. At this point, becoming sick, he was forced to remain several days and eventually fell in with a party of Mormons bound for Salt Lake, and went with them to that place, reaching there on the 15th of August, 1855. Being still feeble and destitute of means, he was compelled to remain in Utah until the fall of 1856, when he joined a party of traders coming to the "Flathead country" (now Missoula and Ravalli gulches of the Judith mountains. Water, an absolute necessity in all mining operations, gushes out in fountains on every mountain side and flows in never-failing streams down every ravine and valley to supply the waters of Judith river, and Dog, Deer, Arnels, Box Elder and McDonald creeks. These fountains and streams were full and flowing in the summer and fall of 1889, the dryest season ever known to the oldest pioneers in Fergus county. The forests of pine, fur and spruce cover all these mountains and will furnish timber in abundance for all mining purposes, and fuel where wood is better than coal.

But nature has laid up in mineral coal, stores of fuel all around Maiden far in excess of that in all the forests of the State, and sufficient for the supply of all the future wants for domestic and mining purposes.

The twenty-stamp mill at the Spotted Horse is the only mill now running at Maiden. The large amounts of bullion worked out by this counties) to trade with the Indians, and about the middle of October arrived on the Hell Gate river, near where the town of Missoula now stands.

From that time to February, 1866, he followed different pursuits, and was engaged in freighting, mining and merchandising, and on the date last named he was, by the Board of County Commissioners of Missoula county, appointed County Clerk and Recorder of Missoula county which office he held until the next election, when he was elected to the same office, and held it continuously, by re-election, until the fall of 1880, when he declined to again become a candidate. During a portion of this time he also filled the office of Probate Judge of said county, that office having been consolidated with that of County Clerk and Recorder. Also, during eight years of this time he filled the office of Deputy Clerk of the Second Judicial District Court for Missoula county. During the time he was acting as Deputy Clerk of the District Court he commenced the study of law, and, having completed his course, was, in January, 1877, by the Supreme Court of Montana, admitted to practice, and immediately entered upon the active practice of his profession, and soon built up an extensive clientage, and took rank as one of the leading lawyers in western Montana. In 1869 he was elected a member of the Legislative Council for the counties of Missoula and Deer Lodge, but, there being a question as to the legality of the session of the Legislature following, he did not attend.

In 1892 he received the nomination of the Democratic party of Missoula county as its candidate for the office of District Judge for the Fourth Judicial District, and was elected by a handsome plurality over his two competitors, and is at this time Judge of said district, which is composed of the counties of Missoula and Ravalli.

In 1871 Mr. Woody was married, at Missoula, to Miss Lizzie Countryman, daughter of Horace and Elizabeth Countryman. Mrs. Woody is a Californian by birth. There are now living, as the issue of this marriage, one son and three daughters, named respectively Frank, Allie M., Flora P. and Thomasine E. Woody.

During his long residence in Montana Mr. Woody has ever been active in all public affairs, and has left his imprint upon much of the history of our young State.

C. B. HART, a farmer of the Bitter Root valley, located one mile south of Hamilton, was born in Tompkins county, New York, September 8, 1843. He is of English and German ancestry, who located in the Colonies prior to the Revolutionary war. His father, John H. Hart, was born on Long Island in 1816, and was married to Miss Abigail Smith, also a native of New York. In 1844 they located in Berrien county, Michigan, where he cleared a farm of 160 acres, but in 1866 he sold that land and removed to Kansas. He also improved a farm in that State, and his death occurred there at the age of seventy-two years. His wife is still living, aged seventy-six years. Their family consisted of two sons and a daughter, two of whom are now living.

C. B. Hart, the oldest child in order of birth, received his education in the Albion College, Michigan. After reaching years of maturity he came to Montana, where he engaged in freighting in the Bitter Root valley, and also followed mining at Virginia City and Blackfoot. Since 1883 he has resided at his present location, and gives his attention to the raising of grain, hay and stock. Mr. Hart also conducts a large dairy.

April 3, 1883, he was united in marriage to Mrs. Mary S. Elliott, widow of L. C. Elliott, a worthy and brave Montana pioneer of 1863, who was killed by the Indians in the Big Hole battle, August 29, 1877. Mr. and Mrs. Elliott had two children,—Lucy and Louise. Our subject and wife have one daughter, Clara Julia, and the three girls are all at home. Mr. and Mrs. Hart are members of the Presbyterian Church, and the former affiliates with the Democratic party.

JOHN L. DULIN, who has been prominently connected with the hotel interests of Billings and with the Northern Pacific Railroad, was born in Illinois, March 5, 1852, a son of George and Clarissa Ann (Slattery) Dulin. The maternal ancestry is of Irish descent. His father was a shoemaker by trade, and his uncle was in the Andersonville prison during the war. He was liberated, but died before reaching home.

John L., our subject, moved with his parents to Iowa in 1855, where he grew to years of maturity. In 1879 he came to Montana, and for a time was engaged in hunting buffaloes, then a profitable business. In 1887 he was em-mill and brought to the Helena market from time to time, have been the cheering events in these dull times. The regular appearance of Provard and his load of yellow bullion have kept up the hopes of our mining men.

Maiden needs a railroad to make it one of the most productive mining camps in the State.

GRANITE COUNTY.

The Granite mine with all its products, good management and care for its workmen, has made Granite a paradise for good miners. This property is founded on a large fissure vein in granite, filled with ores rich in brittle silver, ruby silver and some native silver. The amount of underground workings is very great. The map of them looks like the plat of a city. The Ruby shaft commenced 300 feet below the upper stopes, was down some 1,200 feet at the close of last year and is expected to reach a depth of 2,000 feet in the near future.

There are three first-class mills on the property, two at the mine and one at Rumsey, conployed as track foreman for the Northern Pacific Railroad, continuing in that capacity until 1891, after which he conducted the Cleveland House, until recently. After selling the hotel, Mr. Dulin invested the proceeds in real estate in Billings, is also an interested partner in a valuable coal mine on the railroad between Billings and Red Lodge, and has been largely interested in live stock.

Mr. Dulin was married November 24, 1887, to Anna C. Myers, a daughter of Jacob and Mary Myers, of Iowa. The father was a farmer, merchant, superintendent of smelting works, and at one time held an interest in the Cambria Iron Works. Mr. and Mrs. Dulin have three children,—Jacob L., Harry R. and Catherine. In his social relations, our subject is an active member of the Brotherhood of Section Foremen; religiously, he belongs to the Methodist Church; and politically he was formerly a Democrat, but is now independent.

FRED H. FOSTER, Mayor of Billings, was born in Minneapolis, Minnesota, in 1856, a son of Robert and Lucinda (McMillan) Foster. The father was a merchant by occupation. Fred received his education in the University of Minnesota, and afterward read law with a view of making it his profession. Owing to poor health he decided to travel westward, and accordingly, in 1879, came to Montana with the advance of the Northern Pacific railroad, as a member of the engineer corps. He followed civil engineering, and also did considerable work for the company in their extensive improvement at Spokane, Washington. Mr. Foster located in Billings, then the old town of Colson, in 1881, and, although a young man, may appropriately be termed one of the fathers of the city. In 1881 he engaged with P. W. McAdow in a mercantile business, but two years afterward, in company with Messrs. Babcock, McCormick and others, he embarked in real estate transactions in Billings. They own valuable land near Billings, which is destined to become a part of the city in the near future. Mr. Foster is a man full of hopeful enterprise and confidence in the ultimate prosperity and growth of his town, for which he has spent large sums of money, is a prudent and conservative Mayor, and is persevering in his efforts to improve the morals of the little city. He was a member of the first Board of Commissioners that organized Yellowstone county, also a member of the first Board of School Trustees, was County Clerk and Recorder from 1889 to 1893, and was elected Mayor of Billings in the latter year. Mr. Foster was a leading member of the commission which secured the opening of the Crow Indian Reservation to white settlers in 1892, for which he spent several months in Washington and did efficient work in passing the bill through Congress. He is chairman of the Republican central committee of Yellowstone county, also a member of the Republican State central committee.

Mr. Foster was married, in 1882, to Miss Georgia, a daughter of Horace and Margaret McLaughlin, of Park county, Montana. They have four children,—Herbert H., Clara L., Robert and Annabel. The family are Episcopalians in their religious views.

WILLIAM H. HOUSTON, one of Missoula's prominent citizens and successful business men, was born in Logansport, Cass county, Indiana, May 7, 1853. His ancestors emigrated from Ireland to this country during its early history and settled in the South, where several generations of the family were born. Mr. Houston's father, Harry Houston, was born in Tennessee in 1795, he served in the war of 1812, and lived to be seventy-five years of age. He was twice married and was the father of fourteen children. His second wife, whose maiden name was Orvellia Julian, and who was a native of Kentucky and of Scotch descent, died at the age of fifty-three years. Six of this family are still living.

William H. Houston was reared principally at Logansport. His advantages for schooling were limited, his education being that gained chiefly in the school of experience. He was a mere lad when the Civil war broke out, but four of his brothers were in the Union ranks and he remembers distinctly the troubles and anxieties of those dark days. When he became old enough to do for himself he engaged in railroading, first as a brakeman on the Panhandle. Later he was on the Wabash road, and still later he was engaged in railroading in Texas, and from time to time he was promoted until he became a conductor of passenger trains, in which position he served for five years. In 1883, when the Northern Pacific was built, he came to Missoula, rented the Grand Central Hotel, and for two years was engaged in the hotel busi-nected with the mine by a wire tramway. Mill A has 30 stamps and 10 pans. Mill B has 50 stamps and 16 pans. Mill C has 90 stamps and 32 pans. The mine employs from 510 to 530 men. They mined and worked in 1890, 53,529,053 tons of ore, which yielded in silver 3,930,329.69 ounces and 8,583.48 ounces of pure gold. The Granite Mountain has declared $10,200,000 in dividends.

All the work is first-class; the mine is kept dry and well ventilated. The company provides a reading room, commodious and well supplied with the periodical literature of the day, a plunge bath, and a good hospital with medical attendance and nurses free to all sick and disabled miners, who pay only $1.25 a month for its support. Everything is done to secure the safety and health and comfort and intelligence of the workmen. As might be expected, the miners appeared to be picked men from all the nationalities which produce experts in mining. Besides the Granite Mountain mine the company owns a hundred or more outside mines and claims.

ness. At the end of that time he accepted the position of conductor on the Northern Pacific, and served as such until 1889. That year he was elected Sheriff of Missoula county by the Republican party. For three years and two months he served as Sheriff, and during that time performed most effective service in running down and capturing the renegade Indians who had infested the country, his service often being rendered at the great risk of his own life. He captured four of these Indians, and after they had been tried and sentenced he executed them. Besides these renegade Indians he also had many other criminals to arrest. Some twenty, in all, during his term were captured, tried and had their deserts, receiving the full penalty of the law. In one case a desperado had shot one of the policemen of the city and would not surrender. When the sheriff was called to make the arrest the criminal shot at him three times, Mr. Houston returning the fire every time, and every one of the latter's shots hitting the culprit, from the effect of which he died soon after. The efforts of Mr. Houston in bringing to trial and execution so many criminals had a most salutary effect upon the country, and since then crime has been much less frequent.

Since retiring from office Mr. Houston has been interested in the improvement of the city and has done much to bring about its present development. In 1891, in partnership with Messrs. Higgins and Greenough, he built the Union Block, an elegant brick structure, 30 x 105 feet, three stories and basement, and occupied by stores and offices. Soon after the building was completed Mr. Houston opened a clothing store in one of its rooms, but soon afterward sold the stock. He is also the owner of other valuable property in this city and elsewhere, having invested some in land.

Mr. Houston was married in Omaha, April 8, 1880, to Miss Mary Quigley, a native of Wisconsin, and they have one child, Harvey A.

Fraternally, Mr. Houston is both a blue lodge and chapter Mason and a Knight of Pythias.

MILO FRENCH, proprietor of the Gregson Hot Springs, Deer Lodge county, Montana, is ranked with the pioneers of 1864. He was born at Constantine, Michigan, June 8, 1847, son of H. F. and Rebecca (Bates) French, the former born in Connecticut in 1803, the latter a native of Vermont. His parents were married in Western New York, and in 1833 removed from there to Constantine, Michigan, where Mr. French took claim to a tract of Government land, which he improved and upon which he reared his family, passed his life and died, his death occurring in February, 1891, in the eighty-ninth year of his age. His wife died in 1864. They had eight children, the subject of this sketch being next to the youngest and one of the six who are still living.

Milo grew up on his father's farm, attending the district school in winter, and when he was eighteen years of age started out in life for himself. It was at this time that he came to the far West, the journey being made in company with six young men. Their outfit consisted of two wagons, with two yoke of oxen to each wagon, and they drove from their home to Chicago. At Chicago they chartered a freight car to the terminus of the road in Iowa, and from there they proceeded with their ox teams on the long journey across the plains to Montana. It was on the 29th of July that they landed at Virginia City. Virginia City was then a crowded mining camp, and the day on which they arrived excitement ran high, as one man was hung and another whipped.

Arrived in Montana, Mr. French first secured work on a ranch at $60 per month. He continued in the valley until spring and then went to the mines in the gulch, where he worked for $6 a day. The following June there was great excitement over the discovery of mines in the Blackfoot country, and he, among others, made a rush for that place. The expedition, however, proved a fruitless one to him, and in the fall he returned to Alder Gulch. It may be said of him that he went to all the stampedes of those exciting times, securing claims at various places and meeting with the miner's usual luck. At Jefferson Gulch he took out considerable gold. After a time, thinking his claim was about worked out, he sold it. It afterward proved of great value, netting its owner a large amount of money. He continued his mining operations up to 1880. That year he located in Butte City. He was well acquainted with the growth of the city, having been there off and on since 1869, and in 1880 he became the proprietor of the Girton House, then a paying hotel. He conducted a prosperous business there until 1886, and still owns the property which has greatly enhanced in value. In 1886 he took charge of the Hot Springs. Eighteen months later he sold out, but in 1890 he returned and has since had full control of the hotel, baths and saloon. This is a favorite resort and is well patronized by people from all parts of the country, especially by invalids; and Mr. French's management of the establishment is meeting with the approval of the public.

The Bi-Metallic is adjacent to the Granite, on a crevice vein in granite, varying in thickness from four feet to twenty. The main shaft is down 1,000 feet, and is cut by six levels. Down 200 feet, levels are run 950 feet west and 350 feet east to the Granite mine. The other five levels are about the same length. The mill has sixty stamps and sixteen pans, and works eighty tons a day, which yields from fifty to seventy-five ounces of silver and some gold. The mill is in the valley, and is connected by a wire tramway one and a half miles long. The ore is broken by two Blake crushers, and sent to mill in 500-pound bucket loads. This company takes good care of the safety, health and comfort of its workmen. It furnishes free baths, and has a partnership with the Granite in the hospital. The output of the Bi-Metallic has been over $2,000,000 per annum. The roasting and lixiviating plant is large and complete. The best we can say for this mine,it is now (1894) running on the old tailings, with silver at 62 cents. The old mine is under repairs for full work.

Mr. French was married June 12, 1894, to Miss Bertha Joulson, a native of Norway who has been a resident of America since she was fifteen.

Mr. French has been a stanch Republican all his life, and while a resident of Butte City served as Alderman from the first ward. He is public-spirited and enterprising and is a man of sterling characteristics.

ROBERT VICKERS, a respected business man of Virginia City, came to Montana in 1865, and as one of her pioneer citizens is entitled to personal mention in this work.

Mr. Vickers is a native of England, born in Lincolnshire, February 15, 1830, youngest in the family of eight children of William and Frances (Wilson) Vickers, both natives of England. Four of this family are still living. In 1830 the father came to America and settled in New Jersey, where his death occurred in 1835. The mother remained in England and reared her children there, and there, in 1877, she died, at the age of eighty-four years.

Robert Vickers was educated in the public schools of his native land. When he was seventeen years of age he entered upon a seafaring life, and for eight years he sailed along the coast of England and to different parts of the world. In 1854 his ship landed in California, at which time he retired from the sea and sought his fortune in the mines. Until 1863 he was engaged in mining at Pennsylvania Flat. During these years he had the usual experience of the average miner, at times getting a deal of gold and then investing it in mining enterprises and losing it. A part of the time while there he clerked in a general merchandise store. Next he went to the Reese River mines, where he mined for wages and clerked for a time, and whence he directed his course to Salt Lake and from there to Virginia City. This journey from Salt Lake was made by stage: passage price, $150. Flour was then $1 per pound and other things proportionately high. He mined for awhile, but without success, after which his partner returned to California and he accepted a position as clerk in a clothing store in Virginia City, at $60 per month and board. The following April he and W. P. Armstrong became partners and bought out the store, and conducted the same until 1868.

In 1868 Mr. Vickers returned to England, and April 5, 1869, was married to Miss Martha A. T. Borrell, a native of the village in which he was reared. Returning with her to Virginia City, he again established himself in business here, this time in a tobacco, cigar and notion store. After running this nearly two years he sold out and he and Mr. E. J. Walter became partners in the clothing business, and a year later he disposed of his interest to his partner. Then he purchased a ranch of 160 acres in Ruby valley, but after the grasshoppers had destroyed his crops two years he was glad to sell out, which he did, and returned to Virginia City. After this he was variously employed, in a clothing store, in the express office of Wells, Fargo & Company and finally in the sheep business. In the sheep business he was in partnership with Dr. Raymond, and this enterprise, on account of the severe winters, proved a failure, their loss being 1,290 out of the 1,640 sheep with which they had started. About this time Mr. Vickers was nominated and elected by the Democratic party as Assessor of Madison county, and in this capacity he served with entire satisfaction for two years. At the expiration of his term of office he was made the assignee of a Laurin merchant, and sold out the stock in three months, and after this, in partnership with Mr. H. Elling, he purchased the old clothing business of his former partner, U. P. Armstrong. Since that

A very large number of mining claims, more than 1,000, have been located and more or less developed in and around Granite mountain.

The pioneer silver mill of Montana, the Hope, is still running, near Phillipsburg. A few old-timers will remember the sensation produced by the news that the Wheeler pans for the Hope mine, then on the way from San Francisco, had gone down, wagons and all, beneath the quicksands of Virgin river. Coffer dams to turn aside the flow of water and sand, were constructed before the pans could be raised.

Other mines in and around Granite Mountain and the Bi-Metallic are the Blaine, Boston, New Departure, Montreal, Elizabeth, Zeus, Black Rock, Fanny Parnell, Altoona, Chalcedony, Bi-Metallic Extension, East Granite, Metallic, Metallic Fraction, Tyson, Maggie C., Rainbow, Young America and Lord Nelson. Near Hasmark are the Gold Coin, Union, Michael Davitt and Sunshine. It is said that six companies own more than 1,000 claims on and around Granite mountain.

Near Phillipsburg are Two-per-Cent (rich in time he has been engaged in business under the firm name of Robert Vickers & Company, dealing in clothing, furnishing goods, hats and caps and dry goods, Mr. Vickers having entire management of the establishment.

Mr. and Mrs. Vickers have nine children, namely: Robert Arthur, Mary Frances, Dean Wilson, Nellie Elizabeth, George Dawson, Richard Borrell, Bessie Maria, Martha Fox and Ella Rhoda, all natives of Madison county, Montana. His parents being members of the Episcopal Church, Mr. Vickers was raised in its faith and is now an honored member of the church at Virginia City, of which he is Steward and Treasurer. His family are also members of the Episcopal Church. Fraternally, Mr. Vickers is a prominent Mason. He has represented his lodge at the Grand Lodge and has served as a proxy to the Grand Commandery, and he and his wife and two daughters are members of the Eastern Star. In city affairs he has likewise been prominent and efficient, serving as a member of the City Council and also on the Board of Education.

J. C. KEPPLER, the leading jeweler of Anaconda, Montana, is a practical business man who has by his industry and good management accumulated considerable valuable property in this place. He is one of the few now engaged in business who began here in the early years of the town's development, and few have done more to aid in its material growth than he.

Mr. Keppler was born in Germany, March 19, 1844, and in 1858 came with his parents to the United States and settled with them in Galena, Illinois. There he entered upon an apprenticeship to the jeweler's trade, under the instructions of J. W. Saffey. From 1861 to 1864 he was in Denver, Colorado, and in April of the latter year he came from there to Montana, first locating at Bannack City, where he engaged in the jewelry business until 1866. That year he removed to Virginia City, Montana, and in 1867 to Highland Gulch. In 1868, however, he returned to Bannack City. His next move was in 1878 to Glendale, this State, where he was appointed Postmaster in 1881, filled the office until 1885 and then resigned. Since 1885 he has been a resident of Anaconda, that year having established his present business, which he has since conducted successfully. From 1890 until 1893 he was Postmaster at Anaconda. This position he also resigned.

Mr. Keppler was married in 1869 to Miss Clara Kirkpatrick. They had five children, only one of whom, Eugene R., is living, and he has apprenticed himself to a watch maker in Germany. Having been legally separated from his first wife in 1884, Mr. Keppler was again married, in 1890, to Mrs. Manthie Haining, his present companion.

PATRICK J. BROPHY, one of Butte City's enterprising and successful business men, is a native of the Emerald isle, born in county Carlow, August 5, 1855.

Mr. Brophy was educated in his native county and learned the grocery business there. In 1877 he came to this country and in Chicago began his career in a spice and coffee mill at $9 per week. From there he went to Wyoming, where for three or four years he was in the employ of Beckwith, Quinn & Company, and since 1881 he has been identified with the business interests of Butte City, Montana. That year he and a Mr. Casey opened a stock of groceries in a little shack on the southeast corner of Broadway and Main streets, and they continued in partnership until 1888. In 1884 the small building they at first occupied was replaced by a more substantial structure, into which they moved. In 1886 Mr. Brophy purchased his present store of Foster & Kleinschmidt. It is located on the east side of Main street, midway between Broadway and Park street, and is one of the very best locations in the city. Since 1888 Mr. Brophy has conducted the business alone and with marked success. He now does a large wholesale and retail business, his annual sales amounting to over $350,000.

Like most business men in Montana, Mr. Brophy has invested some in mines and mining and he has also acquired valuable real-estate interests. He is a partner with Mr. Lockhart in the "Lockhart Ranch," which comprises a vast tract of land, 1,100 acres of it being inclosed. It is, indeed, one of the finest ranches in the State and is noted for the large draft horses raised there.

silver), Mystery, Sweet Home, Silver Chief and many others. In Spring Gulch are the Hawk-eye and Wenger No. 2. At Black Pine the Combination mill and mine, Mountain Boy, Durango, Sunrise and Midnight are located. On Dunkleberry creek, eight miles south of New Chicago, the Hatta, Forest Rose, Stone-wall, Pioneer, Little Jo, Mountain Chief and Little Mack are found. Some of them have been opened, and the ores shipped have given favorable returns. Good veins have been opened on Pioneer Gulch. The Potosi and other mines are large and rich in gold. Boulder creek has a group of very promising prospects, which have attracted the attention of the mining community. On Rock creek, twenty miles from Phillipsburg, we have the Great Republic and many other good claims. The Algonquin mill, with twenty stamps, was erected to run on the ores of Speckled Trout and Salmon mines, near Phillipsburg.

Mr. Brophy was married January 24, 1893, to Miss Margaret D'Arcy, a native of Joliet, Illinois. He and his wife are members of the Catholic Church. Politically, he is a Democrat, but has persistently kept out of politics, preferring to give his whole time and attention to his own private interests. He is a member of the American-Irish Club, and stands high in the estimation of the business men of Montana.

PATRICK H. MEAGHER, one of the prominent farmers of Deer Lodge valley, Deer Lodge county, Montana, dates his first arrival in Montana in 1862, and is therefore ranked with the early pioneers of the State.

Mr. Meagher was born in Canada, March 17, 1842. His father, Thomas Meagher, was a native of Ireland, emigrating to America when he was seventeen years of age and settling in Pennsylvania. From there he went to Canada, where he was engaged in farming and railroad contract work until 1849. He was there married to Miss Catharine Meagher, also a native of the Emerald Isle, and they became the parents of nine children. In 1849 he returned to the United States and took up his abode in Franklin county, New York, where he spent the residue of his life and died, being sixty-eight years old at the time of his death. His wife died when in her sixty-fourth year. Seven of their family are still living, Patrick H. being their fourth child.

Patrick H. Meagher was educated in the public schools, and when he was seventeen filled the position of baggage master at Burke Station. Two years later he went to California, making the journey by way of the Isthmus of Panama and landing in San Francisco January 25, 1861. He spent that winter in California and in the spring went to Nevada and engaged in gold mining. He remained there, however, only a short time, and from that place came to Montana, making the trip via Portland, Oregon. Like many of the early miners, he was of a roving disposition in those days, and after he had spent two months in Montana he proceeded to Boise City. For some time thereafter he mined on Feather river and took out $7,000 there. In 1864 he went on a prospecting trip into British Columbia, but did not meet with success there. After that he came to Montana again, his second arrival here being in 1865. He prospected and mined at Confederate Gulch and other places until 1869. He next turned his attention to farming, but two years later abandoned his land and went to mining again, mining at Dry Gulch and taking out considerable gold. In 1873 we again find him in Nevada, where he prospected for wages for a time. In 1876 he returned to Montana. He continued prospecting and was successful in locating a number of valuable claims, among which were the "Gray Nun," which he sold for $1,000; the "Bella Clara and Burk," which he sold for $20,000; and the "Clinton," for which he realized $12,000. He sold his half of the "Callio" for $12,500, and he had a number of other mines, which he sold for $1,000 each.

In 1886 Mr. Meagher came to Deer Lodge valley and purchased a tract of land, and since that time has given his attention to farming and stock-raising, making a specialty of Percheron horses and Holstein cattle. Here he owns 2,640 acres of choice land, some of the best in the valley, and raises large crops of hay, wheat and potatoes. He annually cuts 200 tons of hay. His wheat and oat crop averages 15,000 bushels, and he raises about 3,000 sacks of potatoes every year. He keeps about thirty-two head of work horses, has all the necessary farm machinery, and is carrying on his operations by the latest and most approved methods. While he gives his chief attention to farming now, he is still interested in mines and mining. He is a Republican and a member of the A. O. U. W.

Mr. Meagher was married in 1884 to Miss Rachel Thomas, a native of Idaho, and they have five children, all born in Montana, namely: Lawrence P., Nora, Mary, Thomas Francis and Rachel.

PROF. BENJAMIN FRANKLIN MAIDEN.— This young and promising educator is a son of G. W. and Sarah E. (Campbell) Maiden. His paternal ancestors were English, while his mother's people originated in Scotland. His parents resided in Page county, Iowa, where for many years his father was extensively interested in woolen mills, manufacturing woolen goods, etc., and in sands of miles away from other sources of supply, than any other part of the State, her prosperous people have discovered and opened vast beds of coal to run our railroads and mines, smelt our ores, and warm our homes and business houses and light our cities. These coals speed the trains on our railroads and keep the streams of gold and silver and copper and lead flowing from our glowing furnaces. As if this was not enough for one county to do, Gallatin has during the last year opened up a mining district in which hundreds of quartz claims have been discovered and located.

From December 1, 1889, to December 1, 1890, 104 mineral claims were recorded in Gallatin county. Of these sixty-six were quartz claims, twenty-seven placers and eleven coal claims.

But this enterprising county has also undertaken to teach our boys and girls to love the glorious pursuits of horticulture and agriculture, that our miners may eat home food. We want gardens and orchards. No State can have better gardens. Beets, onions and cabbages grow better here than elsewhere. Our currants, raspberries, strawberries, are as good as can be that county, March 11, 1868, the subject of our sketch was born. He attended the public schools of his native county until he was fourteen years old. At an early age he became anxious to try his fortune in the great West, and at the age of eighteen we find him in Montana. Feeling the need of a thorough education in order to prepare himself for usefulness in life, he entered the College of Montana, a Presbyterian institution of learning, located at Deer Lodge, and was afterward a student in the Bozeman Academy, where he completed his preparatory studies. In the fall of 1889 he entered upon a regular college course at Marietta, Ohio, where he graduated in 1892, having accomplished a four-years' course of study in three years. A few months before his graduation he was elected to take charge of the Bozeman Academy, and satisfactorily conducted that institution for one year. At this writing he is a member of the faculty of the Montana Agricultural College, being professor of ancient languages, English, etc. This institution is located at Bozeman and is supported by the Government.

ORLANDO EMMONS, formerly of Livingston, Montana, now of Nye City, dates his birth in Petersburg, Virginia, July 14, 1851. He is a son of Roderick W. and Louise (Alley) Emmons. His father was a farmer and railroad contractor, and was a prominent factor in the building of the South Side railroad, over which the Federal and Confederate armies so long and fiercely contested before the fall of Petersburg. He had three sons in the Confederate army, two of whom died, and he contracted fever while attending one of them, which terminated his life at the age of sixty-five years.

Orlando Emmons was educated in the private schools of his native State. At the age of twenty he went to Baltimore, Maryland, where he was employed by a safe manufacturing company. While in that city he formed the acquaintance of Emma Smalley, the accomplished daughter of A. P. and Fanny (Hodgkins) Smalley, of Vermont, her father being a merchant and farmer. Ex-Governor Page's mother and Miss Smalley's father were brother and sister. To this young lady Mr. Emmons was married, February 13, 1872. They subsequently removed to Iowa, where Mr. Emmons was supervisor of an asylum for feeble-minded children, under Dr. O. W. Archibald, at Glenwood. From there he came to Livingston, Montana, in 1884, as foreman painter for the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, in which capacity he remained until the fall of 1889. He was then elected Clerk of the District Court of Park county, on the Republican ticket, the contest being a close one, as his opponent, James A. Bailey, was defeated by only four votes. Mr. Emmons acted generously toward Mr. Bailey by appointing him as his deputy. It should here be stated that Mr. Emmons was reared a Democrat, amidst Democratic surroundings, while his wife and her people were stanch Republicans. The union in this case of the North and the South terminated, as did the war, in favor of the North.

Since coming to Livingston Mr. Emmons has acquired considerable property. He owns several residences here, which he rents, and has a ranch in Nye City, forty-five miles from Livingston. On this ranch he is preparing to engage in stock-raising. Mr. Emmons is a member of all the Masonic bodies of Livingston, in several of which he has held official position, having served as High Priest of the Chapter for three years. He is also a member of the I. O. O. F., I. O. G. T. and I. O. of M.

Mr. and Mrs. Emmons have one daughter, Grace Louise, who is now the wife of William Lind, of Livingston. Mrs. Emmons is a Seventh-Day Adventist and a clear and forcible expounder of her faith. She is the representative head of her creed in Livingston,—an energetic, effective worker, the friend of the needy and the good Samaritan to those in distress. She has the courage to put into execution her honest convictions and dares to do right as she sees her duty regardless of public sentiment. She is secretary of the Adventist Tract Society and treasurer of their resigned Montana mission work. She has been a correspondent of various newspapers in the State and elsewhere. An article from her pen in defense of an unfortunate young woman who shot her seducer, was copied extensively by the State and Eastern found in the world. No native strawberries, raspberries and currants can surpass those of Montana; and besides we have proved our capacity to raise good plums and cherries, and superior pears and apples; and besides all that again they are to be taught the art, the pleasures and profits of farming; to raise wheat yielding eighty bushels per acre, oats fifty and barley forty bushels per acre; to make good old-fashioned farms; to raise horses, cattle, sheep and the best varieties of poultry.

Our college has undertaken to so educate our boys and girls that they will love the country better than the city, the farm better than the store and counting room. Then and not till then can we expect Montana to produce as sturdy and noble a people as those who first came to our valleys and mountains. The Agricultural College has undertaken a great work,—to make farmers.

JEFFERSON COUNTY

press. Editor Gordon, of the Yellowstone Journal, took occasion to say: "If Mrs. Emma Emmons should never put pen to paper again she has made a plea for womankind which even the eloquent R. G. Ingersoll might envy." The editor of the Bozeman Chronicle pronounced it "one of the most touching pieces of prose that have appeared for many a day;" and the Livingston Post declared it a "literary gem." During the last four years the Adventists have sold about $6,000 worth of their books in Montana. Mrs. Emmons is actively working for the good of her race, and more especially is she impressed with the duty of giving aid and comfort to the unfortunate ones who are seemingly forsaken by others. Those who know her best join in the praise of this good woman who has done so much in her field of labor, even though persecuted at the time by many.

COL. WILLIAM TROTTER, proprietor of the Windsor Hotel at Boulder, Jefferson county, was born in Cannonsburg, Washington county, Pennsylvania, November 20, 1836, a son of William and Mary (Duncan) Trotter, natives also of that State. The father was a tailor by occupation, and both were members of the Presbyterian Church. They removed from their native State to Ohio, and afterward to Iowa, where Mr. Trotter died, at the age of seventy-eight years. His wife departed this life at the age of fifty-three years.

William Trotter, the eldest in a family of six sons, began life on his own account at the age of sixteen years, and went to Leavenworth, Kansas, with parties who were in search of a range for their stock. After spending two years in that State he returned to his home in Iowa; later accepted the position of overland stage driver from Burlington to Los Angeles; afterward drove to Pike's Peak, and also conducted stage stations on the overland routes for about fifteen years. During that time many of the prominent citizens of the United States stopped at his hotel, among them being Generals Grant, Sheridan and Custer. In 1872 Mr. Trotter conducted hotels at different places in California, spending one winter at Bakersfield, Kern county; followed the same occupation in Boise City, Idaho; afterward removed to Walla Walla; was proprietor of the Mecham station on the top of the Blue mountains, and from that place came to Boulder. Mr. Trotter became proprietor of the Windsor House when it was only a stage station, and the city at that time contained only one house, occupied by Captain Cook. A number of years afterward he returned to Walla Walla, and then conducted a hotel at La Grange two years, after which he again came to Boulder. After serving as manager of the Boulder Hot Springs five years, he spent one year in Butte City, and in 1891 came to this city to take charge of the Windsor House. During his early history Colonel Trotter was division agent from Julesburg to Fort King, and during that time the now famous "Buffalo Bill" (Col. William F. Cody) rode the pony express for him.

The Colonel has been twice married. July 23, 1891, he was united in marriage with Mrs. Sarah Stafford, a native of Iowa, and a daughter of Rev. Irwin, a Methodist minister of that State. Mrs. Trotter had three children by her former marriage, viz.: George, deceased; Hattie, wife of Isaac Magers, of Minneapolis; and Mabel, wife of James Coberg. The latter has two children, Willie and Freddie, and both she and her sons reside with her parents. Mr. and Mrs. Trotter also adopted a little girl in her infancy, Willma, who is now four years of age. Colonel Trotter has been a life-long Republican, and in his social relations is a member of the A. O. U. W. Nearly his entire life has been spent in the great West, where he has witnessed many changes, and few men have a wider acquaintance on both sides of the Rockies than Colonel Trotter, the veteran pioneer hotel man of Montana.

E. S. STACKPOLE, one of the representative citizens of Deer Lodge who came to the Territory of Montana in 1866, is a native of Maine, born October 27, 1834.

Mr. Stackpole's ancestors came to this country from the north of Ireland long before the Revolutionary war. His father, Peter M. Stackpole, was born in the State of Maine in 1805, and was named in honor of his mother full of veins of quartz rich in gold, silver, copper, lead and iron. A thousand discoveries and claims have been located and recorded during this year. A few of these have been opened and made productive enough to place Jefferson in the front rank of our mining counties.

The Gregory, which in early days attracted all by its glittering ores of argentiferous galena streaked with crystals of antimony, still produces its rich ores. The Alta, Comet, the Aqua Frio, the South Atlantic, the Emma, the Josephine, Peerless Jennie, the Crescent, Copper Bell, Ida, Elkhorn, Queen, Holter, Little Emma, Amazon, Eureka, Ruby and many others are contributing their treasures to swell the general output of Montana mines.

In the Upper Basin District, though some of the best mines have temporarily suspended operations, enough new ones have joined the list of producers to keep the ore wagons running to the depot at Remini. The Crescent is a constant producer of its beautiful ores of iron pyrites, galena, and sulphide of copper rich in gold and silver. The Sallie Bell, North Pacific, Eureka, Ida May, Enterprise, Buckeye, Josephine, Red Rock, Monarch and Ontario, the M. being for Morrill, her maiden name. She was a cousin of Governor Morrill of that State. Peter M. Stackpole married Miss Mary Dow, a cousin of the eccentric and noted preacher, Lorenzo Dow. They became the parents of five children, E. S. being their third-born and one of the three who are still living. The father spent the whole of his life in his native State, his business being that of a manufacturer of woolen cloth, and his religion that of the Friends or Quakers. He died in 1850. The mother, also a member of the society of Quakers, is still living, having attained her eighty fifth year and now being a resident of Amesbury, Massachusetts, where she is respected and loved by all who know her.

Edward S. Stackpole was reared in the "Pine Tree" State, attending the common schools there, and finishing his education at the Quaker College in Providence, Rhode Island. His first business venture was that of a merchant, in partnership with his brother, which partnership continued two years. In 1860 he went to California, making the journey by way of the Isthmus of Panama and landing at San Francisco. From that port he proceeded to Nicolaus, on the Feather river, where he clerked in a store four years. Next we find him in Idaho, again engaged in clerking and also interested in mining, and in 1866 he returned East to Cleveland, Ohio, to visit his people, they having in the meantime removed to that place.

In the spring of 1866 Mr. Stackpole crossed the plains to Montana, with the Fisk train, the trip covering a period of ninety days and to him being a most enjoyable one. Upon his arrival here, he first located at Highland Gulch, where he was engaged in merchandising until 1870. At that time he became identified with Deer Lodge. Soon after locating here, he received the appointment of Postmaster, which position of trust he filled most efficiently for fifteen consecutive years, during the latter portion of which period he was also conducting a drug business. In 1888 he went with his family to Tennessee, where they sojourned for a year and a half, at the of that time returning to Montana. Since his return, Mr. Stackpole has been dealing in real estate and in mines, both on his own account and for others, doing a large commission business. In connection with his partner, Mr. Shaubut, he has platted and added to the city a beautiful tract of land, a portion of which is now on the market.

The subject of our sketch was married, May 5, 1872, to Miss Mary A. McKinstry, a native of Indiana and a daughter of T. B. McKinstry. The McKinstry family also located in Montana in 1866, their journey hither being made up the Missouri river. Mr. and Mrs. Stackpole have five children, all born in Deer Lodge, their names being as follows: Morrill Dow, Mary H., Jesse M., Thea F. and Harvey M. At the time of his marriage, Mr. Stackpole built the pleasant residence on First street in Deer Lodge, where they have since resided.

Politically, he affiliates with the Republican party. For the past two years he has served as Justice of the Peace, and at this writing, 1894, is the nominee of his party for the office of Treasurer of Deer Lodge county. In Masonic circles he is prominent and active. He has served three terms as Master of the blue lodge and two terms as High Priest of the chapter, and has also had the honor of being Grand Master of the Grand Lodge of Montana. Mrs. Stackpole is an Episcopalian, while he still maintains his allegiance to the Society of Friends.

NICHOLAS NOE, manufacturer of carriages and wagons, Phillipsburg, Montana, has for the past sixteen years been one of the most successful business men of the town.

Mr. Noe is a native of Germany and possesses his full share of that energy and thrift so characteristic of his countrymen. He was born July 18, 1849, was reared, educated and learned his trade in his native land, remaining there until 1875. That year he emigrated to America. After working at his trade in Iowa and Wisconsin a few years, he came in 1879 to Montana and located at Phillipsburg. Here he worked for wages until he became acquainted with the people and their methods of doing business. In 1886 he engaged in business on his own account and since that date his earnest efforts have been Duluth, Emma Nevada, Morning Star, Comstock, Crœsus, Katie Leith, Little Anna, Young America and Grand Central are some of the regular producers of the Upper Basins. There are many others, like the Lady Leith, Obelisk, Comstock and Aryan, awaiting development to join the great number of producing mines in the Upper Basin District.

Cataract District has a number of producing mines,—Copper Bell, Boulder Chief, Ida May, Bluebird, Overland, Hiawatha, Rock of Ages, Lightning, Ontario, Mount Thompson, Redemption, Mountain Chief, Captain Cook, Atlantis, Rose, Evening Star, Bullion, Silver King, Garfield, Big Medicine, Humboldt, Nonesuch, Homestake and Lily. The Cataract District shipped fifty cars a month, which yield not less than $50,000, or a total of $600,000 a year. Virginia Bell, Stella and East Pilot are producers.

Willow Springs District has several producing mines, as the Ida, Iliff, Fairview and Ruby. The Ruby is yielding a carload of good ore a day, and the Ida is placing its ores on the dump for the winter and free coinage. Bigfoot rewarded with success. In connection with the manufacture of carriages and wagons, he does a general blacksmith business.

Ever since identifying himself with Phillipsburg, Mr. Noe has taken an active interest in all its affairs. He has purchased property and erected buildings and in this way has aided in its growth and development, his own residence being one of the attractive homes of the town. He is also interested in mining operations; is a stockholder in the Phillipsburg Mining Company. Mr. Noe is a member of the A. O. U. W., and in politics is an intelligent and active Republican.

Mr. Noe was married May 14, 1881, to Miss Ella Kercherch, a native of Wisconsin and of German descent. They have one child, a daughter, Hilda, born in Phillipsburg.

Moses Reeves, one of the early Montana pioneers, was born in Canada, September 12, 1832, a son of Martin and Maude Louise (Dervisa) Reeves, natives of Canada, the former of Spanish and the latter of French descent. They had eight children, seven of whom are still living. The father died at the age of sixty-six years, and the and the mother survived until ninety-six years of age. They resided on a farm on the St. Lawrence river, below Montreal.

Moses Reeves remained at his native place until sixteen years of age, and then, in 1848 went to Chicago, which was then only a small place. He was employed as a baker two and a half years at that city. He next went to St. Louis and, in 1853, as an employe of the American Fur Company, came to Benton, Montana, where he began trading with the Indians. He could trade a handful of beans and a butcher knife for a buffalo skin, or a blanket would buy three robes. Mr. Reeves was engaged in that occupation until January 1, 1854, then came on snow shoes with the Stephens expedition to Bitter Root, afterward returned to Benton, followed farming two years at Colwell, and then discovered the mines at the mouth of the Ponteray river, where he took out large quantities of gold. After traversing the country in every direction, during which time he was constantly among the Indians, Mr. Reeves returned to the valley in 1860, and located on a farm two miles below Frenchtown. At that time he paid $12 per bushel for seed wheat, and $5 for seed oats, which he procured at the Mission. During the winter he carried the mail from Frenchtown Valley to Walla Walla on snow shoes, and was accompanied by an Indian. At night they slept on their blankets on the snow, and often suffered with hunger, having been reduced to dog and mule meat at one time. Mr. Reeves was at Ft. Colville at the time of the destruction of Walla Walla. In 1862 he built the first gristmill in the Territory of Montana, at Frenchtown, and for seventeen years he ground wheat for the settlers. In 1864 he purchased 160 acres of his present farm, located one mile west of Frenchtown, and to which he has since added until he now owns 400 acres.

Mr. Reeves was married in 1854, to Miss Leanon Brown, a daughter of Louis Brown. She died one year afterward, and in 1857 our subject was united in marriage with her sister, Josett. This wife died in 1873, and in 1878 Mr. Reeves married Mettie Slocum, a native of Iowa. They have one daughter, Dora. Mr. Reeves was formerly a Democrat, but is now identified with the People's party, and the family are members of the Catholic Church.

The following interesting reminiscences by Mr. Moses Reeves are related here in his own language:

"On the 17th April, 1854, I and a man named Pete Marchand left the American Fur Company, having become disgusted with the food—old dried buffalo meat—on which we had lived six months without tasting bread! Our intention was to join Sampree's party at Willow Creek (now Stevensville), who were bound for California. We had nothing but an old flint-lock gun, some bullets and powder. At Sun River we killed a deer. Came down Blackfoot river by Cadott's Pass. When we arrived about where Bonner now is we met six Blackfoot Indians with stolen horses. We thought our 'time had come,' sure! As we were traveling toward the camp of their enemies, the Flatheads, they made signs to come to them and we went. They asked us if we were from Ft. Ben

District has the Bigfoot, Dodge, Grizzly, and other promising mines. The Elkhorn District is fully sustaining its good reputation for productive mining. The Holter is still a constant producer of bullion, and many other mines in the district ship their ores to outside reduction works. Among the producing mines in this district are the C & D, Elkhorn, Queen, Dunstone and others. These mines ship some twenty to twenty-five car-loads of ore each week, which do not yield less than $20,000. The Elkhorn district is now producing at the rate of $1,000,000 a year. There is a furnace at Elkhorn not now in operation. The Elkhorn mine is yielding some $36,000 per month in bullion.

Indian Creek has the Cyclone group, Patsywatomie, Mineral Hill, Silver Wave and many others. Crow Creek District has a group of promising copper prospects on some veins in argillaceous shales. The Cherokee, Green Copper, Silver Reef and Henry belong to this group, and will at an early day rival the best copper mines in the country. Many claims ton, and we said, 'Yes, and are very hungry;' and they said, 'We in a hurry,' and left. A little later on, just over a hill, we met some forty or more Flat-Heads (in pursuit of the Blackfeet), who gave us something to eat and horses to ride on.

"We finally reached Lieutenant Mullan's camp, but the party we had intended joining were gone. Here we found Clark and Adams (Lieutenant Mullan being absent), and they told us to wait for Mullan and go down to Dallas with him. After waiting two days, we started, intending to go down the Hellgate river in rafts. Here we had several hairbreadth escapes from death by drowning, by our rafts str king trees and going to pieces. Neither of us knew how to swim. We were obliged to give up the plan of going by water and started afoot. It was on this trip we suffered much from hunger, and had to kill and eat our remaining dogs. One of them had gone back to Mullan's camp at the time of our first accident in the river. We did not know where we were, but kept traveling, and finally we came to Horse Plains, where the first man we saw was Alexis Asslia, who took us to the Indian camp, where we were made welcome and told to stay as long as we wished. We were foot-sore, without clothing, and famished

"At Lieutenant Mullan's camp, when the dog came back, they thought we were drowned. Great was Lieutenant Mullan's surprise when, on his way to the Dalles, he heard of two white men being at the Indian camp. He sent word at once by his interpreter, Francois Saxon, for us to come to him, but we would not go. So he sent Father Hocken to try to persuade us to go back to Fort Benton, and we answered 'No: we'll die first.' Then he said, 'Come with us.' So, on the last of May, we started with Father Hocken, Lieutenant Mullan (interpreter) and two Indians, and arrived at Ft. Colville on the 9th of June.

"It was Lieutenant Mullan that hired me to carry the mail, saying that I was the man he wanted, as, if it were possible, I would get through with it. I carried the mail from Benton to Walla Walla four years.

"A Memorable Ride—April 25, 1859, we started for Salt Lake City for provisions and the exchange of horses for cattle with travelers bound for California at Soda Springs. I and Canville Stringtoe went to Salt Lake City to obtain provisions, while the rest of the party continued on the main road. We succeeded in getting a wagon and some other things. At Thomas' Fork we heard that the Indians were hostile and vicious, and at this point were a party of emigrants wishing to join a man named Buggy, a dealer in Kentucky horses, who was in advance with a large party. He asked whether any of us knew the road, offering $20.

"Deciding to go, I started at sunrise and rode a distance of fifty-six miles, and caught Buggy at Soda Springs, who agreed to wait for the party. I returned to tell them, arriving at Fort Thomas before sundown, having ridden 112 miles on the same horse, which for feed had only a little picking of grass while I ate dinner.

"On our road home we were chased by Indians, who were trying to steal our horses, seven days and nights. We succeeded in eluding them, but were obliged to leave our wagon and equipments at Snake river. We kept the saddle on some of our horses all the time and slept by turns, none of us sleeping over three hours in twenty-four. On this trip my wife and sisters-in-law were with us."

HON. GEORGE DEMENT THOMAS, of Bozeman, Montana, was born on a farm in St. Clair county, Illinois, July 26, 1834. He is the third son and sixth child of Colonel John and Isabella Thomas, whose family consisted of five sons and five daughters.

Colonel John Thomas, of Belleville, Illinois, commanded the Second Regiment of Illinois Volunteers in the Black Hawk war, in 1832, and ranked third in his command under General Whiteside. Our subject's father, a native of the State of Virginia, located in Illinois as early as 1817; his mother, a native of St. Clair county, Illinois, was the daughter of William and Mary Kinney, who emigrated from Kentucky and settled in Illinois before it was a State, their location being four miles east of Belleville. His grandfather Kinney lived on and cultivated a large farm for many years; was an influential citizen in southern Illinois at an early day, and at one time Lieutenant Governor of the State.

have been located in the new White Hall District during the last year. The Beaver Creek has a number of mines which make regular shipments of their ores. The East Pacific, Iron Age, Little Bonanza, Park, Gold Dust, Aurora, Eclipse, McClintock and a large number not developed are in this district.

The H & H of this district is one of the best mines in Jefferson county. It is developed to a depth of 900 feet, and the length of levels is 5,000 feet. This mine has been a constant producer for many years. In 1893 it returned $32,000, and in 1894 $40,000. The ores are nearly all worked at Seattle and East Helena. The McClintock has a force of men constantly at work in development. It ships some ore. The Yankee Girl is a combination of seven claims, which promise well. The Free Coinage is a good mine. The Ida mine has a force of men doing development work. The shaft is down 220 feet. There is a ten-stamp mill in this district. The Park District has the Clipper, Gold Dust, Switzerland, Uncle Ed, Silver Bell, Jaw Bone and others.

George D. remained on the farm until he reached his majority. After he was twelve years of age he took an active part in the farm work and cheerfully performed his share of the labor, rendering valued assistance in planting the crops, which in those days were principally corn. As a corn-dropper he was an expert, dropping the most of the corn on his father's large farm, and the average acreage they devoted to this crop was from 100 to 300 acres. His father was a large land owner, and each year rapidly increased his holdings until in 1850 the crop reached 320 acres. In 1853 this acreage was all in wheat, the largest wheat crop ever cultivated there at that time: the harvest lasted over four weeks; and of the sixteen men employed to take care of the crop George was one among the best binders. He had assisted in fencing and breaking about 1,500 acres of his father's land previous to the year 1852. Having labored constantly on the farm, his mind had been much neglected up to this time, and, feeling the need of a better education, he entered Shurtleff College, at Upper Alton, for the autumn term of 1852, and began a regular classical course, with a view of studying for a profession. Mathematics, grammar, Latin and Greek were his favorite studies, and most of the time while he was in college he kept at the head of his class. His early training on the farm and his natural liking for agricultural pursuits caused him to change his mind in regard to a professional life, and in 1855, when in his sophomore year, he left college and returned to the farm.

November 29, 1855, soon after leaving college, Mr. Thomas was married to Miss Lucy Alice Alexander, daughter of William and Sarah Alexander, who resided near Shiloh, St. Clair county, Illinois. She was educated at Monticello Seminary, Godfrey, that State. Her father emigrated with his parents from Pennsylvania to Illinois at an early day and settled near Shiloh in what was known as the Alexander settlement. He was a prosperous farmer in his day: died in 1847. Her mother, whose maiden name was Sarah Scott, was a daughter of James and Sarah Scott, Mr. and Mrs. Scott having settled in St. Clair county, near Shiloh, with their numerous relatives who emigrated to that place from Virginia. All the Scotts were large land holders. Her mother was a cousin of Judge John Milton Scott, of Bloomington, Illinois.

In 1856 our subject and his wife settled on a farm near Shiloh, and there he was quietly engaged in agricultural pursuits until the Civil war came on. At the breaking out of the war he organized the First Home Guard Company at Shiloh, of which he was Captain. He afterward entered the service as a private in Company A, and as a member of Fremont's body guard was in the Fremont campaign in Missouri, until the removal of General Fremont in November, 1861. In 1862 he received an appointment, with the rank of Lieutenant, in a branch of the United States Service, organized for the protection of the overland emigrants between Omaha and Walla Walla. Captain Crawford, of Oregon had command of this expedition, and to him Mr. Thomas reported for duty at Omaha in May. There he remained in charge of the camp and men until necessary supplies and equipments were put in readiness for the expedition. During this delay Lieutenant Thomas organized a company of about sixty men, whom he drilled in cavalry tactics so as to be serviceable on the road in case of Indian attacks. He had charge of this company of mounted men on the entire route and rendered efficient service to the command and expedition until they reached their destination, having traveled about 1,500 miles. The journey was made in safety and without even the loss of a single man. After reaching their destination Lieutenant Thomas received a discharge from this service from his captain, who highly commended his services and deportment upon the expedition. While sojourning on the Pacific coast he visited various portions of Oregon and California with a view to future settlement. About the first of December, 1862, he started home, via the Isthmus of Panama, and in the early part of 1863 rejoined his family in Illinois, having traveled over 10,000 miles in less than a year, and brought home with him $600 of his earnings.

In 1863 Mr. Thomas remained on the farm and cultivated a crop. At the same time he was making preparations to come West with his family, intending then to Near Wickes are Comet, Silver Hill, Gregory, Penn Yan, Alta, Rumley, Vista, Bluebird, Valdemere, Minah, Excelsior, Blizzard, Alpine, Harriet, Amelia and many others, which yield every year. Amazon District has several mines which are shipping ores more or less regularly. Bambo Chief, Mono, Pilot, Amazon, Von Armin, Hard Cash and others are located in Park. Dog Town has numerous good prospects; among them are the Ruby, Black Hawk, Red Wing, Elgin, Summit, Alice, Reynold, Whippoorwill, Hope and Black Prince. Cardwell District has the Gold, Gold King, Gold Bug, White Star, Shiloh and Ohio. Radersburg has a number of mines. The Keating, Ringwald, Eiffel, Edith, Black Hawk, Elgin, Jo-Jo and Jewell. Regular shipments of ore are made from the mines in this mining region. Boulder has the Virginia Bell, Louise, Mollie McGregor, Burlingame, Bambo Chief, Ella and Hidden Treasure.

The mills, furnaces and concentrators of Jefferson county are very numerous, and have done their share in reducing Montana ores. Some of them are nearly worn out in the good work, locate in California; but the discovery of the mines at Virginia City, Idaho, and the fact that greenbacks were at a heavy discount in California, induced him to remove to the former place, thinking to invest his surplus money in groceries, which he could sell for gold dust, and, if dissatisfied with the country, could go on to California with gold instead of greenbacks. Accordingly, in the spring of 1864, he outfitted six ox teams, four yoke of oxen to each wagon, and loaded them principally with groceries and provisions. With this outfit and his family he left Omaha about the first of June, his family then consisting of his wife and two little sons. More than 1,500 miles had been traversed, 500 of which were through a hostile Indian country, and more than five months had been consumed on the road, when they reached their destination, without serious accident to himself or family, and all in good health and spirits.

October 10, 1864, Mr. Thomas settled on a ranch near the present site of Manhattan, on the west side of the West Gallatin river, in Gallatin county, Montana. Here he soon erected a house, eighteen by twenty feet, built of cottonwood logs, with dirt roof and puncheon floor; and here he lived and farmed until 1871, in the meantime his primitive cabin having given way to a much more comfortable house. On his farm he used the first gang plow that was ever introduced into Montana. That was in 1866.

In 1871 Mr. Thomas removed to Gallatin to take charge of the Madison Flouring Mill, of which he had become sole owner. Here he had a wide field for his progressive spirit, studying the art of milling and planning improvements which he deemed necessary to establish a successful business. The following year he made changes and improvments in the mill and started "Thomas' Extra," a fancy grade of flour, which he put up with such uniform quality and excellence that it soon took the lead at $1 per hundred pounds more than any other flour manufactured in Montana. This grade stood at the head of the flour market in Montana until 1879, although several millers had made an attempt for more than three years to compete with it. He became his own competitor and placed "Thomas' White Rose" on the market, it soon taking the lead and becoming famous. His middlings purifier, which he put in operation in 1874, was the first machinery of the kind ever brought to Montana. That same year he also brought the first emery wheel buhr dresser to this place. Early in the spring of 1877 he secured one of the finest water powers in the county, and in July of that year visited Minneapolis and Milwaukee, noted for their fine mills, the improvements in which he examined in detail. Having fully decided to build with the latest and most improved machinery, he contracted with Edward P. Allis & Company for a complete, three-run mill, and this mill he had the satisfaction of seeing completed in December, 1878. He very appropriately named it the Empire Mill. It had the largest capacity of all mills in the Territory at the time of its erection; is located on Ross creek, about eleven miles north of Bozeman. He has all these years conducted a large business, and not only personally superintends the mill but also keeps the books and attends to his extensive business correspondence.

Mr. Thomas is liberal in his dealings, and is generous to the needy, asking few favors but granting many. His integrity in business matters has been of great advantage to him, and that, coupled with a thorough knowledge of his trade, is the secret of his success. In business transactions his word is his bond, and is so regarded by those with whom he deals.

Ever since he took up his residence in Gallatin county, Mr. Thomas has been a leader among its citizens. He was the first Assessor of the county; was Clerk of the first grand jury impaneled in the county; in 1882 was nominated by the Republican convention for Councilman to the Territorial Legislature, to which position he was elected, and in which he served with credit to himself and his constituents. For this last named office Mr. Thomas' Democratic opponent was W. O. P. Hays, who had been elected before to the same office by a large majority. Mr. Hays and Mr. Thomas were neighbors and warm friends, and both belonged to the same Masonic Lodge and to the Grange, and when it is considered that Prickly Pear valley, from Montana City to Jefferson City, has its hills and mountain sides checked with quartz claims and mines as its valleys were with placers. McClellan, Mitchell, Clancy, Jackson Creek, Clark's Creek, and Holmes' Gulch all have numerous quartz mines and claims more or less developed. The Clancy group have proved very rich with development.

In the foot-hills opposite Montana City are a great number of mines and prospects. Among those most developed is the Bonanza Chief, which has a twenty-stamp mill for working its ores. The ores in this region are free-milling down to permanent water.

The Little Emma, Sterling Price, and Marietta, on Jackson creek, are noted for their rich ores and large returns. Harrison and Molly Hunter on Sky High Gulch and Standard, Water-Witch, Rising Sun, Rainbow, Hopeful, Silver King, Little May, Rebecca, Trojan and Yellow Jacket are samples of a large number of the district was strongly Democratic, Mr. Thomas' election, although by a small majority, was highly complimentary to him.

Although Mr. Thomas has been a Republican ever since the party was organized, has taken an active and prominent part in its campaigns and grown gray in its service, he declares to-day, July 21, 1893, that he will no longer support the old party, as he differs with it on the financial question, which he believes is the most important and vital question before the people, and must be solved in the interest of the masses by the adoption of a bill for the free and unlimited coinage of silver. While not a member of a church, Mr. Thomas believes in the Christian religion and has all his life contributed liberally to its support. In Masonry he has taken the Royal Arch degree, and was twice Master of Washington Lodge, of Montana Territory. He is a member of the Millers' National Association.

Of his family we record that it now consists of six children, one child, Annie Julia, having died in 1863, and his devoted wife having passed away January 26, 1890. The names of his children are as follows: Samuel Homer, George Edgar, Lillian Eugenia, James Finley, Rosa Alberta and Sarah Isabella. All except the two youngest girls are doing for themselves, and the oldest son, Samuel Homer, is married, and resides at Neihart, this State.

Mr. Thomas' prominence in past years has given him a place among the leading men of his day. A sketch of his life appears in the first history of Montana, and in the United States Biographical Dictionary and Portrait Gallery of Eminent Self-made Men, Illinois volume, published in 1883, we find a sketch of his life and a steel portrait of him. From the last named volume this article has been largely copied.

JUDGE FRANK HENRY.—In this great Western country with its vast resources and rapidly growing cities, a young man is able to accomplish in a decade or two as much perhaps as a man of equal ability can in a lifetime in the over-crowded centers of the East. A knowledge of this fact and a desire to bring about the best results within the least possible time have brought to the Western States and Territories many of the most enterprising young men from the East. Probably no better example of this class of men can be found than in the person of our subject—Frank Henry, Judge of the Sixth Judicial District, comprising Park and Meagher counties, Montana. He hails from Ohio, that grand old State that has furnished so many men to occupy prominent and useful positions all over the country, and of his life we present the following review, which, although brief, will serve to show something of his characteristics as well as his great popularity.

Judge Henry was born in Dayton, Ohio, in 1855, son of James M. and Elizabeth (Reid) Henry. His father was a Christian minister, and was pastor of one church in Dayton for a period of sixteen years. The Henrys are descended from Scotch-Irish ancestors. The subject of our sketch grew to manhood in Ohio and Indiana, where he received a common-school education, which he supplemented by reading and study outside of school, and thus prepared himself for any position he migh choose. About the time he reached his majority he removed to Chillicothe, Missouri, where he at once began the study of law under the instructions of Luther T. Collier, and was there admitted to the bar in 1878. He was elected City Attorney for Chillicothe in 1879, which position he filled most creditably. He continued the practice of his profession in that city until 1883, when he came to Montana and entered upon a professional career at Livingston. Here he soon became well and favorably known, and in 1886 was elected Prosecuting Attorney for Gallatin county, which necessitated his removal to Bozeman. After filling the position nearly two years, he resigned and returned to Livingston. He was the first City Attorney of Livingston after it was incorporated as a city. He was first elected Judge in October, 1889, when the district comprised Gallatin, Park and Meagher counties, his opponent for judicial honors at that time being M. J. Liddell, a native of Louisiana, who had presided as Territorial Judge of Montana. Judge Henry defeated him by several hun quartz claims on Clark's creek and Holmes' Gulch. On Packer are Pay-up and Fine Gold; on Big Indian are the Gold-Hill and Alabama.

At Porter Grove Camp, north of Dog Town are the Eureka, Eureka Extension, Anna, St. Louis, Golden Crown, Travonia, Lost Horse, Potomac and Great Western. The above are not more than a tenth of the mines and mining claims in Jefferson county. Every foot-hill and mountain seems intersected with veins of gold, silver, copper and lead; and every gulch and creek carry gravels rich in nuggets and fine gold. During 1890, 1,660 mining claims were recorded, 1,466 quartz claims and 194 placers.

Mills run all the time on these ores and the granite walls, so rich is this granite in gold.

Mills.—Elkhorn mill at Elkhorn, thirty stamps; Bonanza Chief mill at Montana City, ten stamps; Keating mill at Radersburg, twenty stamps; Iron Age mill at Beaver creek, ten stamps; Smith mill on Indian creek, twenty stamps; Dumphy mill in Park district, twenty stamps; Jewell & Sage mill on McClellan, twenty stamps; and Emanuel mill in Park district, five stamps.

Concentrators.—Comet at Comet, Corbin at Corbin, Cataract at Cataract, and the Hot Springs concentrator.

dred majority, which showed his popularity in the district. His first term on the bench gave such satisfaction that at the last judicial election he had no opposition whatever. Wherever he is known he has the reputation of being a fearless and impartial judge. He is courteous and unassuming in manner and is ever ready to hear the most humble citizens. His time and study are wholly given to his profession.

Judge Henry is a member of Yellowstone Lodge, K. of P., Livingston, which was organized in 1884. He was the first Chancellor of the order here and has filled all its chairs. Politically, he is a Republican, but in no sense is he a politician.

In 1880 Judge Henry married Miss Julia Ballinger, daughter of M. S. Ballinger, of Livingston, Montana. They have one child, a son, Merrill.

Finis Barnet Miller, deceased, was ranked with the Montana pioneers of 1864 and was for a number of years an honored resident of the Territory.

Mr. Miller was born in Louisville, Kentucky, November 15, 1815, a descendant of Scotch ancestors who were early settlers of the South, where they were prominent and wealthy planters. He was twice married. By his first wife he had a son and daughter, the former now deceased, and the latter now the wife of Charles G. Comstock, of St. Joseph, Missouri. In 1851 he married Miss Lucy Ann Kendall, a native of Louisville, Kentucky, and after their marriage they removed to Missouri. He engaged in merchandising at St. Joseph and continued there until 1862, when he removed to Denver, Colorado. In 1864 he returned to St. Joseph and that same year crossed the plains with his wife and five children to Montana, the long and perilous journey across the plains being made with ox-teams and covering a period of four months. They finally landed at Virginia City in safety and he opened up his stock of goods and did business there until the following year. In 1865 he went to Helena and engages in the hardware business with Messrs. Clark and Conrad, under the firm name of Clark, Conrad & Miller, and continued there until 1869. That year he removed to Deer Lodge, established himself in the hardware business here, and here he soon acquired a large trade,—indeed, such an extensive trade that ere long he became known as the Iron King of Montana.

In 1875 Mr. Miller sold out and removed with his family to Oakland, California, where he spent the residue of his life and died, the date of his death being September 29, 1881, and at the time of his death in his sixty-sixth year.

Mr. Miller was a Christian in the truest sense of the word. His influence was always on the side of religion and good morals. At Deer Lodge he was prominent in securing the closing of the stores on Sunday. He aided in the organization of the Presbyterian Church at this place, helped to build their house of worship, and was one of the most ardent and liberal supporters of the Church while he remained in Deer Lodge. His political views were in harmony with the principles of the Democratic party, with which he affiliated all his life. In every respect he was a man of the highest integrity of character.

Mrs. Miller and a part of her children still reside in California. One son, George S., is a resident of Deer Lodge, Montana. He honors the memory of his worthy father, and it was through his kindness that we secured the data for this brief sketch.

Dr. W. P. Mills, a prominent member of the medical profession of Missoula, Montana, is a native of Missouri, born in Pettis county, September 27, 1857. His maternal ancestors were German and his paternal ancestors were Scotch. Several generations on both sides of the family, however, were born in America. Grandfather Mills served in the war of 1812, and lived to be an octogenarian, while Grandmother Mills lived to be nearly as old, her death occurring in her seventy-eight years. Both were earnest Christians and faithful members of the

LEWIS & CLARKE COUNTY.

Minining in Lewis and Clarke county began early in Last Chance, where the Queen City of the mountains has laid the foundations of her warehouses. Last Chance has paid miners' drafts to the amount of some $30,000,000, and is continuing to pay them with a liberal hand. All the principal business houses of Helena have their foundations in gravels that have paid or would pay if the miners were permitted to present their claims. Oro Fino and its tributaries—Park, Arastra, Squaw and Limekiln Gulches—were the feeders of Last Chance, and all have liberally paid the miner for his work. In the mountains around these gulches are the hundred veins of quartz from which the Last Chance glacier ground out the gold so abundant in all these gulches; hence were the Whitlatch Union and the mills to crush its ores.

A few hundred yards east of Last Chance is Dry Gulch, once filled with busy miners, but now a busy street of the Queen City. Above Baptist Church. For many years they were residents of Kentucky. In their family were six children, one of whom, James H., was the Doctor's father. James H. Mills was born in Kentucky and reared in Missouri, marrying in the latter State Miss Kate Parsons, a native of Virginia, and a daughter of Isaac Parsons, his people having come to Virginia from England at an early period in the history of this country. The subject of our sketch is the eldest in their family of seven children, four of whom are living. The parents removed to Montana in 1883 and settled on a ranch in Missoula county, where they still make their home.

Dr. Mills received his literary education in Missouri and his medical education in New York city, at the Bellevue Hospital Medical College, of which institution he is a graduate with the class of 1879. He began his practice at Sweet Springs, Missouri, where he resided until 1882, at which time he came to Missouri. One of his objects in coming to Montana was for a residence in a higher altitude, hoping that thereby his health would be benefited. After his arrival here he traveled all over the State to select a suitable location and finally selected Missoula. He accordingly settled here, and at once began the practice of his profession, at first being in partnership with Dr. Henke and serving as physician for the construction force of the Rocky mountain division of the Northern Pacific Railroad. In this position he continued during the building of the road over the mountains.

From 1889 until 1892 Dr. Mills and Dr. Parsons were partners, but since the latter date our subject has practiced alone and has met with very satisfactory success. He now has a thoroughly equipped office in the First National Bank building. Dr. Mills is a member of the State Medical Association, and has served as president of the County Medical Association.

June 15, 1881, he was married at Sweet Springs, Missouri, to Miss Lizzie West, a native of Maryland, and daughter of Thomas H. West of that State. They have two children, William Gilbert and Mary Almeda.

Politically, the Doctor affiliates with the Democratic party; fraternally, he is an I. O. O. F., having passed all the chairs in both branches of that order. Mrs. Mills is a woman of rare domestic and social graces, and is a worthy member of the Christian Church. Few people in Missoula have more friends than the genial Doctor and his amiable wife.

THOMAS FOLEY, one of Montana's earliest pioneers, and now one of Missoula county's most worthy farmers, was born in county Mayo, Ireland, on St. Thomas Day, 1836, a son of Patrick and Mary (McCue) Foley. In 1846 the entire family, consisting of two daughters and three sons, came to America, locating in Pennsylvania, where the father was engaged in coal mining until 1849. He then returned to Ireland on business, and his death occurred there in his forty-eighth year. His wife departed this life in 1841. They were devout members of the Catholic Church.

Thomas, their youngest child in order of birth, went to Providence, Rhode Island, in 1850, where he remained until 1855. While there he was promoted to the position of foreman in a factory. He next worked as a farm hand in Wisconsin at $15 per month, was afterward able to command $20 a month, and later farmed land on the shares. In April, 1860, inspired with a spirit of adventure, and with a desire for gold-hunting, Mr. Foley crossed the plains to Pike's Peak, Colorado, where he followed mining, with only moderate success. In the spring of 1863 he came to Alder Gulch, Montana, remaining there until the following fall, and received from $7 to $13 a day; also worked a claim of his own. From there Mr. Foley came to his present location, in the Bitter Root valley, which was then almost a wilderness. In October, 1864, he began work on the new farm, his early efforts at raising grain and vegetables meeting with good success, for which he found a ready market at the various mining camps. His wheat sold for $5 per bushel, and other products equally high. Mr. Foley added to his land from time to time until he now owns are West Dry Gulch, Tucker and Big Indian, all once rich in placers, all rich still in placers, and much richer in quartz. Here Tucker joins hands over the divide with Big Indian, and Sky High in Jefferson county. Before the water famine a bed-rock flume was working up Dry Gulch with a big giant in front cleaning up the gravels from rim-rock to rim-rock. Three miles west of Last Chance is the Ten Mile, where the Broadwater and the great Natatorium are built in the golden sands, which extend along the bed of the creek for more than twenty miles up into the main range, where Red mountain rears his imperial head, intersected with veins of precious ores, and where the R. E. Lee, the Peerless Jenny, the Eureka, Atlanta and a hundred other mines attracted two railroads and fostered the young city of Rimini.

A little further west is the Helena District, and then to the northwest are the Scratch-Gravel placers, and veins so rich that nature must needs make them small, and veins so large the gold was not sufficient to make them rich. Then come Iowa, Butcher-Knife and Spring Gulches, not so inviting in placers, but the sur-480 acres, and also has a large free range for his stock.

Our subject was married in Rhode Island, to Miss Ellen Calvey, also a native of county Mayo, Ireland. In the early days of Missoula county, Mr. and Mrs. Foley were the only Catholics at River Bend, and Father Ravalli often stopped at their home. They assisted liberally in the erection of the fine church edifice at Missoula. In political matters Mr. Foley was formerly identified with the Democratic party, but recently, with reference to the silver question, has cast his vote with the People's party. During his quiet but industrious life he has made hosts of friends.

CHARLES HENRY FLANAGIN, a Montana pioneer of 1864, and now a successful farmer in the Bitter Root valley, was born in Westfield, Medina county, Ohio, September 30, 1825. His great-grandfather was born in Ireland and subsequently emigrated to New York, where the father of our subject, B. Flanagin, was born. He married a Miss Cook, a native of Connecticut, who died at the age of forty-five years. They had six children, three of whom are still living.

Charles H., our subject, was left an orphan at the age of sixteen years, and the care of his younger brother then devolved upon him. He worked at the carpenter's trade and at farming. At the age of twenty-five years he purchased land in Illinois, sold his property there in 1858, spent the following five years on a farm in Iowa, and in 1864 crossed the plains with horses to Montana. After arriving in this State Mr. Flanagin began mining at Bannack. He brought his wife and three children to Montana, and two years afterward was joined by the remainder of his family. Our subject subsequently came to the Bitter Root valley, where he was first engaged in hauling produce to the miners at Bannack; from the spring of 1865 until the following July, sold milk to the miners at Alder Gulch, and next purchased a toll gate on Jefferson river, where he also conducted a stage station. He often made as high as $500 in a day from his toll gate. Mr. Flanagin afterward owned a ferry-boat, which he sold for $2,500. In 1866 he purchased a ranch in Jefferson county, Montana; from 1879 to 1880 owned and resided on a farm near his present location in the Bitter Root valley, and in the latter year bought out his present piece of 320 acres, located four miles south of Stevensville. In 1890 Mr. Flanagin built a good farm residence.

Our subject was married at the age of nineteen years to Miss Mary Stringham. They had six children, four now living: Eliza, wife of Russ Wiley, of Butte, Montana; Catherine, widow of a Mr. Sloper, and a resident of East Portland, Oregon; Mary, wife of a Mr. Hughes, of Wisconsin; and ——— The wife and mother died in 1856. Two years afterward Mr. Flanagin married Mrs. Deland, nee Baldwin. She had one daughter by her former marriage, Elizabeth, who remained with Mr. and Mrs. Flanagan until her death, at the age of seventeen years. In his political relations, Mr. Flanagan is identified with the Republican party.

ANTONE HORSKY, a prominent farmer of Prickly Pear valley, near Helena, Montana, is a native of Austria, born July 1, 1852. When three years old he came with his father and family to America, first located in Iowa, four years later removed to Nebraska, and in 1866 came to Montana, Antone being fourteen years of age at the time they arrived here. They spent the winter in Helena, and in the spring of 1867 his father purchased two ranches of 160 acres each on Prickly Pear creek, to which place he removed his family. Here the subject of our sketch resided nine years. From the time he left home up to 1884 he was engaged in stock-raising and mining.

June 24, 1884, Mr. Horsky purchased his present farm, 320 acres, for which he paid $6,000 down, money he had earned and saved, and went in debt on the land for $2,000. He then purchased stock and machinery with which to operate his farm, going in debt for these, this, together with what he still owed on the land, amounting to $11,000. Prosperity from the start attended his efforts, and soon from the proceeds of his hay and horses and cattle rounding mountains are full of veins rich in gold and silver. The north fork of Ten Mile is the Seven Mile, whose bed is a continuous placer from the Seven Mile House to the Greenhorn and the main divide on both sides of the Mullan Tunnel. Next north, we come to Silver Creek, rich in placers, which come down from the Drum Lummon and other mines, for whose treasures two railroads laid their tracks up to Marysville. On the north side of Silver Creek comes Trinity, drawing its golden sands from the Gloster and Empire mines. North of Trinity are Cañon and Lyons creeks, leading up to the Jay Gould and Stemple. From Lyons creek north, but few veins are known till we reach the promising mines of Wolf creek. Several quartz claims have been opened on the Dearborn and others on the head waters of Sun river.

The mountains between the Prickly Pear valley and the Missouri have several promising prospects. East of Helena, in the mountains between Helena and Holmes Gulch, is a group of quartz mines and prospects. Of these the Humboldt has proved the most productive. In the limestone on the ridge above, and south, several claims have been located. The develophe was enabled to pay off his indebtedness. His lands are largely meadow. From his broad acres he cuts no less than 250 tons of hay per annum, and for it as well as his stock he has always found a ready market in Helena. He has made a specialty of the Norman Percheron breed of horses.

Mr. Horsky was married January 1, 1880, to Miss Mary Morave, a native of Austria. They have two children, Antone J. and Emory D. From his home a magnificent view of the city of Helena is obtained, he being located nine miles northeast from the city.

Mr. Horsky is a member of King Solomon Lodge, A. F. & A. M. of Helena, and is also a member of the A. O. U. W. Politically he is a Republican.

J. J. and F. H. NICKEY are dealers in real estate, mining stock and live stock at Billings. J. J. Nickey, the senior member of the firm, was born in Wisconsin, in 1845, his parents being natives of Pennsylvania. Our subject grew to manhood in his native State, where he received a good business education. During the late war he patriotically went forth in the defense of the Union, enlisting in 1861, in the Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry. He now draws a pension for disability incurred in army service. After the close of the war he engaged in contracting and building. Mr Nickey finally came to Billings, Montana, erected the Park Hotel in this city, which was destroyed by fire in 1886, and, in company with J. J Walk, built the present Grand Hotel In 1889 he closed his hotel interests, and since that time has followed the occupation noted in the opening of this paragraph.

Mr. Nickey was married in 1868, to Margaret Evans, a native of Wisconsin. Her ancestors were originally from Wales. To this union have been born five children. F. H. Nickey, engaged in business with his father, is twenty-four years of age, and is a bright and courteous young gentleman. He received a good business education, and has charge of his father's office at Billings, as the latter spends much of his time in looking after their mining interests in Butte. The son has a bright future, is improving his many opportunities, is well and favorably known, and is deservedly popular in business and social circles. The four younger children of Mr. and Mrs. Nickey are: Orren, aged eighteen years; Blanche, sixteen years; and Beulah, fourteen years. Both father and son are Republican in their political views.

B. Y. BLODGET, a successful and enterprising farmer of the Bitter Root valley, located three miles south of Grantsdale, was born in Ogden, Utah, in 1852, a son of Newman Greenleaf Blodget, who was born in Vermont, September 22, 1800. He spent his early life in his native State, and was there married. His wife died, leaving five children. Mr. Blodget was afterward married to Eliza, beth E. Reid, the mother of our subject. They then located in Council Bluffs, Iowa, and in 1850 removed to North Ogden, Utah, where the father died in 1882. He was a farmer and carpenter by occupation, and was a Mormon in his religious faith. His widow is still living, aged seventy-four years.

Brigham Young, the eighth in a family of eleven children,—six daughters and five sons,—received his education in the public schools of Ogden. In 1871, at the age of nineteen years, he came to Montana, and engaged in freighting from Bitter Root to Corinne, and also over the entire settled portion of the Territory, continuing that occupation until the railroad was built. April 10, 1878, Mr. Blodget secured from the Government his present farm of 320 acres.

May 22, 1878, he was united in marriage to Miss Adaline Josephine Blodget, a native of Montana, and a daughter of Joseph Smith Blodget, of Utah. Although of the same name they were not related. To that union were born four children, one of whom died in infancy, and a son, Horace Bliss, died at the age of twelve years. The surviving children are: Tyreen Ann and Newman Benjamin. The wife and mother died in 1885. Mr. Blodget was formerly identified with the Democratic party but, on account of the silver question, has decided to join the ranks of the Populists. He is Senior Warden of the Masonic order at Hamilton, and Noble Grand of the I. O. O. F., of Grantsdale.

ments of those back of this work created quite a stampede, which, however, soon ended by the limits of the field of operations.

Several branches of Ten Mile are rich in quartz veins. Ophir Gulch has several good quartz mines. Blue Cloud Gulch has some promising mines, and a ten-stamp mill was erected to work the ores of the Blue Cloud. The War Eagle, Golden Eagle, Sucker, Lincoln, and other prospects are in this gulch. Nelson Gulch, once famous for its rich placers, has several good quartz mines,—the Shober, Manassas, Sagamore, Robedeaux and Yellow Boy. Opposite Nelson is the Old Battle Ground, and in the foothills above are the Humboldt, Claggett, Old Dominion, Morning Star, Carrie, Flora, and several other prospects carrying copper and silver and gold. Colorado Gulch has a large number of quartz claims, some of them partially developed. The King David, Hopewell, Ingersol, Baby, Trustful, Champlain, Banner, Princess, Sunnyside, Florence, B. & R., Cambria, Wanderer and Gold Flake may be named as showing good ores.

Red mountain has a large number of mines, and a large amount of work has been done to

JOHN BERTRAND CLAYBERG, of the firm of McConnell, Clayberg & Gunn, attorneys, Helena, Montana, is one of the leading and successful practitioners of the Montana bar.

He is an Illinoisan by birth, born near Cuba, Fulton county, October 8, 1853, a son of George and Elizabeth (Baughman) Clayberg, the former of Saxon, the latter of German, descent. Young Clayberg's early life was passed with his parents on a farm. In his youth he had more than average advantages for acquiring an education, and before attaining his majority was a good academic scholar, with a fair knowledge of Latin and French. Having a natural aptitude for the law, in 1871 he entered the law department of the University of Michigan, at Ann Arbor, taking the full course, and was graduated in 1875. While there, as supplemental to his already acquired literary education, he took up selected important branches each year of his law course. During the last year of his term and the year succeeding graduation, he aided in a clerical capacity the distinguished Judge T. M. Cooley, who at the time was the head of the law department of the university, in obtaining and arranging the data of that eminent jurist's works on Taxation, Torts and other works of highly important character.

His professional equipment being now complete, early in 1876 he entered into a copartnership in law practice with S. L. Kilbourne, of Lansing, Michigan, which connection was terminated in 1878. He then became associated with Robert J. Kelley, of Alpena, Michigan, with whom he successfully practiced till 1884, at which time he came to Helena and entered into practice with Hon. T. H. Carter. In 1889 Judge N. W. McConnell was admitted to the firm. In 1891 Mr. Carter was elected to Congress, when his interest was purchased, and in 1892 the present firm was established. The practice of these gentlemen extends to all the courts of the State and the United States, and it enjoys a clientage second to no law firm in Montana.

As a general practitioner or counselor Mr. Clayberg takes high rank in the legal profession. He is cogent, incisive and clear in utterance, and his reasoning is inspired by logic so forcible that his opponents rarely dislodge him; and in the preparation of his cases he is thorough, mastering to the minutest detail every scintilla of evidence, in the arrangement of which it is said he displays the sagacity of a field marshal. As a counselor he is deliberate, pondering well the points as they touch parallels in his wide range of reading and practice, and, being somewhat conservative, reaches conclusions through a process of mental comparisons peculiar to trained thinkers. To his profession he is devoted, and is a close student in the literature of law. He is without political ambition, having never desired any, and having filled but a single official place, that of Attorney General of Montana, in 1891. During this same year the regents of the University of Michigan appointed him lecturer on mining law to that institution, a position he is eminently qualified to fill, as his practice since residing in Montana has largely been in connection with mining cases.

Socially he is a member of the Masonic order, and also of the order of Elks. Politically he is a Democrat, but is little interested in party affairs, further than the exercise of franchise in the discharge of the duties incumbent upon good citizenship.

His marriage to Miss Kate C., daughter of C. Y. Edwards, was consummated in Michigan, September 10, 1878. Two sons grace their union,—Hobart L. and Edmund E.

JOHN H. RUMPING, one of the prominent mine owners of Marysville, was born in Hanover, Germany, August 24, 1854. His father, Colonel Phil Rumping, served as Colonel under the Hanover Government. He was a descendant of the great family of Windhursts, one of Germany's most noted families. His own name was Lumdesh, but took the name of the lady he married to enable him to hold the estate on which they still reside. They have reached the ripe old ages of seventy and seventy-three years, respectively, and are still in the enjoyment of good health. One of their ancestors made his wealth as a dealer in lumber, and at his death endowed a develop them. Among them are the Legal Tender, Garfield, Gregory, Silver Reef, Saratoga, Emma, Granite, Mountain, Iron Cap, Iron Dollar, Ontario, Snowdrift, Alcada, Mizpah, and many others. Reed's Tunnel, Russel's Tunnel, Merrill's Tunnel and a large number of other claims are in Red mountain. On the mountain east of Rimini are the Atlanta, Gum-Boot Jim, Hunter and General Shields. The Atlanta has been much worked and large bodies of silver ore are found.

Below Rimini are the Capitol, Yellow Boy, Bonanza, Little Bonanza, Mac, Enterprise, Knickerbocker, Tin Horn, Morning Star, April Fool, Stonewall Jackson and Washington. Such are some of the mines and mining claims on the Ten-Mile and its tributaries. Many of them are producing mines which ship ores to mills and smelters.

The Helena District, just west of the Broadwater, has many claims partially developed which promise well. college with the proviso that his posterity should have a free scholarship in the same for four generations. Mr. and Mrs. Rumping had four sons and four daughters.

John H. Rumping, the subject of this sketch, came to America in 1870, at the age of sixteen years, after which he resided in Cincinnati, Ohio, until 1873. In that year he took passage on the Charles Mead for St. Louis, with the intention of going to the gold excitement at the Black Hills. Learning that the Government troops had compelled the emigrants to return, on account of the conduct of the Indians, Mr. Rumping accepted a position as engineer in a flouring mill, remaining in that city until the spring of 1878. Still desiring to reach the gold fields, he engaged at St. Louis as engineer on the Fontenelle, and came to the Cheyenne agency. He afterward returned to Yankton, took merchandise to Fort Benton for the Government, and next came to Helena to look for a position as engineer, but was unsuccessful. He then tramped to Silver creek, where he met the pioneer, William Brown, who gave him information in regard to the resources of the creek. Mr. Rumping first mined on Silver creek for John Brooks, afterward worked for Nathan Vestal at Penobscot, assisted in building the Belmont mill, and next purchased an interest in a prospect which proved worthless, losing $260 in the transaction. Not discouraged by this failure, he invested his earnings in mining property, and became very successful. At one time he paid $250 for a one-sixth interest in a mine, and afterward sold his share for $12,500. Soon afterward Mr. Rumping purchased a one-third interest for $500 in lot 48, of the Fabian placer claim, in which he sold his share for $1,200, also receiving a two-thirds interest in the Oregon placer claim. He mined on that property two years, and took out considerable gold. He now owns thirty-seven acres of placer land north of Marysville, 320 in Judea Basin, four miles below Stanford; two residences at Marysville, two at Belmont, has 2,000 shares in the Bald Butte, 25,000 shares in the General Grant, one-sixth interest in the Secot Group, five-sixths interests in the Shakopee, and a half interest in the Nile. Although Mr. Rumping has had many varied experiences in Montana he has held his own among the capable and successful mining men of the county, and has accumulated valuable mining property.

He was married in St. Louis, in October, 1876, to Miss Eva Specht, a native of North Vernon, Indiana. They have had four children, the eldest of whom, Mary G., was born in St. Louis, and the remainder—John Joseph, William Walter and Maud C.,—were born in Montana. The family reside in Marysville. In political matters Mr. Rumping acts with the Democratic party, but, although well informed on all the topics of the day, gives his time and attention principally to mines and mining. He has visited his relatives and his childhood home in Europe, but is a pronounced American citizen, in full sympathy with all that is American, and is only one of hundreds of thousands of Germany's brave sons who have come to this free land to make their own way in the world, and by their own efforts have become our most enterprising citizens.

McPhail Brothers.—Allen and Archie McPhail, prominent residents of New Chicago, are both early settlers of Montana, and as such we make personal mention of them in this work.

Archie and Christie (McIntosh) McPhail, parents of these gentlemen, were natives, respectively, of Scotland and Canada. Archie McPhail emigrated to Canada in his youth, was there married, and on a farm in that country reared his family, passed his life and died, he being ninety at the time of death and his good wife living to the advanced age of ninety-two. They were devout members of the Catholic Church and their lives were characterized by honesty and industry. They reared a family of ten children, nine of whom are living.

Allen was their eighth child. He was born August 8, 1836, and was early in life inured to hard work on the farm, receiving only limited educational advantages. When he was twenty-four years old he crossed the plains to Pike's Peak, thence to Virginia City, on to Helena and from there to Blackfoot City. His brother Archie had and the Missouri river, are found the Silver King, Silver Brick, Deer Trail, Silver Cup and Golden Messenger. These and other prospects show the evidence of true veins in these mountains. Seven Mile, the western fork of Ten Mile, has the War Eagle, San Jose, Gem, Jennie Lind, Cheyenne Bill, Francis Spring, and many other good mines and prospects. On Greenhorn, a fork of Seven Mile, placer mining is still prosperous, and several promising quartz claims are located, such as the North Pacific.

Marysville District is well known for the Drum Lummon, St. Louis, May, Pittsburg, Gold Hill, Louisiana, Big Ox group, General Jackson, Empire, Rose Denmore, Mayflower, Uncle Ben, North Star, South Montana, Peggy Ann, Champion, Vanderbilt, Coyota, Florence, Irish Girl, Bell, Last Hope, Bull and Bear, Johnson, Richmond, Wood Chopper and Frankia. South and west of Drum Lummon are the T. H. Meagher, Bon Mahon, Star of the West, K. of S., Lewis, Montana, St. Louis, Prospect, Marble Heart, preceded him to Montana, and after this they were together in all their prospecting tours and mining enterprises, visiting the various mining districts of the State and meeting with the usual miner's luck—sometimes successful and sometimes not. They were at Diamond City, Elk and Bannack, on the stampede to Salmon river and back again, and finally located at Phillipsburg, where they spent one winter cutting cord-wood for the St. Louis Company, at $6 per cord. Afterward we find them at Hudson Gulch, Highland Gulch, and again at Phillipsburg, and the following winter in Bitter Root valley. Returning to Hudson gulch, they mined there until the water failed, when they went to Pioneer and worked for wages. At Cedar creek they purchased mining land and mined and made some money. The next winter they spent at Missoula and the following summer at Pioneer. From Pioneer they came to their present location. Here they took claim to a tract of land and engaged in stock-raising, and at one time had 500 head of cattle. They have acquired other lands and are now the owners of a thousand acres, well improved with good residences, etc. In 1882 they built the Valley Hotel, which they are still running, doing a prosperous business.

Mr. Allen McPhail was married in 1879 to Miss Lena Cosher, a native of Maine. They have four children, all born at New Chicago, their names being as follows: Emory, Nettie, Annie and Christie.

Archie McPhail was born in Canada, August 21, 1837. He crossed the plains in 1862, driving a horse team to Omaha, and oxen from there to Montana, landing at Bannack soon after the discovery of gold at that place. He mined there until gold was discovered at Alder Gulch and was among others that rushed for that place. At Alder Gulch he mined until the following May, taking out considerable gold and being there during the exciting times with the road agents; saw some of them hung, When the excitement broke out over the discovery of gold at Kootenai, he went there and mined successfully returning in October to his home in Canada and taking a large sum of gold. This return trip was made to Walla Walla, thence to San Francisco and from there around to Canada by water. After remaining at his old home two months, he again crossed the plains, this time with a mule team, his brother Allen coming with him. From that time up to the present the history of the two brothers has been almost identical. They began to keep hotel at New Chicago in 1879. In 1882 they were burned out, but immediately rebuilt and have since been catering to the public.

Mr. Archie McPhail was married in 1878 to Miss Annie McCabe, a native of St. Joseph, Missouri. She came to Montana in 1864 and was before her marriage a popular and successful teacher. They have three children, John Allen, Roy Daniel and Newell Mathew.

The Messrs. McPhail are Republicans. They are typical pioneers, generous and genial, and their wholehearted hospitality makes their house a favorite stopping place.

Dillon Marceau, a Montana pioneer of 1864, and now a successful farmer of Grass valley, was born in Canada, twenty-four miles south of Montreal, in 1837, and is of French descent. His ancestors located in Canada, where his father, Joseph Marceau, was born. He was married about 1832, to Miss Mollie Piedalue, and they had three children. Mr. Marceau participated in the Revolution of 1837–8, for which he was transported by the Government to Australia, and in addition to that great trouble the wife died and was buried on the day that the husband and father sailed. He was afterward released, and was again married, eleven children having been added to that union. Mr. Marceau is still living, at the age of ninety-two years.

Dillon Marceau, the youngest of the three children, was only one year old when his mother died, and was raised by his grandfather, Paul Piedalue. He left Canada for California in January, 1859, via the Isthmus, followed mining in El Dorado and Calaveras counties, afterward went to Oregon, and in 1864 arrived in Montana. In 1869 Mr. Marceau returned to his native country, and March 10, 1870, was united in marriage with Miss Mathilda Gadyette, a native of Canada. On the 16th of the same month they came to this State, a part of the journey having been made by railroad, and the remainder by teams. They arrived at Green valley April 20, 1870, and Mr. Marceau immediately purchased a right to school lands on which they have ever since resided. He now owns a Killy, Jeanette, Holland, Robert Emmett, Black Diamond, Marble, Little Phil, Louisiana, May, Pittsburg, Grey Eagle, Summit, Rose Cleveland, Intimidation, Atwood, Emma Muller, Hickey, Bluebird, Sanford and White Boy.

The Drum Lummon is one of the best mines in America. It has three mills, running 120 stamps, which crush from 6,000 to 7,000 tons per month, and yield some $100,000 per month —sometimes as much as $112,000. No mine is better equipped with all modern appliances, and none is better managed for profitable results and for the safety and health of its employes. The output of this mine since the present company took it is something over $8,000,000.

The Belmont also had a thirty-stamp mill, which gave abundant returns; but when the music of thirty stamps will once more awaken Belmont, no one knows. There is a fine group of mines on Lost Horse creek called Tousley Gulch. The Consort, Earthquake, General Grant, Tousley and Cement are promising valuable farm of 200 acres, where, in addition general farming he raises a good grade of Durham cattle and Norman-Percheron, Belmont and Morgan horses.

Mr. and Mrs. Marceau have had seven children, one of whom, Dillon, died at the age of seventeen years. The surviving children are: Zephina, Emma, Amanda, Leo Baptisti and Alfred.

Zelphina Marceau, a brother of our subject, was born in Canada, in 1836. He went to California in 1859, worked with and accompanied his brother to Washington and Oregon, in 1863 removed to Boise, Idaho, and in 1864 arrived in Montana. He was married in 1873 to his cousin, Lea Piedalue. They have a farm of 300 acres adjoining his brother's place. The brothers have been together nearly all their lives, and are well known and respected citizens in the county in which they have so long resided. Both families are members of the Catholic Church, and have aided liberally in erecting the church edifice at Frenchtown. Messrs. Marceau were formerly Democrats in their political views, but have recently been identified with the Populists, on account of the question of the free coinage of silver.

RODERICK D. LEGGAT, one of Butte City's most energetic and enterprising mining men, came to Montana in 1866 and has ever since been identified with its interests. Some personal mention of him is appropriate in this work; indeed, a history of the representative men of this part of the State would be incomplete without a sketch of his life.

Roderick D. Leggat was born in Albany, New York, June 14, 1836, the son of a worthy Scotchman who emigrated to this country in 1832 and settled in Albany. On another page of this work will be found the biography of John A. Leggat, in which more extended reference to the family is made.

Roderick D. was educated in Albany, New York, and at Grand Haven, Michigan, and in 1866 he came up the Missouri river in a steamboat, bringing a load of merchandise of which he and his brothers, John A. and Alexander, were owners. He opened a store at Helena, where he sold goods at wholesale for some time, and from there he removed to High Gulch, then in Deer Lodge county, but now in Silver Bow county, where he continued successfully in the mercantile business. While thus engaged he became interested in mining property, making purchases from time to time, and is now ranked with the wealthy mining men of the State. He owns all of Highland Gulch, which is six miles in length, and where he is doing hydraulic mining. He is interested in the Cordwell district, which comprises twenty-two claims, and he has also numerous other mining interests, owning claims in many of the counties of the State. He and other parties spent no less than $20,000 in developments on the Sand Creek property.

Mr. Leggat has been a resident of Butte City since 1878, and his public spirit and generosity have been manifested here in more ways than one. In connection with his brother, John A., and Mr. Lee Foster, he platted the Leggat addition to Butte City. This addition is east of the old town site, and much of it has been purchased and improved. Mr. Leggat's unceasing energy and his undaunted courage have been the chief characteristics of his life. The following little incident will give some idea of the kind of a man he is:

When the Northern Pacific railroad was completed and the golden spike was driven at Gold Creek, Mr. Villard brought out the foreign stockholders. Many of Montana's prominent citizens were invited, and among other distinguished guests was General Grant. Mrs. Villard and her little son were also present. Mr. Villard had a programme arranged which ignored all the Montana men and also left out the illustrious Grant. Mr. Leggat succeeded in getting up to the track near the spike, and after Mr. Villard had called on one or two of his great men to strike, Mr. Leggat cried out with a loud voice "Let Henry the second strike!" Mrs. Villard looked at her husband and said, "He means for our little son to strike." So they put the sledge in the child's hands and directed the blow. Much cheering followed. Then Mr. Leggat shouted with a loud voice, "General Grant, General Grant!" and the people cheered and the General stepped forward, and as he took the sledge to swing it, Mr. Leggat shouted, "Send her home, Grant!" With one hard blow the General struck the spike clear down to its head. Thus Mr. Leggat broke Mr. Villard's programme, and his course gave great satisfaction to his friends in claims. These mines show large quantities of ores rich in silver, gold, lead and copper. Some of them have shipped large quantities of ores. Here we also find the Summit, Bell Boy, Gleason, Nile, Republic, Jerusha, R. E. Lee, Gold Leaf, Cleveland, Tom Moran and St. Patrick. The Gloster and its sixty-stamp mill are idle for the good reason already mentioned. There are the Ophir, Regan and East Regan. The Empire and its sixty-stamp mill are still idle. There is no want of ore in the mine, and in the Whippoorwill, M. & L., Smithville, Homestake, American, Flag, Lost Whippoorwill, Puritan, Cornucopia, St. Lawrence, Triumph, Bronca, E. L. F. and Blackbird. The Jay Gould and its mill did good work for many years, much to the satisfaction of its owners.

French and Spokane Bars and their placers and other placers are on the Missouri between the Gate of the Mountain and Cañon Ferry. These placers still yield gold, but they have become more noted for their sapphires

Montana. One of the papers, afterward in commenting, upon his action, called him the "typical mountaineer." Mr. Leggat says he knew it was rude of him, but he was so exasperated at the slight to Montana's brave sons who had done so much for the road and had treated Mr. Villard so royally, that his action came to him spontaneously and he really could not help it.

Politically, Mr. Leggat has been an ardent Democrat all his life. Now, however, he is greatly displeased at the action of his party has taken on the silver question. He was reared in the faith of the Presbyterian Church, of which his parents were stanch members, but he himself has never joined any church or any society. While he is not a church member, he believes in churches and has liberally contributed to the building fund of every church in Butte City. He also helped to build the first church in Helena. In the advancement of education, too, has he done much, and the poor and needy have never been turned empty-handed from his door. Indeed, he is noted for his generosity.

Mr. Leggat was married January 19, 1891, to Mrs. Catharine Blake, widow of John Blake, both formerly of Indiana. They own and occupy one of the delightful homes of Butte City.

RICHARD P. BARDEN, County Treasurer of Lewis and Clarke county, Montana, is a native of Missouri, born in St. Louis, May 20, 1857.

Richard Barden, the father of Richard P., was born on the Emerald Isle, and in early life emigrated from that country to America, taking up his abode in Maine. In that State he was subsequently married to Miss Catharine O'Neal, a native of Maine. In 1856 they removed to Missouri, where he died in 1858, leaving a widow and infant son. Richard P. and his mother remained in Missouri until he was twelve years old, she in the meantime becoming the wife of Henry Adams, and in 1869 they came to Montana and located at Helena. Mrs. Adams still resides in Helena.

Mr. Barden attended school after coming to Montana, and his first employment was as clerk in a stationery store. Afterward he served three years as a clerk in the postoffice at Helena, and subsequently as deputy postmaster at Butte City. Upon his return to Helena he again entered the postoffice and acted as assistant one year. In 1887 he was elected Treasurer of the city of Helena. Two years later he was elected County Treasurer, and has been twice re-elected to succeed himself, and is now serving his third term. That he is an efficient public servant is evinced by his long continuance in the office. Half a million dollars go through his hands each year, and for the safe keeping of the county's money he furnishes a bond of $150,000.

Mr. Barden is a member of the Order of Elks, and in politics he is a Republican.

WILLIAM B. GEORGE, a popular young business man of Billings, was born in Platte county, Missouri, in 1865, a son of William P., and Fannie (Duncan) George. The maternal grandfather was an early pioneer of that county, was its first county judge, and was the most extensive hemp-producer in that region. The grandmother was a lineal descendant of the prominent family of Peytons in Virginia. William P. George was an extensive farmer was a director of a military institute and of a female orphan asylum at Camden Point, Missouri.

William B., our subject, attended school at Liberty, Missouri, afterward entered the State University at Columbia, that State, next took a course at Eastman's Business College, in Poughkeepsie, New York, and then taught school two terms in his native State. In 1885 Mr. George came to Helena, Montana, where he served as Secretary of the State Board of Education for a time, afterward served one year as Assistant Postmaster at Deer Lodge, for the following ten months was engaged as railway mail clerk between Helena and Billings, was engaged as assistant Postmaster at Billings two years, and in March, 1891, purchased the cigar and fruit business in the post-office building. He has since added confectionery, stationery and all newspaper periodicals. Mr. George also furnished and conducted the opera house for more than two years. He has served as city treasurer for the past three years, is assistant Postmaster at Billings, and is watch inspector for the Northern Pacific railroad.

Mr. George was married June 15, 1892, to Virginia F. Sleeper, a daughter of Nehemiah and Martha J. (Fleming) Sleeper. They have one son, Warren Peyton. Mr. George has filled the position of Senior Deacon in Ashlar than their gold. The gems gathered from them are oriental sapphires, which rival the diamond in their brilliant and varied reflections and in hardness and durability. The mountains between Prickly Pear valley and the Missouri have many good prospects.

Dry Gulch and its tributaries are fringed with hundreds of quartz mines and claims. A promising mine is opened on a regular vein of quartz in the city limits,—the Craig mine, on Rodney street. Just above town is the Ruby opened in limestone. Still higher up and on the west fork are the Geraldine, Jumbo, None Such, Ella Huron, Ella Howard, Blackstone, Sixy-four, Maginnis, Iron Age, Summit, Eleanor, Little Hope, Sutherlin, Clyde, Little Jennie, Buckeye, Oro Cache, Conductor, Wood Tick, Treasurer, Mayflower, Champion, J. E. Watson, Silver King, Iron, Sunset, Uncle Sam, Ben Alta, Iron King and others. Some of these mines have yielded considerable quantities of telluride of gold fabulously rich, as shown by

Lodge, No. 29, is a member of Chapter, No. 6, and Alde mar Commandery, No. 5, F. & A. M. of Billings; of the K. o P., of this city; of the Algeria Temple, of Helena; and is also a member of the Volunteer Fire Department. Both he and his wife are members of the Christian Church, and the former is a staunch Democrat in his political views.

HENRY BUCK, a prominent merchant of Stevensville, came to Montana in 1868. Of his life we make record as follows:

Henry Buck was born in Sandusky county, Ohio, August 13, 1846, of Swiss descent, his ancestors having emigrated to this country several generations ago and settled in Pennsylvania. He is a brother of Amos Buck and is the youngest in his father's family. In the public schools of Monroe county, Michigan, he received his early education, and in 1866 he graduated in the Commercial College at Albion, Michigan. Following his graduation he was for two years engaged in teaching school in Monroe county. In 1868 he came to Montana, and with his brothers, Fred and Amos, mined for two years in Lincoln Gulch, Deer Lodge county, their mining operations there, however, ending in failure. Next they went to Cedar creek, where they met with better success. They mined there in company with a number of others for four years, during which time the company took out $200,000, this amount being divided between six interests, the Buck brothers receiving one-sixth of this amount, less expenses of operating the mines. From Cedar creek they came to Bitter Root valley and located a ranch nine miles north of Stevensville, where they turned their attention to stock-raising. They did not, however, remain in the stock business long, their next venture being in the mercantile business in Stevensville. They purchased the store and stock of Joseph A. Lomme, took possession January 28, 1876, and from that date up to the present time they have had a successful career in the mercantile business. The frame building in which they began business was 22 x 40 feet, they had a stock of goods valued at $6,200, and for some time the firm name was Buck Brothers, composed of Fred, Amos and Henry Buck. They did a large retail business with the farmers, taking produce in exchange for goods, and running wagons to the different mining camps in Bannack, Fort Benton, Helena, Deer Lodge, Silver Bow, and the Blackfoot country, during the first few years, Amos being out on the road nearly all the time. Their operations were successful from the start. The three brothers continued together until March 18, 1884, at which time Fred and Henry purchased the interest of Amos, and the firm name was changed to that of F. and H. Buck. January 31, 1890, Fred Buck died, and after his death and the settlement of his estate his widow took her husband's place in the firm, the business now being continued as before, only that the firm name was changed to Henry Buck & Company.

Besides his mercantile business, Mr. Henry Buck has also become identified with other enterprises. He is a stockholder in the Whipporwill and Last Chance Mining Companies. He owns forty acres of land adjoining the original town site of Stevensville, which he has had surveyed into town lots and made an addition to the town of Stevensville, and called Henry Buck's Villa. He also owns a one-sixth interest in a forty-acre addition to Stevensville called Pleasantvale; also a valuable property in the business portion of Anaconda.

Mr. Buck was married April 2, 1878, to Miss Clara E. Elliott, a native of Iowa, and a daughter of David Elliott. Her father came to Montana with his family in 1862 and located in the Bitter Root valley. Her brother, Lind Elliott, lost his life at Big Hole in the fight with the Indians. Mr. and Mrs. Buck have had three children. The eldest, Carrie Belle, died at the age of three years. The others are Fred E., and Clarence Henry.

Mr. Buck was made a Mason in Monroe, Michigan, in 1867, and has served either as Secretary or Treasurer of his lodge for many years. Politically he is a Republican. All the Buck brothers have proved themselves men of excellent business ability, and all have built commodious homes in the town in which they have long been prominent factors.

CHARLES E. DUER, cashier of the Stockmen's National Bank, of Fort Benton, has been a resident of Montana since 1865, and one of Fort Benton's most prominent business men.

He is a native of Maryland, born April 1, 1836, of English ancestry who were early settlers of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. His father, Charles Duer, was born in several analyses. Mr. O'Rear sent some to the Bank of England, which assayed $325,000 per ton, and the bank offered Mr. O'Rear $110 per pound for this ore. The small placers of Tucker and Spring Gulches have yielded over $2,000,000, and are still rich.

Oro Fino and its branches, Arastra, Park, Grizzly, Squaw and Limekiln gulches, are surrounded with mountains full of veins rich in gold. On the head of Oro Fino are the Whitlatch Union, the Mac, Crystal, Twilight, Daylight, Big Mountain, None Such, Park, Merrimac and a host of other claims and mines. At an early day the Whitlatch mill was erected to work the Whitlatch Union, and its success brought four other mills to work the mines on the head of Oro Fino, Park and Grizzly; and Unionville became a flourishing camp with an ambition to rival Helena. But a blight fell upon the place, the mills joined the Idlers' Club, and the busy people dispersed to other camps. But this dry rot which fell upon Unionville was no fault of the mines. The Whitlatch with twenty stamps, the Dumphy with fifteen stamps that city in 1790, and in 1826 was married to Miss Elizabeth Norris, a native also of Maryland. After his marriage he was for many years a successful merchant in the city of Baltimore. In religious faith they were Episcopalians and people of the highest respectability. She died at the age of fifty-eight years, and he attained the ripe old age of eighty-four years. They had eleven children, of whom six are living.

Charles E., their third child, started out in life for himself at the age of seventeen years, first as a bookkeeper and later in the grain and grocery business. In 1865 he decided to try for home and fortune in the wilds of Montana, and accordingly took passage on steamer up the Missouri river, landing at Cow Island July 4, which day he celebrated there. He came from Cow Island with a freighting outfit to Fort Benton, and thence by wagon to Helena, at which place he was bookkeeper for King & Gillette for a number of years. Later, with others, he organized the Montana National Bank, of which he was the cashier during its existence.

In 1880 he came to Fort Benton and engaged in banking, the firm being Collins, Duer & Company. Out of this business grew the Stockmen's National Bank, organized in 1890, when Mr. Duer was elected its cashier, and he is still filling that position. He is a large stockholder in the bank. He is also a member of the Bar Eleven Company, one of the large stock-raising companies of north Montana.

He is a prominent member of the Odd Fellows order in which he has served as Grand Master of Montana Politically, he is a life-long Democrat, and as such was once nominated for the State Senate, and was defeated by a small majority, his friend, John W. Power, being the candidate on the Republican ticket. Since coming to Montana Mr. Duer has always taken a live interest in the affairs of the State, and especially of Fort Benton; and he has the reputation of being a solid and reliable business man, successful and enterprising.

In 1874 he married Miss Cassandra Wilson, a native of Maryland and an amiable and accomplished lady; but she was spared to him only two years, dying in 1876, on the birth of her first child. The bereavement was a most sad one. After remaining single two years, Mr. Duer was again married, in 1878, to Miss Olivia Orr, a native of Missouri who when three years of age was brought by her father, Sample Orr, to Montana in his emigration to this Territory. By this marriage there is one child named Elizabeth, born at Fort Benton. Mr. and Mrs. Duer are living most happily in a palatial residence which overlooks the city, the grand Missouri river and the surrounding country.

JOSEPH RAMSDELL, of Butte, is a highly respected pioneer of Montana, who dates his arrival in the Territory on the 7th of November, 1863.

Mr. Ramsdell is a native of the State of Ohio, born on the peninsula opposite the city of Sandusky, June 15, 1824, of New England stock. His father, John Ramsdell, was a native of New Hampshire, and his mother, Salima (Woolcut) Ramsdell, was born in Connecticut: their marriage occurred in Ohio, and they had six children, four of whom are still living. Mr. Ramsdell's death occurred in the forty-fifth year of his age, caused by an injury which he had received in the spine. Mrs. Ramsdell lived to be ninety years old.

Joseph, their fourth child and the subject of this sketch, was brought up in Logan county, Ohio, and was only eight years old when he lost his father. He made his home subsequently at different places, earning his living at an exceedingly young age. His first position was as chore boy about a store belonging to the man with whom he made his home, and later he learned the shoemaker's trade. He received but a limited education, then he was employed as a journeyman for a year, and was afterward engaged at various things for a time. At length he owned some horses and became a skilled horseman.

February 20, 1849, he married, and for the first year they kept hotel at Lamont, Ohio, twenty-one miles south of Sandusky. This was a wayside house, where they entertained travelers and teamsters. After three years in this business, Mr. Ramsdell purchased a farm of 160 acres in Bureau county, Illinois, improved the property, on Park, and the Philadelphia with thirty stamps, were once at work at the head of Oro Fino; but all are now idle. The time, however, is not far distant when the music of sixty stamps will again be heard in these beautiful valleys. Arastra Gulch has a number of good mines and prospects on veins carrying free gold. Among them are the None Such, Buckeye, Golden Mountain, Southern, Iron King, Gem, Manhattan, Uncle Sam, Excelsior, Sunset, Ella Howard and others.

The Ten Mile is certainly one of the most promising districts in Montana. In addition to the placer mining, many good quartz veins were discovered in an early day. Some of these, as the R. E. Lee, have been worked by spasmodic efforts for twenty years or more. From the beginning it showed a vast body of ore rich in silver, lead and gold. The materials for a smelter were once shipped to Helena to be erected on this mine, but the project was abandoned and the material sold. Afterward the concentrator and resided on it three years. Then selling it he, with his wife and two children, crossed the plains, in 1859, to Denver, traveling with horse teams and in company with a number of young men, on their way to the gold diggings. Denver had just been started. On arrival Mr. Ramsdell engaged in freighting and in running a livery stable. About a year afterward, in September, 1863, he started for the point which was then the source of the principal gold excitement, taking with him a hundred cows and calves. The company with which he started was small at first, but grew to very large proportions on the way. They were seventy-seven days making the journey from Denver to Virginia City, employing oxen as their draft animals.

On arriving here Mr. Ramsdell built a log house, and for the floor he killed some of his live stock, and with the hides covered this ground, and the hair all on the upper side and lying one way, thus making it easy for sweeping, which could be rapidly and neatly done. The window was made of a flour sack. And thus the hardy and courageous pioneers begun life in the wilds of Montana.

Mr. Ramsdell bought a claim and worked it about six months, making some money. He then sold it, at a profit, and in 1865 he made the journey to Salt Lake City, conveying with him for the business men of Virginia City $165,000 in gold. After arriving in that city he sent his children to school during the winter, and in the sping of 1866 came to Butte. He had been here in 1864, had mined in German Gulch, and also was here a part of the time in 1865. When he arrived here in 1866 he worked on the Parrott, of which he had been one of the locators, July 4, 1864: it was then the best copper mine worked in the camp. Building a small smelter he commenced business, but it proved to be too far from market; and in 1869, when the railroad was built to Corinne, he hauled his product to that place, where he shipped it to Baltimore. In 1884 Mr. Ramsdell worked the mine, and it proved to be one of the best-paying in in the country. It was one of the mines, indeed, that occasioned the location and building of Butte City. He has still other mines in the camp, among them the Little Ann and the Maud S.

In 1869 he purchased 160 acres of land four miles from the city, and he now has 640 acres altogether there, and his son now resides there, raising live stock. In 1884 Mr. Ramsdell built a good residence on East Park street opposite the Parrot.

In politics Mr. Ramsdell has always been independent, as he is indeed in all his thinking. He has attended to his own business closely, expecting other people to do the same: consequently he has been a peaceable, industrious and honest citizen, and wherever he is known he is highly respected.

He was married, at the date already mentioned, to Miss Clarissa Williams, a native of Logan county, Ohio, and the daughter of Walter R. Williams, and they have had three children, one of whom is deceased. The others are: Josie L., now the wife of James A. Talbot, of Butte, a pioneer and a prominent banker; and his son Clayton is now (1894) thirty-nine years of age, and as stated resides upon the farm. Mrs. Ramsdell died July 30, 1892: she was born October 8, 1831. They had lived many years together. He had known her from infancy, as he was living with her father when she was born, and they were married when she was but sixteen years old. She was a most affectionate wife and mother, was greatly beloved by all who knew her, and her aged husband feels her loss very deeply.

OLIVER W. SQUIRES, a respected Montana pioneer of 1863, now residing at Grantsdale, was born in Lorain county, Ohio, March 21, 1841. His ancestors were among the early settlers of New York, and his great grandfather, Abner Squires, was a soldier in the Continental army during the Revolutionary war. The father of our subject, Ezra Squires, was born in New York, and there married Miss Marietta Hurd, a native of Connecticut and a descendant of one of the old New England families. After their marriage they moved to Ohio, and nearly their entire lives were spent in that State and Wisconsin. Mr. Squires died in Dakota, in September, 1887, at the age of eighty-four years. His wife departed this life at the age of forty-six years, leaving two children, a daughter, now Mrs. Henry Page; and the subject of this sketch.

The latter was raised to manhood in Madison county, Wisconsin. In 1860 he crossed the plains to Denver, Col was put up. This mine alone ought to yield a million a year. There are numerous other good mines around Rimini. Red Mountain is full of veins and tunnels. Peerless Jennie has an enviable record for its rich ores, and the Eureka is coming to the front as a large producer; and the Atlanta and a score of other mines are showing up rich ores enough to make the fingers of millionaires itch to handle them. And besides, the Josephine, the Crescent and other mines in the Upper Basin and its fire-clays all are and will be tributary to Rimini and Helena.

The numerous masses of rich tin ore found in the placers of Upper Ten Mile, prove beyond all doubt the existence of those ores in the mountains above these placers. Stream tin and float tin follow the same laws as stream gold and quartz float, and thus prove the presence of veins above.

These facts show that nearly every stream and ravine which comes down the eastern slope of the main range of the Rocky mountains in Lewis and Clarke county from Holmes' Gulch on the northern border of Jefferson to Sun river, orado, which at that time contained only a few houses, and for the first two years was engaged in ranching stock. In May, 1863, he purchased 160 acres of the Cold Spring ranch, at Alder Gulch, Montana, where he followed stock-raising two years, and also conducted a stage station, having entertained all the old pioneers of Montana. From there Mr. Squires came to the Bitter Root valley, purchased from the Government land near Stevensville, but one year afterward sold that place and came to his present location at Grantsdale, whence he was engaged in packing to Washington Territory. He next became interested in sawmilling, having built one of the first mills in the Bitter Root valley, at Corvallis, but subsequently sold that mill and bought and conducted two others. He received from $30 to $60 per thousand for his lumber. In connection with his sawmilling it became necessary for Mr. Squires to open a blacksmith shop, and, being a natural mechanic, he soon learned that trade. He has followed that occupation for about twenty years, and is now proprietor of a shop at Hamilton. He was one of the first blacksmiths in Missoula county, and at one time owned a shop at Corvallis. In addition to his other interests he owns town property in Grantsdale.

Mr. Squires was married September 13, 1871, to Miss Annie Bloodget. They have had five children, but had the misfortune to lose four in three days by the dread disease of diphtheria. Their names and their ages at the time of death were as follows: Ezra, at the age of twenty years; Maryetta, aged fifteen years; Odelphia, eight years; and Ada, three years. Their only surviving child is Henry. Mr. Squires is Past Master Workman of the A. O. U. W. In political matters he was formerly a stanch Republican, but recently, on account of the free silver coinage question, has joined the ranks of the People's party.

ANDREW LOGAN, one of the respected and enterprising citizens of Missoula, was born in Troy, New York, March 14, 1856. His father, William A. Logan, was born in the north of Ireland, in 1823, at the age of seventeen years emigrated to Montreal, Canada, afterward went to New Orleans, and at the age of twenty years located in Troy, New York. A few years later he married Miss Jane Reed Ferguson, a native of Scotland. They continued to reside in Troy, where Mr. Logan was engaged in various occupations, and later in life followed merchandising. They had eight children, six of whom are now living. The father died at the age of sixty-five years, and the mother still resides in Troy, aged sixty-six years.

Judge Logan, their eldest child in order of birth was educated in his native city. At the age of twenty-one years he went to Bismarck, Dakota, afterward worked on the Yellowstone and Missouri rivers, and in the following spring came to Missoula, Montana. After arriving in this State, Mr. Logan worked at whatever he could find to do. From August, 1878, until 1882 he was engaged at the blacksmith's trade in Fort Missoula, and in the latter year opened a shop in this city, continuing in that occupation until 1889. In 1886 Mr. Logan was elected Justice of the Peace, became Public Administrator of Missoula county in 1888, after the admission of the State to the Union was elected Justice for a term of three years, and in 1892 was re-elected to that position. During his residence in Missoula he has been fully identified with the growth of the city, has built a good residence and several brick business buildings, and has been active in all enterprises for the improvement of the place.

January 11, 1880, Judge Logan was united in marriage with Miss Mary Ford, a native of Michigan, and a daughter of Richard Ford, also a native of that State. He was a Union soldier during the late war, and was one of the brave men who suffered and died in Libby prison. Mr. and Mrs. Logan have four children, all born in Missoula, namely: William A., Bertha A., Eva A. and Claude A. During his entire political life, Mr. Logan has been a consistent adherent to the Republican party. In his social relations, he is Past Master Workman and Financier of the A. O. U. W.; is Past Grand Master and Past Grand Reporter of the I. O. O. F. in the State of Montana, and is a prominent member of the Masonic fraternity. As a public officer Mr. Logan has performed what is considered his duty in a fearless manner, and his decisions have given good satisfaction. They have seldom if ever been reversed in the higher courts of the State.

and every adjacent foot-hill and mountain, is full of quartz veins filled with ores carrying gold, silver and lead.

These mines have caused the erection of some thirty stamp mills, which carried over 500 stamps. Some of these mills are worn out, some are waiting for silver to recuperate; but a large portion of them are still running on ores carrying gold enough to make the work pay.

From the facts above stated, the region some thirty miles long and twenty miles wide with Helena near the center, is the richest gold region on the continent. The comparative richness of these mines has long been known to a few whose works followed their convictions in mining operations. Old placers are worked over for the gold, old mills are worn out and new ones erected to crush the gold-bearing ores of this area. This, too, is the region of sapphires, tellurides and wood tin.

John H. Simpson, the first County Commissioner of Ravalli county, Montana, was born in Monroe county, Missouri, April 4, 1858. His grandfather, Robert Simpson, was born in Virginia, of Irish parents, who had just four days previously arrived in that State from their native country. They located on 320 acres of Government land, which is still owned by their descendants, the deed, signed by Patrick Henry, Governor of Virginia, being still in existence. Robert Simpson was raised to manhood in his native place and was there married to Miss Margaret Magee. They afterward removed from that State to Kentucky, where they were among the early pioneers, and in June, 1823, with four sons and four daughters, they went to Missouri. That State was then comparatively a wilderness. Mr. Simpson erected a log cabin and, as room was needed from time to time, he continued to erect cabins until he had three in a row, all separate. Why he did not connect these his descendants are left to conjecture. As the country became improved and they grew in wealth they built a residence of walnut lumber, which is still in good condition, and owned by members of the family. Mr. Simpson was prominent in all the early affairs of his county and was a member of the first Board of County Commissioners. The family were old-school Presbyterians. Robert Simpson was born in Kentucky in 1818, removed with his father to Missouri in 1826, and remained on the Monroe county farm the remainder of his life. In 1824 he was united in marriage to Miss Martha Adams, a native of Cooper county, Missouri, and they raised six sons, all of whom are still living and members of the Presbyterian Church, showing that the father was a man of worthy character and that he left a lasting impression on his sons. Mr. Simpson died February 24, 1871, and his widow still resides at the old homestead.

John H., the third son and the subject of this sketch, was reared to farm life. He began life for himself as a stock raiser and dealer, and afterward became largely engaged in buying and shipping cattle and sheep to Chicago. In the winter of 1883–4 he lost his property by a heavy decline in the markets. He then came to Stevensville, Montana, his entire possessions consisting of $1.50, but, possessed of an active and enterprising spirit, he began life anew. Mr. Simpson first took the contract to build the railroad station at Stevensville, and after its completion built all the stations on the road from McKean's Mill to Victor; next superintended the building of forty-four miles of country road in the Bitter Root valley, and then purchased from the Government a ranch of 160 acres, located fifteen miles south of Grantsdale. He has improved his place until he now owns a valuable farm. Since his appointment by the Montana Legislature as Assessor of the new county of Ravalli, Mr. Simpson has made his home at Grantsdale. The assessment of the county for the past year was $2,048,000, and the largest tax-payer in the county owns 10,888 acres of land in one body. The levy is sixteen mills on the dollar, and a half mill for stock industry.

Mr. Simpson was married January 10, 1878, to his cousin, Miss Catherine A. Simpson, and they have three children: Mattie A., Nora B. and Joseph D. In political matters Mr. Simpson is a stanch Democrat, and has served as a member of the County Central Committee of his party. Both he and his wife are members of the Presbyterian Church.

J. E. Swindlehurst, the efficient and obliging Postmaster of Livingston, Montana, dates his birth in Ottawa, Canada, in the year 1865. He is a son of Joseph and Maria (O'Connor) Swindlehurst, the former being of Irish descent and the latter of English and French. They were married in New York; were for a time residents of Ottawa, Canada, and the year following the birth of our subject they removed to Iowa, whence they subsequently went to Minnesota. Their family, all of whom are living, comprises four sons and two daughters, namely: J. C., Thomas, William, Alvah, Hannah and Isabella.

His father a blacksmith and farmer, J. E. Swindlehurst's early life was spent on the farm, and his education was obtained in the public schools. When quite young, his energetic and ambitious spirit was seized with a desire to come still further west, and we find him for a short time at Miles City and then at Helena, where his Grasshopper, while Virginia City and Madison were second in chronological order to Bannack and Beaver Head. The vast yield of gold from Alder soon attracted the people of the mountain regions to the camps on that gulch, and Virginia City was built up by a prosperous people and soon became the emporium of trade, the capital of the Territory, and the center of social and refined life in the new mountain country, which soon became Montana.

Alder Gulch for sixteen miles from the summit down was as full of men and active life as an ant-hill is full of ants on a warm June morning. Hundreds, yea, thousands, filled their purses and belts and secret pockets and grips with the shining dust and took their way by frail boats down the Missouri river and by the overland coaches via Ogden and Omaha to make glad their loved ones in their Eastern homes. But some fell on the way by the rifle of the "road agent" and the arrow of the hostile Indian. Most of those who left, however, reached their homes in safety to rejoice the good wives and little ones or waiting sweethearts, and to experience in the mines, although brief, was long enough to satisfy him mines were not safe investments and that mining was not his forte.

In 1885 he came to Livingston, where he was employed by the Carver Mercantile Company, and, later, by the Northern Pacific Railroad Company as warehouseman. His business ability was soon recognized, not only by his employers but also throughout the town, and he was elected City Treasurer of Livingston, succeeding Charles A. Bing, and serving two years. He served as Chairman and Secretary of the Democratic County Central Committee, and has been an active and effective worker for his party; was a member of the Democratic State Central Committee for Park county during the Presidential campaign of 1892. He was appointed Postmaster of Livingston by President Cleveland in April, 1893.

Mr. Swindlehurst was married, in 1894, to Miss Augusta Tandberg, daughter of Ebenezer Tandberg of Minnesota. They have had two children, Joseph, who died at the age of four years, and Katherine.

He and his wife are members of the Episcopal Church, and, fraternally, he is associated with Livingston Lodge, A. F. & A. M., both chapter and commandery, and is also a member of Algeria Temple, at Helena. He is one of the most active business men in Livingston, is a pleasant and entertaining converser, and is a courteous and obliging gentleman.

HENRY H. GRANT, one of the founders of the pleasant village of Grantsdale, was born near Plattsburg, New York, September 11, 1838, of Scotch descent. The family trace their ancestry to the same origin from which the illustrious soldier, General Ulysses S. Grant, descended. The grandfather of our subject, John H. Grant, was born near Edinburg, Scotland, but when a boy he came to America, locating near Albany, New York. He was married at Alburg, that State, to Miss Lucy Douglass, also of Scotch descent, and they had nine children. Mr. Grant served in the war of 1812, and received an injury in the service which caused his death, at the age of forty-seven years. His wife survived him only a few years. Their second son, Douglass B. Grant, was born in Alburg, September 10, 1891. June 11, 1837, he was united in marriage with Miss Eliza Vaughan, who was born April 9, 1808, of Scotch and English ancestry, and had been a teacher of French and music for a number of years. They had two sons,—John N., now residing in the State of Washington, and Henry, our subject. The father followed merchandising at Chazy, New York, and both he and his wife were members of the Methodist Episcopal Church. His death occurred in April, 1866, his wife surviving until seventy-three years of age.

Henry H. Grant received his education in the public schools and academies of his native State. In 1866 he removed to Wisconsin, followed merchandising one year, was engaged in trading, and improving a farm in Iowa eight years, spent two and a half years in business in Salem, Oregon, cleared and improved a farm in Washington Territory, and in 1884 sold his property there and came to Montana. His first claim in this State was located near Corvallis, in the Bitter Root valley. After selling that land. Mr. Grant purchased 160 acres of his present farm from Charles Price, and also bought his and his father's interest in a flouring mill. Messrs. Grant and Price afterward founded the town of Grantsdale, each platting forty acres, and the place was named in honor of our subject. It is located at the terminus of the railroad. Mr. Grant now owns 400 acres of land adjoining the village, where he has a good water right, a fine fruit orchard, and a comfortable residence. He also owns several good mining prospects.

In 1864, in New York, Mr. Grant was united in marriage with Miss Jane H. Burns, a native of that State. They have had ten children, viz.: Murry D., Ella May (wife of O. C. Cooper, a merchant of Grantsdale), Arthur H., Gertrude F., Nettie J., Cora E., Bessie E., Lorena B., Charles H. and Ferdinand. Mr. Grant is Past Master of the Masonic fraternity, and is a member of the I. O. O. F. Politically, he was formerly a stanch Republican, but has recently joined the ranks of the Populists, and was nominated by that party as candidate for the State Legislature. He is a trustee of the Grantsdale schools, has taken a deep interest in the educational affairs of his add more comfort to their after lives. The large portion remained, attracted by quartz veins, by the golden sands, the glorious climate, the vast rich pastures and the abundant harvest of garden and field, to lay broad and deep foundations of a great commonwealth. Many of our citizens who were then wielding the pick and shovel and rolling the wheel-barrow and piling away the troublesome boulders, are now wielding fortunes in other departments of business.

From Alder the miners swarmed out into scores of neighboring gulches whose golden sands rewarded their unwearied labors with rich harvests of the precious metals; but many went into the quartz mines; and in a few years the Oro-Cache mill, the St. Louis mill, Scranton mill, Nelson mill, Christenot mill, John Howe mill, Branham's mill, Ward's mill, Rochester mill, Silver Star mill, Green Campbell mill, Kennet mill and a score of arastras were erected and were pounding, crushing and grind-community, is a man of intelligence and ability, and is one of the leading citizens of the Bitter Root valley.

JEPP RYAN, the present Mayor of Miles City, elected in 1892, was born in Leavenworth, Kansas, in 1858, a son of Matthew and Mary (Beresford) Ryan. His parents were natives of Ohio. His mother's ancestry were English descendants from the noted family of Beresford, England. His father was born in Ireland. He represented his county in the Kansas General Assembly, and was for many years engaged in mercantile pursuits and various speculations.

Young Jepp grew up as a farmer, and was educated at St. Mary's College, near Topeka, Kansas, where he received a practical business education. When eighteen years of age he, in company with his older brother, Matthew, traveled through the West, dealing in cattle. They traveled through Oregon and Idaho, in employ of a company. In 1881 they purchased stock and engaged in business for themselves in Montana, and located on the Musselshell river, 110 miles northwest from Miles City, in 1888. They were extensively engaged handling cattle when the winter of 1886–7 set in. They lost 15,000 head that winter! They are now largely interested in cattle and fine horses, being the most extensive producers of saddle and fast horses in the State. Their ranch is one of the finest in the State, well irrigated, and they produce an abundance of hay of all varieties. They are among the leading stockmen in Montana. The Mayor engaged in the hardware business in Miles City in 1891, and carries a large stock of hardware, agricultural implements and wagons, with a large warehouse near the railroad depot.

In January, 1882, he was married to Miss Addie Carr, daughter of E. T. and Marguerite (Cubbur) Carr, of Miles City. Her parents were from the State of Kansas, father a native of "York State." Mr. Ryan and wife have two children,—Lee M. and Samuel. He was reared under the influences of the Catholic Church.

THOMAS LIGHTBODY, the pioneer hotelman of Marysville, was born in New York, March 7, 1842, a son of John and Mary (Mockin) Lightbody, natives also of that State. Thomas, one of five children, two sons and five daughters, was raised on his father's farm, and was engaged in agricultural pursuits in the East on his own account before coming to Montana.

After his arrival in this Territory, in 1871, he embarked in mining at Cove Gulch, Meagher county, where he met with fair success, and remained there about one year. Mr. Lightbody next worked for a mining company at French Bar about six years, then took a timber claim of 160 acres of land, one year later sold his claim for $20, and in 1879 came to Marysville. Thomas Cruse had at that time the only cabin in the place. Our subject built a log boarding-house, 24x30 feet, on the side of Cruse Hill, and, in company with a Mr. Major, operated the mine, and also boarded the miners. About one year later he sold his interest to the Montana Company, and made a few thousand dollars by the transaction. He then came to his present location on Whippoorwill street, built the American House, the first hotel in the town, and has the honor of entertaining many of the noted men of the country who came to see the great Drum Lummon mine. In 1883 Mr. Lightbody spent eight months in the East. He has located Black Diamond mine, on Cruse Hill, an extension of the Drum Lummon mine, which he operates in company with the Messrs. McIntosh and Wilson. They have recently bonded it to the Montana Mining Company for $50,000. Mr. Lightbody also has the Mabel Lester mine on the same hill, which is considered very rich.

April 28, 1870, he was united in marriage with Miss Anna Holden, a native of New York. They have two children,—Lester T. and Mabel Lena. Mr. Lightbody has been one of the builders of Marysville, is liberal in his business dealings, and is a good representative of the early pioneers of this city. History will petpetuate his memory as the first hotel man of Marysville.

HON. THOMAS P. CULLEN, Glendive, Montana.—In the success of this man we have an illustration of what a young man can accomplish in a few years, who has confidence, capacity and persevering pluck.

He was born in Highland, Wisconsin, in 1864, a son of James and Marguerite (Ford) Cullen. He received a common-school education. When eighteen years of age, he entered the employ of the Union Pacific Railroad Company as brakeman, and worked his way up to the position of conductor of a passenger train now on the Yellowstone ing the ores of many rich veins of Madison county. Some of these mining enterprises live only in the memory of those who saw their operations and in the ruin of the mills, arastras and other works. Some have continued to the present time, and some of the mills have been moved away and are now working out fortunes for their owners in other localities. But notwithstanding all the vicissitudes that must attend a new and untried business, quartz mining has continued in Madison. Old mills have been worn out, new ones have been erected and the music of many stamps has been continuous among her hills and valleys for a quarter of a century.

Meanwhile many thousand quartz deposits have been discovered and recorded. Hundreds of these have been so developed as to prove they contain vast quantities of valuable ores, but of such a character that they require very extensive reduction works for their successful treatment. For such mines cheap transportation is necessary to secure immediate profits. Railroads have been built to some districts and division. His general capacity, geniality and sociability won him many friends. His popularity was demonstrated in the fall of 1892, when he was elected to represent Dawson county in the Senate of Montana. He bears his honors well and has a bright future before him.

He was married in 1887, to Miss Josephine Myer, daughter of Joseph and Josephine Myer, of Montana. They have three bright children,—two sons and one daughter: Roy J., Thomas P., Jr., and Ruth. He has a beautiful residence and all the necessary surroundings to make life enjoyable. He is a member of the Order of Railway Conductors, and in politics a Democrat.

ANDREW JENSEN, one of the prominent merchants of Great Falls, Montana, was born in St. Paul, Minnesota, January 1, 1862. From a bootblack on the streets of his native city he has educated himself and worked his way up to the position he now occupies.

Mr. Jensen is of Danish descent. Some of his ancestors settled in America in 1837. When he was only six years old death bereft him of his parents and at that tender age he began to earn his own living by selling papers and blacking boots. When he was twelve he secured a position in a clothing house, where he remained for six years, and during that time acquired a comprehensive knowledge of the business. He was then employed by the wholesale clothing firm of Strause, Goodman & Co., and traveled for them four years in Wisconsin, Iowa and Minnesota. After this he engaged in business for himself at Northwood, North Dakota, where he continued two years and from whence, in 1888, he came to Great Falls. Here, in February of the following year, he opened the Boston Clothing House on the corner of First avenue, south, and Third street. He occupies a room 50 x 90 feet, has it well stocked with all kinds of men's ware, including boots and shoes, and has here attained a success of which he may justly be proud. His four years' experience in the selling of clothing at wholesale has been of much value to him in enabling him to buy goods at the lowest value of the manufacturers.

Mr. Jensen was married at St. Paul, in 1883, to Miss Mattie Kittlson, a native of that city and a daughter of Hon. Charles Kittlson, ex-State Treasurer of Minnesota and now president of the Columbia National Bank of Minnesota. They have one child, Evaline.

Mr. Jensen is in politics an Independent. Fraternally, he is a Blue Lodge, Royal Arch and Knight Templar Mason.

DR. CARLTON V. NORCROSS, of Butte, is a native of St. Clair county, Illinois, born April 29, 1867, of English ancestry who were very early settlers of Winthrop, Maine, where some of the descendants still reside. Mr. Norcross, the grandfather of the subject of this sketch, is a native of that State, where he has long been a prominent farmer. Both he and his wife are still living, he being now eighty-two years of age. Of their seven children, six are living. The Doctor's father, Winfield Scott Norcross, was born there in 1840, and when the great Civil war began he enlisted in the Union army, was in many hard-fought battles, severely wounded three times, and each time after recovery re-enlisted. He was Second Lieutenant on entering the service, and during the war was promoted as Major. For his wife he married Miss Hattie Umbarger, a native of Illinois, of a Virginia family. Of their five children three are living. Mrs. Norcross died in 1893, in her fiftieth year.

Dr. Norcross, the eldest of the children, was educated in St. John's Episcopal College, Utah, was a partner in a drugstore there for three years, and in 1882 sold it and came to Butte. He began the study of medicine with a Baptist minister, C. W. Clark, and then attended the Iowa State University, and graduated in the medical department in 1887, standing high in his class. For some time he was also a student of special branches in the medical department of the Michigan State University.

In the spring of 1887 he began his practice in Butte, and by his own exertion and close attention to business, he has grown into favor and into an extensive and successful practice. He has a nice, thoroughly equipped office in the Owsley Block, corner Main and Park streets. This building, one of the best in the city, is also in one of the best localities.

Nelson Story

thus secured the successful working of their mines. On all the streams and gulches above named as containing placers, quartz veins have been discovered from which the ancient glaciers ground the gold deposited by the waters in the placers of bench, bar and river channel. The prospector's pick and shovel have revealed quartz veins on nearly every hillside and mountain slope bordering old Alder and the other placers of Madison County. Many of these discoveries have been so opened up and developed as to show that they are very valuable mines. Mills are running on some of them, but a great majority of these mines show ores best adapted to smelting works.

As might be expected many veins of quartz have been discovered at the summit or head of Alder. Some of them have been worked and milled for free gold. When the ores changed to sulphurets another process was required and the old mills could not extract the gold. The early mines at the summit were the Steele, Oro-Cache, Lucas, Apex, Scranton, Keystone, Kearsarge and Snow-Cap. The ores of the Oro-Cache

The Doctor is a homeopathist, zealous and thorough, constantly confirmed in his belief in the supremacy of his principles by the results of his experience and observation. He is a hard student, a close thinker, and thoroughly understands the maxims of modern scientific investigation. In his views of national questions he is a decided Republican.

July 21, 1892, he married Miss Hattie Mangino, a native of Spain.

WINFIELD SCOTT HAWES, the leading artist and photographer in Anaconda, Montana, was born near Boston, Massachusetts, September 16, 1865, only child of James and Elizabeth M. Hawes. Both his paternal and maternal ancestors were English. His mother's maiden name was Hull, she being a relative of General Hull, of American fame. She was born in Maine.

Winfield S. Hawes early in life had an ambition to see the great West, and to grow up with the country. Accordingly he made his way to Montana, arriving in Butte May 20, 1880, where he became an apprentice under A. J Dusseau, a Frenchman, to learn the art of photography. With this Frenchman he remained until he was competent to engage in business on his own account, which he did in 1884, opening a gallery in Butte and doing a successful business there for some time. In 1887 he located in Anaconda, where he has since lived and prospered, now owning his own property and carrying on an extensive business. He has associated with him an expert scenic artist, who makes views of all the principal towns as well as of picturesque scenery throughout the State. Both gentlemen are masters of their profession, and pride themselves on keeping in its front ranks.

Mr. Hawes was married September 16, 1890, to Cathleen Morrison, daughter of Peter Morrison, her ancestors having come to this country from Scotland. They have one child, James Franklin, born February 1, 1892.

Mr. Hawes is a loyal American. He is a member of the Patriotic Sons of America, of which organization he is Financial Secretary, and is also a member of Montana Lodge, No. 13, K. of P., and Master of the Exchequer of that lodge.

NELSON STORY is a native of Meigs county, Ohio, where he was born in the year 1838. His father, Ira Story, was a New Englander, of the State of New Hampshire. His mother, Hannah Gile, was English, and a member of one of the oldest families in Europe. She died in 1864, her death being followed three years later by that of her husband, leaving young Nelson the portion of an orphan, in his seventeenth year. His collegiate education was here cut short, which up to this time had been prosecuted as far as the third term of the sophomore year.

Young Story spent the last two years of his minority in teaching school in the State of Ohio. From his twenty-first year up to the present time he has been an active, earnest, energetic business man. His investments and experience extended over the States of Illinois, Missouri and other Western States and Territories. He was engaged in freighting in the early days from the Missouri river across the sandy deserts to the Rocky mountains. He engaged in placer mining in Montana and other Western Territories, and has operated various lines of mercantile business in all of its many branches, from that of a small provision stand, supplying the wants of the rugged miners, to the control and management of mammoth department stores. He has engaged in milling, agricultural and stock-raising pursuits, and at different times has been connected with various banks, and was the principal owner and president of the Gallatin Valley National Bank, at Bozeman, Montana. In all of these various avocations and pursuits in life he has been eminently successful, as is evidenced by the princely fortune he has acquired. He is now reputed to be one of the wealthiest men, if not the wealthiest, in this the treasure State of the Union.

His life has been a mixture of romance and stern reality. All the excitements connected with Indian wars, on the open plains, and the fierce and sudden attack of the bloody savage in the darkness of the night, have been a portion of his experience.

He has felt the excitement that thrills a man when working placer claims in destitute circumstances, who suddenly sees thousands of glittering gold before him as yielded up at least $1,250,000, and the other mines smaller sums in the mills which worked their ores. On Alder, between the summit and Virginia City, many quartz mines have been opened. Among the good prospects may be named the U. S. Grant, Bell, Montana State and Prospect mines. The Alameda and Alfreda were worked by the New York and Montana mill at Virginia City.

In Brown's gulch mines were worked in the '60s by the Connor mill and the Howe mill and three arastras. These early works built up the town of Bullion City at the head of this gulch. Many veins have been discovered here and a large part of them developed so far as to show they have vast bodies of rich ores. Among them are the Pacific, Utah and Northern, Grubstake, Eastern Sun, Back Lode, Brown, Brown-Extension and True Blue. On the ridge between Brown Gulch and Williams are the Highland Chief and Mountain Flower mines. In Spratt gulch is another group of good mines.

his honest possession, and the rich reward for his faithful toil and patient waiting. He has been familiar with the scenes incident to a pioneer life, in the capturing and punishing of criminals by the rude but effectual processes known to a mining camp, and has seen men arrested, charged with murder or highway robberies, tried and executed within three hours.

Mr. Story has passed through the crude period of pioneer life, living in the log cabin and on the open plain, mingling his voice with the wild war-whoop of the painted Red man in the darkness of the night, and directing his friends and associates in resisting their murderous onslaught. In these later years he has merged into the refinement of cultivated and civilized society, and the steady business habits of a solid banker. Through all these varied changes of a strangely wild and romantic life, from the beardless boy on the banks of the Ohio to the mature and experienced business man of fifty-four years, his name stands, wherever known, for high character, sound judgment, with an unquestioned fidelity to business and a conscientious devotion to whatever his hands should find to do.

Mr. Story has now reached the maturity of a life rich with experience and blessed with success. His domestic life is all that could be desired. His wife, the choice of his early young manhood, and who has shared all his perils, partaken of his adversities, rejoiced in his prosperity, been with him in storm and cloudy weather, in sunshine and happiness, still lives, and is by his side to counsel, cheer and bless his life. They have four children—three sons and a daughter. The daughter is married and the wife of Dr. G. L. Hogan.

Mr. Story is now the owner of two palatial residences, one in the beautiful city of Bozeman, situated in the center of the Gallatin valley, which, on account of its peculiar location and romantic and picturesque surroundings might properly be termed a dimple in the cheek of the Rocky mountains; the other one in the world-famed city of Los Angeles, California. The Bozeman residence was erected at a cost of $120,000, and is modern in all its architectural style, finish and appointments. The one at Los Angeles is renowned for its beauty and furnishings and the luxury and home comforts that it furnishes to its occupants. Mr. Story has unconsciously ingratiated himself into the hearts of his friends and neighbors, with whom he has dwelt and mingled for the past quarter of a century. All classes, from the humble laborer, the hard-working servant girl, the aristocratic capitalist, the trained and scholastic professional man, the wily politician, all alike in adversity turn to him as their friend and counselor. He meets each one with the same cordiality, warm-heartedness and open generosity. As a citizen he is loyal, faithful, honest and patriotic. As a business man his fortune speaks for itself. As a husband and father, he is kind, patient, generous and indulgent. In personal appearance he is like no one but himself. He looks and walks and talks and acts like himself and no one else. He is about five feet eleven inches tall, broad-shouldered, deep-chested, with a big head full of brains, and energy enough to burst a mountain. His face is a problem, a combination of poetry and prose, an expression of earnest determination and a tinge of bitterness mingled with kindness, gentle almost as a woman's face. He has a large, piercing, golden grey, eagle eye, that when aroused flashes in its brightness almost with fierceness, but when speaking of human suffering or listening to the cares of others, is luminous and tender almost to weakness. Taking him all in all, he is a romantic, historic character, towering above the mediocre as far as Mount Hood towers above the hills that skirt the blue waters of the Pacific ocean. Strong in every way, in body, in mind, in heart and sympathy, he makes a devoted and constant friend, and is tireless in promoting the interests of any one for whom he feels a touch of sympathy. He knows his friends whenever and wherever he meets them, and his enemies know him. Mr. Story has never held a political office in his life, but has always been active and earnest in support of the Republican party, its measures, principles and doctrines. During the campaign of 1894, he was the most prominent Republican in Gallatin county, and contributed largely of his means, his time and his labor for the election of its candidates. His speech before the Young Men's Republican Club at Bozeman, in the Grand Opera House, was so highly appreciated that it was printed first in the newspaper, and then the demand for it was so great that twenty thousand

One of them, the Spratt mine, is well proved by underground work and by the ores extracted. On the divide between Alder and Williams gulches are the Wisconsin, Sailor Boy, Last Chance and other mines. Granite has many promising mines, and the Platner mill was erected to work the ores of this region.

Ramshorn is another gulch rich in quartz claims, some of which have been proved to be permanent mines. The Bedford, Melrose, Inca, Flagstaff and Mountain Boy all have large bodies of ore rich in lead and silver. The Fairview, Pedro and Myrtle mines are in this gulch. There is a stamp mill in Ramshorn.

Over the ridge from Virginia City are the old Kennet mines and what remains of the Kennet mill. A new mill has been erected for working the ores of the Bertha, some of which are very rich in free gold. California gulch also has many good prospects and promising mines, carrying lead, copper, silver and gold. The Wisconsin, Head Center, Louisa, American copies were printed in pamphlet form and sent as a campaign document all over the State of Montana and other portions of the country. It was the only speech delivered during the campaign that was printed in pamphlet form and sent out as a campaign document. So much has this speech been appreciated that calls for it have been made from various clubs and persons in distant and remote parts of the Union. Mr. Story is at this time, and has been for two years last passed, a member of the State Board of Education, and has taken an active and prominent part in the location and building up of the various State institutions of learning. Through his personal efforts largely, was the Agricultural College located at Bozeman. He gave the beautiful grounds upon which the college is located, and the water plant with all the pipes connecting it with the city water works, at a cost of several thousand dollars. Mr. Story is at this time a candidate for the United States Senate. No one knows how he became a candidate, or why he is such. It is one of those peculiar uprisings that nobody is responsible for and everybody is interested in. He is pretty much the same kind of a candidate for the Senate that Abraham Lincoln was for the Presidency the first time. Politicians, clacks and ringmasters oppose him, but the straightforward, honest common people are for him, for he represents no clique or ring or corporation, but is the people's candidate. And if the business interests of the State and the wishes of the voters are to be regarded, he will be elected to the United States Senate on the first ballot. As to the extent of his fame, it makes but little difference whether he is elected or not, for he is one of those rare specimens of men whose prominent business ability and individuality gives him great renown. The name of Nelson Story is woven into every historical page of the great Northwest. He is an enthusiastic friend of education, a generous and liberal supporter of the churches and all benevolent and humane societies. In those movements which constitute the early history of a State, the influence of such a character as Mr. Story's enters largely into its growth, advancement and ultimate success. As a pioneer in the mercantile business of the State, he brought to it those methods needed in the forming of the early commercial relations between men of a new country; and by his strong personality engrafted to the vigorous young State a strain of good strong stock, which was destined to be the origin of a business impulse afterward to constitute an important factor within the State.

In the forming of the character of the young State, the individualities of such men as Story shape and mould it to a great degree, and the charge of the administration of its affairs should rest with those whose efforts in the past have done so much toward bringing about the present results. We can lay no fairer vestments for the future of a State as prolific and rich as is Montana than those which shall fall from the years of the pregnant future; and there are none more worthy than Mr. Story to be honored with whatever position of distinction or trust that may fall to his lot at the hands of this glorious young State of the West.

When he shall have passed to the other shore he will leave as a rich heritage to his family a clean, pure business character, and a name that wherever known was as good as the purest gold.

B. S. CHAFFIN, a Montana pioneer of 1864, and now residing three-fourths of a mile north of Corvallis, was born in Kansas, March 3, 1863, a son of Elijah and Eliza (Mitchell) Chaffin, natives of Tennessee and Missouri respectively. In 1864, with his wife and ten children, Mr. Chaffin crossed the plains to Montana, having met with no misfortune during the journey, with the exception of having a few horses stolen by the Indians. They came direct to the Bitter Root valley, in the following spring proceeded on the journey to Oregon, but in 1866 returned to this locality. Mr. Chaffin purchased a claim from Mr. Slack, where he resided until his death, in 1888. He added to his original purchase from time to time until at the time of his death he owned 480 acres. Mrs. Chaffin departed this life in February, 1878. Both were members of the Christian Church, in which Mr. Chaffin had served in an official capacity for many years. They had a family of five sons and four daughters. One daughter, Lydia, died on the same day and of the same disease, pneumonia, as her father.

B. S. Chaffin, the third child in order of birth, and the subject of this sketch, was only eighteen months old when the family arrived in Montana, and was reared and edu-

Flag, Winfield and many others might be named as giving promise of good mines. Harrison Gulch has many claims shown to contain much rich ore. On Granite Gulch are the Granite and other mines of reported richness and value. Business Gulch has claims partially developed and reputed rich. These various mining camps near Virginia City and in gulches tributary to Alder have enough good quartz veins to make this region as famous for its quartz mines as it once was for its placers.

Only a railroad is needed to carry to the smelters the thousands and thousands of tons of good ores now on the dumps of a hundred claims to furnish money enough to make these mines the pride and boast of the country and make Virginia City a great and permanent mining center. The streams tributary to the Stinking Water have a number of quartz claims, many of them are bright prospects and some of them have been developed into paying mines. Bevins Gulch, a tributary of Ruby, has rich cated in Missoula county. He now owns a third interest with his brothers in the old home ranch, which consists of 473 acres. They are engaged in general farming and stock-raising. Mr. Chaffin was married May 12, 1889, to Miss Corilla Walls, a native of Missouri, and a daughter of Calvin Walls. To this union has been born two children,—Geneva and Lloyd. Mrs. Chaffin is a member of the Methodist Church. In political matters our subject casts his vote for the Republican candidates, and at the organization of the new county of Ravalli he was appointed by the State Legislature as County Commissioner, in which important office he is still serving. In his social relations, Mr. Chaffin is a Master Mason.

THE AMERICAN NATIONAL BANK, of Helena, was organized by Messrs. T. C. Power, A. J. Seligman and A. C. Johnson, with a capital stock of $200,000, and opened its doors for business August 25, 1890. The official corps of the bank is as follows: T. C. Power, president; A. J. Seligman, vice-president; A. C. Johnson, cashier; George F. Clark, assistant cashier; and T. C. Power, A. J. Seligman, Richard Lockey, A. C. Johnson, and James Sullivan, directors. Since the commencement of its business career the volume of business has steadily increased, and it ranks to-day as one of Montana's most reliable financial institutions.

NEWTON J. CHAFFIN, a Montana pioneer of 1864, was born in Missouri, March 8, 1849, a son of Anthony and Nelly (Williams) Chaffin, natives of Tennessee and Missouri respectively. They were the parents of three children, all now living. The mother died when our subject was twelve years of age, and the father now resides in the Yellowstone valley, aged sixty-nine years.

Newton J., their eldest child, crossed the plains to Montana in 1864, when fifteen years old. He walked the entire distance and drove an ox team, and during the journey one of his sisters died and was buried on the plains. After arriving in this State the father located on the farm where our subject now resides, the same consisting of 400 acres. In addition to general farming Mr. Chaffin is extensively engaged in the raising of horses, cattle and sheep. January 2, 1881, he was united in marriage to Miss Josephine Tillmen, a native of Missouri, who came to Montana in 1871. Two sons have been born to this union,—Jesse A. and Clifford Paul. Mr. and Mrs. Chaffin are members of the Methodist Church, and the former affiliates with the Republican party. He has spent all but the first seventeen years of his life in the Bitter Root valley, has been identified with its best interests, and is widely and favorably known.

DR. J. C. JOHNSTON, who has been a practicing physician in Butte City, Montana, since 1878, ranks with the leading citizens of the place.

Dr. Johnston was born in Connellsville, Fayette county, Pennsylvania, December 1, 1850. His grandfather Alexander Johnston, a native of county Antrim, Ireland, and of Scotch descent, emigrated to America as early as 1783 and settled first in Philadelphia and later removed to Fayette county. He had married Miss Mary Clark, a native of his own country, and they reared their family of five sons and three daughters in Fayette county. Early in life they were Presbyterians but later joined the Methodist Church. Both lived to advanced age, she being eighty-four at the time of death and he ninety-five. Their son, Joseph Johnston (the Doctor's father) was born in Connellsville in 1823, and was reared there. He was married in Cumberland, Maryland, in 1848, to Miss Florida McGuire, and after their marriage they settled in his native town where he subsequently became a banker, led an active and useful life and where he is now living retired. His wife passed away in 1879, aged fifty-two years. They had five sons and three daughters, J. C. being the eldest. All except one are living.

The subject of our sketch received his primary education in his native town and then took a course in the Ohio State University. He began the study of medicine under the instructions of Dr. W. Lindly, after which he entered a medical college at Philadelphia, where he graduated with the class of 1875. Immediately after his graduation he commenced his professional career in Connellsville, and continued there three years. In 1878 he came out West and established himself in Butte City, at once gaining the confidence and good will of the citizens and soon building up a lucrative practice. He is now the physician of St. James Hospital.

The Doctor is a man of fine physique, six feet and one inch high, and weighs 284 pounds. He is kind-hearted, placers and productive quartz mines. The Poole mine has been worked on an arastra. The Oro-Bell is rich in silver ores. Other claims show good prospects. The Sheridan and old Mill Creek mines have long been known as producers. More than twenty years ago the Branham mill was pounding out the free gold from the surface ores, and now the new mill is concentrating the sulphides from the deeper diggings. The Toledo, Toledo Extension, Henry Nigger and Keystone are a few of the numerous mines in this old camp. The foot-hills on Sheridan Creek appear to be full of quartz veins. At Brandon higher up the creek is the Brandon mill and concentrator. High in the mountains west are many rich mines, among them the rich Leiter properties. In Wisconsin Gulch is Cranor's ten-stamp mill, running on the Champion, Sheridan, Grey Eagle and Damsel. The Noble ten-stamp mill is on the Wisconsin and mines have been worked here for twenty years. They are rich in gold, silver and genial and unassuming, and makes friends wherever he goes. Like most men who come to Montana, he has invested some in mining stock. Politically, he has always been a Democrat.

DR. GIDEON E. BLACKBURN, of the firm of Haviland & Blackburn, homeopathic physicians of Butte City, is a native of Kentucky, born in Woodford county, October 22, 1839, of English and Scotch ancestry, settlers of Virginia in the Colonial days and participants in the early history of the country. The Doctor's great-grandfather was a soldier in the Revolutionary war, and his grandfather, Gideon Blackburn, was a native of Virginia, a Presbyterian minister of the New School and the founder of the Blackburn College at Carlinville, Illinois. The Doctor's father, Andrew Blackburn, was born in Kentucky in 1821, married Margaret Hoxey, was a capitalist and a banker in Jerseyville, Illinois, and a stockholder in various other banking institutions. He died in the fifty-first year of his age, and his wife now resides at Evanston, Illinois, in her seventy-fifth year. She is, as was her husband, an exemplary member of the Presbyterian Church, and her people were of the highest respectability.

Their eldest child, the subject of this sketch, was educated at Yale College, and nearly finished his course when the great Civil war began; and in response to his country's call he left college and enlisted in Company F, Fourteenth Illinois Volunteer Infantry. Being under General Grant, they fought at Shiloh, Fort Donelson, Corinth and in many other engagements, in all of which Dr. Blackburn had many hairbreadth escapes. At one time the bursting of a shell fractured his skull; at another he was shot in the armpit; at another a ball just grazed his hand, and in the course of the service his hat received several shots.

On one occasion, while out on a foraging expedition, he was captured by guerrillas, tied with buckskin thongs between two of his captors, and while in a room with them and thirteen others, and while they slept, he succeeded in escaping, slipping his hand from the thongs and cutting the strings with a knife he took from one of the sleepers. Springing out at the window, he attracted the attention of a bulldog, which he seized by the throat and swung on his back and ran for life. It was moonlight, and as soon as he was concealed by the trees he dispatched the dog with the knife and continued his flight! After going some distance he heard a colored teamster coming along singing, and, with a pine knot extemporized as a pistol, halted him and made him haul him with all haste to the nearest town, where he, Mr. Blackburn, had a friend whom he could trust. When they appeared in the town Mr. Blackburn tied the negro to the wagon with his hands and feet stretched out, and left him. The friend took Mr. Blackburn on his way to the Union lines. This offense made him peculiarly hated by the guerrillas.

On another occasion, while on detached service and he was riding a thoroughbred mare, he was confronted by thirty-five men across the road, who ordered him to halt, with the epithet they usually applied to Yankees. As he hauled in his horse in front of them he drew his pistol and shot two of them, and with a rapid swinging blow sank the ham of the pistol into the brain of a third. Giving then his mare the rein and stooping low on her neck, she "flew" to the Union lines. A volley was fired after him and several charges of buckshot hit him in the hips. He did not realize at the time that he was shot, but when he reached camp he fainted, and it was found that thirty-two buckshot had entered his body, and not a shot had hit the mare! A squad was at once sent after his assailants, and they proved to be a part of a Mississippi regiment. The boys killed four men of that company and three were crippled. When they came into the lines they said they would like to see that "red devil!" (The Doctor at that time wore a full beard, which was quite red.)

After he recovered from this severe shock he still continued in the service, and was promoted five times; but late in his service he became seriously ill with camp diarrhœa and greatly reduced in flesh, and he resigned his commission. He had risen from the ranks to the position of Lieutenant Colonel, having rendered his country very efficient service. He had read medicine to some extent, expecting to enter the medical profession, and he was thus enabled to make [illegible] ful in aiding the army surgeons in [illegible] surgical operations, as well as useful in caring for the wounded generally.

copper. There is a furnace on Wisconsin creek which was idle in October. On Rochestsr creek, a tributary of the Big Hole, quartz and placer-mining have been carried on for the last quarter of a century. Numerous productive mines have been opened and worked with varied success. Among the mines are the Mayflower, Never-Sweat, War Eagle, Bobtail, Elgin, Buffalo, Watseka, New-Year's Gift, Shoemaker, Lucky Boy, Longfellow, Golden Brown, Flora and many others.

Several arastras have worked these mines. Some have disappeared, but White's and Ward's arastras are still grinding out the free gold of these mines. The Rochester mill and the Allen mill were worn out on the quartz of this camp, and only their decaying skeletons remain. The Mueller mill stands well prepared to continue the good work on the mines of Rochester. On the Nez Perce Gulch, six miles from Twin Bridges, is a group of copper mines which promise to rival the best in the country. Of

On reaching his home he was supposed to be so far reduced that he could not recover; but the rest and the care afforded him at home soon had a beneficial effect, and he fully recovered.

In 1866 he went to Pine Bluff, Arkansas, and engaged in merchandising, and afterward continued the same business at Camden. Next he moved to Little Rock, where he associated himself with Dr. W. E. Green, now a prominent surgeon. They went to the Pulte Medical College together, and graduated in 1871, Dr. Blackburn being the valedictorian of his class. After graduating he went to Shreveport, Louisiana, and practiced there for a time, then at Galveston, Texas, Evanston, Wyoming, and finally, in 1891, to Butte City. Dr. Haviland had been here a year, and they formed a partnership for general practice, Dr. Blackburn making a specialty of surgery. In 1892 they opened the Haviland & Blackburn Hospital, on the corner of Broadway and Washington street. In this institution are twenty beds, vapor baths and all the modern appliances for the treatment and comfort of the sick. The physicians have two sets of rooms fitted for their offices in the Owsley Block, and they have a large patronage, and they are surgeons for nearly a dozen of the most prominent mining companies at Butte. Their hospital is the only one of this school in Montana, and they are entitled to much credit for their enterprise and capability in establishing such an institution.

Dr. Blackburn is a member of the Masonic fraternity, and, as he terms it in quotation marks, a "rabid Democrat." He has mining interests in Butte, but confines himself to the practice of his profession. Physically, he is a strong, hardy and exceedingly well poised man, and possesses great force of character.

In 1871 Dr. Blackburn was married, and by that marriage had three children, namely: Daisy Ida, Charles A. and Flora Emma. His second marriage occurred on the 27th day of January, 1893, this time wedding Miss Hannah Aiton, a native of Minnesota. They reside at the hospital.

Dr. William H. Hall, the leading and most successful dentist of Butte City, is a native of the State of Florida, born in Tallahassee, April 27, 1857, of English and Irish ancestry. His people were early settlers of Massachusetts, and on both sides of his family were participants in the war for independence. His father, Jesse C. Hall, was born in Pelham, New Hampshire, in 1829, married Ada J. Sargent, a native of Ohio; they now reside in Illinois and have five children, all of whom are living. The father has for many years been a successful practitioner of dentistry.

Dr. Hall, of this sketch, the second born in the above family, was reared in Florida, Ohio and Illinois, attending the public schools in all three of these States. He studied dentistry with his father and graduated in the Pennsylvania College of Dental Surgery in 1877, when he was but nineteen years of age, being thus the youngest graduate ever coming from that institution. After graduation he practiced with his father for a year, then went to Terre Haute, Indiana, where he followed his favorite profession until 1888, when he established himself at Butte, where he has enjoyed a constantly growing practice. He has a large office, employs several assistants, and avails himself of all the latest improvements. He has also established a dental supply house—the only one in Montana. He is a member of the Dental Association of Indiana, and one of the board of directors of the Dental College of that State, located at Indianapolis. He has also been the owner of ranching interests at Butte.

In his political sympathies he is a Democrat, and he affiliates with the Masonic fraternity, being a Sir Knight and having received the thirty-second degree of the Scottish rite. Dr. Hall is an accomplished gentleman, a splendid dentist, and the people of Butte know it and have accorded him a large and remunerative practice.

Daniel James McNally, building inspector, Helena, Montana, was born in Somerset county, Pennsylvania, April 24, 1857, of Irish descent, his parents having come to America at an early age and settled in the Middle States. He is one of seven children, and all are living except one brother, the rest of the family residing in the Eastern States. Educated in the common schools of the Keystone State and Maryland, at the age of seventeen Mr. McNally began to learn the trade of carpenter in the latter State, where he served his apprenticeship and remained until 1878. Then he went to Indiana and entered the employ of a railroad company, first as a mechanic and these mines the Ellen Marshall, Laura Marshall, and Mountain Chief show wonderful masses of good ore for the work done. Nez Perce and Big Hole are gold mines four miles from Big Hole and sixteen miles from Melrose.

At the old and faithful Iron Rod camp we have the evidence of a modest outfit which has been doing a paying business for these many years. The fifteen-stamp mill is running right along on the ores while the new developments are made in the mines. This is a water mill and is run with little expense and constant profit. The Silver Star has attracted more attention and more varied fortunes have attended the enterprise. The old ten stamp mill was moved away and the Broadway with forty stamps was erected and worked the ore of the Broadway mine. The Mark Ensly mill with six stamps was run on the Aurora Borealis and other mines. The battery is still standing. The Merk is a new first-class ten-stamp mill and is running on the Victoria mine. A new five-stamp water afterward as superintendent of bridges and building, going thence to Mexico during the period of the construction of the Mexican Central Railroad. When that road was completed he went to Minnesota, where he was superintendent of bridges and building for the Minneapolis & St. Louis Railroad until 1884, when he removed to Montana and engaged in contract work in Lewis and Clarke, and Jefferson counties. Many of the notable structures in these counties were erected under his supervision.

In 1890 the municipality of Helena enacted a building ordinance, and under the provisions of that enactment Mr. McNally was appointed building inspector, which office he has since held continuously under both Republican and Democratic administrations. Although an active worker in Democratic ranks, his efficiency recommended him as the most desirable man for the place, and a change of administration did not entail his removal. He is a member of the Helena Board of Trade and of the Inspectors and Commissioners of Buildings Association of the United States, and is interested in various plans for the development of Montana.

Mr. McNally was married in Helena, in August, 1885, to Miss Ida M. Holmes, and they have two children, a son and daughter.

M. H. Lashorn, foreman of the car department of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company's shops at Livingston, Montana, is a young man of marked ability in his chosen line of work.

Mr. Lashorn is a son of John P. and Marion (Proctor) Lashorn and was born in Washington, District of Columbia, October 16, 1863. His ancestors came to this country from Germany and were among the pioneer settlers in the State of New York. The Lashorns were well represented in the Federal ranks during the Civil war. M. H. Lashorn was educated in the schools of Washington city and at an academy in Caroline county, Maryland. When about sixteen years of age he was apprenticed to learn the trade of carpenter, his term of apprenticeship extending until he was twenty-one. The first two years of this time he received $5 a week, after that $1 a day. Upon reaching his majority, he came west to Colorado and engaged as carpenter for the D. & R. G. Railroad Co., working in that capacity for eighteen months, and then being promoted to the position of traveling foreman, which he filled nine months. Next we find him at Brainard, Minnesota, in the employ of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, where he remained two years. At the end of that time he was transferred to the Livingston shops, as car foreman, and up to the present time he has discharged the duties of this important position to the entire satisfaction of his employers, having been here eight years. In this position he has charge of thirty men.

Mr. Lashorn was married in July, 1890, to Miss Abbie Olin, daughter of Alfred and Malinda Olin. In fraternal circles he takes a prominent part. He has taken all the degrees in Masonry including the Scottish Rite, has been Treasurer of Livingston Lodge, A. F. & A. M., for four years, Treasurer of the Chapter for three years, and Treasurer of Lodge of Perfection, of Consistory and of Kadosh; is also a member of the I. O. O. F. in Washington, D. C., and of the A. O. U. W. of Livingston.

Dr. Hugh J. McDonald, of Butte City, Montana, has been identified with this place since the summer of 1890, and during this brief time has established for himself an enviable reputation as a skilled physician of the regular school.

Dr. McDonald was born in Glengarry county, Canada, in the town of Alexander, April 25, 1861, son of Allen J. and Mary (McPhee) McDonald, both natives of Glengarry county, of Scotch descent, and belonging to families that were early settlers of America. His parents are still living, his father being sixty-six years of age and retired from active life; his mother fifty-nine. Both are members of the Catholic Church. The Doctor was the third born in their family of eleven children, nine of whom are still living.

Dr. McDonald was reared in his native town and was educated in its public schools. Choosing medicine for his profession, he entered the medical department of McGill University, where he graduated in 1885. He began his professional career at Chelsea, Wisconsin, and there conducted a successful practice for nearly six years. In the summer of 1890 he came to Butte City, Montana, and opened his present office, No. 23 West Granite street. Here his gentlemanly bearing and his skill as a physimill is now crushing the Green-Campbell ore with good results. An arastra is grinding good pay out of the Governor Hayes mine. There is a group of silver mines south of the Silver Star gold group and another a short distance to the north.

The Tobacco Root or South Boulder mountains appear to be absolutely full of mineral veins. In addition to the camps above named on the west side, the Georgia Gulch, Indian creek, Sterling, Richmond Flat and Ward's mountain districts are on the north and east sides of these mineral mountains. Georgia Gulch has a group of many rich mines in gold, silver and lead. The High Ridge, Tidal Wave, Vanmeter, Keynote and Fusilade, Empire State, Bay State, Saturday Night, Eureka, Magnolia and a dozen others have been opened. On Indian creek several claims have been partially developed with good results, and many more await the drill and pick of the miner to show up their prospective values. At Pony, on Willow cian soon brought him into prominence and gained for him the confidence and respect of all, and he has since been doing a general practice. He is a member of the International Medical Society and of the Silver Bow County and Montana State Medical Societies, in all of which he takes an active interest, improving every opportunity offered to advance his knowledge concerning matters pertaining to his profession. Since coming to Butte he has been the surgeon of the Boston & Montana Mining Company. He has invested in a number of valuable mining claims.

August 5, 1889, Dr. McDonald was married at Chelsea, Wisconsin, to Miss Cora Lemere, daughter of Henry Lemere, a Wisconsin lumber manufacturer. They have two children, Hugh Allen and Francis

While the Doctor is youthful in appearance, he has had an active practice of ten years, and has acquired a broader information than many men who are much his senior. As has already been stated, he stands high in Butte City, both as a physician and as a gentleman, and his excellent reputation has been well earned.

MELVIN L. WINES, the Prosecuting Attorney of Silver Bow county, Montana, was born in Monrovia, Indiana, June 29, 1865. His ancestors came from old England and settled in New England early in the history of this country. Josiah Wines, the progenitor of the family in America, settled in Massachusetts; but little is known of him, —only that he was an industrious farmer and a Quaker: later the family have been mostly Methodists.

A succeeding generation moved to New York, where the grandfather of the subject of this sketch, Leonard Wines, was born. He removed to Indiana some time in the '30s, thus being a pioneer there. He married Miss Rebecca Tittler, the daughter of a neighbor pioneer. He entered land from the Government and lived there until his death, in the thirty-fifth year of his age. He was an industrious and successful farmer, and he and his wife were members of the Methodist Church. She is still living, beloved and respected by all who know her. Their only son, Josiah L. Wines, was born in Indiana in 1839, married Miss Elizabeth A. Jackson, a native of South Carolina, and had two children, namely: Eva, who is now Mrs. James B. Gallager, resides in Butte; and their other child is the subject of this sketch. Both parents are living in Nevada. The father has been a lawyer for many years, and for a number of years was the attorney for the Southern Pacific Railroad Company.

Melvin L., the younger of the two children just mentioned, attended the public schools in Nevada, and later was a member of the class of 1887 at the California State University at Berkeley. Next, taking a two years' course in the law department of the Michigan State University at Ann Arbor, that State, he graduated in 1889, and immediately came to Butte, arriving in August. He entered the law office of Hon. William H. De Witte, and soon afterward Mr. De Witte was elected to the bench of the Supreme Court of the State, and for a time Mr. Wines was acting attorney for the Montana Union Pacific Railroad. He filled this position to the time that J. S. Shropshire arrived and took charge of all the Union Pacific roads, and Mr. Wines then became an assistant. This relation continued until Mr. Wines received the nomination for Prosecuting Attorney for Silver Bow county. He was elected in the fall of 1892, and he is now serving in that office.

Mr. Wines is an active Republican, a Royal Arch Mason and a member of the Silver Bow Club. In the campaign of 1892 he made vigorous and effective speeches for his party throughout Silver Bow and Beaver Head counties, and he is credited with being a good stump speaker and well posted on the questions of the day. In addition to attending to the duties of his office, he has also a good general practice. He is pleasing in his manner, upright in character and uniformly held in high estimation. A propitious future awaits him.

JUDGE R. L. THOMAS, Clerk of the District Court of Beaver Head county, Montana, is a native of the State of New York, born in New York city, May 4, 1841.

He is of Welsh descent, his grandfather having emigrated from Wales to America in 1800 and settled in Utica, New York. There in 1816 John Thomas, Judge Thomas' father, was born. When he was sixteen years of age he removed to New York city and became a steamboat engineer, which business he followed for a number of years, in the employ of Peter Cooper and Abraham Hewitt, their boats plying between New York creek is an important camp fast growing into a prosperous town by the constant products of its placers and quartz mines. Six mills have been erected to work the quartz of the many rich mines of Mineral Hill and other mountains around Pony.

There are the Mallory mill, ten stamps, run by water; the Morlan mill, fifteen stamps, run by steam; the Lehman mill, ten stamps, run by steam; the Getchell mill, ten stamps, run by water; the Morris mill, twenty stamps, run by water; and three arastras, run by water.

A large new mill is on the ground to be used in concentrating the ores of Mineral Hill. These arastras and some of these mills have been worn out on the ores of the neighboring mountains. The Morris and Elling mill is still engaged in the good work of crushing the ores rich in gold. The mines about Pony are remarkable for their very large crevice veins filled with quartz. Some of the larger veins have runs and pockets of rich ores in the great bodies of lower-grade quartz. A large amount of development work has been done, sufficient to and Albany. In 1835 he went to New Jersey, where he continued in the same business until 1854. At that time he returned to New York, and the following year, still in the employ of Mr. Cooper, he went to Wyandotte, Michigan, and started the large iron rolling mills of that place. In 1839, in New York city, he was married to Miss Ann Barbour, who was of English ancestry. She died in 1879, leaving five sons and a daughter. The family had removed to Indianapolis in 1856, and in that city Mr. Thomas has since resided. He is now in his seventy-seventh year, is a well-known capitalist, and is president of the Hecla Consolidated Mining Company.

Richard L. Thomas, the subject of our sketch, is the oldest of his father's family, only three of whom are now living. Nearly eight years of his childhood were spent in New York and Brooklyn. They then removed to Trenton, New Jersey, and subsequently to a farm near Merideth, Delaware county, New York, where for four winters he attended district school. Their next move was to Indianapolis. There he completed his education. He has a diploma from two commercial colleges of Indianapolis and also one from the Normal School of Music of that city, his graduation in music being in 1864. For some time he was a workman in the Indianapolis Rolling Mill, of which his father was manager. After his marriage, which occurred in 1866, Mr. Thomas was engaged in the wholesale grocery business, in partnership with his brother William, on Meridian street, Indianapolis, and subsequently he turned his attention to real estate and other commercial enterprises. Following this he was for a short time superintendent of the rolling mill at Atlanta, Georgia; from 1869 until 1874 was in the tobacco business in Indianapolis; in 1875 engaged in the manufacture of stoves in Cincinnati; subsequently returned to Indianapolis and served as deputy collector of city taxes; and in December, 1876, accepted the position of secretary of the Hecla Consolidated Mining Company, of Glendale, Montana, under Noah Armstrong, the first superintendent of the company.

While residing at Glendale Mr. Thomas was elected to the office of Justice of the Peace, which he very acceptably filled, and in 1888 was honored by the voters of Beaver Head by being elected to the office of Probate Judge. After filling that office more than one year, the new constitution of the State was adopted, which abolished the office of Probate Judge, merging it into that of District Judge. Then Judge Thomas was elected Clerk of the District Court, of which office he is now the efficient incumbent. He still continues his interest in mining, being an owner and one of the locaters of the Blue Belle mine. He has property at Glendale and also at other points in Montana.

In politics the Judge has alway been a reliable Republican. During the war, when the Governor of Ohio called for volunteers to protect the State from Confederate raids, Judge Thomas showed his patriotism by volunteering and serving in the first company that was organized for that purpose. Fraternally, he is a member of the A. O. U. W.

May 16, 1866, he was married in Indianapolis to Sara E., daughter of Montague T. McClure, a native of Virginia and a descendant of Scotch ancestors who were early settlers of Virginia, where he was born September 27, 1841. Her mother, nee Sarah Anderson, was a native of Kentucky and a daughter of George W. Anderson, the Andersons being prominent in the early settlement of Covington, Kentucky. Anderson Ferry was named in honor of them. By a former marriage Mrs Thomas has a daughter, Anna McClure, who is now the wife of Dr. E. D. Lovitt, one of Butte City's most prominent physicians. The Judge and his wife have a daughter, Mary B., wife of Thomas H. Teale, a well-known metallurgist of Montana. Mrs. Thomas is a member of the Episcopal Church at Dillon. She is a woman of more than ordinary intellectual ability, and has received the appointment of deputy in her husband's office, where she is rendering most efficient aid. Both the Judge and his amiable wife enjoy the very highest esteem of the best citizens of Beaver Head county.

Michael Flynn, one of Missoula's prominent farmers, was born in Roscommon, Ireland, in the year 1838, third in a family of seven children, his parents being Michael prove these mines inexhaustible. There will be no failure of ores, which will continue as rich as they have so far shown themselves. Some of the leading mines of Pony are the Elephant, Nos. 1 & 2, Strawberry, Strawberry Extension, Keystone, Rustler, Policy, Ned, Willow Creek, Summit, Boss Tweed, Clipper, Pony, North Star, Atlantic and Pacific, Gilt-Edge, Golden Chariot, Old Joe, White Pine, Emmet, Belknap, Barker, Last Chance, Hancock, Taft, Iron, Lena, and Roda, Mountain Chief, Clara Bell, Gates, Gladstone, Agitator, Union, Jumbo, Long Branch, Saturday Night, Welcome Stranger, Texas, Amazon, Eclipse. The mines of Pony are rich enough, large enough and numerous enough in themselves to make Madison a great mining county.

There is a new and promising group of mines three miles south of Sappington. Potosi is a new mining camp high up in the mountains, whose veins rich in shining ores have attracted many prospectors. The Southern Girl, Yankee Girl, Stephanite, Ruby Silver, Banker, Clarke, Raleigh, Volunteer, Crown Point, Dictator, and Bridget (Lavin) Flynn, both natives of the Emerald Isle. Mr. and Mrs. Flynn emigrated to America with their family in 1857, and settled in New York, where he died in 1862. She survived him a number of years, her death occurring in 1889.

Michael Flynn was nineteen years of age at the time he came to America. He was employed as a farm hand in New York until 1864, when he came west to Colorado and turned his attention to mining. He owned the Aetna claim, which he operated for some time but which proved a failure. In 1872 he came from Colorado to his present location, three miles west of Missoula, Montana. Here he took up 160 acres of Government land and purchased 160 acres adjoining it. He had been married in 1866 to Miss Kate Hogan, a native of Tipperary, Ireland, and their family consisted of themselves and their two children, Ellen and Barney, when they came to their new farm. Here they built a comfortable log house and began their successful farming career. Both he and his wife were industrious and enterprising, and from year to year they prospered and made additional purchases of land until they now own 1,120 acres, and Mr. Flynn is ranked with the well-to-do and influential farmers of Missoula valley. In 1884 he built a nice brick residence, in which he and his family have since resided, surrounded with all the comforts of life, their home being shaded by the trees of their own planting. Mr. Flynn's broad acres are among the most fertile land in the valley. His principal crops are wheat, oats, hay and potatoes, and he also raises cattle and horses.

Other children have been added to their household since Mr. and Mrs. Flynn settled here, and their home is noted for its genial hospitality. Besides the two children already named are Phillip, John, Myrtle, James and Dennis. Their eldest son, Barney, is now engaged in the undertaking business in Missoula.

Mr. Flynn and his family are devout members of the Catholic Church, and have aided materially in the building of their fine house of worship at Missoula. Politically, he has been long identified with the Democratic party, but recently favors the People's party. He is in sympathy with the poor and working men and makes it a point to do what he can to help better their condition. Such men as Michael Flynn are the salt of the earth and are highly deserving of the prosperity which they have secured.

FRANK D. BROWN, Philipsburg, Montana, is prominently identified with the real-estate, mining and insurance interests of this part of Montana, and is one of the most enterprising business men of his town.

Mr. Brown was born in Nelson county, Virginia, November 13, 1845, and is related to some of the earliest and most illustrious families of Virginia, among whom are the Flourneys, Cabes, Harrisons, McClellands and Scotts. Further mention of his family history will be found in this work in the sketch of his brother, Wingfield L. Brown.

The subject of our sketch spent his early life in his native State, and was still a boy in his 'teens when the Civil war broke out, but notwithstanding his youth he was among the first to enter the service. March 15, 1861, he enlisted in Company D, Twenty fifth Battalion Virginia Volunteers, that for a time did provost duty around Richmond. In November of that year he was detailed to the Quartermaster's Department, in charge of Captain James B. McClelland, and the following year was transferred to the War Department, as an orderly under his cousin, Hon. James A. Seddon, the Confederate Secretary of War. Upon the retirement of his uncle from this position, Mr. Brown returned to his company, and when his term of enlistment expired, in December, 1862, he was detached and sent out in the marine army, and served on the steamer Powhatan, tender to the ironclad Richmond. In April of the following year, while on a foraging expedition in a cornfield, in company with a boat's crew, young Brown and all with him were captured by a detachment of Pennsylvania cavalry. They were taken to Harrison's Landing and thence to Fortress Monroe, where they were paroled and given transportation to St. Louis.

In May, 1863, we find Mr. Brown on a steamer of the Northwest Company, en route to old Fort Union. His stay here was brief, and in December of the same year

Green Jacket, Bullion, Clara, Hathaway, Keystone, Logan, Old Jim, Comberland, Garfield, Prime, Jim How and others have been recorded. A twelve-mile trip is the only connection this rich camp has with the outside world. A good wagon or railroad would open up the vast bodies of silver and lead in these mines to the uses of the business world.

Norwegian creek has rich placers which do yearly pay the labors of the miners. But little is yet said of the quartz veins from which this gold was crushed by glacial action. On the north side of the Tobacco Root mountains good mines have been discovered and partly developed. On the headwaters of Meadow creek, above Washington bar, are quite a number of quartz discoveries. In the mountains extending from Ward's Peak and forming a grand amphitheatre, are several mines of great promise. The Eureka is a large vein cutting the mountains at right angles and the Little Kid skirts the range on the opposite side of the beautiful valley. These mines have been so opened as to show vast bodies of good ore. There are many other he landed at Fort Benton. His early years in Montana were full of variety and many exciting experiences, his summers being spent in mining and prospecting, and his winters, for several years, in "wolfing." Wolfing was the securing of wolf-skins by trapping, shooting and poisoning gray wolves, and the business was often attended with great danger and hardship, as the hunters had to camp out during the severe weather, and much of the time travel at night in order to avoid hostile Indians. But although a hazardous business, it was a profitable one, and in this way he and his partners made some money. Two of the men with whom he was engaged in this occupation on the Yellowstone in the early '70s——Jack Gorman and Keesee—were afterward killed by the Indians below Fort Benton That was in 1876.

For three summers Mr. Brown mined near Radersburg, Montana. In the fall of 1868, in company with about fifty others, he went to Utah, expecting to go into Cottonwood cañon, but on account of the great severity of the winter stopped at Salt Lake City. In company with one John Wickle, Mr. Brown kept what was called the Elephant Corral, opposite Emigrant Square, in that city. In the spring he and many other Gentiles were ordered to leave the place, and from Salt Lake City they went to Evanston, on Bear river, where he located some coal mines. Not long afterward he sold his claims and returned to Montana. The winter of 1870 we again find him on the Yellowstone. In the spring he entered the employ of A. J. Davis, with whom he remained until 1877, with the exception of some time in the year 1873, when he was with the Baker Yellowstone expedition. While in the employ of Mr. Davis he located a number of valuable mines, among which was the Lexington mine, of Butte, Montana.

Since 1877 Mr. Brown has been identified with Philipsburg. Upon coming here he entered the employ of the Northwestern Mining Company, quitting the company with its suspension in 1878, and since that time has been largely engaged in a mining, real-estate and insurance business. He now has charge of the gold properties owned by Charles D. McLure, one of the Granite magnates, the mines being situated at Henderson Gulch, twenty miles west of Philipsburg. He also has charge of the Hidden Treasure group of mines, the property of the same gentleman, twenty-nine miles southwest of Philipsburg. These properties are gold-bearing and very extensive. Mr. Brown himself owns a number of valuable mining claims, and is also an extensive owner of real estate at Philipsburg and elsewhere, including considerable railroad land. In his insurance business he represents a number of the largest insurance companies in the world. He is a man of general information, is thoroughly practical, and is sure to make a success of whatever he undertakes.

Mr. Brown was married in 1874 to Miss Anna E. Lentz, a native of Germany, and they have five children, all born at Philipsburg, namely: Edward, Annie, Tini, Minnie and James.

Mr. Brown is Past Master Workman of the A. O. U. W. at Philipsburg, and both he and his wife are members of the Degree of Honor. Politically, he has been a Democrat all his life, and since 1866 has been a delegate to nearly every convention of the party in Montana, but he has never been an office-seeker nor held public office.

Frank B. Connelly, a member of the A. L. Babcock Hardware Company, of Billings, is one of the popular young business men of Montana, and has steadily worked his way from a clerkship to that of member and business manager of the firm. He was born near Burlington, Iowa, in 1862, a son of Samuel and Mary (Johnson) Connelly. The parents moved to Illinois when Frank was quite young, where he remained until eighteen years of age, receiving a common-school education. He was then employed by Richardson Brothers, extensive dealers in tin, hardware, etc., in Chicago one year, and for the following three years worked for the Wells & Nellegar Hardware Company, of that city. His close application to business soon gave him a reputation which made a demand for his services. Mr. Connelly came to Billings in December, 1885, as bookkeeper for the Babcock & Miles Hardware Company, but one year later was promoted to the position of purchaser and business manager, in which

In Baldy and adjacent ridges are also found the Three-Ply, Pinnacle, Champion, Grand Central, Mineral King, Bell, Rocky, Washington, Mastodon, Chance, Lakeside, Hogback, Homestake, Shoo Fly, Great Bear, Mohican, Tiptop, Climax, Bonanza Chief, Golden Fleece, Packer, Golden Brown, Black Hawk, Jupiter, Juno and others.

There are numerous claims at Richmond Flat. Some of them have been developed enough to prove them permanent mines. The Revenue mill was erected to work their ores. The Revenue, Arkansas, Monitor, Nonesuch, D. M. G., Richmond, American Girl, Idaho, New York, Belle, Golden Wonder, North Pacific, Columbus, Tennessee, Empire, Brooklyn, Veto and other mines are to be found at Richmond Flat. On North Meadow creek the Sure Shot, Home Ticket and several other good claims have been located and partly developed. The mines at Sterling were discovered at an early day and the Ward mill with ten stamps was erected to work their ores. The Pratt mill he has ever since been engaged, and is also secretary for the present firm. He became an interested partner in the A. L. Babcock Hardware Company, in January, 1892, and this firm conducts the largest business in their line in Montana east of Helena.

Mr. Connelly was married December 1, 1885, to Flora Hart, a daughter of Rev. J. C. Hart, at that time pastor of a Baptist church at Toulon, Illinois. To this union has been born one child, Frank, now six years of age. Mr. Connelly is a member of Ashlar Lodge, No. 29, F. & A. M., of Billings, and is a stanch Republican in political matters. Mrs. Connelly is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

William Niedenhofen, deceased, was ranked with the Montana pioneers of 1864 and was for many years a prominent business man of Butte City, honored and respected by all who knew him.

William Niedenhofen was born in Germany in 1835, and when twelve years of age came with his parents to America and settled in St. Paul, Minnesota. Some years later he returned to Germany and completed his education in one of its colleges. Upon coming back to Minnesota, he embarked in the mercantile business at Winona and continued there successfully until 1864. That year he made the journey by way of the Isthmus of Panama to Oregon, and from thence came across the country to Diamond City, Montana, the Montana bar there being the richest placer mining bar in the Territory. He at once opened up his business at that place and remained there until 1867. That year he came to Butte City and established his business on West Park street, dealing chiefly in lamps, crockery and fancy goods, and doing a prosperous business for thirteen years, or up to the time of his death, which event occurred in 1880.

While a resident of Winona, Minnesota, he was married, in 1862, in St. Paul, to Miss Catharine Schonartha, a native of that city. They had two children, a son and daughter. The latter, Miss Minnie, a most amiable and accomplished young lady, died at the age of seventeen. She was greatly beloved by all who knew her and her untimely death was a source of bereavement not only to her family but also to an extended circle of friends. The son, Henry A., is an enterprising young man of great promise. A sketch of his life follows that of his father. William Niedenhofen was a man of excellent business qualifications and of sterling integrity. In his family he was kind and indulgent, as a citizen and business man his character was in every way above reproach, and by all who knew him he was held in the highest esteem. Politically he was a stanch Republican, but he never sought or held office of any kind.

Since her husband's death Mrs. Niedenhofen has carried on the business at the old stand and has been very successful. She has added to the business a soda fountain and an ice cream parlor, and now has one of the most attractive places of the kind in the city.

Henry A. Niedenhofen, Clerk of the Second Judicial District Court of Silver Bow county, Montana, is a native of Montana, born at Virginia City, July 11, 1867, son of the above named gentleman.

From his infancy Mr. Niedenhofen has been identified with Butte City. He attended public school here until 1884, when he was sent to the California Military Academy. After a four years' course in that institution he graduated with the highest honors, being valedictorian in a class of twenty-two. He was then made Captain and was employed as an instructor in the academy, and while acting as such took the post-graduate course. Subsequently he spent one year in the State University of California. Upon his return to Montana he accepted the position of bookkeeper for the firm of Mall & Company.

When he became of age young Niedenhofen espoused the principles of the Republican party and became an active and efficient worker in its ranks. At the formation of the T. H. Cotter Republican Club he was elected its president, this club being composed of 800 of the very best young men of the county. He worked faithfully for its prosperity and the success of the party, and at the election had the pleasure of being on the winning side. In recognition of Mr. Niedenhofen's services, he received the appointment of Internal Revenue Collector for the Second District of Montana. He served in that with ten stamps and the Hobert mill with five stamps, followed in the same locality. The Ward mill has lost its machinery, the Pratt mill has been despoiled, the Hobert mill has disappeared, and the silence of dead works now reigns at Sterling, where in the olden times the steam whistle aroused the miner to his daily toil and called him from labor to refreshment. The following mines have been opened in Sterling Range: Rough and Ready, Willie Red, Chico, Juniper, Atlas, Mariposa, Chinook, Fairview, Beck, Mammoth, Chihuahua, Sugar Lake, Horseshoe, Double-Header, Clifton, Jim Blaine, Cleveland, North Meadow, Red Chief and many others.

Red Bluff has also passed through the various vicissitudes of primitive mining. A large number of claims have been recorded, many of them partially developed, and some have been worked from time to time for many years. Three mills have been erected to work these mines, the Hickman and Olds', the Wellington and the Carter mills. The latter has a capacity of twenty-five tons per diem by the Carter and capacity for two years, and while thus serving his party nominated him by acclamation for the office which he now fills. There were three candidates in the field that year,—Republican, Democrat and Populist. He received 1,607 votes more than the Democrat and 1,317 more than the Populist, being the largest majority ever obtained by his party during its history and he being the first Republican ever elected to this position in the county. This, indeed, was a signal victory for his party and himself, and goes to show that his life in Butte City must have been a spotless one and that he is highly esteemed by its citizens.

At this writing Mr. Niedenhofen is secretary and treasurer of the Security Abstract Company, and president of the Standard Manufacturing & Printing Company.

In social circles Mr. Niedenhofen is a favorite. He is a member of the Masonic fraternity, being both a Knight Templar and a Shriner, and now Eminent Commander of the Knights Templar. He is also Excellent Ruler of the Elks. Besides these organizations he is also identified with the Silver Bow Club and the West Side Social Club. Of the latter he is president. The Silver Bow Club is composed chiefly of the representative business men of the city, while the West Side Social Club is made up of 140 of Butte City's best young ladies and gentlemen.

PATRICK A. LARGEY, reputed to be one of Butte's best and wealthiest citizens, came to Montana in 1865. He was born in Perry county, Ohio, April 29, 1838, of Irish descent. His father, Patrick Largey, emigrated from Ireland to America when a boy and became an Ohio farmer. He married Miss Jane Cassidy, a native of county Armagh, Ireland, and had six children, all born in Ohio, and five still living. He died in 1857, in the sixty-first year of his age; his wife had died in 1852, in her fiftieth year. They were both devout members of the Catholic Church.

Patrick A., their eldest son, was reared on their farm and educated in the public school and at St. Joseph's in Somerset, Ohio. In business he was first engaged in bookkeeping for a year or two, and then engaged in buying and selling stock in Iowa. In 1865 he crossed the plains with oxen, being captain of a train of sixty wagons, and brought them through safely, losing only one man, who was shot by the Indians. They had stopped for noon, the man retired away from the camp to procure wood and was shot by an Indian in ambush. The train arrived safely at Virginia City, where Mr. Largey engaged in merchandising. He also purchased a placer claim, which has been worked ever since, yielding a large amount of gold; it is now run by an incorporated company.

Mr. Largey continued in business here until 1879, being the owner for a time of a mine in Madison county, which he sold for $225,000. In 1881 he opened his hardware business in Butte, handling all kinds of shelf hardware and miners' supplies, and the trade of that institution has become exceedingly large. In time Mr. Largey became an extensive mine owner, owning and operating the Speculator copper mine for the last ten years. The property is particularly valuable, paying heavy dividends. Also he has been half owner of the Comanche mine, which was at length sold to the Boston Company for $200,000. Before the railroad was built Mr. Largey, seeing the great need of speedy communication with the outside world and throughout his State, became the builder and owner of the following telegraph lines: From Virginia City to Helena, Helena to Bozeman, Helena to Deer Lodge and to Butte. These lines he operated until the railroads were built, when he sold them. Altogether they were a large undertaking, but were a source of income to their projector and of great value to the business of the State.

With two others, Mr. Largey purchased and established the electric-light plant of the city of Butte, and later sold it. He also has the honor of starting the Inter-Mountain newspaper, and is now president of the Inter-Mountain Publishing Company. January 29, 1891, he became the founder of the State Savings Bank of Butte, with a capital stock of $100,000. He is also president of the institution, while C. H. Palmer is vice-president and T. M.

Russell process. The following mines are near these mills: In Grubstake Gulch are the Grubstake, Richfield, Greaser, Boquet, No. 3, Belmont, Golconda, Surprise, Bessy, May Queen, Snapping Andy, Red Chief, 76, Homestake, Puritan, Water Fraction, Red Bluff, Red Bluff East; and in Tippecanoe Gulch are the Tippecanoe, Tippecanoe No. 2, Ruby, Buffalo, Perhaps, Mohegan and Jumbo. In Hot Springs Gulch are the Cedar Point, Urbana, Cordwainer, Great Expectation, Jack Rabbit, Michigan, Home, Boy's, Bank, Railroad and Meadow Lark. On Silver Shower Hill are the Mormahaul, Blue eyed Nell, Blizzard Point, Bald Eagle, Curlew, Zero, Silver King, Porphyry, Topaz, Topaz East, Lone Star, Tilden, White Rock, Jessie, Jennie Hays, Francis, Morning Star, Ramshorn, Zero No. 2. In Boaz Gulch are the Lady, Appalachian, Bell-of-the-Woods, Sooner, Bluebird, Keystone, New Year's Calls, Electric, Red Cloud, Storm, Red Rock, Red Branch, West Branch, White Eagle, Comstock, Jim Conway, Capital Prize, Snowflake, Rising Sun and Alabama. On Cot-

Hodgins cashier. They do a general banking business, and the institution stands very high in the estimation of the citizens of Butte.

In his political views Mr. Largey has always been a Republican, but has never been a politician in the sense of having sought or desired office. He is a gentleman of great executive ability, is thoroughly acquainted with mining and the many other interests of the State, is an honest and successful business manager, and withal he is benevolent and helpful to those in need, and is therefore very much beloved and respected in Butte.

He was married on the 30th of April, 1877, to Miss Lulu Sillers, the daughter of Mr. Morris Sillers, of Chicago, and they have four children, namely: Morris S., Lulu, Creighton and Mary Montana. Mr. Largey and his family are members of the Catholic Church.

JOHN W. MCCARTY, who came to Montana in search of gold in 1864, and who now is one of the leading farmers of the Bitter Root valley, was born in Greene county, Missouri, May 9, 1846, a son of a native of Tennessee. The latter subsequently moved to Missouri, was there married to Miss Charlotte Guttry, and John W. was their only child. The mother died when he was young, and he afterward went with his father to Kansas, remaining there until eighteen years of age. Then, in company with Elijah Shaffer, with whom he had been partially raised, he came to Montana. During the journey they were troubled with Indians stealing their horses, and four months, from May until September, was spent on the road. Mr. McCarty came direct to the Bitter Root valley, where he worked for wages on farms six years. In the fall of 1870 he homesteaded 160 acres of his present farm, afterward pre-empted forty acres, and his first residence had a dirt roof. Since 1883 a good farm dwelling has adorned the place. Mr. McCarty is engaged in general farming and stock-raising.

He was married May 22, 1870, to Miss Etta Backus, a native of Ohio. They have had eleven children, eight of whom are now living—Sarah Margaret, Frank, Oliver and Olive (twins), Florence and Lawrence (twins), Emmitt James and Lewis. One child, Francis, died at the age of twelve years. Mr. and Mrs. McCarty are members of the Christian Church, and the former affiliates with the Republican party.

HON. LAON A. HUFFMAN, of Miles City, was elected by the Republicans as a Representative in the Montana Legislature from Custer county in 1882. His life had been such as eminently to qualify him for that responsible position, he having for many years hunted, scouted and photographed in the best scenic regions of the great West. He saw the great possibilities of the future growth and the greatness of Montana, especially the Yellowstone valley, if irrigated. Accordingly, when a synopsis of the Bradford irrigation bill, early in that session, was presented to him, he immediately lent his valuable aid to Mr. Bradford and his associates in completing the bill prior to its introduction. The bill bearing his name, while it failed of the necessary support to become a law, contains to-day many valuable provisions, and will doubtless form the ground-work for the much needed irrigation law which doubtless will be passed by the next legislative assembly in Mr. Huffman's State. He was simply in advance of the main column. His idea is correct and must soon find place in the statute books.

He was born in Winneshiek county, Iowa, on the old military trail west of McGregor, in 1852, a son of P. C. and Chestina (Baird) Huffman. His father was a pioneer farmer in that region. Laon grew up on the farm, attending the public schools, where he laid a foundation from which he has since builded a fund of knowledge; at the same time he acquired the photographic art. He was a great admirer of the works of nature, and when twenty years of age made his way into the great West, where he explored the Rocky mountain region, hunting and photographing and reveling in the beauties and sublimities of nature so lavishly spread out in the mountainous West. While he has not made a fortune he has by untiring energy and increasing industry acquired a competency and a delightful home, a residence with all the modern equipments, a home of comfort where he enjoys life with his estimable wife and bright children.

tonwood creek are the Monitor, Tiger, Kalamazoo, Cottonwood, Silver Crown, Elkhorn, Morning Star, Alleghany, Madison River and Silver Tip. On Pole creek are the Iron Knight, Iron Age, Cynthia, Michigander, Galena and several other mining claims.

On Madison, Below Cherry creek, are a group of mines, and above Cherry creek the Red Jacket, Yellow Jacket, Summit and Local Option have been located on the same vein of argentiferous galena. There is a group of twelve mineral claims on Washington Bar. On the Madison, thirteen miles east of Virginia City, is a group of copper mines carrying good proportions of gold and silver. About thirty-five miles above the last named mines and on the other side of the Madison, another group of mines have been discovered and in part developed. The mines make a good showing in both of these camps on the Upper Madison.

These facts do not record half the mines and mining claims in Madison, but show that the miners of this country will have mines and prospects enough to last them the next hundred

After traveling over several of the Western States and Territories, he located in 1879 at Fort Keogh, where he engaged in hunting buffalo in the surrounding country for two winters. Such employment was then a profitable business. He was also the post photographer and did much scenic art work in the vicinity among the Indians, also in the Yellowstone National Park. An interesting chapter in the history of eastern Montana's early growth might be, and undoubtedly some time will be, written by Mr. Huffman. Standing in his quarters at Fort Keogh he witnessed the wagon train of the Northern Pacific Railroad engineers surveying for the final location of that line of road as it emerged on the fringe of timber on Tongue river. He also witnessed the building of the ice bridge and the transferring of this railway's locomotive and the material for the construction of the road across the Missouri river on the ice.

He is a profound thinker, progressive as well as conservative, always looking at the agrarian principles involved in any measure, supporting very strongly in the legislature a bill the intent of which was to extend to the people the privilege of paying one-half of their taxes on the first of the year, the balance six months later, thereby avoiding the large accumulation of the people's money in the hands of county treasurers who in turn interested the banks of the several counties of the State with their money and influence in the biennial fight for the election of treasurers. Mr. Huffman believed and still believes, that no better security for public moneys can be had than the security which the several counties have upon the real and personal property of its inhabitants, and that a corrupting element in local politics would have been removed by the passage of such a law. This bill also failed of becoming a law by reason of the executive veto. It is certain, however, at this writing, that the financial experiences and the maelstrom of business failures, bank failures, the trouble and inconvenience to several counties in pushing the bondsmen of unfortunate county treasurers, together with the additional fact that the press of Montana, or that portion of it which opposed this law in 1892, are now advocating it.

While at Fort Keogh in the early days Mr. Huffman witnessed many sad and stirring scenes connected with the final settlement of the Indian trouble, which made travel in this locality and between Fort Keogh and the Missouri river extremely hazardous. He was present at the noted interview held between General Miles and the Spotted Eagle band of Indians, and was also present, an eye witness, at the time that noted band of savages were bundled upon steamboats with all their savage paraphernalia and with pitiable lamentations shipped down the river to a reservation where they have since been located.

One of his earliest business ventures in Montana was the building of a cattle ranch on what is now known as the Lame Deer Battle Ground at Lame Deer, Montana, near the head waters of the Rosebud. This is the place where that noted chief Lame Deer lost his head, is reputed to have been killed and had it cut off by the soldiers. He has also interests in the Cook City mines, and is the secretary and treasurer of the Cook City Mining Company in the New World Mining District.

In 1883 he married Miss Lizzie Ann Skinner, a daughter of Charles and Eliza (Plum) Skinner. Her father when a young man was an advance agent for Joseph Jefferson, the actor, and after marriage was proprietor for many years of the Mansion House on Lake street in Chicago. Her mother was born in Zanesville, Ohio. Her brother Charles served in the Eighty-eighth Illinois Volunteer Infantry during the late war, known as the Second Chicago Board of Trade Regiment. C. P. Comstock, for many years a well known member of the Board of Trade of Chicago, was a stepbrother to Mrs. Huffman. Mr. Huffman and wife have two interesting daughters, Bessie and Ruth. Mr. Huffman is a man who advocates progress and the maintenance of morals; takes a deep interest in the public schools; is an active member of the Board of School Trustees, and has been almost ever since the organization of the school district in which he lives; is a very busy man and yet has found time to fill some positions of trust acceptably, including the office of County Commissioner, etc. Withal, is a sound Republican, advocating the protective system. He is the leading pho-years. It sometimes appears that the great number of mines is an injury to the individual owners and the community rather than a benefit. When a prospector has discovered three or four leads, it often takes all his time to represent and partially develop them. In this way real bonanzas have been kept in the back ground, which would have been developed and made men rich had the discoverer not been burdened with representing other less valuable properties.

Late developments in the group of mines on the Big Hole show the advantages which often come with development and never without it. "The Madison County Gold Mine Limited" and the contract for a forty-stamp mill, are the fruits of a little late work on old prospects.

MEAGHER COUNTY.

The railroad from Great Falls to the mines has greatly stimulated the mining operations at all the mining camps in the Little Belt mountains. Its influence is specially felt at Neihart tographer in eastern Montana, conducting a photographing and publishing business both at Miles City and Billings, Montana.

J. B. COOPER, a well known and highly respected citizen of Billings, Montana, was born in Georgia in March, 1848, and was reared and educated in the South.

In 1862 he entered the Confederate service and remained on duty until the close of the war, participating in numerous engagements. He was afterward in the regular army for three years, stationed at Forts Rice and Beaufort.

In 1868 Mr. Cooper came to Miles City, Montana. Later he located in Junction, Yellowstone county, and from there came to his present location on the Blue Creek bottoms, near Billings, where he is now engaged in ranching, being the owner of 1,280 acres of fine land and carrying on his operations on an extensive scale.

During his early experience in Montana Mr. Cooper had frequent dealings with the Indians, and was on many a buffalo hunt. A record of all his pioneer life and exploits would fill a volume.

Mr. Cooper was married in 1868, and he and his wife are the parents of six children, two sons and four daughters, the eldest being twenty-two and the youngest nine years of age.

ROBERT L. MC CULLOH, vice-president of the Montana National Bank, Helena, was born in Westmoreland county, Pennsylvania, September 11, 1845. He is of Scotch-Irish descent, his ancestors having come to America previous to the Revolution, in which they were engaged on the side of American independence, and settled in Pennsylvania. In that State several generations of the family were born. His father, Robert McCulloh, married Elizabeth W. Gleim, also a native of Pennsylvania. Both were members of the Presbyterian Church, and they and their family were people of prominence in the community in which they lived. They had four children. Robert McCulloh died when in his forty-third year. His good wife lived to be seventy-six.

Robert L. McCulloh was educated in the public schools of St. Louis, to which place the family had moved when he was eight years old. When he was twenty-one he left St. Louis, where he had been employed since his twelfth year, and found employment in a country store in the central part of the State. In 1870 he came to Montana and settled in Helena, where he was employed by the Diamond R Freight Line, E. G. Maclay & Company, proprietors. Colonel Broadwater was a member of the firm and largely interested in the business, and he and Mr. McCulloh became warm friends. In 1879 Mr. McCulloh went to Fort Assiniboine, where Colonel Broadwater was post trader, and became identified with the business. In 1882 the Colonel retired from his position at Fort Assiniboine, and Mr. McCulloh was appointed post trader; and remained there as a member of the firm of Broadwater, McCulloh & Company until 1891, doing a large and lucrative business. He then returned to Helena, and was soon after elected cashier of the Montana National Bank, which position he filled until January, 1893, when he was elected to his present office, that of vice-president of the bank. In his will Colonel Broadwater named Mr. McCulloh as executor of his estate, in connection with Mr. Murphy, who declined to serve, and Mr. McCulloh has performed the duties of that important trust. He is also one of the trustees of the Montana Savings Bank.

In 1873 he was married to Elizabeth H. Blanchard, a native of Utah, and a daughter of John R. Blanchard. Their only surviving son, Carroll B., is now attending school at Faribault, Minnesota.

JOHN W. COTTER, City Attorney of Butte City, was born in Des Moines, Iowa, on the 14th of May, 1861, of Irish parentage. His father, Michael Cotter, was born in the city of Cork, Ireland, in 1830, lost his parents when he was nine years of age, and at sixteen he came to America to make his own way in the world. After his arrival he was employed in New York and Pennsylvania in any work that came to hand. In 1854 he came westward to Des Moines, and in 1859 married Miss Ellen Sullivan, a native of Augusta, Maine, and of Irish ancestry who had long been residents of Virginia.

In 1862 he made a trip to California in search of gold, mining and doing other work for five years there, and returning with some of the metal to his wife and two children in Des Moines. For some years following he was in the employ of Polk & Hubbel in the construction of the Des Moines water-works and in the laying and repairing, and Barker. At Barker a new furnace has been erected, a large amount of development work has been done and the ores in large quantities have been shipped and proved rich from many of the mines; and a large number of new discoveries have been made and recorded.

Neihart has passed through years of great activity in mining circles. New mines have been located, old claims opened up and a vast amount of work done in sinking shafts, running tunnels and levels and shipping ores. Quite a number of the mines have changed hands and capital and enterprises have gravitated toward the many rich mines of Neihart. This activity has been stimulated at least by the railroad from Great Falls.

The Castle mines have more than sustained the predictions made years since of their vast deposits of rich ores. The Cumberland, Yellowstone, Great Eastern, California, Legal Tender, Judge and others have been developed into great mines. The hopes of railroads from Helena and Livingston and Great Falls have filled this ever active camp with new life. Discovetc., of their pipe lines. In 1879 he met with an accident in a coal mine, which resulted in his death. His good wife still survives him, residing at the old home in Des Moines, now in her fifty-seventh year. They were members of the Catholic Church. They had seven children, —five sons and two daughters.

John W., their eldest, received his education in the parochial schools in Des Moines, and began for himself the battle of life at the early age of eleven years, entering a cigar factory, where he at first received as wages $2.50 a week while he boarded himself at home. At the age of fourteen he received journeyman's wages, which amounted to $12 to $14 per week. After continuing in this business steadily until he was twenty-four years of age, he entered the office of Hon. C. C. Cole, afterward Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Iowa, and read law there three years, and in 1887 was admitted to the bar. He continued with the Judge nearly a year longer, and in 1888 went to Seattle and to Baker City, Oregon, and finally, in 1889, came to Butte, where he at once opened his law practice, where he still remains, at No. 14 West Park street. The following January he received the appointment of Assistant Prosecuting Attorney for Silver Bow county, and filled that office until May, 1891, at which time he took the office of City Attorney, being elected to this position for a term of two years. At the expiration of this term he was re-elected, and is therefore now serving his second term. In his views of national questions he is a Republican. In 1892 he was a public speaker for his party in the campaign, and the following year was the only one on his ticket elected, having run far ahead of the other candidates.

He is a member of the Silver Bow Club and of the American-Irish Club. He gives his law practice his whole attention, and has earned and secured the confidence of the people.

Isaie Poitras, the village blacksmith of Laurin, Montana, dates his arrival in this State in 1866. As one of its pioneers and worthy citizens he is entitled to some personal mention in this work. Briefly, a sketch of his life is as follows:

Isaie Poitras was born in Canada, August 25, 1840, the son of French-Canadian parents. His great-grandfather, Benjamin Poitras, emigrated to America from France and settled on Paro Island in the St. Lawrence river. His son Benjamin was born there and lived to be 101 years old. F. X. Poitras, the son of Benjamin Poitras, Jr., was the father of our subject. He married Mary Celes, a native of Canada and a descendant of emigrants from France, and this worthy couple became the parents of five sons. The father was an architect and contractor, his work being chiefly on large buildings, such as churches, mills, etc. He died in Canada, in the sixty-eighth year of his age. His wife died in 1846, in her twenty-fifth year.

The subject of this sketch was the eldest child in his father's family. He was educated in Canada and there learned the trade of blacksmith. May 15, 1865, he bade adieu to home and native land and directed his course toward St. Joseph, Missouri, where he worked at his trade for a time; thence to Fort Kearney, where he ran a shop from March until May; and thence to Virginia City, Montana. Upon his arrival here he was employed by Mr. Ambrose Patenande for $125 and board per month. Later he and Mr. Joseph Piget purchased the business and ran it for two years, making a deal of money. Mr. Poitras was in Virginia City during the exciting times in the early history of Montana and saw many road agents hung. While working there he made as high as $100 in a single day. The price for shoeing a horse was $7, and the price for making a miner's pick was $15. But while money was easily made it was also easily lost, and in an unfortunate investment Mr. Poitras sunk his accumulations. In 1869 we find him at Bannack, where for a time he worked for Mayor Watson. Next he ran a shop on the shares and did well, in this way continuing for six months. In the spring he formed a partnership with James P. Murry, which relation lasted until Mr. Murry was elected Sheriff, and after that Mr. Poitras continued the business alone a year longer. He then removed to Glendale and built a shop, in which he did business a year and a half and was prosperous. This shop he sold for $1,000, and after selling it he re urned eries have been developed into bright prospects, bright prospects into paying mines, and paying mines into bonanzas; but the owners, after working and waiting for the iron horse, sometimes become discouraged and quit work; and the camp becomes less hopeful and active. The fires in the furnace have smouldered for months. A railroad would make Castle a great camp.

The Alabama is the pioneer discovery in a new camp some three miles from White Sulphur Springs. A little development work has shown a large body of good ore. The Cleveland is in the same camp. The ore is galena, rich in silver. Copperopolis has been somewhat roused from its long sleep by the rumors of railroads; and the Bigger District can boast of some new discoveries. Yogo has had many new discoveries and old ones have been developed into very bright prospects and mines. The Gold Belt, Morning Star and Last Chance appear well. Yogo, always awake, has more activity now than ever since the '70s.

to Canada. That was in 1880. After a visit of four months he came back to Montana, and again worked at Glendale, this time for the Hecla Company. A few months later he went to Butte City and accepted a position with the Silver Bow Mining Company. Subsequently he was employed by the Lexington Company and the Bluebird Company, altogether working on miners' tools, for a period of eleven years. His next move was to Laurin. Here he opened a shop, and has since been known as the village blacksmith. All honor to the men who with with brawny arms and sturdy blows maintain themselves in this vocation.

Fraternally, Mr. Poitras is a blue lodge Mason; politically, a stanch Republican.

GEORGE M. BROWN, of Dillon, Montana, was born in the county of Fife, Scotland, in the month of August, 1836. His early education was acquired at St. Andrews. His mother was a Miss Mitchell, of St. Andrews Parish. Young Brown attended at that place the Madras College, founded by Dr. Bell, continuing in school at irregular intervals until he was thirteen years of age, when he became an apprentice to a carpenter and joiner. At the age of twenty-two he emigrated to America, arriving in New York in 1858. From that place he went to Kansas, where he engaged in carpentering for one year. During the Pike's Peak excitement he went to Colorado, where he was employed as a carpenter, also mining to some extent in Russell's Gulch until 1862. In that year he started for the Idaho mines, his destination being Florence. He only reached Lemhi, and from there turned off to Deer Lodge, Montana, finally reaching Bannack City. His party was the first to discover gold at that point, one of his party, John White, being the first one to find gold in that camp. There he mined, with varying degrees of success, until 1870, when he embarked in the stock-raising business, which pursuit he has continued ever since. In 1891 he removed to Dillon, and, purchasing a home, has since been a resident of this city.

Mr. Brown has been an active Republican throughout his life, and has served as a member of the Board of County Commissioners for Beaver Head county at various times since 1866. In 1892 he was elected to the State Senate from Beaver Head county, and in the discharge of his official duties has ever been found true and faithful.

IRA MYERS, dealer in real estate and mining property, Great Falls, Montana, is an honored pioneer of 1863. His identification with mining and general business interests of the State has done much to hasten the rapid development of Montana, the great treasure State of the Union.

He is an Ohioan by birth, born in Mansfield, December 18, 1839, and is a son of John P. and Susan (Arnett) Myers, natives of Pennsylvania, who settled in Ohio in 1825. The great-grandfather of our subject came from Germany and located in Pennsylvania, where both his grandfather and father were born, the latter in the year 1805. His wife, Susan Arnett, was also a native of the Keystone State. They had three sons and three daughters, and two of the sons and one daughter still survive. During most of his life John P. Myers was engaged in the wholesale and retail grocery business, the first business venture, however, being in the dry-goods line, for a short time only. He was a man of the highest integrity of character and was honored and respected by all who knew him. Both he and his wife were devoted Christians, holding acceptable membership in the Methodist Church. Mrs. Myers was a woman of marked piety, loyal and true alike to God, home and friends. The father passed away in 1865, and in 1889 his devoted wife passed to a deserved reward. She was born in 1810. The early life of our subject was passed in his native town, and in the public schools and private academy of the place he acquired a practical English education. Under the parental roof he remained till 1857, when he went to Davenport, Iowa, finding employment as clerk for a time, and subsequently he went to St. Louis, and later still to Kansas City, in which latter place he found employment in the store till 1859. In the fall of this year occurred the tremendous gold excitement of Pike's Peak, and he joined the rushing throng to this great El Dorado. However, he remained here but a short time when he and nine others organized the Colorado City Town Site Company, and during the following winter did considerable in building up the place. He subsequently located a tract of 160 acres adjoining the Town Site Company's property, which tract now comprises the "Famous Garden of the Gods." In May, 1860, he went to California Gulch, now Leadville, Colorado, at that time the richest placer mining camp in the Territory. After Running Wolf District has made great progress during the year past. The Mortson and Woodhurst, Red Oxide, Knocks All, Sir Walter Scott, Castle, Emma, Mountain Side, Ada and others have improved under the process of development which is the touchstone that reveals the real value of all prospects. A large amount of ore has been shipped and smelted with very satisfactory results.

Dry Wolf District has also had its years of encouraging development. The Gold Dust, Dry Wolf, Manitoba, Pierre and Higby, Susquehanna and many other mines have been improved by the work during the year. Many tons of the ores in this camp have been shipped and smelted at Great Falls with very encouraging results. Spring Coulee has at least one good mine, and others will probably be found in that camp. Logging Creek camp is coming out with a group of mines rich in silver and lead. Arrangements have been made to thoroughly investigate and develop the discoveries mining a short time he was elected Sheriff of a district that had been created by the provincial government previous to the organization of the Territory by the general Government. In December, 1860, the gold excitement of Baker's Park in the San Juan country, New Mexico (now Colorado), broke out. A large party was organized, which he joined. They succeeded in penetrating as far as Taos, when, on account of deep snow in the San Juan mountains, the party was forced into an abandonment of the journey, and in Taos and Santa Fe sought quarters till spring, when the journey was resumed and completed under the guidance of famous Kit Carson. But this hardy, determined band did not find wealth at Baker's Park. It was a delusion. Mr. Myers was elected Recorder of Claims, and for services, remaining over three months, he received a paltry $3, so destitute were the miners. In July, 1861, he returned to California Gulch and resumed mining till the spring of 1862, when he went to Colorado City and disposed in part his interest there. Going to Denver, he engaged in hotel business till April, 1863, when in company with a large party he started for the Territory of Idaho, now Montana, arriving in Bannack May 15, 1863. The following month he joined the first great stampede to Alder Gulch, near the present Virginia City and engaged in mining. In 1865, he operated additional mines at Blackfoot, Montana, meeting with success. In the fall of the last named year he settled in Helena, and continued mining. In 1867 he was in Diamond City, when the first hydraulic mining in the Territory was done on a large scale. The expense connected with it was enormous. The water with which to work his properties cost $1.30 an inch, and 200 inches were used daily: $260 was paid for water every morning. These ventures proved disastrous, and in 1868 he returned to Helena, residing there till 1876. At this time a company was formed with which he went to Deadwood, Black Hills country. There he formed the Pioneer Ditch Company and engaged in the construction of mining ditches till the summer of 1878, when he sold to the late Senator Hurst of the Homestake Mining Company.

He again went East on a visit, and the following year returned to Montana. The cattle business now engaged his attention, and, organizing under the firm name of Myers, Buck & Company, 2,300 head were bought in Oregon and driven to the range in the present county of Teton, northern Montana, remaining in this business till 1883.

Again he went East and in the following year he settled in Great Falls, which at that time largely existed in the fertile imagination of the future city's earnest champion and founder, Hon. Paris Gibson, who at that time was living in a tent pitched on the banks of the Missouri, industriously engaged in platting the future city. Seeing an opening in the lumber business, Mr. Myers at once began the construction of a sawmill, having a capacity of 25,000 feet per day, then the largest mill east of the main range in the Territory. The logs were brought from a hundred miles up the river to his mill. The product of the mill was quite general in character, comprising nearly everything that entered into the constructions of the day, and it was an independent factor in building up Great Falls and surrounding country. This business was disposed of in 1892. He was one of the organizers of the El Dorado Canal Company, of which he is now president. The canal has a capacity of 12,000 inches, bringing the water to a bench above the town of Choteau. The Company now owns 15,000 acres of patented land. At present Mr. Myers is principally engaged in quartz mining and handling real estate.

The enterprising and progressive spirit of the man has been made manifest in various directions in Montana business affairs, and the communities in which he has lived have been beautified by his intelligent, well directed efforts. To attempt to go thoroughly into the details of Mr. Myers' life since he crossed the Missouri river is too great an undertaking for these pages. Few men have had a more varied career than he. Being of a sanguine, hopeful temperament discouragements nor adversities have held held him long in check. To rise abreast the wave that brought temporary defeat was but the natural reflex action of his indomitable spirit. And, though his life for thirty years or more has been subject to great exposure at times, it has apparently, made no inroad upon his vigorous constitution, and to the observer he appears to have the vigor and bouyancy of youth.

made on Logging Creek and to open a road for the transportation of its ores to the railroad. Many rich claims partially opened appear on Carpenter's creek. This will be a rich country. As prospecting is continued in the Little Belt mountains, it becomes more and more evident that the range of these mountains are rich in mines. A railroad is all that Maiden needs to make it one of the most extensive and productive mining camps in the State.

The first discovery of mines in Castle mountains was made in 1885. They at once attracted the attention of the mining men and have ever since held a prominent position in public estimation. A great many discoveries have been made and an unusual amount of energy has been displayed in developing quite a number of these prospects into mines. This was to be expected where rich ores in such abundance moved the muscles wielding the pick and shovel.

Politically, he acts with the Democratic party. He has been unambitious in an official sense, yet always discharging the duties of the elective franchise incumbent upon good citizenship. He is a member of the Order of Elks.

An important event occurred in the life of Mr. Myers December 27, 1887, when was celebrated his marriage, in Minneapolis, to Miss Catherine M. McGurk, a native of Ohio, a most estimable lady, amiable of disposition, unassuming and a worthy member of the Catholic Church. Their union has been blessed with two children,—Ira James and Charles Sidney.

DAVID MCCRANOR, one of the earliest settlers and best known citizens of Montana, now of Madison county, was born in Germantown, Ohio, January 8, 1838, son of James and Elizabeth (Bender) McCranor.

His father, who was a cabinetmaker by trade, died when David was seven years old, and thus deprived of a father's care, young McCranor was early in life thrown upon his own resources, and ere long not only provided for himself but also assisted in the support of the family. Growing up under these circumstances, his schooling was of a necessity limited. In 1856, while still in his 'teens, ambitious and eager to see the world and make a fortune, Mr. McCranor went to California and began mining. He mined on Johnston's bar and made some money. He had been there eighteen months when the Pike's Peak excitement broke out in Colorado, and the news of the gold discovery at that place spread all over the country. He was among others who made a rush for that place, and in Russell Gulch he mined until the following year, 1860. In 1863 the Salmon river gold find brought him to Montana, but he came only as far as Bannack. He afterward began mining in Alder Gulch, where he made money and remained until 1870. That year he turned his attention to merchandising in Silver Bow, where he conducted business two years, after which he again came to Madison county, this time settling at Sheridan. For ten consecutive years he has successfully engaged in mercantile pursuits at Sheridan. In 1882 he again began mining, which he continued successfully until failing health compelled him to dispose of his property and retire from active business operations.

Few men, if any, are more familiar with the various phases of life in Montana, from the early pioneer days on down to the present time, than is Mr. McCranor. He has always been a Republican in his political views, and during his early residence in Madison county served as County Sheriff, filling the office from 1867 to 1869. That was at a time when this office demanded men of undaunted courage, discretion and nerve, and no man ever filled the position with more ability than David McCranor.

While he calls Madison county his home, Mr. McCranor has of recent years sojourned where it suited his pleasure the best. He spends his winters in the genial climate of sunny California.

URI E. FRIZELLE, County Clerk and Recorder of Yellowstone county, Montana, was born in Floyd county, Iowa, in the year 1857, son of Oliver E. and L. M. (Hill) Frizelle. He is of Scotch and French descent. His father was a thrifty farmer in Iowa, and during the Civil war served his country as a private in Company K, Twenty-seventh Iowa Volunteers.

In 1876, before he had reached his majority, young Frizelle's ambitious spirit led him to seek his fortune in the West. For three years he was engaged in mining in the region of the Black Hills, and while thus occupied came to the conclusion that a surer way of making money was by shipping stock to the mining camps and thus supplying the demand for food. Consequently he turned his attention to that industry and was thus occupied for two years, meeting with success. In the spring of 1882 he came to Billings and engaged in the lumber business, sawmilling, etc. Later he turned his attention to dealing in stone, and in connection with a partner at the present time owns a quarry of the finest building-stone in the State, this quarry being located near Billings. Here they have all modern facilities for cutting and sawing building-stone in all forms demanded by the builders. The quantity is inexhaustible and the quality unsurpassed.

Mr. Frizelle has been identified with the Republican party all his life. His popularity in Yellowstone county was evinced, in the fall of 1892, by his election to the office of County Clerk and Recorder, in which position he is now serving most acceptably. Fraternally, he is a member of both Ashlar Lodge, No. 29, A. F. & A. M., and Rathbone Lodge, No. 28, K. of P., being Chancellor of the latter.

Castle is a mining camp built in a beautiful sheltered valley near the southeast base of Castle mountain. This mountain received its name from the castellated rocks which form the very attractive features of its crests and peaks. The principal mines are on a series of rounded mountain spurs from one to six miles from the town. The mountains are limestone, porphyries, granites and various eruptive rocks, flanked by more recent formations containing veins crevice veins, blanket veins and veins of segregation. Many of the best veins are opened along the line of contact between the limestone and porphyry.

The ores are oxides and sulphurets of copper and lead containing gold and silver, oxide of manganese, containing the same and sulphurets and other ores of silver. These ores vary in richness all the way from one or two dollars up to ten or twelve thousand dollars per ton.

Mr. Frizelle was married in 1884 to Miss Mina H. Scofield, of Iowa, and they have two children, Vera L. and Earl. Mrs. Frizelle is a member of the Congregational Church.

H. M. ALLEN, dealer in lumber, sash, shingles, doors, blinds, and all kinds of building material, Billings, Montana, is one of the enterprising business men of the town.

Mr. Allen was born in Boston, Massachusetts, in 1856, son of Henry C. and Hattie L. (Gray) Allen. His father, a contractor and builder, was one of the successful business men of Boston. The Allens trace their ancestry back to Colonel Ethan Allen, of Ticonderoga fame. Harry M., the subject of our sketch, was educated in the grammar school at Boston and in the Roxbury high school. In 1883 he came to Billings, Montana, to enter the employ of the Montana Lumber Company, and when John P. White succeeded the company Mr. Allen remained with him until 1887, since which time he has been a member of the firm of H. M. Allen & Co. Ever since he took up his residence in Billings he has been a prominent factor in advancing the interests of the town. He is a member of the Board of School Trustees in Billings; a charter member of Rathbone Lodge, No. 28, K. of P., being now D. D. G. C. of his district; is a charter member of Billings Division, No. 28, Uniform Rank, K. of P.; member of Ashlar Lodge, No. 29, A. F. & A. M., at Billings, Montana; of Billings Chapter, No. 6, Royal Arch Masons, and a charter member of the Royal Arcanum, No. 103, Boston, Massachusetts.

Mr. Allen was married in 1881 to Miss Abbie L. Adams, daughter of Daniel and Abigail (Lord) Adams, of Ellsworth, Maine, her father being a descendant of the John Adams stock of Massachusetts. They have had three children,—Lillian S., Harry M., Jr., and Frank Herbert. The great affliction of their lives occurred in 1893, when their little son, Harry M., was accidentally shot by a playmate, his death resulting.

Mr. Allen is a stanch Republican.

REV. GEORGE STEWART, who has been for forty-seven years an effective clergyman and missionary of the Protestant Episcopal Church, and for sixteen years a missionary of that body in Missoula county, was born in Lisburn, six miles from Belfast, Ireland, June 6, 1824. He is of Scotch descent, his ancestors having emigrated from Scotland to Ireland about the close of the year 1700, and it is believed that they and the late A. T. Stewart, of New York, sprang from the same ancestry. Mr. Stewart's parents were James and Mary (McBride) Stewart, farmers of Lisburn. She was reared a Presbyterian, but after her marriage became a confirmed member of the Episcopal Church with her husband. They were the parents of twelve children. The father died in his forty-fifth year. Three of the children emigrated to America in 1833, and in 1835 the mother and the rest of her family sailed from Belfast in the Sarashief, landing at New York after a voyage of six weeks and two days. They settled in Philadelphia, where she spent the rest of her life and where she died in 1866, at the advanced age of eighty-four years. And at this ripe old age there was not a gray hair in her head. It may also be mentioned in connection with the history of the family that the four grandparents of our subject lived to an aggregate age of 360 years. His mother was left a widow when she was forty, and notwithstanding the fact that she had several offers of marriage, she declined them all. She was a woman of more than ordinary fortitude and bravery. Her son pays her this tribute: "She was as brave and true a woman as ever lived." Four of her sons and three daughters are still living, three of the former being wealthy farmers in Illinois.

Mr. Stewart was educated chiefly in Wilmington, Delaware, his course there being supplemented by one at Nashotah, Wisconsin, where he graduated in 1859 with the degree of B. D. When a boy of eleven years of age, he had become a faithful follower of the Master, and in 1847 he had begun his life work in the ministry, as lay missionary under Bishop Cobbs, of Alabama, his work being in the Tennessee valley. After he completed his classical course he went to Mississippi to accept a position of general missionary and secretary under Bishop Green of that State, and in this capacity he traveled over the whole of the State of Mississippi, taking statistics and reporting to the bishop. He continued his ministerial and missionary work in Mississippi until 1861, when the war broke out. In the meantime he had become afflicted with tonsillitis, and he then went to New York for treatment. After his recovery he was sent to Minnesota, where he spent fifteen years of faithful missionary work.

Most of the mines of Castle have caps of iron and manganese carrying gold. Though the iron and manganese ores which form these caps are not, as a rule, very rich in the precious metals, they carry enough to make them very valuable fluxes to use with more refractory and richer ore.

There is a furnace at Castle, which has smelted the ores from several of the Castle mines with what would seem to be good results. During the last fall it ran 2,000 tons from the Cumberland, which yielded bullion worth some $90,000, and only a profit of $27 per ton on ore delivered at the furnace. The Connellsville coke used cost $25 per ton, and the charcoal 15 cents per bushel. The bullion contains so large a per cent of lead that the freight and refining make a large reduction on what would

Through his instrumentality several churches and parsonages were erected in Minnesota and he was the means of accomplishing great good at the various places where he was stationed. In 1873, on account of failing health, he went to Philadelphia for treatment, and spent some time at that place, medical aid seeming to do little for him. He had for a number of years been affected with lung trouble. Indeed, he had gone to New Orleans when a young man, in 1846, all his friends believing he would die of consumption there, but contrary to their expectations and the doctor's predictions he recovered. His recovery at that time and also years later was due not so much to change of climate and to medical aid as to his own will power. He has now reached his three-score and ten, is straight as an arrow, and is well preserved both physically and mentally.

In 1877 Mr. Stewart came to Missoula as Episcopal missionary to the Bitter Root valley. This position he filled for eight years, and since then has confined his work to Missoula county. Since 1890 he has been general agent for Missoula county. After he came to Missoula he founded the Church here and was largely instrumental in the building of their nice church edifice. He has also invested in some real-estate, etc. Besides his own home he has two houses which he rents.

Mr. Stewart was married in Faribault, by Bishop Whipple, to Miss Isabella J. Lombard, a native of Washington, D. C., and a daughter of Mrs. Jane Lombard of that city. Her mother's maiden name was Longfellow, she being a cousin of the distinguished poet. Mr. and Mrs. Stewart have had six sons, one of whom died in his fourth year. The others are as follows: George, a student in the University of Pennsylvania; and Harry, Latner and Benjamin, at school in Minneapolis. Mrs. Stewart is with her children at Minneapolis, while Mr. Stewart is in Missoula, the separation, although a great privation to them both, is for the best interests of their sons.

As a speaker, Mr. Stewart is forcible and fluent. He has a most remarkable memory, can quote passage after passage of Scripture, giving chapter and verse, and indeed can repeat chapter after chapter verbatim. Long may he live to continue his good work.

C. T. Busha, senior member of the mercantile and hardware firm of Busha & Bailey, Big Timber, Montana, has been identified with this place since 1885.

Mr. Busha was born in Detroit, Michigan, in 1858, son of C. T. and Helen (Clark) Busha, and was there reared and educated. In 1878, at the age of twenty, he came from Detroit to Montana, and in 1882 began stock raising in Meagher county. By good business tactics and a reasonable degree of economy he steadily increased his capital and his stock. In 1885 he located at Big Timber, where he began handling wool on commission, his house being the first of its kind in the Territory, and he handled all the wool in this part of the country. The first season he bought and shipped 2,000,000 pounds of wool, and this year, 1893, his shipments have amounted to 3,000,000 pounds. In connection with his wool business he also handles agricultural implements. He and Mr. Bailey erected their fine store building in 1892, it being 80 x 30 feet and two stories. This was completed and occupied by them in December of that year. They also own a warehouse 150 x 30 feet, located near the railroad.

Mr. Busha has been a prime factor in building up the town of Big Timber. He was one of the projectors of and active workers in securing the telephone line between this place and Lewistown, also the line from Big Timber to Boulder mines. He and Hon. George M. Hatch constructed the Bowlder line. He has filled the position of director of the First National Bank of Big Timber, has served as a director in the Boulder Telephone Company, and is president of Hick's Park mining Company. In March, 1890, he was appointed Postmaster of Big Timber, in which position he served until January, 1893, when he resigned.

In 1885 Mr. Busha was married to Miss Ida L. Pound, daughter of Hon. A. E. Pound of Chippewa Falls, Wisconsin. They have three sons and three daughters, namely; Beulah L., Thad L. Leonore E., Thomas, Mabel and Willard.

Politically, Mr. Busha and his partner, Mr. Bailey, are both stanch Republicans. The latter is a native of Virginia. Both are enterprising and successful business men.

Edward Alexander Winstanley, who has been a prominent factor in the growth and development of Missoula and who is to-day ranked with her most enterprising citizens, is deserving of more than a passing notice on the pages of this work.

Mr. Winstanley was born in Canada, near the city of Toronto, December 10, 1857. The Winstanleys came from England to America in 1843 and established their home in Canada. Rev. Charles Winstanley, the grand otherwise be net profits. The refining costs $16 per ton, and the freight to Aurora, Illinois, costs $22 per ton; and the freight on coke by rail to Livingston and by wagon to Castle costs about the same. Thus the freight bills alone exhaust the value of good ores. Hence, none but the richest ores can now be worked at Castle. These figures show that a railroad to Castle should save in working the ores of the district from $15 to $20 per ton. This saving would enable the miners to take out ores at a fair profit, which yield no profit under the present charges for freght on ores, fuel and bullion.

Among the mines which were in active operation when I examined the district, were the Cumberland, Yellowstone, Felix, Crescent, California and Judge, and many others. The work father of our subject, settled in Toronto at the time alluded to, and in that city spent the rest of his life, which was devoted to the work of the ministry. Orlando Winstanley, his son and the father of Edward A., was one of a family of six children and was born in England in 1823. He was educated at Eaton for the medical profession, and was a successful practitioner all his life. He lived to be seventy years of age. He and his wife had a family of eleven children, nine of whom reached adult age, and eight of that number are still living. Edward A. is the next to the youngest in this family.

The subject of our sketch resided in Toronto until he reached his majority, his education being received in a private school and in the Upper Canada College. After spending some time in the office of a wholesale hardware firm, he went to Winnipeg, Manitoba, where he was private Secretary for General Hammond, general manager of the Manitoba & Northwest Railroad Company. His next move was to St. Paul, Minnesota, and from there he was sent to Helena, Montana, as local land agent for the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, in which position he served two years. In 1885 he came from Helena to Missoula to accept a position with the Montana Improvement Company, now the Big Blackfoot Manufacturing Company. After spending five years in their employ, he severed his connection with that company and engaged in the real-estate, loaning and insurance business on his own account in Missoula. In this business he has since continued. During the past four years he has purchased and platted 160 acres of land, eighty acres being known as the Union addition to Missoula, and eighty acres as the Glenwood Park addition. This land is subdivided into acre lots for suburban houses, and on these lots he has planted trees, thus largely enhancing their value. Indeed, on this suburban property he has planted no less than 35,000 trees, including apples, pears and prunes, and in this enterprise he was the first to venture. The additions are watered by the Cañon ditch. In the insurance department of his business he represents ten of the very best and strongest companies of the land. He loans both local and Eastern money.

The commodious and attractive residence on Madison street in which Mr. Winstanley and his family reside, he built in 1889. He was married in Helena, February 17, 1884, to Miss Alice Weikle, a native of Iowa. Their only child, born in Missoula in 1890, is named in honor of his father, Edward Alexander. Mr. and Mrs. Winstanley are active members of the Christian Church at Missoula, he having rendered material aid in the building of their house of worship, and now being treasurer of the church. Politically, he is a Republican.

WILLIS HENRY HAVILAND, M. D., Butte City, was born in Pawling, Dutchess county, New York, September 10, 1864, of the fourth generation of a French family born in America. At a previous period their ancestors moved from England to France on account of religious persecution. In America they have been generally Quakers. The Doctor's father, Willis H. Haviland, was a leading druggist at Glens Falls, New York, for more than twenty years. He married his third cousin, Miss Hannah W. Haviland, and the subject of this sketch was their only child.

The latter attended the Glens Falls Academy, the Fort Edward Collegiate Institute, and later the Cornwall Heights School at Cornwall on the Hudson, New York. In medicine he was a student of Dr. Stephen F. Birdsall, of Brooklyn, New York, and he finally graduated at the New York Homeopathic Medical College and Hospital, in April, 1888, with honors. He afterward made a thorough study of the hospitals of London, Paris and of the continent.

Going, in 1888, to Minneapolis, Minnesota, he entered into active practice. In 1889 he was secretary, and in 1890 vice president, of the medical and surgical staff of the Minneapolis Homeopathic Hospital; in 1888-90 he was assistant physician of the Chicago Avenue Church Babies' Home at Minneapolis; was appointed by the Board of Ragents of the State University of Minnesota as a lecturer on mental and nervous disorders in August, 1889, and to a chair as professor in the Homeopathic College of Medicine and Surgery in May, 1890, and held clinics at the college dispensary.

His health failing he came to Butte, Montana, in September, 1890, and established himself in a large general practice. The following year he entered into partnership with Dr. G. E. Blackburn, and they together became the founders of the Haviland & Blackburn Hospital here, —the only homeopathic hospital in the State of Montana. In the establishment and equipment of this institution the doctors have displayed much knowledge of the wants of such an asylum, sparing nothing to make it in every on these mines had been well done and the mines were in as safe and healthful a condition as such mines could well be made. Work has been suspended for the time on the Great Eastern, the Legal Tender, Hidden Treasure, Black Hawk, Alice, Iron Chief, Powderly, Hampden, Jumbo and many others. All these are promising mines and will in the near future be worked with handsome profits. About 900 promising discoveries have been located in the district, and many of them have been so far developed as to prove them valuable mines. Large amounts of ores have been shipped to Helena and other reduction works. The whole region is well timbered with fir and pine, suitable for all mining and domestic purposes; there is an ample supply of good water for all the wants of a large mining population. What Castle most needs is a railroad. The whistle of the locomotive would inspire new life and fill a hundred particular all that it should be for the comfort and restoration of the sick. Dr. Haviland is the medical examiner for three society and four life-insurance companies. He is also a member of the Medico-Legal Society of New York, International Medico-Legal Congress, American Institute of Homeopathic Medicine of St. Paul and Minneapolis; and since coming to Butte he has been a favorite among the representative young men of the city, the Ora Plata, with a membership of about 150 of the most prominent young men of the place, electing him a member of their club. The Doctor is a gentleman of a high order of talent and of nerve and energy in the execution of the work that comes to his hand. He and his partner have four fine rooms in the Owsley Block, finished in elegant style for office work in their line. They have well deserved the large and lucrative practice they now enjoy.

Dr. Haviland was married, June 5, 1889, to Miss Grace King, a native of St. Paul and a niece of the late Prof. S. King, of Chicago. They have a son, whom they have named Willis Brazee.

HENRY ELLING, proprietor of the bank which bears his name in Virginia City, is one of Madison county's most successful and highly esteemed business men.

Mr. Elling is a native of Germany, born December 9, 1842, son of a substantial German farmer and a devout member of the Lutheran Church. By the time he was fifteen years of age he had lost both his parents by death, and he then came with a younger brother to the State of Missouri, where an older brother had for five years been located. Previous to his coming to this country, young Henry received a fair education in his native language, and upon his arrival here he at once applied himself to the study of English. His first employment was as a farm hand, and soon afterward he secured a position in a mercantile house, receiving his board and $6 per month the first year, and then getting an increase. He remained with the same firm until 1861. He then went to Leavenworth, Kansas, and the following year to Denver, Colorado, where he obtained a clerkship in a clothing house and where he remained until 1864.

In 1864 Mr. Elling came to Virginia City, bringing a stock of goods in ox wagons, and in October opened up a store. The following year he removed to Helena, and in a little log house with a sawdust floor he and his partner opened up their stock of goods. Soon afterward his partner went East with most of their money, to pay bills and purchase more goods. About this time Mr. Elling began to deal in gold, prices went down and he soon lost all his means, and after closing out his stock in Helena he too went East. After squaring up the debts of the firm, he purchased a stock of goods on time and established himself in business in Nebraska City, then the supply point for the trains that took goods to the West. At first he was successful there, but soon Omaha became the supply station, and he found himself with a large stock of goods and no demand for them, and, more than that, he was in debt for the goods and unable to meet his obligations. He explained the situation to his creditors and asked permission to move the goods. Having perfect confidence in his integrity, they told him to locate wherever he thought best, and he accordingly came to Virginia City, Montana. Here he met with signal success. He continued in the business until 1873, at which time he opened his present banking house. He has always done a large credit business. During the early history of this section of the country payments were chiefly made in gold dust. Since he engaged in banking, Mr. Elling has become the leading business man of Madison county. He is a partner in the three largest mercantile houses in Virginia City, is interested in one at Sheridan, and he also established the Silver Spring flouring-mill. Besides this he has large mining interests and is an extensive land owner, having no less than 10,000 acres in different places. As the owner of 3,000 cattle and 10,000 sheep, he may also be classed among the leading stockmen of the county. Indeed, in whatever he has engaged, his well-directed efforts have always brought him success.

Mr. Elling was married July 20, 1870, to Miss Mary B. Cooley, a native of Michigan, and a daughter of W. A. Cooley. Mr. Cooley came with his family to Montana in 1868, and is now a resident of Madison county. Mr. and Mrs. Elling have a family of seven children, all born in Virginia City, namely: Lena, Reta, Mabel K., Lottie, Horace, Carl and Harrison M.

Mr. Elling is a member of the Masonic fraternity, both the Royal Arch and the Commandery, and he also belongs to the A. O. U. W. In politics he is a Republican.

mines with hopeful workers, whose nerve and muscle had received new activity and power; and the whistle of new furnaces and mills would soon startle the denizens of these beautiful mountains.

Willow mines are on Willow creek, about half way between White Sulphur Springs and Castle. A number of discoveries have been made at this locality. These have been more or less developed with varied success, but enough has been done to give strong hopes of a rich camp. Of the mines opened, the Grasshopper is deemed the most promising.

Copperopolis is situated on a low ridge of metamorphosed argillaceous shales or slates between Castle and Little Belt mountains. It took its name from a series of copper veins discovered and partially opened early in the '60s, when the red man claimed the buffalo, antelope, deer, elk and bear in the beautiful hunting

At one time his party offered him the nomination for State Senator, but he declined to accept, not wishing to distract his attention from his large business interests; but he has served his own town as Mayor, and has ever taken the deepest interest in its welfare. He is now investing in a railroad enterprise, which he helped to inaugurate, that will bring the locomotive to his town.

While Mr. Elling is to-day regarded as the wealthiest man in the county, and while his money has all been made through his own efforts, still he has ever been free from anything like a sordid nature; indeed, he is the opposite from that. His kind heart and his pleasant and winning manner have won for him hosts of friends.

HON. ALDEN J. BENNETT.—Among the prominent early settlers of Virginia City and most highly reliable business men, we find the gentleman whose name heads this sketch. He has long been connected with, and is now the manager of, the Hall & Bennett Bank, of said city.

Mr. Bennett is a native of the State of New York, born in Delaware county, June 25, 1847. His ancestor, Robert Bennett, emigrated from England to Rhode Island in 1630 and was a resident of Newport in 1639. On the other side of the family the ancestry can be traced in a direct line to George Soule, who landed from the Mayflower in 1620, and Anna (Becket) Soule, who landed from the Ann three years later. They became the parents of one of the influential families of early times. One representative of the family fought in King Philip's war and others distinguished themselves in the Colonial army during the Revolution. The Bennett line of ancestry is as follows: 1st, Robert, who died at Newport, Rhode Island, about 1690; 2d, Robert, who died at Portsmouth, same State, in 1722; 3d, Robert, who died at Tiverton, that State, in 1746; 4th, John, who died at Dartmouth, Massachusetts, in 1769; 5th, Alden, who was captain of a vessel and died at sea in 1798 (vessel, crew and cargo lost); 6th, Isaac, who died at Harpersfield, New York, in 1812; 7th, Phineas L., who died at York, Pennsylvania, in 1892; and 8th, Alden J.

His great-grandfather, Isaac Bennett, was born in Dutchess county, New York, June 22, 1780, married, March 6, 1803, Anna Losee, and both were members of the Society of Friends. Immediately after their marriage they removed from Dutchess to the wilderness of Delaware county, where they were among the pioneers. They had five children, of whom Phineas Lounsbury Bennett was the second. He was born in Harpersfield, New York, February 15, 1806, and died at York, Pennsylvania, as aforesaid, February 5, 1892. He married, December 23, 1840, Minerva Hakes (daughter of Judge Lyman Hakes, of Delaware county, New York), who survives. Phineas L. and Minerva (Hakes) Bennett had four children, namely: Mrs. Frances Dennis, widow of Hon. Rodney Dennis, of Hornellsville, New York; Lyman Hakes Bennett, a leading attorney of Wilkes Barre, Pennsylvania; Isaac Bennett, a merchant of York, Pennsylvania; and Alden Joseph Bennett. The last named was the third born.

After receiving an education as a civil engineer in his native State, Alden J. Bennett came to the West and was employed in the engineering department of the Union Pacific Railroad until the completion of its line. He then went to White Pine, Nevada, and was engaged in milling and mining until 1870. That year he came to Virginia City. Here he became identified with the educational affairs of the county, teaching school for some years and also serving as County Superintendent of Schools. In 1876 he accepted the position of bookkeeper in Henry Elling's Bank. This position he filled three years. In 1879 the banking firm of Raymond, Harrington & Company was formed, and Mr. Bennett became a member of the company, serving as manager of the institution until November, 1889. At that time the company was re-organized under the firm name of Hall & Bennett, and he has since continued to serve as the active manager of the bank. On the 28th of February, 1892, Mr. Amos C. Hall, the senior member of the firm, died. His means, however, have remained in the institution and its name has not been changed. The Hall & Bennett Banking Company was largely instrumental in organizing the Alder Gulch Consolidated Mining Company, of which our subject is a director. This company operates placer mining claims in Alder Gulch on an extensive and successful scale.

Mr. Bennett is in politics a Republican and has had much to do with the party affairs in Madison county. For many years he has served as chairman of the County Central Committe, also as a member of the State Central grounds on the Yellowstone, the Musselshell and the Judith, and the hunting grounds themselves as most like those celestial hunting grounds where all good Indians go. Then the red brother often made it hot for the prospector and sometimes left him far from home, but relieved of all care of his horses, grub and blankets, —without "transportation, bed or board." Several true crevice veins of copper ores have been opened along this ridge of slates for a distance of four or five miles. The principal ores are carbonates and sulphurets of copper, grey copper and native copper. These ores contain from 20 per cent to 50 per cent of copper and from $8 to $15 per ton of gold and silver, as shown by assays and by the yield or ores shipped to and smelted at Butte. The prospects at Copperopolis are very encouraging; the ore is rich and in true crevice veins of good size; but no one can tell how extensive and rich they will Committee, and in 1892 he had the honor of being a delegate to the National Convention held at Minneapolis. He has also served as Alderman and Mayor of Virginia City.

On the 21st of November, 1878, Mr. Bennett was married to Miss Mary Prout, daughter of Rev. Henry Hedges Prout, an Episcopal minister. He was a missionary in North Carolina and she was born there. Mr. and Mrs. Bennett have three children,—Minerva Maria, Henry Phineas and Lyman Hakes. Mrs. Bennett is a member of the Episcopal Church and the family all attend its services.

Fraternally Mr. Bennett is identified with the I. O. O. F. and the Sons of the Revolution. Since coming to Montana he has taken a deep interest in all public enterprises and has rendered substantial aid to every undertaking intended to benefit the town, the county, the State or the country at large, and his whole record as a citizen and business man has been such as to merit the high esteem of all who know him.

JOSEPH R. WITMER, carriage and wagon manufacturer, Helena, Montana, is ranked with the enterprising business men of this city.

Mr. Witmer was born in Ontario, Canada, April 22, 1844. He is of Swiss descent, his ancestors having come to America previous to the Revolution and settled in Pennsylvania, where several generations of the family resided. They were Mennonites, Dunkards and Quakers, a people engaged largely in agricultural pursuits, and were peaceful and worthy citizens. Martin Witmer, our subject's father, was born in Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, in 1790. He married Catherine Redinger, a native of Germany, and they became the parents of nine daughters and three sons, of whom all except one are living, Joseph R. being the seventh born. Martin Witmer removed with his family to the wilds of Canada at an early day, and there in the midst of the forest settled down to the work of clearing and developing a tract of land. By industry and perseverance he succeeded in clearing up two farms.

Reared on the frontier where his father had settled, Joseph R. Witmer had only limited educational advantages. During his early youth he spent three months each year in the little log schoolhouse; and the rest of the time he assisted his father in the clearing. Later he learned the trade of blacksmith, and for three years after serving his apprenticeship he worked as a journeyman in Canada. In April, 1873, he went to Salt Lake City, but soon after was attacked with mountain fever, and as soon as he was sufficiently recovered he returned to Canada, where he continued work at his trade four years longer. This Western country, however, still had an attraction for him, and in the spring of 1878 he came to Helena, where, on the 31st of March, he began work for Charles M. Jeffreys. Two years later Mr. Witmer and his brother Martin bought out Mr. Jeffreys, the establishment then being located in a little, old frame building on Main street, the present site of the Bailey block. They did a prosperous blacksmith business from the start, and ere long they also engaged in the manufacture of carriages and wagons. At first they made a great many stage coaches, some being as high priced as $850. Later in the growth of Helena they came to Park street and built the shops which they have since occupied, and still later Mr. Witmer bought his present residence on Rodney street. He and his brother have a ranch of 800 acres in the Sun river country, in Lewis & Clarke county, where they are raising cattle, horses and sheep. They also raise large quantities of hay. Besides this they are also interested in several mining claims, one of which is being operated and is a paying gold mine.

Joseph R. Witmer was married in March, 1872, to Miss Jennie L. Sweet, at Brantford, Ontario. She died in 1884, aged thirty-seven years, leaving an only son, Perry Rowland. In December, 1891, Mr. Witmer married Mrs. Bertha Reynolds, his present companion.

Politically Mr. Witmer is a Republican. From 1887 to 1889 he served Helena as Fire Marshal, and during his term of service many new appliances were obtained, the fire-alarm system being put in and the efficiency of the fire company much improved. In appreciation of his services the members of the Fire Department presented him with a beautiful gold-headed cane, which he highly prizes. In 1871 he was made a Master Mason, and is now Senior Warden of King Solomon Lodge, No. 9, of Helena. He is also a member of the I. O. O. F., the A. O. U. W. and O. E. S., having served officially in the first two, and being now Past Master Workman in the A. O. U. W.

prove until they have been more thoroughly developed. The slates of this district are favorable for copper veins.

The mountains from the copper and silver mines of the Bigger and Yogo to the silver and gold mines of Neihart and Barker are full of veins charged with gold, silver, lead, copper, and iron.

The Belt mountains, famous in early days for the placers found in its gulches from the Gate of the Mountains south to Confederate, are still furnishing gold from its old placers. But meanwhile quartz veins filled with gold and silver, copper and lead, have been discovered in all the gulches and on all the foothills from the Gate of the Mountains to Sixteen Mile creek, and many leads have been found on the east side and further north. The following quartz claims are on the west side of the Belt range between Confederate and the Gate of the Moun-

JOHN EYNON LLOYD, of Butte City, now County Commissioner of Silver Bow county, is a native of Wales, born April 14, 1834. His great-great-grandfather, Eynon Lloyd, was born in Wales and was a sea captain. His grandfather, Thomas Eynon, was also born in Wales, and was a miner; he lived to a good old age, and in religion he and his family were Methodists. His son, Richard Lloyd (father of John E.), was a native of the same country, born about the year 1800. He was a coal-mining engineer, and was married to Annie Eynon, a native of his own country. Of their nineteen children thirteen grew up to years of maturity and are still living: only three of these children were sons, and they are all living. Their father died in 1864, and their mother is now eighty-two years of age: they too were devout Methodists.

The gentleman whose name introduces this brief record, the eighteenth in the above mentioned family, received a little schooling up to his seventh year and then was placed at work in the mines, doing such small chores as he could, as opening air doors to let the cars pass through, etc. After this he attended night school to a limited extent, but his opportunities for an education were extremely small. Educationally, therefore, it can be said that he is a self-made man, having learned the most useful lessons of practical life from the costly school of experience. His whole life has been devoted to mining, and he therefore can be considered an expert. He mined in his native country until he was twenty-four years of age, when he emigrated to the United States and followed mining at Pottsville, Pennsylvania, until 1875. In June of that year he arrived at Butte, where he began his work in the mines at $3.50 a day, continuing for three years. Then Marcus Daly gave him the position of pump machinist, which he filled for ten years, when Mr. Daly made him superintendent of the Amy and Silversmith mines, and this place he occupied until 1886, when he was elected Sheriff of Silver Bow county, and in this capacity he served three years previous to the admission of Montana as a State and three years afterward, being elected three times. While he was Sheriff he had numerous hard cases to handle, but performed his duties thoroughly, bringing to justice every violator of the law that he succeeded in arresting. He followed the notorious "Billy Forester" to Chicago and brought him back unaided to Montana, and "Billy" received fourteen years in the penitentiary. Several others also were arrested and convicted of murder, and Mr. Lloyd executed Henry Roberts, who had been convicted of murder in the first degree for the killing of J. J. Maddox at Melrose. Roberts was the only man ever hung in Silver Bow county.

After his term of service expired as Sheriff, Mr. Lloyd remained out of office for a year, and in 1892 was elected County Commissioner, in which position he is now serving. This office is a very important one, as in it the incumbent is the county legislator, having the care of all county matters in charge. In this service Mr. Lloyd has exhibited what in modern phrase is termed "common sense," but in old English, "wisdom;" and this in its broadest application includes honesty and energy. He has had the honor of being chosen chairman of the board, which is now specially engaged in the building of several much-needed bridges in the county.

Since residing in Butte Mr. Lloyd has been interested in mining considerably on his own account. He sold to the Boston Mining Company the Johnston, the Pennsylvania and the Little Ida mines, for which he received $150,000, and their properties are now among the greatest producers in the State. These mines Mr. Lloyd had discovered and located himself, and had worked them for some ten years, and he is still extensively engaged in mining, having eleven properties in Butte and vicinity. He is president of the Butte and Basin Gold and Silver Mining Company, which is now improving their property, and there is no question that they are valuable. Mr. Lloyd has also built several small residences in Butte City and at Centerville, and resides in a nice brick house of his own building, at 208 Copper street.

Mr. Lloyd was made a Mason in Butte, since which time he has taken an active interest in the order, advancing until he has received the thirty-second degree of the Scottish rite, and he has held office in all the branches of the order. He has been a member of the I. O. O. F. ever since he was twenty-one years of age, and has passed all the chairs in both branches of the order. In his political principles he is a strong, stalwart Republican. His first Presidential vote was cast for Abraham Lincoln, and ever since then he has been unswerving in his adherence to his party, and he is proud of his political record. He is a man of good judgment and sound common sense, and during his long residence in Butte has acquired the enviable reputation of being a man of the highest integrity of character.

He was married in 1861 to Miss Margaret Davis, a native of Wales, and after two short years of married life she died; he then remained single six years, and on the 1st of March, 1869, married Miss Margaret Lewis, also a native of Wales, and by this marriage there are six children, viz.: Richard L., now foreman for the Butte & Boston Mining Company; Elizabeth Ann; Edith B., who is now Mrs. George Noble, and resides on East Park street; and John R., now with his father. The daughter, Elizabeth Ann, is now the housekeeper. November 28, 1893, the kind, loving and indulgent wife and mother died, a most estimable woman, enjoying the love and esteem of all who knew her. Mr. Lloyd feels her loss very deeply, and says that it would be impossible to pay too high a tribute to her memory.

EDWARD W. SCHILLING, dealer in clothing and gents' furnishing goods, Missoula, Montana, was born in Germany, April 18, 1861. He comes of a family of German merchants, his people for several generations having followed mercantile pursuits. He received his education in his native land and in his father's store learned the mercantile business.

In 1882, realizing the superior advantages afforded in the United States to enterprising young men, he came hither, arriving in New York, where he spent several months. The following year he came out West, and at Butte City, Montana, engaged in the liquor business, which he followed successfully for four years at that place. He came to Missoula in 1886 and here opened the same business. In the meantime, however, he became interested in real estate and in the building and improvement of Missoula. In 1889 he built the Schilling block, one of the finest structuresin the town, 50 x 100 feet, two stories and basement. In 1891 he erected the Capital block, 32 x 75 feet, also containing two stories and basement, and besides these he has put up three buildings near the depot which are used as business houses and hotels. October 1, 1892, he opened out a large stock of clothing and gents' furnishing goods in his fine store room in the Schilling block, and to this business he has since given his attention, here, as elsewhere, meeting with success. Mr. Schilling owns the Barnett addition to Missoula, a beautiful tract of land which he has subdivided into 200 lots, each 40 x 130 feet. Some good buildings have already been put up on this property. Mr. Schilling is also interested in mines and mining. He is one of the stockholders in the Iron Mountain mine, which is a valuable producer of silver and lead and which in the future will undoubtedly make its owners rich.

Mr. Schilling was married January 3, 1884, to Miss Mary Swartz, a native of Minnesota and a daughter of Joseph Swartz, a farmer and stock-raiser of that State. They have two children, Lizzie and Nellie.

Politically, he is a Democrat, but is decidedly in favor of free coinage of silver. Pos-essing the characteristic thrift of his countrymen, Mr. Schilling has since coming to Montana met with the success his earnest efforts have merited. Among the business men of Missoula he is regarded as an able financier and a man of strict integrity.

THE FIRST NATIONAL BANK OF PHILLIPSBURG is one of the solid financial institutions of this part of Montana. In January, 1888, Mr. Joseph A. Hyde, who had been for several years cashier of the First National Bank of Butte City, came to Phillipsburg and opened the private bank of Joseph A. Hyde. It was afterward incorporated as the Joseph A. Hyde Banking Company, and in January, 1892, it was made the First National Bank of Phillipsburg, with a capital stock of $50,000, and the following officers were elected: Joseph A. Hyde, president; M. I. Merrell, of Oakland, California, vice-president; and James H. King, cashier. These gentlemen are all well known in financial circles, and their integrity and ability are undoubted. Under their efficient management the bank is doing a prosperous business.

JOHN BERRIN, of Boulder, Jefferson county, was born in Leicestershire, England, April 11, 1865. He came to Montana when five years of age, was raised on his father's farm at Boulder, and received his education in this city. In early life he learned the use of the gun and became an expert marksman, and during the time from his eighteenth to his twentieth year spent much time in the mountains of the surrounding country, hunting and pros-

Several mills have been erected at various times during the last twenty-five years for working the mines on Trout creek and in Confederate Gulch. Some of them are still doing good work, while the Belt Range from the Gate of the mountains south to Diamond City have been most distinguished for the placer mines named above; but south of Diamond City there has been very little placer mining, and several important groups of quartz mines have been located and somewhat developed, as at Birch creek, in Murray district, and in the Russel district east of Toston. A number of quartz veins have been discovered and worked on Birch creek, a tributary of Smith river. Of all the mines in this group, the Bourbon has attracted the most attention. The ores have been shipped out and worked with the most flattering results.

The Murray District is in the Belt mountains, south of the road from Townsend to White Sulphur Springs. The mines show more copper ores than any veins in the Belt range. It pecting for gold and silver mines. During that time he also worked at the carpenter's trade. He was the discoverer of the placer mines on the tributary of the North Boulder, brought water to his claim at a distance of three miles, and took out $1,300. Mr. Berkin afterward sold his claim to ex-Governor Hauser. The discovery of this mine and the surmounting of the difficulties in obtaining water at such a distance, when Mr. Berkin was only a boy, showed that he was possessed of far more than ordinary talent and energy. After selling his mine he was employed by Messrs. Hauser & Vail to traverse the mountains and prospect for mines. He was in Butte City when that place contained only three log cabins, but nearly his entire life has been spent at Boulder. During his early boyhood he saw much of Indian life, as they camped in large numbers near his home, and was well acquainted with Chief Joseph, the noted chief of the Nez Perces.

While working at the carpenter's trade Mr. Berkin fell from a scaffold, and met with such serious injuries that it changed the business current of his life to a great extent. One of his limbs was fractured in such a way that for a time it seemed imminent he would lose that member, and, although it was saved, he was obliged to be on crutches for a long time. During his convalescence he studied photography, and while still on crutches began work at his trade. He has become one of the best artists in the county, has a fine art room at Boulder, and is supplied with the best camera and most costly and perfect lens. In addition to his home office, he has a traveling outfit, with which he has taken many fine views in the Western States. Mr. Berkin also has the reputation of being one of Montana's most expert hunters, and has without question killed more large game in a given time than any man in the State. In November, 1892, with two comrades, he camped in the mountains, and in six days killed twenty-three deer. They hung them on two poles, extending each way from the tent, and Mr. Berkin took their photograph on a card 18 x 22 inches. In 1890, in company with W. E. Sanders, son of Senator Sanders, and Charles Walgamot, his brother-in-law, Mr. Berkin camped in a log hut on Quim cañon, twelve miles from Boulder, and in eight days they killed eighteen deer. He has also a photograph of this scene, which he has reproduced in an oil painting. In September, 1893, while on one of his business trips, he went into camp, took his horse from the wagon, and in ten hours returned with three fine deer. Mr. Berkin had his Winchester rifle made to order. He has been very successful in all his business dealings, has a good residence and art room at Boulder, and is interested in several quartz mines, mostly of his own discovery. W. E. Sanders has been his partner in these mining enterprises since they were young men.

Mr. Berkin was married March 28, 1881, to Miss Hollie Walgamot, a native of Iowa. They have three children, —Nellie, Hazel and Isabelle,—all born in Boulder. Our subject has the credit of building the first store building in Boulder, which is located on Main street, north of the First National Bank. In political matters he affiliates with the Democratic party, has been twice elected Public Administrator of Jefferson county, and is now serving his second term in that office. Socially, he is a member of the A. O. U. W. and the K. of P., and now holds the office of Master in the former order.

HERMAN GANS, junior member of the firm of Gans & Klein, wholesale merchants of Helena, and a nephew of Louis Gans, was born in Austria, March 28, 1849. He comes of a family who have been merchants for several generations. In the public schools he received his education, and in his father's store his business training was obtained.

It was in 1866 that Herman Gans landed on American soil. After spending four years in New York city, he came in 1870 to Montana, and for a short time managed a small store at Fish Creek for his uncle, Joseph Gans. In 1871 he accepted a position as salesman with his present firm. Since 1877 he has been a member of the company. Extended mention of the business of this company will be found in the sketch of Henry Klein on another page in this work. On coming to Helena, Mr. Gans at once became identified with the interests of the city, and during his career here has acquired the reputation of being one of her most enterprising and successful men. He built one of the handsome homes in Helena, where he resides with his family.

should be observed that the Murray District is on the direct line from Copperopolis to the Green Copper mines six miles north of Radersburg and at the base of the Crow mountains and the copper mines at Butte. The rocks at the Bigger District in the Little Belt mountains, at Copperopolis, in the Belt mountains and at the Green Copper mines at the base of Crow mountains, all on the line from Copperopolis to Butte, are the same argillaceous variegated shales, and all the mines and prospects on this line carry rich copper ores. These facts would seem to indicate a copper belt from Butte through Crow mountains, across the Belt mountains, through Copperopolis to the Little Belt Range. It is therefore more than probable that the mines in this copper belt may prove large and rich in copper, silver and gold. In view of the fact that the mines at Copperopolis and Crow mountains look as well now as some of the best copper mines did at Butte at the same stage of development, we may predict good things for the future of this copper belt.

In the Carbonate District some important discoveries have recently been made in the Belt mountains on the west end and on the north

Mr. Gans was married in 1881 to Miss Alice Marks, who was reared in this city from early childhood. They have two daughters, Sadie C. and Dorothy H.

In social as well as in business circles Mr. Gans is a prominent factor. He belongs to the Masonic fraternity, the K. of P., A. O. U. W. and United Hebrew Association. He aided materially in the erection of Temple Emmanuel, in Helena, served acceptably as president of the society, and is at present its efficient secretary. He is Past Master of his Masonic lodge. Politically he is a Republican.

JOHN H. MING, one of Montana's highly esteemed pioneers, now deceased, came to Montana in 1863. He was a native of the State of Virginia, born at Lynchburg, on the 6th of February, 1831, of Holland ancestry. When quite young he removed with his parents to St. Louis, Missouri, where he was raised and educated, and for a short time clerked in a store.

In 1851 he crossed the plains to California, where he remained for a few years, a part of the time engaged in the mercantile business, meeting with a fair degree of success. He then returned to his home in Missouri, and in 1858 again crossed the plains, this time locating at Denver, where he opened the first grocery store in that place. He remained there and at Central City until 1863, when he came to Virginia City, Montana, and continued business there until the following year, when he came to Helena and opened a store at the latter place, Helena then being a lively mining camp. He continued in business in both places and became interested in mining and stock-raising, and made rapid progress, having a large business and many thousand head of cattle. In 1875 he sold his mercantile business and gave all his attention to the stock business. He became the owner of a large tract of land on the west side of the city of Helena, where he built the first house on that side of the city. He platted the property at a time when city property in Helena was very low, and in order to encourage settlement he almost gave away lots to people who would build on them. One of the streets now bears his name. There was nothing permanent in Helena at that time. Some people thought that when the mines were worked out the town would be abandoned.

Mr. Ming was in politics a Democrat and took a lively interest in the offices of Helena, serving as Alderman of the city, and aided in every way possible in building and improving the city. Among his building enterprises he saw the need of a good opera house and built the one that now bears his name. In his business career he sometimes met with heavy losses, particularly in the cattle business, but succeeded, nevertheless, in accumulating a nice fortune, and built on his property on the west side one of the best residences in that part of the town on a large lot in a beautiful location overlooking the city of Helena and the fine surrounding scenery.

In 1868 Mr. Ming married Miss Katherine L. Cole, a native of Ohio, and they had two sons, John H. and James L., both of them now young gentlemen of education and bright prospects, one of them preparing for Yale College, and the other soon to graduate from the Hahnemann Medical College of Philadelphia. They make their home with their mother at the old homestead in Helena. Their mother is a member of the Episcopalian Church, of which Mr. Ming was also a member. Previous to his death he had for some years been a sufferer from rheumatism, and for several years was confined to his room. At last, his heart becoming affected, he died, on the 27th of December, 1887. He was a member of the I. O. O. F. and of the Masonic fraternity. He was a man of very generous impulses, had made many friends and his death was deeply felt by his bereaved widow and sons and by the whole population of the city of which he had so long been an honorable and upright citizen.

ROBERT LEE WORD, junior member of the law firm of Smith & Word, Helena, is a native son of Montana. He was born at Virginia City, June 22, 1866, the son of Samuel and Sarah M. Word, nee Foster, who settled in Helena in 1887, and he came with them.

His educational advantages were of the best. After attending the high school at Ann Arbor, Michigan, he

No mines have been discovered in this part of the Belt range until recently, but the development of those opened, promise to make this the best quartz camp in the Belt mountains.

Some late discoveries of quartz lodes at the head of Confederate Gulch have been made. On the summit the following nine quartz claims have been located,—some on the west slope and some on the east: The Grey Eagle, Ida Lode, Red Rover, Slim Jim, Three Sisters, Lone Tree, Western Star, Gold Hill and Snow Bird. All these claims have iron caps carrying free gold. One shaft was sunk to permanent water, where the oxide of iron changed to sulphuret.

Several crevice veins have been opened in the variegated argillaceous shales in the foot-hills east of Toston, in the Russel District. Among the claims located and represented by a large amount of work, are the Grant, O. K., Gray Eagle, Poker Stake, War Eagle and Blue Cloud. The ores are oxides and sulphurets of iron carrying gold, sulphurets and carbonates of copper and lead containing silver and gold. These prospects are in strong vertical crevice veins which cut across the shales in direct lines and went to Exeter, New Hampshire, and while preparing there for Yale College his health failed, so that he had to rest and recuperate. He then attended Columbia Law School, in New York city. Previous to entering this school, however, he had read law in his father's office and been admitted to the bar. After his return from New York he entered the law firm of Word & Smith, which was then changed to Word, Smith & Word, and, after his father's retirement from the firm, to Smith & Word. From 1887 to 1889 Mr. Word served as Clerk of the Supreme Court of Montana. In his political principles he is Democratic, but he has never aspired to office.

Mr. Word is a young man of marked ability, is following in the footsteps of his honored father, and is starting out upon a career that has every promise of success. He is unmarried, and resides with his parents in their beautiful home in Helena.

GEORGE W. KING, the leading medical practitioner of Marysville, descended from one of the pioneer families of Vermont, his ancestors having located in that State previous to the Revolutionary war. The paternal grandfather served with Washington in that struggle and participated in the hardships endured by the patriot soldiers at Valley Forge. The father of our subject, Cyrus W. King, was also born in Vermont. He married Miss Louisa E. Duncan, a native of Quebec, Canada, and a daughter of James Duncan, an early settler of that province and founder of the village of Chrysastum. He resided there until his death, which occurred at the age of seventy-four years. Mr. and Mrs. King had ten children, six sons and four daughters, nine of whom still survive. The father lived to a good old age, and the mother is still living, aged eighty-seven years.

George W. King, the ninth child in order of birth in the above family, was born at Malone, New York, October 20, 1852. He attended the public schools of his native place, afterward took a special course at the Cornell University, and graduated at the medical department of the University of Michigan, at Ann Arbor, in 1877. He then served as assistant surgeon at the university one year, next followed the practice of his profession at Kempton, Illinois, two and a half years, practiced in New York city one year, and then went to Chicago. While in that city Mr. King suffered a severe attack of pneumonia. After his recovery he was offered the position of surgeon at Marysville for the Montana company, and believing that the climate of this place would prove beneficial to his health, he accepted, arriving here in 1883. Mr. King has since resided in this city, and has filled his position with the company in a most satisfactory manner, as well as doing a general practice in Marysville and the surrounding country. He has also invented many appliances for his use in surgery. One is a valuable device in which to set fractured limbs, and another is used to place injured men while raising them out of the mines. He takes special and laudable pride in surgery, and has performed many difficult and important operations with the utmost success, which he has from time to time reported in interesting articles to the medical association of the State. He is a member of that society and has the honor of being its first vice-president. The Doctor has invested largely in Helena city property, where he has built a beautiful residence, but gives close attention to his patients at Marysville.

Dr. King was married July 25, 1881, to Miss Aramella J. Griffin. They have two daughters,—Georgia E. and Mildred L.,—both born in Montana. Our subject is a member of the Masonic fraternity, of the Knight Templars and Shrine, and also of the A. O. U. W. and the K. of P. In political matters he affiliates with the Republican party.

EDWIN H. IRVINE, one of the most prominent real-estate factors of Butte City, and business men of the place, came to Montana in 1864.

He was born in Lexington, Fayette county, Kentucky, October 11, 1837. His father, Col. William L. Irving, was a native of Madison county, same State, of Scotch-Irish ancestry, who had settled in America in very early times. His grandfather, David C. Irvine, was one of the for long distances through hills and valleys. Whether more work would develop these good-looking prospects into rich and productive mines, no one can tell from present indications; but the facts that these veins are in or near the copper belt above named, that they are in the same shales as the mines in that belt, and that they contain the same ores, should give more hopes of finding good mines in this district. Such are the mines and prospects of mines in the Belt mountains. If its quartz veins shall prove as productive as its placer deposits have, the Belt Range will maintain its fair fame for productive mining for long years to come.

Unlike the Belt mountains, the Little Belt Range is more noted for its quartz mines than for its placers. While only a few placers have been worked, and these with moderate success, some of the quartz discoveries are so well known as to enlist the investment of capitalists and attract the attention of railroads. One road is now running to Barker and Neihart, to aid in the development and share the profits of the rich and extensive mines in this district. The early settlers of Kentucky, and was killed there by the Indians. Col. William L. Irvine married Miss Fanny Hart, a native of Fayette county, same State. After their marriage they remained in Kentucky until 1849, and then moved to a point near St. Joseph, Missouri, where Mr. Irvine engaged in farming until 1865. Mrs. Irvine died in 1858, in the forty-seventh year of her age, leaving three sons and two daughters. In 1864 the sons came to Montana, and during the following year the father and sisters came also, settling in Deer Lodge county. In February, 1882, the father died, in the sixty-first year of his age. He and his wife had for many years been active and respected members of the Christian Church, and they left "a good name, which is more to be desired than great riches."

Mr. Edwin H. Irvine, their eldest child, was reared upon the farm in Missouri, attending school, and he finally graduated at Bethany College, Virginia, in 1857, and thereafter continued his agricultural pursuits. In 1859 he married Miss Anna Eliza Forbes, a native of Platte county, Missouri, and they continued to reside in the State until 1864, by which time they had two children,—Frank and Ella. Then, with oxen and wagons, they started on the long journey to Montana. Crossing the Missouri river on the 13th of May, they made a successful journey, arriving at Alder Gulch on the 23rd of September.

Mr. Irvine there engaged in placer-mining until November, 1865, and then removed to Deer Lodge valley, locating on Race-Track creek, where he engaged in the live-stock business (cattle and horses) for about fifteen years. In 1867, in connection with Conrad Kohrs, Col. J. C. C. Thornton and others, he projected a mining ditch to carry off the water of Rock creek to a very extensive mining camp about thirteen miles from Deer Lodge. The ditch when completed cost about $140,000, and proved a very paying enterprise. Its waters are still utilized there, and the camp has produced about $70,000,000 in gold dust. Mr. Irvine was a joint owner of the ditch and mines, and was superintendent of them from 1869 until 1883.

Then selling out he embarked in the sheep business, and he now has about 5,000 head of these most useful animals, and two sheep ranches,—one of 2,700 acres and the other of 800.

While in Deer Lodge he took an active interest in all the affairs of that section, and has the credit of being the organizer and founder of the College of Montana.

In 1888 he came to Butte City and engaged in real-estate business, and since then has been a very active participant in the growth and development of the city. He was instrumental in removing one of the greatest obstacles to her growth, as follows: He found the town covered by two patents from the Government,—one a quartz-mine patent and the other a town-site patent. The miner's patent made the site valueless for homes, and the lower courts had sustained their claim. Mr. Irvine and his son succeeded in procuring a compromise, which settled the question, and from that time the real estate of the town acquired a market value; and the growth of the city may be said to have been from that time phenomenal. In addition to handling so much of the real-estate of the place, Mr. Irvine has continued his mining operations, meeting with varied success.

He is a member of the Deer Lodge and Butte Mining Company, also owner of one of the richest silver mines in Butte, and has various mining properties throughout the State.

Of the two children who crossed the plains with their parents, it may be said that Frank has been for several years his father's partner, and is an efficient and capable business man: and Ellen became the wife of Rev. Wilder Joy, a minister of the Christian denomination. Mr. and Mrs. Irvine have had five children born since coming to Montana, namely: Agnes, who is now the wife of Rev. Galen Wood, the present pastor of the Christian Church in Butte City; Shelby, May, Katie and Edwin. They lost a child in infancy, and all the rest reside in Butte.

Mr. and Mrs. Irvine both became zealous members of the Christian Church when young, and have been helpful in building the church at Deer Lodge as well as in Butte City, in which latter place the edifice is a particularly fine one.

principal mines as yet discovered in the Little Belt mountains are at Neihart, on Running Wolf, on Dry Wolf, at Yogo, in the Bigger district, at Williams' Camp and at Barker. The Little Belt mountains are well timbered with pine, red fir and spruce. They furnish the waters of the eastern tributaries of Smith river, the northwestern tributaries of the Musselshell, the western tributaries of the Judith and the head streams of Arrow river and Belt creek.

The Bigger District is in the foothills at the southwest base of the Little Belt mountains, on the North fork of Smith river, and about ten miles from Copperopolis. Several claims have been opened here on good-sized crevice veins in argillaceous shales, similar to those at Copperopolis. The quartz is stained with iron and manganese carrying gold. It also contains sulphurets and carbonates of lead and copper carrying gold and silver. Some of the ores yield as much as $20 and $30 in silver and gold and thirty to forty per cent of copper. Very little

As to national questions, Mr. Irvine has all his life been a Democrat, but never a politician. His public career has been chiefly devoted to educational and church interests, and during his long existence in Montana he has acquired a reputation for being a business man of the highest integrity of character.

Augustus Gustave Wilhelm, the pioneer merchant of Pioneer, Montana, dates his birth in Westphalia, Germany, October 21, 1836. The first seventeen years of his life were spent in his native land. He then came to America, first landing at New Orleans. At New Orleans he entered upon a seafaring life, and for six years sailed the deep in American vessels, during that time making two trips around the world.

On Washington's birthday, 1857, Mr. Wilhelm landed at San Francisco, and at that time retired from the sea. After this he was engaged in boring artesian wells in California until 1863, when he went to Nevada. From 1863 to 1866 he was employed at butchering in Nevada, working for wages, and in 1866 he came to Montana. Upon his arrival in Helena, his first stopping place in Montana, he was employed in breaking rocks which were used in the building of the First National Bank building. From August, 1866, until April of the following year he was in Diamond City. He then returned to Helena, and until 1870 clerked in the store of Lehman Brothers. In 1870 he came to Pioneer and established himself in business, and here for nearly a quarter of a century he has been a prominent and successful merchant. Three years after he opened up in business he erected the building he has since occupied, it being 25 x 60 feet, and well equipped with a good stock of general merchandise. Mr. Wilhelm's honorable business methods and his courteous treatment to customers have gained for him the good will of all with whom he has had dealings. In connection with his other business, he buys gold, his checks being readily accepted at any of the banks in the State.

Mr. Wilhelm has been a Mason since 1857. During President Grant's administration he was appointed Postmaster at Pioneer, and served in that capacity several years. At this writing he is secretary of the School Board. He is a fine penman and has for years been especially interested in educational matters.

Hon. Richard Lockey, Helena.—It is as a man of affairs that our subject takes pre-eminence in the commercial and political history of Montana, with which he has been closely identified since 1866.

A native of England, he was born in Yorkshire, June 11, 1845, the third in order of birth of the nine children born to his parents, John and Mary Lockey, who emigrated to the United States in 1846, locating in Dubuque, Iowa. Here, until his twelfth year, young Lockey had such advantages for acquiring an education as the public schools of a frontier town afforded. Meager as those advantages were at the time, by diligence he laid a foundation which has stood him in good stead throughout his active and successful career. Leaving school he secured a situation in a store for three years, and subsequent to the breaking out of the great Rebellion he was employed in the lead mines. In 1862, though only seventeen years of age, he offered himself for enlistment and was twice refused on account of his youth. Not to be deterred in his design he was finally accepted in a clerical capacity, and attached to the Fremont Hussars, at Patterson, Missouri. In November of that year, his command accompanied that of General Davidson's in an expedition into southwestern Missouri and Arkansas. In 1863 he was with General Asboth at Columbus, Kentucky, and in Tennessee. Early in 1864 he accompanied General Sherman's army from Vicksburg in its march across Mississippi into Alabama. Subsequently returning to Vicksburg, he joined in General Bank's famous Red river expedition, Mr. Lockey at that time having charge of the Commissary and Quartermaster departments of General A. J. Smith's command, the Sixteenth Army corps. In the fall of 1864 he fell a victim to the unhealthy climate of the South and the exposure of army life, and, after recovery from a dangerous illness at Memphis, he was returned home. Convalescence having been established, he entered Bayliss Commercial College, Dubuque, Iowa, at which he graduated.

During the winter of 1865-6 he was engaged at St. Louis in settling up the Quartermaster's books and accounts of the Fourth Missouri Cavalry. After completing this work he came to Montana and located in Helena, first securing employment in the construction of the prospecting has been done in this district, and the few discoveries made have been but little worked. There is an abundance of timber and a scant supply of water near the mines.

Mines have been discovered and opened over a large area at and around Yogo. These mines are on Yogo creek, Skunk Gulch, Elk Gulch, Lead Gulch and Black Tail Gulch, and in the mountains for five or six miles around Yogo. Placer mines have been worked in Yogo Gulch for six miles below and as far above the camp; there were good placer mines in Skunk and other gulches around Yogo. Some of these placers are still worked with profit. A great many quartz claims have been located in this district, and some of them have been so developed as to prove good mines. Gold Belt, Golden Slipper, Allen, Quaker City and My Choice are on Skunk Gulch, Blue Dick, on Elk Gulch; Golden Treasure between Skunk Gulch and Elk Gulch; and T. C. Power and other mines show considerable bodies of good ores, Truitt and Plaisted ditch. He then accepted a position as clerk, which he held for a period of three years, subsequently reading law in the office of Colonel Sanders and Chumasero & Chadwick.

In 1871 he engaged in mercantile business in Helena, and in 1876 opened a branch store in Bozeman, where he manufactured large quantities of hard bread for the military and Indian departments on contracts. In 1881 he sold out the Bozeman store to his brothers, John and George W., who conducted the business under the firm name of Lockey Brothers; and the Helena store to William H. Ulm. Then turning his attention to real estate, insurance and abstracts, he became a leader in those lines in Montana. He is largely interested in real estate, mines, stock and other enterprises, and at present is president of the Helena Trust Company, and also of the Lockey Investment Company, and is a director in the American National Bank of Helena.

All his undertakings have been characterized by a well grounded knowledge of organization, and all his enterprises have been pushed by a zeal and indefatigable industry that admits only of success. Of a mental organization highly deliberative, his plans are never quickly conceived or chimerical in character, but always the emanation of a deductive analysis peculiar to the trained thinker.

Mr. Lockey is prominently and actively identified with the various branches of the Masonic order, and has officiated in many of the higher offices of the same. He is now serving his third term as Grand Receiver of the Grand Lodge, A. O. U. W., of Montana, and he is an active member of the I. O. O. F., Sons of St. George, Elks and other societies. In 1868 he assisted in the organization of the Good Templars' order in Helena, having in that association officiated in all the higher offices.

Mr. Lockey has been twice a member of the Board of Education, has served in the City Council, and other important positions, and is a vice-president of the Board of Trustees of the Montana Wesleyan University. He is a Republican in politics, and in 1892 was elected a member of the Montana Legislature, where he distinguished himself as a man of patriotism, breadth of mind and progressive ideas.

Of the "House of Lords," a burlesque legislative assembly, Mr. Lockey has been president eighteen years. It was organized in Virginia City many years ago, and was removed to Helena at the time of the removal of the capital. His natural adaptation for presiding over an assembly of this character is marked. Nature made Mr. Lockey a humorist of quaint type, and, possessing thorough knowledge of parliamentary law, he is quick and incisive in his rulings as a presiding officer. His assumed gravity is never disturbed by the mirth and hilarity of this burlesque assembly, and he gives by his serious demeanor a grave dignity to the scenes enacted by this mock tribunal. It has given him a reputation confined only by the limits of the State, and the influence of this body upon legislation has been wholesome and salutary.

He is now in his prime and is confidently anticipated by his friends as a force of great consequence in the future achievements of the State.

On the 5th of June, 1870, he was united in marriage to Miss Emily E. Jeffrey, of Leavenworth, Kansas, who has borne him five children, two of whom are living,—Mary I. and Richard.

THOMAS J. TODD, one of Fort Benton's prominent citizens, was born in Marshall county, Virginia, near Wheeling, March 9, 1854. His remote ancestry were from Scotland, settling in Virginia, in the early age of that "Dominion." His father, Thomas Jefferson Todd, was born at the same old home, in 1824, and married one of his cousins, Miss Susan M. Todd, moved with his family to Leavenworth, Kansas, in 1861, and died there the following year, leaving his wife and three sons, the eldest then twelve years of age. This son became a grocery clerk, and is now a member of the firm of the Buttman–Todd Grocery Company at Leavenworth. The youngest son died. Their mother is yet living, now sixty seven years old, and residing with their son at Leavenworth. She never remarried.

Thomas Jefferson Todd, whose name opens this biographical account, was the second son. He was educated in the public schools of Kansas, and later took a commercial college course. In 1872 he accepted a clerkship on the steamboat Silver Lake No. 4. After serving on the mountains above Yogo. Nearly all the mines in this district have iron caps carrying free gold, some contain sulphurets and carbonates of lead and have native copper and azurite and malachite and copper pyrites carrying gold and silver; and some show sulphurets of silver. A very large portion of the ore developed in this camp is free-milling gold and is easily worked and amalgamated in common quartz mills and arastras. But the ores deeper in the mines are sulphurets instead of oxide of iron.

C. W. Gardiner has a small mill on Skunk Gulch, which consists of a Blake crusher, a Hunter oscillator and a Frue-Vanner concentrator. The mill is working from six to fifteen tons of ore from the Gold Belt per day. The ore yields about $15 per ton. Two men take out the ore and run it into the mill, and two run the mill, so the mining and milling are economically conducted. Elias Shelby has an excellent arastra at Yogo, running on the ore from the T. C. Power mine. The arastra has in that capacity two years he held the same position on the Nellie Peck. With this vessel he came to Fort Benton, arriving May 22, 1874. After his arrival in Montana he accepted a clerkship in the establishment of W. S. Wetzel at Fort Benton until the season of trade closed. Next he went to Fort Washington and continued in business during the winter. The next spring he returned to Fort Benton and had charge of handling the freight until winter; then was employed by T. C. Power & Company, and later was in the employ of the firm of I. C. Baker for the steamboat line at Bismarck, Dakota.

In 1889, upon the admission of Montana into the Union, he was elected clerk of the District Court of Choteau county, and served acceptably in that capacity three years. In 1886 he was connected with a large cattle company, but that winter being a severe one the venture proved disastrous. At present he is retired from active business. He has a delightful home at Fort Benton, situated on a pleasant hillside overlooking the city and the surrounding country.

Politically he has been a Democrat all his life. He is a pleasant and kind-hearted gentleman, and, like his old Virginia ancestry, is noted for his hospitality. He and Mrs Tood have many warm friends in Montana.

He was married December 9, 1880, to Miss Martha E,. Conrad, a native of Warren county, Virginia, and the daughter of Colonel James W. Conrad, of that State.

JUDGE EVERTON J. CONGER, of Dillon, Montana, and now Prosecuting Attorney of Beaver Head county, is a native of the State of Ohio, born April 25, 1836.

He descended from a family of French Huguenots who were among the first settlers of New Jersey, where his great-grandfather, Reuben Conger, was born, in 1694. Reuben Conger married Miss Mary Percey, daughter of Henry Percey, of England. After their marriage they resided in the Schoharie valley, New York, being there at the time of the massacre of the settlers by the French and Indians, but Mrs. Conger escaped with her children. Their son, Uzziah, was born in 1758. He fought in the Revolution on the side of the Colonies. He married Miss Mary Hungerford. Their son, Enoch, (Judge Conger's father) was born in Albany county, New York, in 1795, and became a Presbyterian minister. He married Miss Ester West, a native of New York, born in 1800. After their marriage they removed to Ohio. They had seven children, of whom only four are living, Senator Conger, of Michigan being one of the survivors. In 1870 they removed to Carmi, White county, Illinois, where the father died, in the eighty-fourth year of his age. The mother survived him six years, and her death also occurred when she was eighty-four. Their whole lives had been spent in the service of the Lord. Mr. Conger had gone to the Western Reserve as a missionary, and spent half a century in the ministry, and as a pioneer preacher was known far and near.

Judge Conger was their sixth child. He was educated at Milan, Erie county, Ohio, and at the Western Reserve College, after which he learned the machinist's business.

In April, 1861, in answer to President Lincoln's call for three-months volunteers to put down the Rebellion, he enlisted in Company A, Eighth Ohio Volunteer Infantry. He was transferred to the Tenth, in which he served some time, and then under direction of General Rosecrans he returned to Ohio and recruited two companies of cavalry and took them to Wheeling to General Rosecrans' headquarters. They were mustered in at Wheeling as independent companies, and Mr. Conger was elected Captain of Company A. In that position he continued until the fall of 1861, when he became one of General Rosecrans' staff officers. Later he was on the staff of General Ingalls. In the fall of 1862 he was sent out on a scouting expedition, and while in that service received a shot in the side which laid him up until the following April. He was then promoted to Major and went to Washington to take charge of the First Regiment, District of Columbia Cavalry, his commission being, received from Secretary Stanton. He went with his regiment to Fortress Monroe, under General Butler, and they also operated in the opening of the James river. He continued in that connection until the expedition on the Danville Railroad. At Stanton he received a gunshot through the hips, and was sent to hospital at City Point, and thence returned to his home in Ohio. Upon his recovery he returned to his command, and was at the surrender of Petersburg. He continued with the army until the close of the war, a part of the time on detatched detective two tubs, which are run by an overshot water-wheel. This arastra ought to do good work, as the ore is a brown oxide, containing from $10 to $40 per ton in free gold. The Yogo has an abundance of good timber and water for all domestic and mining purposes. There is an ample supply of mineral coal on Sage creek in the adjacent valley.

I started up Running Wolf creek to examine the mines in Running Wolf District, but on my way learned that all the miners had left camp the day before; and, as I could not examine the mines alone, the Hon. Paris Gibson has kindly furnished the following excellent description of them, by H. H. Chandler, who had long experience in the mines of Little Belt mountains:

DR. G. C. SWALLOW, Helena, Montana:

Dear Sir—In reply to your letter of the 12th inst., requesting information concerning the mines of Running Wolf District, I would say: The most promising mines of the district are the service for Secretary Stanton, and with his regiment he participated in the grand review of the victorious army at Washington.

The night President Lincoln was assassinated Mr. Conger was in Richmond. As soon as he received news of the sad event he immediately started for Washington. At City Point he met United States Marshal Lemon and they went on together. On Sunday evening Mr. Conger went to General Baker's Department, as well as Secretary Stanton's, and with a posse of General Baker's detectives, by direction of Secretary Stanton, he searched the neighborhood where Mrs. Surratt lived. The search proving unavailing, he went into Maryland, to Annapolis and Baltimore, and thence returned to Washington and reported to Secretary Stanton. Mr. Conger then received orders to take twenty-five cavalrymen and institute further search, which he did. All readers of history are familiar with the story of the expedition,—how Booth was overtaken, was found in a tobacco house, was surrounded, and when he would not surrender was shot. Booth's body, under the direction of Mr. Conger, was taken to Washington, was identified, and for the part our subject took in the pursuit and capture of this villain he received a reward of $15,000, while the others of his company each received $5,000.

After the war Mr. Conger returned to Ohio, resumed the study of law, and in 1869 was admitted to practice in Illinois. On the 9th of March, 1880, he received from President Hayes the appointment of Associate Justice of the Territory of Montana. His district included Madison, Gallatin, Jefferson and Custer counties, and he resided at Virginia City. This position he filled in a most satisfactory manner until the administration of Mr. Cleveland in 1887, at which time he came to Dillon and resumed the practice of law. Here he was soon elected Prosecuting Attorney of Beaver Head county for the years 1887–8–9, up to the admission of the State into the Union, and in 1892 he was again elected to the same office, which position he now holds.

Judge Conger was married October 16, 1861, to Miss Emma K. Boren, a native of Fremont, Ohio, and daughter of Levi Boren, of that State. Their family is composed of the following named children: Charles W., Margaret D., Ray S., Earl J. and Omer D. They reside in a comfortable residence which the Judge built at Dillon. Mrs. Conger is a member of the Episcopal Church.

NICHOLAS HILGER, a highly honored citizen of Lewis and Clarke county, Montana, is a native of Luxemburg, Germany, born October 28, 1831, of German ancestry. His father's name was Daniel Hilger, his and mother's maiden name was Susana Evert.

Mr. Hilger acquired his earlier education at the State schools of Luxemburg, continuing in school there until his removal from that place in 1847, at which time the entire family, comprising his parents, grandmother, brothers and sisters, emigrated to the United States, the great Mecca of enterprising people from the Old World. On arrival in America the family first located at Buffalo, New York, where they remained resident until 1857. The father, although in the old country he was a machinist and wine manufacturer, after settling in Buffalo purchased a farm near the city and engaged in agricultural pursuits. In 1854 young Hilger removed to St. Paul, Minnesota, but after a short time settled at Henderson, that State, where he was soon appointed Justice of the Peace for the district in which he resided. To this office he was afterward elected, and after that again he obtained a position in the United States Land Office. After filling this position for a time he accepted a position in the Census Department of the Territory, preparatory to its admission into the Union as a State. After completing his duties in that relation he was elected County Auditor, and he served in that responsible capacity for three consecutive terms, namely, from 1857 to 1864; and while he was serving in this office he was elected Captain of a regiment of the State Militia, which office he held until the year 1864, when he resigned to join a train then starting across the plains for the great west. This train afterward joined the Sully expedition, which was then sent against the Sioux Indians. Following the course taken by this expedition the party arrived at Helena on the twenty-seventh day of September, 1864. At this time Last Chance Gulch had not reached the zenith of development, and Mr. Hilger and others passed on to Montana City, which was then the county seat of Jefferson county, where they remained during part of the ensuing winter. While ther Mortson and Woodhurst, Red Oxide, Sir Walter Scott, Last Chance, Mountain Side, Eureka, Aha and Castle. The first named mine (the Mortson and Woodhurst) is a contact vein between porphyry and limestone. Some 500 tons of fine carbonate ore have been taken out of this mine, averaging, by working test of thirty tons made at the Montana Smelting Company's works at this place, thirty ounces of silver per ton, and sixty-five per cent. lead. The mine is comparatively undeveloped, yet for a distance of 300 feet along the course of the lead and as far as worked, it shows a continuous vein, varying from two to six or seven feet in width of a very superior quality of smelting ore, principally lead carbonates, and entirely free from zinc and other refractory metals. Further development will undoubtedly prove this to be one of the most extensive silver-lead deposits in Montana. The Red Oxide, adjoining the Mortson and Woodhurst on the south, shows an immense outcrop of iron and copper ore assaying ten to twenty ounces in silver. A shaft fifty feet deep has been sunk on the lead, all in ore of the character described.

The Sir Walter Scott is located about one and a half miles north of the Mortson and Woodhurst, near the summit of the mountains, in a lime and porphyry contact. The ore is of an entirely different character from that men-

Mr. Hilger was appointed the first Deputy Recorder for Edgerton county, by H. H. Eastman, the Recorder of the county. Mr. Hilger served in this office until June 1, 1865, and then returned to Minnesota for his family. After being delayed in that State for some time by his business interests, he at length returned overland to Montana, with his family, in 1867, since which time he has been a resident of this State. During this period he has served as Justice of the Peace and as Probate Judge for several terms, and also, during this time, he purchased his present home and farm on the Missouri river, and began to engage in the rearing of live stock. This departure has proved successful, and Mr. Hilger is now one of the solid and prosperous farmers of Missouri valley.

It was in the year of 1857 that Mr. Hilger was married, taking for his wife Miss Susannah Moersch, of Minnesota, and they have had ten children, eight of whom are still living,—four sons and four daughters,—and several of these are married and have children.

Mr. Hilger is still hale and hearty and an active business man. For a number of years he has run a pleasure boat from his hospitable ranch to the Gates of the mountains on the Missouri river. The trip to that point is one of the most beautiful in the West, and many tourists pass over this route every year.

Hon. Joseph W. Kinsley, a prominent member of the legal profession of the State of Montana, was born in Cambridge, Massachusetts, August 24, 1843. His first American ancestors, having received a land grant in Rhode Island from King James, emigrated from old England to this country in the early Colonial times. The surname in the family of which our subject is a member was formerly Kingsley, but the letter g was inadvertently omitted in the grant just referred to; and in order to prevent trouble the family changed the orthography of their name to correspond, so that their legal title would appear clear. All the Kinsleys in the United States are from this stock. Mr. Kinsley is the oldest son of the oldest son for several generations, which fact, in England, would make him heir to a large estate It is believed, however, that the connection which the family formerly had with our Revolution disinherited the American Kinsleys.

Mr. Kinsley's father, Henry Kinsley, was born in Boston, in 1821, married Miss Elizabeth Allison, a native of the British provinces and of English ancestry, and resided in East Cambridge for many years, where he was a foreman in the glass works, then one of the largest in the United States. His death occurred in 1874, and his wife is still living, seventy-four years of age. She is, as was her husband, a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

Mr. Kinsley, whose name introduces this sketch, was educated in the Cambridge schools, and, commencing at the early age of eleven years, he served an apprenticeship of seven years at the printers' trade, completing it at the University Press in Cambridge. His last work there was on the American edition of Charles Dickens' works.

In April, 1861, President Lincoln called for volunteers to put down the rebellion, and in answer to that first call Mr. Kinsley enlisted in Company A, Sixteenth Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry, and served for nearly two years in the Army of the Potomac, under General Hooker. When engaged in the battle of Malvern Hill a shell burst near him and destroyed his hearing in the left ear; and he was also prostrated by a severe sunstroke. He was taken to the hospital at Newark, New Jersey, where he suffered a severe attack of fever, and by reason of his disability he was finally discharged.

Returning to East Cambridge, he engaged in the printing business on his own account until 1865, when he engaged in the fire-insurance business as local agent and also as an adjuster for several companies. In 1866 the great Portland (Maine) fire occurred, and he was sent there to adjust losses for a number of companies. After completing this task he went to Boston, where he accepted the New England agency for twelve large Western companies. While employed in this capacity the great Chicago fire of 1871 occurred, and his companies tioned above, being a sulphuret and chloride of silver, carrying no lead, or what is termed a free-milling ore, averaging according to mill test sixty or seventy ounces of silver per ton. Very beautiful specimens are obtained from this mine, assaying upward of 1,000 ounces of silver per ton. At several points along the course of the vein shafts have been sunk twenty-five to thirty feet deep, and drifts run sixty feet, disclosing a vein of excellent milling ore from two to five feet wide. Owing to the location of the mine (near the top of the mountain) being somewhat difficult of access, and the heretofore isolated position of the district, but little more than the annual representation work required by the mining laws has been done. But with railroad communications and better facilities for working, which the district will soon have, this (as well as many other mines in this district) will be vigorously worked; and, judging from present indications, will prove one of the best paying mines in the camp. The Ada, Mountain Side and Last Chance locations show fine bodies of fair grade smelting ore.

Taken altogether, the Running Wolf District, with its abundant supply of fuel and water, its large deposits of free ore and its bright prospects of immediate railroad communications, will, in the not distant future, occupy a position as a bullion producer second to no other mining district in the rich and extensive mineral zone of the Belt Mountain Range.

Respectfully,

H. H. CHANDLER.

went down. Then he and five others applied to the Massachusetts Legislature for a charter to organize the Faneuil Hall Insurance Company. It was granted, and when it was organized he was elected its vice-president, and had the charge of its affairs until 1877.

November 8, 1873, Mr. Kinsley married Miss Carrie Amelia Safford, a native of Boston, and while they were residents of that city the eldest of their two children was born. Their youngest was born in Helena, Montana. On account of the illness of his family he was advised to remove to California; and accordingly he resigned his position in the company and moved to San Francisco, where he engaged in publishing a Masonic monthly magazine until 1880. At this time the Ancient Order of United Workmen was organized on the Pacific coast, and he with others was chosen to introduce the cause of the order in the Golden State. This he did, and afterward introduced it also in Nevada, Utah, Wyoming, Idaho and Montana.

When engaged in the printing business after the war he commenced to read law, purchasing his books and reading at night. He read for about three years and was about to take charge of the insurance department of the large law business of General B. F. Butler when he was advised to go to California. When he was in the Territory of Utah he was admitted to the bar, after a personal examination by Judge Philip H. Emerson, and soon afterward he was appointed Assistant United States Attorney for the northern district of Utah. At the same time he was editor of the Ogden Pilot, a "Gentile" paper published there.

In 1882 he went to Billings, Montana, and started the publication of the Billings Rustler, which, however, he sold in 1883 and came to Helena, where he opened his law office, where he has since practiced, meeting with success that is satisfactory. Miss Ella Knowles read law in his office, was admitted to the bar and for a time was a member of the firm. When the United States Courts were organized in Montana, Mr. Kinsley received the appointment of First United States Circuit Court Commissioner, a position which he still holds. In 1892 he was chosen by his party (the Republican) as their candidate for District Judge, but was defeated; and that was the only time he has ever taken an active part in politics.

When twenty-one years of age he was initiated into the mysteries of Freemasonry; he is now a Past Master and a Knight Templar. He has been a member of the G. A. R. ever since its organization. He united with the A. O. U. W. in 1878, in San Francisco, being a charter member of Franklin Lodge, No. 44, of that city, and was elected overseer of the lodge on the same night that it was organized and that he was initiated. The same year, with nineteen others, he withdrew from that lodge to form another, St. John's No. 73, comprised exclusively of Freemasons, and he was elected Past Master Workman. In this organization he attended the Grand Lodge of California in 1879, '80, 81, and '82. In 1880 he was appointed Grand Lecturer, and during that year he visited eighty-three lodges and conferred degrees upon 1,500 candidates. In 1880 he was also appointed Deputy Supreme Master Workman for the State of Nevada, when there were five lodges in that State, and within a few months he had organized six more lodges, and in May, 1881, he organized the Grand Lodge of that State. In May, 1882, while attending the second Grand Lodge of Nevada, he was employed as a general organizer for the whole of the intermountain country: and, having organized fifty-two subordinate lodges and conferred degrees upon 3,000 candidates, he was, in 1883, elected Grand Master Workman, and re-elected in 1884; and in the latter year he attended the Supreme Grand Lodge as a representative of the Grand Lodge of the State of Nevada. The Supreme Lodge was held in Toronto, Canada, and he has attended every session of the Su-

The mines in Dry Wolf District are on Lion creek and Iron Gulch, tributaries to Dry Wolf creek. The mountain ridges in which these mines are located are capped with a dark limestone underlaid by beds of variegated argillaceous shales. All the quartz veins thus far opened are in the above named limestone and show a large amount of excellent ore for the work done. All the veins are capped with oxide of iron carrying gold and silver. There is a very large amount of float, particularly the oxide of iron, on the mountains and in the gulch.

The mines most worked, the Dry Wolf and Gold Dust, were closed up when I was in the camp and could not be examined. Many discoveries have been made and recorded. Considerable placer mining has been done on Lion creek; and Iron Gulch is located and held as valuable placer ground, as shown by the prospecting and mining already done in various parts of the gulch. The Dry Wolf District is well supplied with good timber and water for domestic, mining and agricultural purposes. Dry Wolf itself runs dry sometimes at the mouth of the cañon, but there was at least 500 inches in the creek a mile or more above. This water sinks and can be raised from bed-rock at the mouth of the cañon and be used for irrigating the agricultural lands in the valley below, or preme Lodge since that time. In 1888 he was appointed a member of the committee on laws of that body. He was reappointed, and in 1889 was elected Supreme Overseer; in 1890 was unanimously elected Supreme Foreman; in 1891 unanimously elected Supreme Master Workman. In December, 1890, he organized the Grand Lodge of the State of Montana, being elected its first Grand Master Workman; in January, 1891, he was elected Master Workman of Capital Lodge No. 2, at Helena; and when elected Supreme Master Workman, in June, 1891, he for a short time held the three presiding offices of the order at once,—Master Workman, Grand Master Workman, and Supreme Grand Master Workman. During that time Kinsley Lodge, No. 15, was organized at East Helena, Montana, which adopted for its seal the three gavels which he held, tied with a bow ribbon. He is now chairman of the board of arbitration of the Supreme Lodge, which board is composed of five Past Supreme Master Workmen, and is the final tribunal which has the settlement of all questions connected with the order.

For many years Mr. Kinsley has endeavored to have the word "white" stricken from the constitution of the A. O. U. W., as he has always been a lover of civil liberty and an extreme abolitionist. He came to the conclusion that if he was made Supreme Master Workman he would organize an order on the same plan as that of the A. O. U. W., omitting the word "white" from its constitution. Accordingly, in July, 1893, he organized the American Order of Home Protection. It is governed on the plan of the United States Government, and the lodges are named after the presidents of the United States, and afterward, as occasion demands, in honor of generals and statesmen. This order has already been introduced throughout the States of Montana, Nebraska, Iowa, Ohio, Missouri and Alabama, and the good work is to go on throughout the Union. This has the honor of being the first national beneficiary organization with the word "white" left out of its constitution, and it admits ladies as well as colored people.

Mr. Kinsley has a home in Helena, where he resides with his wife and two daughters: the latter are named Carrie S. and Alice F. Mr. Kinsley has a ranch near Helena, and he enjoys a wide reputation and a good law practice. He is a talented man, has a large heart full of generous impulses, and is deserving the high esteem in which he is held by the A. O. U. W. of America.

General Charles David Curtis, of Helena, is one of Montana's most honored pioneers and public-spirited citizens. He was born in the city of Cloyne, county Cork, Ireland, March 11, 1839. His father, William Curtis, Esq., married Miss Honora Eugenia Doyle, an accomplished daughter of the house of Desmond. Mr. William Curtis was a man of superior education and culture, and was a large property owner, but, being a patriot and connected with the patriot troubles in his native land in 1848, he sailed for America and was followed by his wife and children in 1850. They spent a short time in New Orleans, afterward settled in St. Louis, and in the latter city Mr. Curtis lived retired from active business the remainder of his life, his death occurring in 1876, at the advanced age of 78 years. His wife died in 1855. Their family consisted of three sons and two daughters. The youngest son, a graduate of the Christian Brothers' College of St. Louis, while on a visit to his sister, Mrs. Captain Wildman, at Point Isabel, Texas, met his death, which resulted from exposure and extreme exertion in saving the lives of a number of inhabitants of that ill-fated town, caused by an overflow of the Gulf of Mexico, which inundated it in 1867.

Charles D. Curtis, the second born in his father's family, was educated at the St. Louis University. In 1857 he accepted the position of special agent for the overland mail and served on the plains, where he first established for mining purposes. And, besides, when the placers above are worked the sediment will so puddle the creek where the waters sink that Dry Wolf will no longer be an appropriate name for that stream. Williams is an important mine high up in the mountains between Dry Wolf and Barker. The coal beds on Wolf creek will supply the mining camps on Running Wolf and Dry Wolf with good coal.

One of the most important mining regions in the Little Belt mountains is the Montana District at Neihart. Neihart is a well-built, substantial mining camp located where the deep, rugged cañon widens out to let in the sunshine and free air and give a wider view of the celestial world. Mountains of syenitic granite and porphyry rise on all sides abrupt and rough with rounded and craggy summits. These mountains are cut and intersected by a great number of veins containing oxide of iron carrying gold, sulphurets and carbonates of lead and copper carrying gold and silver.

A great many locations have been made in this district, and so opened as to show a great number of bright prospects and a few of them have been sufficiently developed to prove them good mines. There are three furnaces in this camp. One, a small reverberatory, and the his reputation as a scout and Indian fighter. The following year, after passing a rigid examination, he was commissioned as Second Lieutenant in the United States Army and was detailed for duty on the frontier, where he remained until he went to Camp Floyd, Utah. He remained at Camp Floyd with Johnson's army until the fall of 1860. Unfortunately about this time he had a severe attack of measles, which settled in his eyes. He resigned his commission and went to Salt Lake City; from thence to Denver, Colorado, where, during a part of the following two years, he devoted his time to the study of medicine with Dr. Farmer as his preceptor. At the end of that time, Dr. Farmer went South and Mr. Curtis was employed as a scout, and carried important dispatches from Governor Galpin to the commanding officer at Fort Laramie and other posts in Wyoming, and New Mexico. He was offered a commission in the Second Colorado Cavalry, but declined, as his pay as a scout was $10 per day. After this he was engaged in purchasing cattle to supply the Colorado troops with beef.

When the troops left Colorado for New Mexico and the South, Mr. Curtis became interested in an auction and commission business with Picket & Lincoln, with whom he remained until April, 1864, at which time the gold excitement at Alder Gulch brought him to Virginia City, Montana, where he arrived on May 16, 1864. Here he engaged in business with John C. Curtin and Watt King, under the firm name of King, Curtis & Company. For a time they carried on two stores,—one on Wallace street and the other on Jackson street.

While residing in Virginia City, Mr. Curtis took an active interest in its affairs, and was promptly identified with its early history. He was instrumental in effecting the organization of the Fire Department of that city and commanded one of the companies.

He was elected the first City Clerk of Virginia City, with a salary of $2,000 per year. Soon after his election to this office, the fame of rich gold diggings at Last Chance Gulch was spread over the country, and he deputized Judge Francis Bill to fill the office, left his partners to take care of the business there and came to Helena, arriving in the latter city on the 5th of June, 1865. Seeing that it was a lively camp, he sent for one of his partners. They decided to open a store and did a most extensive business in that city. An important feature was buying and selling stock, of which department Mr. Curtis had the management. He bought as high as 500 California horses at a time, broke them and sold them to miners, prospectors and traders. In 1866 he sold out to his partners and until the spring of 1868 was engaged in speculating. He then went to Wilson Gulch, Jefferson county, where he was interested in mining, merchandising and packing lumber across the mountains, in company with Hugh Daly, which work he continued up to 1870, then sold out and returned to Helena, where he engaged in the grocery business with his brother, John H. Curtis (now of Butte City), under the firm name of Curtis Brothers. They conducted business one year, when our subject again sold out and turned his attention to buying and selling stock, in partnership with T. E. McKoin.

In May, 1872, he opened an auction, commission and stock business at the foot of Broadway, George Booker becoming a co-partner in the enterprise, and in this they continued until 1888, a period of sixteen years.

Mr. Curtis was appointed Postmaster of Helena by President Cleveland, the duties of which office he entered upon July 1, 1886, and served until March 31, 1891. That he made a good record as Postmaster is evinced by the endorsements of the Department.

On the 5th of June of the same year he paid $10,000 for a third interest in the mercantile house of F. S. Lang & Company, extensive dealers in house-furnishing goods and hardware, and was elected vice-president and treasurer of the company. With this establishment he is still connected. He is also President of the Montana Mineral Land Development Company. At the present writing he other had a capacity of thirty tons, and the third is down toward Belt creek. There were also two concentrators.

On the Monarch the work was well done and made safe for the workmen. This mine is near town, and is in a ridge of syenitic granite so situated that it can be worked at comparatively small expense. Six men were at work on the Monarch. There were about forty tons of ore on the dump. Seven tons had been shipped to the Great Falls smelter, which yielded 108 ounces of silver and $5 in gold per ton. The ore is rich in galena and carbonate of lead and much of it will yield seventy per cent or more of that metal, which makes it a very desirable fluxing ore to smelt more refractory kinds.

The Mountain Chief and "88" belong to the same company and will be worked together. Four or five veins have been opened on this property. There are four shafts; the deepest is down 310 feet on the vein; and there are several tunnels which will strike the veins at various depths; the lowest now, in 600 feet, will tap the vein 2,300 feet in and 1,000 feet below the top of the main shaft. This mine has a double-track tramway down the side of the mountain, so run by a wire cable that the loaded car going down takes up the empty one. It also has a is serving as Sheriff of Lewis & Clarke county, having been elected to that office by a very large majority. Here, as elsewhere, he has proved himself to be the right man in the right place. Previous to his election to the Sheriff's office, General Curtis met with a severe accident, from the effects of which he is slightly crippled. On the 17th of September, 1891, a lady who was wheeling an infant in a baby carriage was passing along the street in Helena, and was in danger of being dashed to pieces by a runaway horse. At this critical moment the General appeared on the scene and saved the lady and her child at the peril of his own life. While she fell, and the baby carriage was turned over, neither was hurt; but General Curtis received the full shock and was thrown down a stairway into a basement, his head, shoulders and sides being badly cut and his leg crushed into splinters. He was disabled from September until March.

As a token of gratitude from the school children of Helena, he was the recipient of a splendid gold badge set with precious stones. During his illness the greatest solicitude for his recovery was evinced throughout the city and State.

In 1866, when it became necessary to raise troops to protect the settlers of Montana from Indian depredations, the subject of our sketch raised three companies of volunteers and reported for duty, Helena being headquarters. He went to the front and remained in active service until the Indians were subdued. The following year (1867), when the Sioux and Crow Indians had killed John Bozeman, several prospectors on the lower Yellowstone and the people of Gallatin and adjacent valleys petitioned the Governor for protection. In response to Governor Meagher's call, General Curtis raised two companies in Helena, known as the Curtis Squadron of Scouts,—and at the head of these remained until the campaign was over. On their march through Gallatin, the ladies of that place presented General Curtis and his squadron with an elegant silk Guidon, to show their appreciation of their bravery in defending the settlers' homes.

After this, General Curtis was appointed Chief of Ordnance on the staff of the Governor, which position he held for a number of years. He is now Brigadier General, and Inspector General of the State of Montana. He has also held the position of Aid-de-Camp to nearly all the Governors, and, in this capacity, during the administration of Governor Toole, he was detailed to proceed to the Cheyenne Agency on Lame Deer creek to investigate and report the cause of the trouble between the Cheyennes, the settlers and the stock-growers, for which services he was officially thanked by the Governor.

General Curtis' connection with the Fire Department of Virginia City has already been referred to. He has ever since been enthusiastic in this line of work, and to him the citizens of Helena owe much for the safety of the city from the devouring element of fire. In 1865 he organized three fire companies, consisting of 162 of the best men in the city of Helena, and for 20 years he has been off and on Chief of the Fire Department. In 1882, in appreciation of his services in this position, he was presented with a solid-silver trumpet.

General Curtis was elected one of the Aldermen of Helena in 1882, and had the honor of being chosen president of the Council. While serving in this capacity, he was ever on the alert to advance the best interest of the community.

He is a member of the Board of Trade, and served as one of its executive officers. He has also served as a member of the Board of Health, and in every position to which he has been called he has rendered valued service to his fellow citizens, often largely to the neglect of his own private affairs. Some tokens of appreciation presented to him have been already noted. He was also the recipient of a chronometer watch, which cost $500, presented by the first regiment he commanded.

January 1, 1863, his Catholic friends presented him with a very fine gold watch, valued at $300. During his occupancy of the postoffice, he was presented with a handsome gold-headed cane, and at another time the citizens smelter and a concentrator of the Fort Scott pattern and construction.

There are a number of mines on Carpenter creek, as the Uncle George and Whippoorwill, Butte, Silver Reef, Bullion, Silver King, Savage, Silver Queen, Rainbow, Colorado and Parnell, Magnolia, Snow Shoe, Liberty and Fleishburg, northeast of Neihart. Some two miles away is the Benton group of mines on Big Baldy. The Ripple, Tom Hendricks, Snow Drift, Lexington, Ontario, Cornucopia and Eureka,—all of these have been more or less developed and appear well for the work done.

It may be proper to add that the amount of pine and red fir suitable for domestic and mining purposes and good water is ample to supply all demands; and there are vast quantities of good coal at Belt and Sand Coulee and Otter Creek, on the railroad to this favored mining camp.

The Barker Mining District is located in the northeast spurs of the Little Belt mountains, and the Barker mine was the first discovery made in it, in 1879. Since then more than 500 claims have been located and many of them have been patented. This district includes a wide area of mountains and valleys covered with dense forests and watered with numerous never failing streams. In riding over this favored region and seeing the thousand prospect holes, of Butte, appreciating his services in the National Guard, presented him with an elegant gold-mounted sword, valued at $250. In all these mementoes he takes a pardonable pride.

On the 10th of June, 1872, General Curtis married Miss Mary Louise Hanratty, an accomplished young lady, a native of St. Louis, Missouri, her people having resided at that place since 1819. They have had nine children, of whom six are living, as follows: William H., Mary Leonora, Charles Louis, Estella Margaret, Francis Cleveland, and David Paul.

General Curtis has been a very active member and organizer of some of the best societies of the State and nation—including the Pioneer Society, the National Association of Fire Engineers, National Guard Association of America, Good Templars, Father Mathew Total Abstinence Society, the Irish Land League, the Irish-American Society, the Firemen's Veteran Corps, the Catholic Knights of America, the Ancient Order of Hibernians, the Knights of Pythias, the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks,—of nearly all of which he has been President, and of the last named he is a Past Exalted Ruler, and is now District Deputy Grand Ruler of Montana. He also belongs to several social clubs.

General Curtis has saved eight human lives during his eventful career. Many anecdotes are told of his bravery and intrepidity.

In the Yellowstone and Northwestern Wyoming Expedition of 1873, of which he was master of transportation, he saved two men from being drowned. In this exploit he broke his wrist and one of the bones of his right hand. "For his untiring energy and enthusiastic devotion to duty" he was highly complimented by Major Wm. A. Jones, Corps of Engineers, United States Army, who had charge of the expedition. His last perilous exploit was in company with Deputy United States Marshal Sam Jackson, when they ran down, fought and captured the desperado Charley Jones' gang, who robbed the Northern Pacific express and passenger train on the Yellowstone river in August, 1893.

General Curtis is fond of the society of ladies and children, has a passion for flowers and music, and is generous and charitable to a fault, a genial companion, true friend, and he deserves the esteem and confidence in which he is held by his fellow citizens of Montana.

HON. A. J. DAVIDSON, the second son of Samuel M. Davidson and America Ann, nee Billups, his wife, was born in Franklin county, Missouri, on the 13th day of August, 1843; was educated at the common schools of his native State; and in 1863 drove an ox team across the plains to Montana, coming most of the journey on foot. He and his party were about three months on the road, their destination being Virginia City, which place was reached in safety in November of that year.

His first work in Montana was cutting logs in the mountains, with which some of the first houses in Virginia City were built. A little later he engaged in placer mining, and was thus occupied in the winter of 1863–4. He then opened a miners' supply store, which he conducted until the spring of 1865. At that time he came to Last Chance and mined in Grizzly Gulch until fall, when he went to Ophir Gulch. From the latter place he went to Helena and secured a place in the grocery house of J. H. Kinsel, where he remained a year; then he went to Diamond City and took charge of the grocery house of Gay, Lewis & Company, remaining there during the summer of 1867. The following year he formed a partnership with George B. Mann and opened a grocery store on Main street, Helena, where he was engaged in a successful business for a number of years, and finally disposed of his business to his partner. Then he turned his attention to the purchase of hides and wool, in which he has since continued, handling large quantities of both. In 1876 he purchased the harness and saddlery business of W. C. Loshafts and tunnels one cannot fail to be impressed with the vast amount of work which has been done by the miners of Barker during the last ten years. The rocks containing these mines are granites, syenities, prophyries, limestones and variegated argillaceous shales. The mines are in crevice veins, contact veins, veins of segregation and blanket veins, which are so numerous that prospectors have found but little difficulty in discovering new prospects every year since the first was opened. These veins are filled with ores of iron, manganese, copper and lead, all of which carry gold or silver or both. The most of them are smelting ores, which have enough lead, iron and manganese to make them good fluxes to work with more refractory kinds. Many of the prospects in Barker have been so developed as to prove them permanent and valuable mines; others show such large bodies of rich ores as to invite liberal investments, and hundreds of others show prospects bright enough to induce further development.

The Silver Bell and the Wright and Edwards have been worked more than any other mines in the district. The Silver Bell was closed six or seven years. Large quantities of ore have been taken out of it and run in the Barker smelter, and the mine has a good reputation with the miners at Barker. It has the reputabenstein; in this business he met with success, and soon afterward not only enlarged it but also added to it a stock of carriages and wagons. In 1888 he was burned out, and subsequently he opened up a stock of farming implements, and has since been doing a wholesale business. Mr. Davidson has also been interested in numerous other business enterprises in Helena and elsewhere in this State.

On December 3, 1889, the firm of A. J. Davidson & Company was organized, it being a stock company composed of several of the best men in the State, and of this organization Mr. Davidson is president and manager. They have branch houses in Butte City and Bozeman, where they handle a large amount of grain and produce, as well as doing an extensive business in this line at Helena. Mr. Davidson has also invested largely in mines and in city real estate. He was one of the organizers of the Merchants' National Bank, and is its vice-president; he is also vice-president of the Helena Consolidated Water Company. To the live-stock business he has given considerable attention, and in this industry has invested largely, being the president of no less than three companies, namely: Choteau Live Stock Company, which owns between 6,000 and 8,000 head of cattle; Moccasin Live Stock Company, owners of 7,000 acres of land and 7,000 head of sheep; and the Davidson & Parker Live Stock Company. Besides these he is a stockholder in various other enterprises,—indeed he is one of the most enterprising business men of Helena.

April 5, 1874, he married Miss Sallie Davenport, a native of Liberty, Clay county, Missouri, and a daughter of Major William Davenport, now of Helena. They have had three children, two daughters, Olive and Elizabeth (deceased), and one son, William Parberry.

Mr. Davidson's political affiliations have always been with the Democratic party. While he has never sought or desired office, he has on several occasions accepted prominent positions, the duties of which he always performed with the strictest fidelity to his party. He served with Hon. Martin Maginnis as one of the two representative Democrats from Montana in the national convention of 1888, which nominated Mr. Cleveland for the presidency. In 1888 he was chosen chairman of the Democratic State Central Committee. In the Democratic National Convention of 1892, which for the third time nominated Mr. Cleveland, he was chosen as the member of the Democratic National Committee for the State of Montana. In November, 1892, he was elected a member of the Third Legislative Assembly, but, before taking his seat, was stricken with rheumatism, which confined him to his bed. However, although unable to walk to the legislative halls, he insisted upon being carried to the joint sessions of that body, and every day during that session, reclining in a chair, had his vote recorded for his true friend and noble Democrat, W. A. Clark. Although Mr. Davidson's friends asked the Republican members of this body for a pair in order that he might be carried to a warmer climate, where recovery was certain, with a heartlessness unparalleled in political annals a pair was refused! The handful of Democratic traitors who prevented the election of Mr. Clark to the Senate hoped in vain when they desired that Mr. Davidson should be absent from the joint sessions of the Legislature. By his noble and disinterested stand in this life struggle of Montana's Democracy for the right, he has endeared himself to every true lover of Democratic principles in this State.

Mr. Davidson is one of the prominent Masons of the State, having held many offices of trust and honor in the fraternity, to the entire satisfaction of that ancient craft. He was elected Grand Master of the Grand Lodge, A. F. & A. M., of Montana, in 1882, and in 1890 was elected Grand Commander of the Grand Commandery, K. T., of Montana. Mr. Davidson is also a thirty-second-degree tion of yielding an average of twenty-one ounces of silver per ton and fifty per cent of lead. From eight to ten thousand tons were smelted. The Wright and Edwards mine, in Dream Gulch, has been worked by shaft and tunnel. It supplied the furnace with some seven or eight hundred tons per month for more than a year. The vein is in granite and porphyry, and the ore at the surface was oxide of iron and carbonates and sulphurets of lead, carrying gold and silver; but deeper down the ores were iron pyrites, galena and blende. These ores yielded in the furnace about forty ounces of silver, besides the gold and a large per cent of lead.

The Pride of the West is another well developed mine, which shows good mining and large quantities of ore. Some ten tons were shipped to Wicks, which yielded $887 per ton. Thirteen sacks, sampled at Great Falls, gave 220 ounces of silver and some gold.

The Moulton and Tiger have a hard black ore of the oxides of iron and manganese mixed, which is very rich in places. These mines are on Galena creek. From some other mines they are taking out and shipping ores to Great Falls and other places. The May and Edna mines, in the Barker District, are improving, as depth is obtained, beyond the expectation of their

JOHN CAPLICE, dealer in general merchandise, Butte, Montana, is a native of county Tipperary, Ireland, born early in 1830, and is a son of Thomas and Mary Augusta Mulcahy, natives of the Emerald Isle. Three children were born to them,—John, M. S. and Alice, of whom our subject was the eldest. The parents both departed this life before the children had passed from childhood's estate, the father dying when John was a lad of ten years and the mother some four years later. Orphaned thus early the children were taken in charge by their maternal grandparents, John and Catherine Mulcahy.

At the age of about eighteen years John emigrated to the United States, first locating near Philadelphia, where for a year and a half he was employed on a farm. Hearing of the boundless West and the extraordinary advantages it possessed, he set out in 1854 for this promised land in quest of fortune, being ticketed to St. Louis. While en route, at Oswego, Kendall county, Illinois, the fine scene of western prairies presented to him at that point, together with encouragement from a resident with whom he had formed an acquaintanceship, caused him to leave the train with a determination to here cast his lot. Full of the vigor of youth and of undaunted spirit, he put in a crop, which did not yield the desired returns, and being attacked with chills and fever, he sacrificed the product of his year's work, "pulled stakes" and went to Newton, Iowa, where he operated a coal bank for one year. In 1857 he went to Sioux City, then a primative town of four hundred whites and Indians. Great financial depression existed at that time, owing to the memorable panic of that year, and, again sacrificing, he went to St. Louis, Missouri, and subsequently to St. Joseph. At this point he fitted out in the freighting business to Colorado, in which line he was actively engaged for a little more than two years. This business at that time was fraught with dangers and hardships innumerable, and longing for a business with wider scope and corresponding profits, he set out in 1863 for Montana, which was just then coming into prominence as a Mecca of fabulous mining wealth. Locating in Alder Gulch, now Madison county, in partnership with Major Renan, now deceased, and Ed Cardwell, at present of Jefferson county, he engaged in mining and merchandising, continuing until 1866. The venture was successful, but investments turning out badly, losses were heavy. Other fields promising better, he went to Helena to prospect that field and located a number of paying finds.

In the meantime he had established stores in the mining camps of Emmettsburg, McClellan and Lincoln, Deer Lodge county. In this connection it may be mentioned that merchandising in the West at that time was carried on under conditions peculiar to regions inaccessable by railroads. Freights were enormously high. It cost $11 per hundred pounds from the jobbing house to the terminus of the railroad, and then from 400 to 600 miles must be covered by pack-train transportation, by which it cost $10 per hundred pounds in addition. Selling for cash was out of the question. Large bills were sold to men who had not yet seen the "color" of their finds. Their expectations were often not realized and loss to the dealer resulted. Remoteness from the centers of trade necessitated purchasing in large quantities and of every conceivable thing that entered into the wants of the people. Camps were pitched in a locality where paying "color" had been found, and immediately the merchant was on hand with his goods to supply the hardy miners. Thus the business of the firm was scattered over a large area of country, and in addition to the places already enumerated the firms in which Mr. Caplice was interested had branches in Cedar Creek, Phillipsburg and New Chicago. The aggregate of their business often reached half a million dollars or more per annum. In 1877 they established a store in Missoula.

owners. Wilson, Northern & Company are extracting fine galena and carbonate ores, and are now taking out about three tons per day in prospecting their claim, the Wyandotte.

I may add, in forming a just idea of the numerous mines and prospects in the Barker District, let us see a partial list of those examined and deemed worthy of mention. Wright and Williams, Pride of the West, Barker, Ledger, Burkhart, Black Hawk, Fashion, Mary W., Ida F., Empire, Madison, Belt, Grace W., Bertie, Carter, Hiawatha, Manhattan, Lynn, Smith, Paragon, Ida May, Moulton, Tiger, Maginnis, Eclipse, Meek's Vein, T. W. Harrison, Sunset, Wyandotte, Cosmopolitan, Baltimore, Silver Belt, Zilpah, Fisher, Great Western, Bell Williams, Daisy, Forget-Me-Not, Chamberlain, Red Cloud, Jumbo, May, Edna, Gray Eagle, Alexander, Charlotte and Keystone. One man has about forty locations on one hill east of the smelter, which were not examined. This list might be increased indefinitely; but those named must be enough to impress one with the great number of mines and prospects at Barker.

Barker has an abundant supply of pure water and more good timber than any mining district in eastern Montana, and is in railroad connection with the great coal fields of Sand Coulee, and Belt creek and Otter creek, and perhaps

About this time the placer mines began to fail and the population moved on to find lodgment where the precious metal existed in better-paying quantities. By these frequent removals of goods by pack train great expense was incurred, necessitating most exhorbitant prices for goods, the freight alone often costing more than the original price of the goods.

In 1878 the firm of John Caplice & Company concentrated their business in Butte. Before doing so, this enterprising and always reliable firm passed through business ordeals unlike in character anything that could happen where the conditions were different. Heavy losses, amounting to twenty-five per cent. or more were sustained by the change in the money standards, and the railroads reaching the firm's field of operation so reduced freights that the vast quantities of goods carried by the house and freighted for hundreds of miles by pack train placed them at a serious disadvantage with new competitors, and again great losses resulted. During all the vicissitudes attending the firms of which Mr. Caplice was a leading and directing spirit, all obligations were fully met and without impairing their credit.

The concentration of the firm's somewhat scattered business in Butte, in 1878, has proved the soundness of Mr. Caplice's judgment as well as verified his faith in Butte's becoming the great commercial center of Montana.

Mr. Caplice has always been liberal in his politics; integrity of purpose has always characterized his business relations, and his worth is duly recognized and appreciated by a host of friends and business acquaintances throughout the great "Deposit" State.

During his long residence in the Territory and State he has always been more or less interested in mining, although in that branch of industry it can be said he has been more passive than active. He has spent a princely fortune in assisting others in search of the yellow metal, and it too often happened that the inside of a mountain proved as worthless as the outside.

A life of varied and changing scenes has been his. Of large mental resources he has power to quickly adapt himself to the circumstances and conditions peculiar to the settlement of a new country. As conditions of environment change, corresponding changes in business methods must be adjusted to the new requirement, and pace kept with the ever-changing, progressive spirit of our remarkable Western civilization. Although Mr. Caplice has been devoted to his business, he has found time to cultivate his mind in the graces of thought emenating from learned men. He is clear in his deductions, concise in his statements and a spirit of frankness and candor characterizes him in manner and speech. Broadly American in his views, there is no place in his composition for the bigot's narrowness, the radical's offensiveness or the idle-day dreaming of the visionary schemer.

Time has dealt kindly with Mr. Caplice, and in spite of his three score years he maintains a robustness and erectness of physique belonging to younger years. Sanguine in temperment and maintaining a fine equipoise in discernment, his decisions, according to his knowledge, are to the side of justice and tempered with mercy.

Neither the honors or emoluments of public office have ever allured him, as he has had no ambition in that direction. Always a stanch Democrat, to the principles of his party he yields fealty and support. He has held the office of County Commissioner in the counties of Missoula, Deer Lodge and Silver Bow, acquitting himself with credit in the discharge of duties incidental to the office.

In 1854 he married Joanna Burke, who bore him two children—Frederick W. and Mary A., now Mrs. George E. Rockwood.

those of the Judith Basin. A prosperous future is dawning upon this favored district. Capital will be drawn to its rich mines and bright prospects, the pick and the shovel will convert a hundred bright prospects into productive mines, and the miners, who have remained steadfast through the dark years now coming to a close, will soon meet their reward in hopes realized and honest labor rewarded.

Such are the mining districts of the Little Belt mountains, and such the mines in the Bigger, Yogo, Running Wolf, Dry Wolf, Neihart and Barker Districts; and all these mines were discovered in some ten years, in a range of mountains less than fifty miles long and twenty wide.

MISSOULA COUNTY.

Hitherto Missoula county has stood at the head with her golden fruits and vast area of timber lands, and in sharp competition with Gallatin, with her wonderful garden and farm products, to furnish the needed food, fuel and lumber for the mining counties of the State. But now Missoula is coming forward with many quartz mines, which promise to rival the richest in the country. Why not?

Missoula has long ranges of metalliferous mountains on each side of her large territory, and areas of her rich soils are underlaid with coal-bearing rocks. The early explorer, as he descended the Deer Lodge, the Hell Gate and the Missoula, soon saw the forest creeping down

GEN. CHARLES F. LLOYD, an enterprising and well-known citizen of Butte City, Montana, was born at Gothenburg, Sweden, July 27, 1851, son of Walruth and Jane Lloyd, his father being a well-to-do merchant of that town.

In January, 1852, the Lloyd family emigrated to America and settled at La Crosse, Wisconsin, where the father engaged in the grain business. There Charles F. attended the public schools until he was twelve years old. Then Mr. Lloyd removed with his family to Lansing, Iowa, and engaged in merchandising, his son assisting him in the store and also attending school until he was seventeen. At this time young Lloyd obtained an appointment to the United States Military Academy at West Point, where he remained four years, after which he was commissioned Second Lieutenant of the Fourteenth Infantry in the United States Army, with headquarters at Fort Douglas, Utah. He arrived at Fort Douglas on the 17th of June, 1874. In 1876 he went through the Sioux war, was with General Crook's expedition and took part in the battle of Rosebud, Montana. The Custer massacre occurred three days after the regiment with which General Lloyd was serving left Fort Douglas. At the conclusion of the expedition a part of the regiment was stationed at Fort Robinson, Nebraska. In the fall of 1877 he was sent to Fort Cameron, Utah,—since abandoned,—where he remained until the summer of 1881. He was then ordered to camp on the White river, near Meeker, Colorado, then called Thornburg Battle Ground, where he relieved the troops there stationed and where he remained one year.

In the fall of 1882 General Lloyd obtained leave of absence and came to Butte City, Montana. The following June he resigned his commission and turned his attention to a business life, being employed as general manager of the Northwestern Forwarding Company, in which he had become financially interested. This enterprise was continued successfully for over ten years, when he was selected to wind up the business for the company, and in this he is now occupied. Since locating here he has also became interested in various mining enterprises and in ranching. He owns a dairy ranch, located two miles and a half from Butte City, which demands his closest attention. Here he has 250 head of stock, among which are 150 milch cows. He has been conducting this business for seven years, and now has over $35,000 invested in it.

At the solicitation of Governor J. E. Rickards, General Lloyd consented to accept the appointment of Adjutant General for the Montana National Guard, which occurred January 2, 1893. He is one of the directors of the Rocky Mountain Bell Telephone Company, which controls all of the inter-mountain country of Wyoming, Idaho Montana and Utah.

General Lloyd was married, in September, 1875, to Miss Hattie Belden, of Salt Lake City, and they have two children, a son and daughter, Nafew and Nettie.

He is a member of the Elks and of the Silver Bow Club. Both in business and social circles he is highly esteemed for his many excellent traits of character, and as a public-spirited and influential citizen he ranks with the leading men of Butte City.

WILLIAM J. BICKETT, County Assessor of Lewis and Clarke county, Montana, was born in Marion county, Kentucky, January 1, 1856. He comes of a family who were early settlers of Kentucky, his father, William J. W. Bickett, having been born in that State in 1822. William J. W. Bickett was a physician by profession. He married Miss Martha Collet, a native of Missouri, her ancestors being among the early settlers of the South. Dr. Bickett the mountain sides over the foothills and into the broad valleys, where under the influence of the moist, warm, Pacific winds, the spruce, fir, pine, cedar and hackmatack begin to assume the gigantic proportions so notorious on the Pacific slope.

But in the early days, when the gold-seeker, the prospector, explored the gravel beds of every mountain stream from the Rio Grande to the Fraser river, the tributaries of the Missoula and St. Regis could no longer conceal their golden sands. Rich placers were discovered; wild reports of rich "diggings," sometimes true, sometimes false, caused stampedes to barren and secluded regions which resulted in untold sufferings, fatal diseases and even death.

After some of the rich finds were worked out, the miners as a class left Missoula to the plow and reaper of the farmer, the shorthorn and the thoroughbred of the ranchman, the Cotswold and Fairdowns of the wool-grower, the pruning-knife of the horticulturist, and the ax and saw of the lumberman. But a few continued their claims, and in the last few years old placers have been reopened with such improved appliances that gravels, which would not longer pay with rocker, wheelbarrow, and sluice-box in the '60s, are now yielding rich rewards to the hydraulic force of the giant, and the saving power of the bed-rock flume. The pick and shovel of the prospector have shown the presence of numerous veins ore and lead and copper and came out to Montana in 1864, and in 1869 returned East for his wife and two children, whom he brought to Helena. One of these children, Anna, is now the wife of R. P. Thoughman; and the other, William J., is the subject of this sketch. Soon after his return to Helena, in 1869, Dr. Bickett died from the effects of an overdose of medicine taken while sick.

William J. Bickett was just entering his 'teens at the time of his father's death, and at that early age he was thrown upon his own resources. He worked at whatever he could get to do, and when he was sixteen he was employed as clerk in the dry-goods store of J. R. Boyce & Company, retail dealers, with whom he remained seven years, his long continuance with the firm being ample evidence of his ability and their confidence in him. Then, with all the money he had saved during these years, he invested in the sheep business, in which he met with success until the severe winter of 1880, when, on account of deep snows, he lost heavily. This loss caused his return to the mercantile business, and for three years he was employed as clerk by Vanwart & Company, of Helena. At the expiration of this time he was elected Assessor of Lewis & Clarke county. This was in 1886. In 1888 he was re-elected for a second term, which continued until the admission of Montana as a State, in 1889. Again he received the nomination of his party for the same office, but was defeated by 160 votes, George Walker being the successful candidate. In 1892, however, he was elected to the office by a majority of 322 votes, and is now serving his third term as County Assessor. His long service in this office has given him a thorough knowledge of the value of property here, and it is but just to him to state that his services have given general satisfaction to all concerned. The assessment of the county reaches the sum of $22,000,000.

Mr. Bickett was married July 31, 1889, to Mrs. Vena E. Swett, a native of New York, daughter of A. B. Taylor, of that State, and widow of W. C. Swett, who was a prominent cattle dealer of Montana. She had a son and daughter by her first husband, and by Mr. Bickett she has one daughter, Verna.

All his life Mr. Bickett has been a consistent Democrat. Besides holding the office already referred to, he has served as a member of the City Council of Helena, having been elected as such in 1885. He is a member of the Masonic fraternity. A man of genial disposition and good business ability, he has by an upright life gained the confidence and good will of his fellow-citizens. He is now engaged in the sheep business, with S. H. Kenett as partner. Mrs. Bickett has one of the many fine residences which adorn the beautiful city of Helena. Here they reside, surrounded by all life's comforts, in the enjoyment of one another's society and the esteem of their many friends.

ARTHUR E. DICKERMAN, one of the well-known business men of Great Falls, Montana, came to the city in its earliest history and has since been identified with its growth and prosperity.

Mr. Dickerman was born in Decorah, Iowa, August 19, 1860. The Dickermans are of German origin and were early settlers in Vermont, while the Greenes, his maternal ancestors, came to this country from England and settled in Rhode Island about 1640. General Greene of Revolutionary fame belonged to one branch of the family. Charles E. Dickerman, our subject's father, was born in Monadore, Ohio, in 1834, and his wife, whose maiden name was Elizabeth Kent, was born at the same place and in the same year. They have five children. Charles E. Dickerman began his business career as a merchant and afterward became a banker. He acquired a large zinc, carrying the more precious silver and gold in numerous localities throughout the mountain regions of the western and east portions of the county. There are also large deposits of granite, syenite, freestone, limestone, marble and fire clay, which will supply all demands for these materials for domestic uses and for transportation.

The number of quartz veins rich in gold, silver, copper and lead, which have been discovered in Missoula county, and there recorded, is very great, running up into the thousands. According to the county records as furnished by the public-spirited Clerk and Recorder, D. D. Bogart, 820 claims were recorded in 1890, above the partial development and systematic and rich returns from a few. These numerous discoveries have greatly stimulated the mining industry of Missoula in the last few years. The increased railroad facilities have enabled owners to work many mines which would not pay without them.

The O. R. & N., located a few miles from Carter, on the St. Regis railroad or the Northern Pacific cut-off, has been worked for many years with unusual success. The numerous workings on this mine in shafts, levels and cross-cuts, have exposed large quantities of rich ores of silver, copper and lead, which have paid well for mining and shipping. The successful working of the O. R. & N. has inspired the owners of the neighboring claims to make need-amount of real estate in St. Paul and other Western cities, including Great Falls, and is now regarded as a man of large means.

Arthur E. Dickerman was the second born in his father's family. He was educated in the University of Minnesota, had the honor of being president of his class, and graduated in 1882. After leaving college he accepted a position as assistant credit man of the wholesale dry-goods house of Powers' Dry Goods Company of St. Paul, and in that capacity made numerous trips into the country. In April, 1886, he came to Great Falls. At the organization of the First National Bank of this place, he was made its assistant cashier, the late Colonel Broadwater being its president. He continued in the bank for a year and a half. When the county of Cascade was organized, he was appointed its treasurer, and he was also made the treasurer of the Great Falls Water Power & Town Site Company, and handled and disbursed the funds of the company during the time it was improving the water power and doing other work. In 1891 he was elected cashier of the First National Bank, which position he filled until 1893, when he resigned. Since then his time has been occupied in looking after his own and his father's interests at Great Falls. He has large real-estate holdings both in this city and county and he also is interested in mining operations at Neihart and Cook City.

Mr. Dickerman's political views are in harmony with the principles advocated by the Republican party and he has always taken a commendable interest in public affairs. In 1891 he was elected Mayor of Great Falls, a fitting honor conferred upon him because of the important part he had taken in the growth and development of the city. During the past two years he has been a member of the Republican State central committee. He belongs to the Order of Elks and the Knights of Pythias.

HON. WILLIAM E. CULLEN, of Helena, a pioneer and prominent member of the bar of Montana, was born in Mansfield, Ohio, June 30, 1837. He comes of Scotch ancestry. His great-grandfather emigrated from Edinburg, Scotland, to this country in 1768, and was a Greek professor in one of the early colleges of Pennsylvania. John Cullen, the Professor's son, was born in that State, and his eldest son, Thomas W. Cullen, was also born and educated there. Thomas W. Cullen was a manufacturer of woolen goods in Pennsylvania, and he and his wife, whose maiden name was Isabella Morrison, and whom he wedded in that State in 1805, moved to Ohio in 1835, where they were respected citizens and members of the Episcopal Church for many years. She died in her sixtieth year, and he in his seventy-seventh. They reared a family of five children, all of whom are living, William E. being the oldest.

Judge Cullen, as the subject of our sketch is familiarly called, resided with his parents until his sixteenth year, and up to that time attended the public schools. He was then sent to an academy for three years. At the end of the three years he went to Minnesota, where he received the appointment of Superintendent of Instruction for the Winnebago Indians. For two years he held this position, and during this period all his leisure time was spent in the study of law. He then entered the office of Judge Charles E Flandreau, at that time Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of Minnesota, and under the instructions of this noted lawyer he continued his studies. In June, 1862, he was admitted to the Minnesota bar. During the Sioux outrages in that State he entered the service as Second Lieutenant, and in that capacity served through the campaign. He began the practice of his profession at St. Peter, Minnesota, and soon afterward formed a law partnership with Major S. A. Buell, a brother of General ed developments and show the real value of their discoveries, which has resulted in the opening up of good mines and the shipment of ores from many of them.

The vast system of shafts, tunnels, levels cruss-cuts, winzes, uprises and drifts, the many tons of ore which leave the mine daily, and the immense dumps of second-grade ore awaiting the concentrator, show the quantities of ore taken out. This mine has built up the pictureskque little town of Pardee, at the head of the wild cañon of Flat creek, where the mine is located. In this Spring Gulch District the little Anaconda, Little Pittsburg, Iron King and Iron Queen, Keystone and other mines, are shipping rich ores and showing promise of permanent success. The Iron King, in Spring Gulch District, seven miles from the Iron Mountain station on the St. Regis road or the Northern Pacific cut-off, and six miles from the lively little city of Superior on the other side of the Missoula, has been worked with varying success.

The talcose slates of this region are in all mining countries deemed a good rock for rich and permanent mines. Some nine miles from Thompson Falls, on the river, is a large group of mines, some of which have been worked with very promising results. The Belle Stowe has working a large force of men and is shipping ore rich in silver, copper and lead; and it con-

Buell. They continued in business together until 1866, at which time Mr. Cullen came to the Territory of Montana.

He crossed the plains with oxen, and in an expedition commanded by Colonel James Fisk, Helena being reached in August, 1866. Here Mr. Cullen at once began the practice of his profession. The following year he was elected a member of the Legislative Council of the Territory, consisting at that time of seven members, it being the first Legislative Assembly to meet in Montana after the amendment of the laws in 1866. Since then he has several times served as a member of the Legislature. In 1867 he became associated in the practice of law with H. P. Smith, who had been previously banished from Montana by the Vigilant Committee for his too zealous defense of the road agents. Mr. Smith was a man of very ardent temperament and threw his whole soul into the cases which he espoused, and for this reason had to leave; but after the excitement died out he returned, and remained unmolested. They remained in business together until Mr. Smith's health gave out, and he died in Helena in 1870. In 1876 Judge Cullen became associated with Colonel Wilbur F. Sanders. In 1885 they took into the firm Colonel Sanders' son, a graduate of the Columbia Law School, the three conducting business together until 1889. That year the Colonel withdrew from the firm and was elected to the United States Senate, the son and Judge Cullen continuing together. In 1890 George F. Shelton became a member of the firm, and these three conducted a successful law business until June, 1892, when they dissolved partnership. In January, 1893, the present law firm, composed of Judge Cullen and Governor J. K. Toole, was formed under the name of Cullen & Toole, making one of the strongest law firms in the State. Since 1880 the firms with which Judge Cullen has been connected have been the attorneys of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, of the Territory, and later, of the State of Montana. In 1888 Judge Cullen was appointed by Governor Leslie as Attorney General of Montana, which office he filled for one year until he was succeeded by Hon. J. B. Clayberg. Under the administration of Governor Hauser, Judge Cullen was Adjutant General of the Territory. He has been a life-long Democrat and has given his party distinguished service. In 1884 he served as Chairman of the Democratic Central Committee of the Territory. He took an active part in the nomination and election of Governor Toole. But Judge Cullen has all his life given the closest attention to his law practice and the cases in which he has been retained, and has been one of Montana's most successful practitioners.

At Helena, Montana, in 1878, Judge Cullen was married to Miss Caroline V. Stokes, a native of Illinois. Her father, Clarence B. Stokes, was a prominent lawyer in New York State. The Judge and his wife have five children, namely, Violet, Earnest, Grace, Lilian and Mary. Miss Violet is a graduate of St. Mary's School, Faribault, Minnesota, and Earnest is a graduate of the University of Michigan. The others are attending school in Helena. Their family residence, erected by the Judge in 1886, is one of the finest homes in Helena.

Like many of the professional men of Helena and other cities in Montana, Judge Cullen has invested his surplus means in the mines of the State, and now has large mining interests here. He is a Master Mason and is Past Master of his Lodge in Helena. Few men in this part of Montana are better known than Judge Cullen and few have attained a greater degree of success than has he.

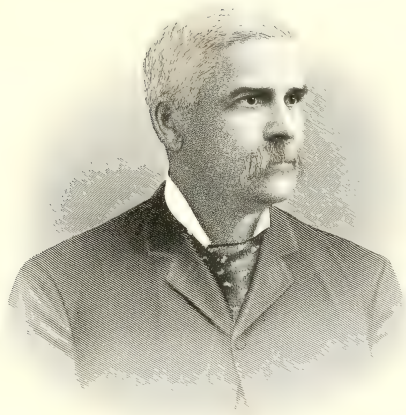
Col. Henry F. C. Kleinschmidt, one of Helena's respected citizens, is a native of Prussia, born July 3, 1832. His father, Anthony H. Kleinschmidt, was a Prussian merchant, and died in 1844, when the subject of this sketch was twelve years of age.

tains some nickel and cobalt. This ore yields from $900 to $1,000 per car load. The Buckeye, near the Belle Stowe, is a mine whose ores yield from $1,500 to $2,500 per car load. The Ohio, Climax, Pay-Master and Treasury have been considerably developed. The ores shipped gave good returns.

On the opposite side of Thopson river from the Buckeye is a group of copper mines which was employing some thirty men and shipping copper ore to Butte. This also was a busy and promising camp. The Fisher mines, some fourteen miles from Vervillion station, on the Northern Pacific, have gained a high reputation for their abundant ores of rich sulphides and carbonates of lead carrying silver. A ten-stamp mill has been erected in this district. The Silver Bow is perhaps the most esteemed in this camp. The Monarch and Pan-Handle and Lucky Boy show good veins of ore rich in silver and lead. There was great activity around the mines of Silver Butte. On Quartz creek and other tributaries of the St. Regis are several paying placers, and a large number of gold-bearing quartz veins have been located. Mr. Marsh mentions the fact that the galena of this region sometimes contains considerable gold as well as silver.

On the Windfall, a tributary of Trout creek, and about sixty miles from Missoula, is the

Mr. Kleinschmidt emigrated from his native land to America in 1852, landing at New Orleans in September and going from there to St. Louis. Previous to his coming to this country he had learned the mercantile business, and upon his arrival in St. Louis he accepted a clerkship in one of the business houses of that city. May 8, 1861, in response to President Lincoln's call for volunteers, he enlisted in Company A, Third Missouri Reserve Corps, and served in Missouri until his term of enlistment expired, and was mustered out in August. He then formed a company which was attached to the Seventh Regiment of National Guards of Missouri. His company elected him Captain, later he was promoted to Major, and still later he became Colonel, in which latter position he served until the close of the war.



At the time the war closed Mr. Kleinschmidt and his brother had two stores, but he sold out and accepted the position of teller in the United States Savings Bank, with which he was connected as such for two years. After that he was employed as bookkeeper by a wholesale grocery firm. In 1869 he returned to Europe to visit the home of his childhood, and after spending a year in his native land returned to America and continued with the wholesale grocery firm until 1878.

Since 1878 Mr. Kleinschmidt has been a resident of Helena. He was employed as bookkeeper for different establishments until 1886, when he was offered and accepted his present position, that of bookkeeper in chief of the First National Bank of Helena, where he has since rendered most efficient service. Colonel Kleinschmidt is Post Commander of the G. A. R. Post at Helena, and has for four years served as their Quartermaster. Politically, he is a Republican. He is a member of the Unitarian Society of Helena, and is also a member of the Board of Trustees of Helena's schools. He owns a very pleasant home on North Benton avenue, and has made some investments in mines.

He was happily married in 1862 to Miss Emilie Boeckelmann, a native of Prussia, and they have four children, Lily, Ella, Henry and Irma.

WALTER COOPER.—The last thirty-five years have witnessed a marvelous transformation in the great Northwest, for during this short period the almost limitless region, for years known as the American desert, has been wrested from hostile tribes and its vast area converted into rich, prosperous and productive States. The men who have accomplished these wonderful results, now presented to the view of those who roll across the boundless West in a luxuriant palace car, were, it is needless to say, men of iron, of restless activity, of more than ordinary endurance and persistency of purpose; for their achievements outrank the efforts perhaps of any previous generation since the first settlement of North America, when religion was the mainspring of their actions.

As a faithful private in the ranks of the early pioneers, Walter Cooper now deserves to rank as an officer in the army of these hardy veterans who with gallant hardihood hewed the way for "millions yet to be" He was but sixteen years of age when, in 1859, he reached the Rocky mountain region. He was without the benefits of an education when he was first thrown amid the wild scenes and rugged men of Colorado, where he grew to manhood unfettered by class-room, but schooled for life's battle by the uncouth usages of the wildest and roughest of frontiers, where one's native ability is brought to a keen edge and mere book learning does not add an iota to the scale of merit, as weighed by the discriminating hands of the pioneers. Worth it is that makes the man, where people are forced to estimate him in times of peril, and every hour is fraught with danger and imperiled life. Such was Mr. Cooper's school. Little time has he had to seek the polish of a higher education, but it would be erroneous to assume that he is lacking in this particular, for, with an unusually well-equipped mental reservoir, and Landowner mine, which gives such promise of golden returns that a company has been formed to erect a mill for working the quartz. Important discoveries of quartz veine are reported on Rocker creek. Cedar creek placers are again coming to the front and its group of copper claims are said to be very bright prospects. At Wallace, some five miles from the Northern Pacific and east of Missoula, there is another group of mines which are now attracting the attention of mining men. The West Point, Hidden Treasure, Eagle and Wallace are mentioned with favor. The Eight Mile District has a number of mines showing large bodies of gold-bearing quartz. Mr. Marsh mentions the White Cloud, the L. R. and the Anna Bell among the mines of this camp, sixteen miles from Missoula.

Among the other quartz claims of Missoula county the following have been deemed worthy of mention: Abraham Lincoln, Alhambra, Alps, American Girl, Argentine, Argo, Aspen, Augusta, Badger, Bay Hoss, Bell-of-the-Hill, Big Pittsburg, Bill Nye, Black Drake, Blue Dick, Brooklyn, Bullion, Cashier, Carlton, Chicago, Chieftian, Cinnamon Bear, Clan-na-Gael, Clear Grit, Climax, Comstock, Contention, Copper Queen, Copper Trust, George Crane, Crown Point, Crystal Daisy, Dandy, Dearborn, Dick & Joe, Dutchman, Echo, Eclipse, Elephant, expanded by his early training, Mr. Cooper's relentlessly active mind has gathered to it the attributes of the thinker and student, well able to present his views in the public prints and upon the rostrum.

Mr. Cooper was born in the town of Sterling, Cayuga county, State of New York, July 4, 1843, and was the third son of Andrew H. and Sarah E. Cooper. His paternal grandfather was of Irish descent, and his grandfather on the mother's side was of Scotch descent. Both father and mother were from the town of Argyle, Washington county, New York. Argyle was founded by Donald McGillvra, great-grandfather of Mr. Cooper, and was by him named for his birth-place, Argyle county, Isle of Mull, Scotland, where he was born in 1723, and whence he came to America,—first to Canada, as a private soldier in the British army. In 1752 he served with General Wolfe during the latter's campaign against the French, and fought under Wolfe on the plains of Abraham, September 13, 1759. This sturdy Scotch soldier gained an enviable reputation for courage and stability, and was honorably discharged, in the year 1759, after seven years' service. The original discharge is now in the possession of the Cooper family. After his discharge Donald McGillvra went directly to New York city, where he remained three years, and then located at the town of Hebron, in Washington county, New York. There he remained a number of years. Having cast his lot with the American party, he was set upon by Indians and Tories to such a degree that he was forced to abandon his home, and he finally joined the American army and entered the Revolutionary struggle. In 1789 he settled again in Washington county and founded the town of Argyle, where he died in 1812, aged eighty-nine years. George Cooper, grandfather of Mr. Cooper on the father's side, and Daniel McGillvra, son of Donald McGillvra, grandfather on the mother's side, emigrated from Washington county, New York, to the town of Sterling, Cayuga county, New York, arriving April 27, 1827, and being among the early settlers in that section. George Cooper was of Irish parentage and served in the war of 1812, being stationed at Fort Oswego, where he was taken prisoner by the British squadron under Sir James Yeo, who bombarded and captured the fortress in 1814.

Andrew H. Cooper, father of Walter Cooper, was born at Argyle, Washington county, New York, in 1813, and married Sarah E. McGillvra, daughter of Daniel McGillvra, at the town of Sterling, Cayuga county, New York, October 30, 1832.

Sarah E. McGillvra was born in Washington county, New York, November 29, 1814. Mr. Cooper lived in the near vicinity of Sterling until 1845, when he emigrated with his family, consisting of wife and four sons, to Shiawassee county, Michigan, where he died June 24, 1851, leaving a wife and six sons. The oldest son was but sixteen years of age, and upon him the care of this large family largely devolved. Shortly after the death of his father, at the age of eight years, Walter was sent to Lansing, Michigan, to live with a maternal aunt, who promised to educate and care for him as her own. For three years the boy lived with this aunt, not having seen the inside of a schoolhouse. Becoming dissatisfied, he ran away from his aunt, and hence we find him, at the early age of twelve, working as a farm hand in summer and in the lumber camps in northern Michigan in winter,—depending entirely upon his own resources. Mrs. Cooper had in the meantime returned to New York, taking her second and three younger sons.

The fall of 1858 Walter started West, reaching Leavenworth, Kansas, in the month of November, where he passed the winter, driving team for the Government and doing such work as he could find to do until February, 1859, when he engaged to drive a team across the plains to Pike's Peak, where he worked as a herder on a ranch. In the spring of 1860 he joined a prospecting expedition

Elkhorn, Half Moon, Harrison, Hatch, Home, Montana, Pardee and Pleasant View. The old discoveries on Wolf creek south of Demersville are once more attracting the attention of miners and capitalists.

Richard Marsh, who has given the mines of Missoula much attention, gave me the following facts some time since.

In many mining camps of Missoula county the development has not yet reached a stage beyond prospect holes a few feet in depth, and the sole means of transportation is by pack animals over rough trails. In those districts that have had the advantage of railway facilities, the productive power of the mines have been amply demonstrated by cash returns from marketed ores. Most of the mineral veins are found in the granites and micaceous slates. Coal of the lignite variety and fire-clay of fair quality have been found in the immediate vicinity of the city of Missoula, in formations of sandstone, slates and limestones. The coal has been burned to a limited extent in the grates of that city; but sufficient development has not been done on these lignite deposits to demonstrate their commercial value.

At Wallace, seventeen miles east of Missoula, are located quarries of excellent granite. It has been used with success in several of the best business blocks in Missoula. At Frenchtown to the San Juan mountains. The party left Denver, Colorado, early in May, and visited old Mexico. Returning to Colorado in the winter of 1861, our subject spent the summer and fall of 1862 near Colorado Springs, acting at times as scout for the First Colorado Regiment. In November, 1863, he started for Montana (then Idaho), arriving at Virginia City in February, 1864, and engaging at once in mining in Alder Gulch. In May he became interested with Charles Cooper in a freight train, with which he started for Fort Benton to meet the steamboats, —expecting to return to Virginia City with freight. During 1864 the water was so low in the Missouri river that little freight reached Fort Benton, and he was forced to return with his teams empty. Arriving at Virginia City in August, he disposed of his train, fitted out a team with supplies for winter, and located and passed the winter of 1864–5 in the Missouri river valley, near Round Grove, spending the winter in hunting. In the spring of 1865 he engaged in mining at Nelson Gulch and other points, which occupation he followed with varying success until the fall of 1869, when he settled in Bozeman, Gallatin county, Montana.

On the 19th of April, 1870, Mr. Cooper married Miss Mariam D. Skeels, only daughter of Nelson Skeels, of Boulder Valley, Jefferson county, Montana, and he has since resided at Bozeman. Mr. and Mrs. Cooper have had one son and two daughters born to them, the son and one daughter having died in infancy; they have one daughter, Mariam Cooper, living, aged four years.

In 1870 Mr. Cooper founded in Bozeman a mercantile house which became famous as the most complete establishment of its kind in the Northwest. He also engaged in the fur business in 1872, giving this branch of business such energy that, as a result of his efforts, Bozeman in three years became second in importance as a shipping point for fur robes and skins. Mr. Cooper invented and patented many improvements in firearms, and at one time manufactured the most famous long-range hunting rifle ever used in the West. He was selected as one of the incorporators of the city of Bozeman in 1883, on the adoption of the city charter, and was a member of the first City Council; was nominated for Mayor of the city of Bozeman by the Democratic city convention in 1888, but declined for business reasons. On the organization of the Board of Trade of Bozeman, in 1883, Mr. Cooper became its first president, in which capacity he served two years. In 1884 he was nominated by the Democratic district convention of the First Judicial District, was elected to the Constitutional Convention as delegate at large, and was made chairman of the Committee on Privileges and elections. He was again nominated and elected to the Constitutional Convention in 1889, on the admission of Montana into the Union, and was made chairman of the Committee on Appointment and Representation. As chairman of this committee Mr. Cooper reported and strongly advocated the adoption of the famous article giving one Senator to each county. This article was bitterly opposed by delegates from populous districts, but was ratified by the convention after a fierce struggle, became a part of the constitution and is thoroughly appreciated, especially by the less populous counties, being considered a safeguard against reckless legislation and serving to dignify the Senate and render it a more conservative body.

Mr. Cooper was selected by the State Convention as a delegate at large to the National Democratic Convention held at Chicago in 1892, was selected and served on the Committee on Credentials, espoused the cause of the regular delegates, Henry P. Henderson and John T. Coign, of Utah, against the contesting delegation backed by an influential club, in which contest Mr. Cooper developed rare qualities as a debater, showing, as well, a thorough knowledge of Western affairs. The regular delegates were seated, and Mr. Cooper received a letter are the lime quarries and kilns that produce much of the quicklime used along the line of the Northern Pacific for 100 miles east and west. Marble, that has been pronounced equal to the best Italian stone, has been found within the county limits. The Paying Teller mine is located three miles from Missoula, on the east side of Rattle Snake creek. This ledge is in slate, is from two to four feet in width, carries copper sulphides, copper carbonates, galena and free gold. The gangue is a fine white quartz without clay or talc.

Wallace Camp is located seventeen miles east of Missoula. The mines are from two to five miles from the Northern Pacific. The ledges are large and the ore is generally low grade. More activity prevails here at present than for the several years past. The following claims have received the most attention: The Treasurer, which has a 75-foot shaft and 100-foot tunnel, showing a strong ledge of galena and copper sulphides; the West Point, which has a 50 foot shaft and a 50-foot tunnel, showing galena and copper sulphides; the Eagle, which has 175 feet of shaft and tunnel; the Anchor, which has a 50-foot shaft and 65-foot tunnel; the Hidden Treasure, which has a 110-foot shaft; the Kenebec, an 85-foot shaft; the Wal-of thanks from the Utah Territorial Central Committee. Mr. Cooper was nominated as an Elector on the Democratic ticket in 1892, and ran several hundred ahead of his ticket.

He was elected president of the State Pioneer Society in 1892, serving two years, and was elected president of the Pioneer Society of Gallatin County in 1893, serving one year. He is at present a member of the State Legislature. He was appointed by Governor Rickards, in 1892, as a member of the local executive board of the Montana College of Agriculture and Mechanic Arts, in which capacity he still serves.

In the business world, Mr. Cooper's foresight, courage, and, above all, his tireless energy, have won for him a position in the forefront. His associates say he was never known to express a doubt in the ultimate success of any enterprise in which he was interested.

When, in 1889, the city of Bozeman wanted a supply of fresh water for fire protection and domestic use, Mr. Cooper acquired the water right on Lyman creek, organized the Bozeman Water-Works Company, and caused the construction of the most perfect system of water-works in the Northwest. He is vice-president and one of the largest stockholders of the company. In 1884 he secured control of the coal fields on Rocky Fork, and, together with Hon. Samuel Word, of Helena, brought about the building of the Rocky Fork & Cooke City Railway, and the development of this great coal field, with its limitless supply of the most excellent coal. From the inception of this enterprise to its completion,—covering a period of six years,—much of Mr. Cooper's time was occupied with it. As an enterprise bearing upon the general welfare of the State it will doubtless rank among the most important achievements of the last decade, and its history from start to finish stands in perpetual credit to the master mind of Mr. Cooper. As one familiar with almost every detail of this enterprise, the writer regards Mr. Cooper's connection with it as Napoleonic. The difficulties surmounted, the energy displayed and the benefits accruing to the State at large make it a memorable page in Montana's history.

Mr. Cooper has among other things devoted some of his attention to mining. He organized and is president of the Bozeman Gold & Silver Mining Company. He was also instrumental in organizing the Bozeman Milling Company, operating one of the largest flouring-mills in the State, and of this he is president, as well as its largest stockholder.

Mr. Cooper is identified with many other enterprises of a public and private nature. In politics he is a Democrat and has taken a prominent part in the councils of his party since the formation of Montana as a Territory, as well as rendering it and his beloved State valuable service whenever called on. He has earned and deserves the reputation of being a skillful leader of men,—an organizer whose magnetism, personal courage and unceasing activity have always won and merited approval. Time and again he has led his party to victory, directing its movements with cool judgment and clever generalship.

Mr. Cooper has a pleasing and engaging personality. He is exceptionally well informed upon all subjects, and takes a lively interest in the welfare of the State, for Mr. Cooper's predominating characteristic is loyalty to his country. There is no man prouder of the American flag, more devoted to his country, or who feels like drawing himself to a greater height when he says, "I am an American, and from the State of Montana."

A. K. Yerkes.

Paul W. Fann, a respected Montana pioneer of 1863, was born in Greene county, Tennessee, October 29, 1820. He is of German ancestry, who located in Virginia prior to the Revolutionary war. George Fann, the father of our subject, enlisted for service in that struggle at the age of sixteen years, and served with Washington for three years and six months. His wife, nee Lucinda Wilson, had three children by a former marriage. Mr. Fann lace, which has eighty feet of work in shaft and tunnel; and the Southern Cross, which has 100 feet in shaft and tunnel.

The mines of Thompson river are located nine miles to the northeast of Thompson Falls. The formation is quartzite, which extends easterly and westerly through the country in a belt from three to four miles wide. Up to the present the heaviest producing mine of the camp has been the Silver King, or, as it is better known by its old name, the Belle Stowe. In this the ledge cuts the formation at right angles to the strata, and has most of the characteristics of a true fissure vein. The present development consists principally of two tunnels perpendicularly 100 feet apart, the lower one 180 feet long. The upper tunnel has been driven on the ledge 350 feet, and has encountered five distinct ore chutes, each of which shows in the level a distance of from thirty to forty feet. The ore is mostly copper glance, running well in silver. There is a small amount of nickel and cobalt, though not in sufficient quantities to justify extraction. This mine has shipped during the year an average of about twenty tons of ore per week. This has netted from $900 to $1,000 per car-load. The mine is in good condition and substantial shape. Thirty men are employed.

was also previously married, and had sixteen children. To the parents of our subject were born six children. The former is the only known survivor of his father's twenty-two children. Mrs. Fann died at the age of sixty-eight years, and her husband survived until eighty-seven years of age.

Paul W. Fann, the subject of this sketch, went with his parents to Illinois when fourteen years of age, and in 1844 removed to Wisconsin. After his father's death, he had the entire care of his mother until her death, in 1852. He then made the journey with ox teams across the plains to California, having spent six months and nine days on the road, and for the following five years was engaged in mining at Shasta. While there he found $176 worth of gold dust in one day, and on another occasion found $196 in one pan. From there Mr. Fann returned to New York, via Panama, Aspinwall, and Havana, and in twenty-one days traveled 5,321 miles, on the steamer John D. Stephens. He next returned to Wisconsin; in 1859 located in Colorado; next went to New Mexico, and again to Colorado. While in the latter State, Mr. Fann mined on California Gulch, where he took out $8,800 worth of gold in four months.

He subsequently returned to Wisconsin; in 1862 made the journey to Powder river, Oregon; in 1863 went to Boise Basin, Idaho, and in the same year came to the Bitter Root valley. He purchased 160 acres of land, which he improved and farmed for twenty-one years, and then sold the land to Marcus Daly. It now forms a portion of the fine Daly farm. Mr. Fann next purchased eighty acres three-fourths of a mile from Hamilton, which he sold six years afterward for $3,000. In 1893, having decided to retire from agricultural pursuits, he purchased an acre of ground in this city, and built the comfortable and commodious residence in which he is now enjoying the comforts that his industry has secured.

September 20, 1882, our subject was united in marriage with Mrs. Polly Harris, who had resided on a farm near Mr. Fann's for many years. She had seven children by her former marriage, of whom three daughters and one son are still living. Mrs. Fann is a worthy member of the Advent Church. In his political relations, Mr. Fann has voted the Democratic ticket for fifty years, and socially was at one time a member of the "Granger" society. He has lived an upright, industrious and honorable life, and has secured the good will and respect of all who know him.

EDGAR GLEIM MACLAY, one of Montana's pioneers of 1863 and a pioneer merchant of Great Falls, was born near Johnstown, Westmoreland county, Pennsylvania, August 26, 1844, and traces his lineage to the clan Maclay of the highlands of Scotland, one of Scotland's most noted clans. The first of the family to come to America was Charles Maclay, in 1635, who settled in the Keystone State, where eight generations of the family have since been born, and where Mr. Maclay's father, John Maclay, was born, in September, 1792.

Mr. E. G. Maclay, of this sketch, the ninth of eleven children, was educated in the common school at St. Louis. In 1863, at the age of nineteen years, he came to Montana, with Captain N. Wall, a member of the firm of John J. Roe & Company, who were sending a stock of goods to Montana; and Mr. Maclay accompanied the expedition as its bookkeeper. They arrived at Virginia City, November 1, 1863, and opened a store.

After a residence of three years at Virginia City, Mr. Maclay moved with the firm to Helena. In 1868 he was one of the three gentlemen who bought out the firm, and the following year Mr. Broadwater became a member of the firm, and, in addition to merchandising, they did a large freighting business to Bozeman, Missoula, Deer Lodge, Helena and all the military posts in the Territory. In 1881 Mr. Maclay sold out to his partner, Mr. Broadwater, and remained out of business for a year, in which time he made a trip East to improve his health. He then returned to Helena and formed a partnership with

O. B. Whitford M.D.

The mines of Vermillion creek are in granite. The ledges contain a free-gold quartz. A ten-stamp mill has been erected on one of these by the Missoula Mining Company. Two short runs have been made with this mill, but the exact results have not been made public. This district is twenty miles to the west of Thompson Falls. Fisher creek is fifteen miles from the Vermillion station of the Northern Pacific, and most of this distance is by trail only. Of the several properties of the camp, more development has been done on the Silver Bow than on any of the others, and better opportunity is presented to study the general characteristics which appear to be common to the several mines of this district. A series of veins run in a zone at and near a contact between quartzite and slate. Below the contact and running parallel in the stata of the slate are several veins carrying galena in a quartz gangue. The mineralized zone on the Silver Bow is over 100 feet wide. The Monarch is the adjoining claim on the east and on the same ledge. On the west of the Silver Bow is the Panhandle mine. The Tenderfoot is a property in this same belt which carries essentially a free-milling gold ore. Fisher creek is a most promising camp and with the completion of a wagon road will immediately become a producer of no small importance.

J. T. Murphy, Sam Neel and Dr. W. W. Higgins, opening a general merchandise store at Fort Benton. Mr. Neel died in 1882, and Mr. Murphy purchased the interest of Dr. Higgins, and the firm name became Murphy, Maclay & Company, in which form it has since continued. They continued the business at Fort Benton, meeting with satisfactory success.

In 1884, when the city of Great Falls was started, they opened a branch establishment there, that being the first general store in the town. The business at Great Falls increased so rapidly that in 1886 they decided to consolidate the whole business at Great Falls. In 1893 they disposed of the general stock and embarked in the hardware trade exclusively, in which they now carry a large stock and enjoy a successful business. Mr. Maclay has also been engaged in lumbering, with Ira Myers as partner, is one of the owners of the Diamond R mines at Neihart, and has other investments. When the Great Falls National Bank was organized he became one of the first stockholders, and was elected vice president, which position he has since held. In company with Paris Gibson, Ira Myers and others, he formed the Great Falls Water Company, which now furnish the city with an excellent water system. Indeed, he has aided in all other enterprises which have had for their object the improvement and advancement of the city of his choice, and so has acquired the reputation of being one of her most successful, public-spirited and enterprising citizens.

In 1882 he married Miss Blanche Murphy, a cousin of his partner and a daughter of Joseph Murphy, now of Montana. Mr. and Mrs. Maclay have had three children, one of whom they lost by death in its infancy. The living are: Theodora J. and Edgar G., Jr.

Mr. Maclay's political affiliations have always been Democratic, but he has never sought office, preferring to give his whole attention to his business interests, in which he has met with well earned success.

DR. O'DILLON B. WHITFORD began the practice of his profession in Butte City in 1876, and has the reputation of being one of the oldest practitioners in the State of Montana.

He was born in Ohio, November 4, 1834, of English and Scotch ancestry long residents in America. His father, Augustus H. Whitford, was born in Wayne county, New York, and married Miss Charlotte Bidwell, a native of his own county and also of English ancestry. They emigrated to Wayne county, Ohio, being pioneers there, and later moved to Noble county, Indiana. In 1856 they started for Nebraska, intending to locate there, but Mr. Whitford died on the way there, in Iowa. He was a thoroughly read man, ane was one of great intelligence and power as a public speaker, reasoner and debater; was a lover of liberty and an inveterate hater of slavery. While in Indiana, indeed, he was connected with the "underground railroad," and aided many a poor fellow on his way to liberty. His wife survived him only three months; and it can be said that she died of a broken heart because of her husband's death. They left ten children, of whom six are now living. One of the sons served in the Union army, was captured and confined in Andersonville prison, and soon afterward died from the effects of the hardships which he had to endure there.

Dr. Whitford, the fifth in the above family, was educated in the common schools of Indiana and received his medical education in the Eclectic Medical College of Cincinnati, graduating in 1856. November 26, 1855, he married Miss Mary Jane Tanner, a native of Ohio, and in 1856 he started with her and their infant son and his father (A. H. Whitford) and family for Nebraska. After their arrival they took lands, and the Doctor owned an interest in the land on which half of the city of Omaha is now located. In 1859 he crossed the plains to Pike's Peak, and mined and practiced medicine there until 1864,

On Quartz creek the placers are profitable, worked by the improved hydraulic appliances. With the adoption of these methods for cheaply handling the large deposits of auriferous gravel in this section, a largely increased yield may be looked for in the future. Several promising gold-quartz ledges have also been discovered; of these the L. B. on Quartz creek, the Landowner on Windfall and the Maud S. on Trout have had considerable work done on them. On Cedar creek ore running high in both gold and silver has been found. A peculiar feature is that much of the galena found carries large quantities of gold. In working the bed of the creek, which was one of the richest gulches of the State, the early placer miners found much galena in the wash, sometimes finding large boulders of this mineral weighing 200 or 300 pounds.

The Pioneer is the oldest quartz location in the camp. The ledge is five feet between walls and crosses the gulch under some of the richest of the old placer workings. Assays are obtained from this, running from $60 to $350 in gold and silver. There is considerable galena in the ore. The Red Jacket is four and one-half feet between walls. The development consists of a 30-foot shaft and a 300-foot tunnel. The ore assayed from $25 to $100. The Mary Ann has a 14-foot ledge and carries considerable copper carbonates, which runs from $50 to when he came to Virginia City, Montana, arriving July 12, 1864, having been 112 days on the journey from Fort Laramie.

He and a friend purchased a claim for $800, which they divided, giving the Doctor the upper half. His friend realized about $50,000 out of the lower half, and he spent $800 more on his half, without success.

In 1869 he went to Cedar creek, and he had been there but twenty days when he received a message that his wife was very sick at Rochester. He made the trip, 330 miles, in three days with one horse, and he afterward sold the horse for $200. His wife never fully recovered: she died in Deer Lodge, July 4, 1870. The Doctor had made prodigious efforts to prolong her life. He continued to reside in Deer Lodge, and on December 3, 1872, married his present wife, whose maiden name was S. L. Sweeny and who is a native of Potosi, Wisconsin, and the daughter of John L. Sweeny, a Montana pioneer, now of Missoula.

Three years later they removed to Butte, taking up their residence in one of the first ten good houses in the place, and here they have since resided. The Doctor has had a large and remunerative practice in Butte, has retained his interest in mines and mining, putting many thousands of dollars in them, and now has various gold claims which are believed to be very valuable. In his practice the Doctor's specialty is diseases of women, but he has also a general practice, and he is held in high esteem by all the families who have called for his services.

By his first marriage he had three children, viz.: Charles, a graduate of Bennett Medical College, of Chicago, and now practicing at Hot Springs, Arkansas, and the editor of a newspaper there; Rosamond, who is now the wife of H. H. Cullum, residing at 707, North Montana street, Butte, and Henrietta, who married T. H. McCrimmon, who also resides in Butte. By the present marriage there was one son, O'Dillon B. Whitford, Jr., who died in his seventeenth year, from a sequel to the measles he had in his sixteenth year. He had a truly phenomenal intellect and was an exceedingly interesting lad, and his loss is a great affliction to his parents.

In his political principles the Doctor is the stanchest kind of a Republican. In 1882 he was elected Mayor of the city; has been several times a member of the City Board of Health, and when in Deer Lodge he was surgeon in the prison there for three years. He was Master of the Masonic lodge in Butte in 1886, and after serving eight months in that capacity the gavel was taken from him on a charge of "infidelity." He was tried by the Grand Lodge, defended himself, was acquitted and is still a Mason in good standing. He is a thinker and a man of liberal ideas and of great originality of character.

June 25, A. D. 1894, the Doctor was elected president of the Old-timers' Association of Silver Bow county, and on being conducted to the chair delivered the following address to his old comrades:

"Comrades and sojourners with me for thirty years or more in Montana: I remember well when first we met in youthful, vigorous manhood, clasped each other's hands as true friends and shoulder to shoulder, side by side, climbed these rugged mountains in search of gold, blazed the trails for the 'nickel pinchers,' who have acquired wealth thereby, and while we were considering them like ourselves, unsuspicious of each other, they were robbing us. Why, before they found their way here by following our trail, we could leave our picks, shovels and pans by our sluice boxes day after day unmolested. How is it now? Why, I have even had my sheive stolen from my gallus frame while I was at dinner by these thieving nickel pinchers, who have grown rich thereby. Yet we are poor in purse, but not in manly principles. Friends, when I die I would rather fill a

$2,000 in gold and silver. The Amador is a copper property on which a 100-foot tunnel has been driven that has exposed a large body of ore. The Garfield and Dundas are promising mines. The Emma and Enterprise are good prospects, showing high-grade ore. At present this district is reached only by trail and the construction of extensive wagon roads must precede the shipment of ore.

On the west of the O. R. & N. is the Keystone. A shaft has been sunk on this to a depth of 125 feet. About 50 tons of good ore are on the dump. Half a mile to the southwest is the King Mine. A shaft on this has reached the depth of 300 feet. A mile to the southwest of this is the Little Pittsburg mine. Ten tons of ore shipped from this property yielded $175 to the ton. On the Robert Elsmere a great deal of very rich float has been found. On the head of Deep creek to the east of Spring gulch is the Little Anaconda. Some high-grade ore has been shipped. The ore of Spring gulch is remarkable for its high grade. Nearly all the mineral found in the belt, as a prospector would say, looks well and runs high in silver. The completion of the Cœur d'Alene branch of the Northern Pacific will assist materially in this direction. That this section, when silver is repauper's grave, with an old-timer's honor interred with my bones, than to fill a millionaire's casket covered with ill-gotten gold.

"As I call to mind the palmy days of Silver Bow county, especially the summer of 1865, when I mined in German gulch, the tears often moisten my eyes as I think of the congeniality of such once generous-hearted pioneers as the late lamented Dr. Anson Ford, Henry Porter and many more honest old-timers who now rest in yonder cemetery, sleeping the sleep that knows no waking, where the remainder of us, whose tottering steps and silvered hairs indicate that our days of usefulness are almost numbered, must also soon sleep beside them. And as one by one our number diminishes, I trust the last lingering philanthropic pioneer (when his days are ended) will die as he lived, without a stain upon his character, and that some one in the busy throng of these 'nickle pinchers' will halt by the grave and imbibe of the living virtues of the honored dead, whose life, if he will emulate, will be worth the living and teaching of the same to his kind.

"My friends, to relieve ourselves of the monotony of this talk and the sorrow it engenders, and for the sake of a few moments of real pleasure, let us imagine we are all living now and enjoying the good old times of '64 and '65, when 'Allemande left,' 'Ladies change' and 'All promenade to seats' put life and vigor in our heels, for on the morrow we could be seen with grub and blankets on our backs, picks, shovels and pans by our sides, scaling the mountain passes in search of prospects new.

"Thus have we grown old in the pursuit of wealth. While but a very few of us have realized a competence to tide us over our declining years, nearly all who are now living can with pleasure look back over the numerous trails we have blazed and truthfully say we have never wronged a fellow man out of the value of anything. We have divided our bacon and our beans with our comrades, which makes our honors even.

"Although the majority of us have been poorly compensated for the thirty years hard delving in these mountains for gold, we have, nevertheless, socially, hand in hand and heart to heart, witnessed many a dawning day and setting sun, jeweled o'er with golden visions of happy times as we journied on from camp to camp, although weary in body from the fatigue of the day. When we were wrapped in our blankets for the night's rest our minds sparkled with the fire of genius, wit and humor until sleep closed our eyes. Thus day after day and year after year have our joys been mingled with our sorrows and our tears.

"But to-day, my old friends, not in the future to fear,
We have issued a roll-call to see how many are here;
And as time rolls on from year to year
Let us continue counting the number still here.
When the last one is counted by himself alone,
May he do so unmindful of those who are gone.
For what is life but a ripple at sea,
Compared to the thousands that are yet to be,
To the millions unborn, who in time will appear
And travel the blazed trails of the old pioneer,
Why, think of it, friends, a million years hence
What an atom we'll be in the measureless expanse!
What thought, what reason and what sense can there be
In predicting a future that no one can see?
As well teach that the mind of man
Was in existence before it was born.
Let us be content with the past, present and future,
As worshiping a phantom can make us no better.

"In conclusion, my friends, I am going to ask a question, and like Teddy Regan when he asked for his bride, answer it in the affirmative to suit myself. What, think you, would follow if all the people in Montana were in sentiment and conduct old-timers? Just listen for a half moment while I tell you. Sunbeams would illuminate joyful hearts o'er the pleasing transformation and thereby imprint upon our brows reflective impressions of stored, will ultimately be one of the great silver and lead producing districts of the United States, there can be no doubt.

PARK COUNTY.

The mining interests of Park county have steadily progressed during the past year. Many prospectors have successfully explored the mining regions of the county, and recorded new discoveries. Old claims have been developed into mines, and not a few have passed into the hands of owners with courage and money to carry on the good work. Two new mills have been erected to crush the ores proved so abundant and rich.

The placers of Emigrant Gulch were among the early discoveries and made many a pioneer gold-seeker glad with a "pocket full" to make the loved ones at home comfortable and happy. The placers of this gulch are still furnishing pay, and millions will repay those who shall unite the claims and furnish the water to wash out all its golden sands accumulated by the ages, by a bed-rock flume or some similiar appliance. The miners of the New World District have the courage and perseverance so necessary to make mining profitable. Though the expected railroad is needlessly delayed by the tardy action of Congress, and the unreasonable opposition of a few interested parties, they have done much work in their mines and taken out large quantities of ore in anticipation of the expected trains.

More than 15,000 feet of shafts, tunnels and levels have been run in exploring the 300 mining claims in the seven mineral mountains around Cook City. Imperial Rome sat on her seven hills of common dirt on the Yellow Tiber, but Cook City reposes on seven mountains filled with gold, silver, lead and iron. It took a thousand years for the palaces of imperial blended happiness. The fragrance of love would ameliorate our declining years and feed our contented minds, and as we are all touched by the frosts of time, our aged feet could tread the shining shores of a virtuous land; hence peace and quietness would reign in every home.

"My friends, as we have done thus far through life, I trust we will continue to the end,—employ all our faculties to augment the happiness of those who merit it, labor with perseverance and courage to extirpate evil from amongst us, assist as much as we can the worthy and friendless, in alleviating their distress and their sorrow. Thus will we merit their affections and fulfill the inherent mission of the old-timers, upon whose tombstone should be written in letters of gold, 'Here lies one of Silver Bow county's old-timers, whose friendship, if appreciated by the living, will be as durable as the race of man.'

"My friends, could we be so fortunate as to awaken in the morn, after a refreshing night's sleep, and find the people in as harmonious a condition as the old-timers would place them (if in their power), it would be like finding in the desert an oasis on the banks of a murmuring rivulet meandering its course through the burning sands in search of parched tongues and weary feet. Then, my aged friends, 'Unborn ages and visions of glory would crowd upon our minds, in the realization of all which, in the presence of harmony and love, we, in our declining years, would be willing to rest content to the end.'"

WILLIAM PORTER is one of the brave men who crossed the plains to Montana, in 1865.

He was born in the city of London, in 1826. His father, Richard Porter, was also born in England, married there and had five sons and three daughters, and with this family emigrated to the United States, during the presidency of Andrew Jackson. By trade Mr. Porter was a glovemaker, and he settled at Gloversville, New York, where he engaged in his trade for a number of years. In 1854 he removed to Illinois and settled on a farm, where he resided until his death, which occurred in 1862, after he had attained the age of ninety years. He had been married twice, his second wife being the mother of William Porter, whose name heads this sketch. She lived to be eighty-eight years old.

Mr. Porter, of this sketch, the second-born by the marriage just referred to, was brought up in Gloversville, attending the public schools and learning the glovers' trade and also the trade of furrier. In 1853 he removed to Illinois and purchased a farm, and the following year brought his father and mother to the Western home. In 1859 Mr. Porter crossed the plains with oxen to Pike's Peak. He with others started with an outfit from Kansas City, and, notwithstanding that the Indians were very hostile that year, they escaped them. They saw on their journey millions of buffalo.

A short time after arriving in Colorado Mr. Porter discovered a great demand for gloves and mittens, and he engaged in the manufacture of these articles at Denver, Rome to take the place of the dug-outs where Romulus and Remus were nursed by a vulpine mother; but palaces will replace the log cabins of Cook City in a hundredth part of that time.

The mines of Boulder District have attracted the attention of capitalists, and many of the claims are in process of rapid development. The Hidden Treasure is having its rich deposits rapidly exposed; the Mamie is feeding a small mill with a strong diet of hard ores; the Poorman, Sadie, Yellow Jacket, Volunteer and Florence have induced new capital and fresh hands to undertake their development. The Bear Creek mines now have a new and improved mill to work out their precious metals. The enterprise should be a prosperous one. Quartz mining in Emigrant Gulch was in an active condition. The bismuth ore of the St. Julian has attracted much attention, and parties have been at work to prove up the values of the ores of bismuth in the St. Julian and other mines of Emigrant.

A company is opening the Vinnie M., on Mill Creek; and new discoveries have been made on the headwaters of Rock creek. Some work has been done on the mines near Nye City. Two or three hundred quartz claims are recorded every year in Park county.

Park county has several important mining districts, as the New World Mining District, including Cook City, Crevice Mountain District, Bear Creek placers, Crevice Gulch, Emigrant Gulch, Mill Creek, Boulder District, Copper District and Rocky Fork mines. There are also several coal mines, Cinnabar coal mines and Horr coal mines. Emigrant Gulch was one of the earliest discoveries in the county and the Rocky Fork mines are among the latest.

There are four smelting furnaces in the New World District,—one at Nye City, two at Cook City and one on Miller mountain. The first at Cook City was erected in 1877. It ran sixty tons of bullion from the ores of the Republic, the Shoo Fly and the Elk Horn. This bullion remained in the furnace till the raid of the Nez and while there he supplied the first regiment, and also made gloves for Governor Gilpin, the first Governor of Colorado. He received good prices, and therefore prospered in the business.

In 1865 he decided to come on to the center of the gold excitement in Montana, and, with oxen, again made the journey, stopping first at Virginia City. Then he came on to Steward, in the Deer Lodge valley, where he took a farm of 160 acres, followed agriculture there two years, and then went to Helena and engaged in the manufacture of gloves ten years. He also sold produce for the farmers, and in 1876 he came to Butte and purchased two town lots on the corner of Galena and Montana streets. After residing on the farm for sixteen years he sold one tract for $7,000 and still retained the other. For a number of years past he has been janitor for the schools, at a salary of $750 a year. He now owns a valuable ranch in Rowell's City, near the city of Hamilton, with 240 acres upon it improved; and he intends soon to move there with his family.

In Illinois, in 1858, he married Miss Elizabeth Rice, a native of Ohio, and they have had six children, of whom five are living, namely: Janet, who is now Mrs. Jacob Freeman; Richard Wellington, who died from the effects of an accident when he was twenty-nine years of age; Thomas L., now on their ranch; Grace M., a teacher; George P., who has been clerk for Case & Lovell for a number of years; and Henry, at school.

In his young manhood Mr. Porter was a Whig, casting his first presidential vote for Zachary Taylor; but ever since the formation of the Republican party he has acted with it, intelligently advocating its principles. He was made a Mason in New York in 1852, and in the fall of 1860 aided in the organization of the first lodge of Masons in Colorado, being elected its Master. He also helped to organize the second chapter in Montana and was its High Priest; and he also helped to organize the first chapter in Butte. He united with the I. O. O. F. in Gloversville, New York, as early as 1847, so that he has a long history in both of these honorable societies. In their religion both he and his wife are Episcopalians. He is a good and useful pioneer of Montana.

WILLIAM HAMMOND, a respectable pioneer citizen of Phillipsburg, now living retired from active business, has been a resident of Montana since 1865.

Mr. Hammond was born in Maryland, November 26, 1822, son of Henry G. and Jensia (Avery) Hammond, the former a native of Rhode Island. His maternal grandsire was a soldier in the Revolution. Henry G. Hammond and his wife had four children, and her untimely Perces, who carried away some of it for bullets and cached some for future use. They also cut up the belting and bellows for the leather. The other smelter at Cook City was erected in 1883. It has smelted the ores of the Republic and Shoo Fly and New World and 422 tons of bullion was produced. Another furnace, the "Hartfeldt Portable Furnace," was put up on Miller mountain, but it was not a success. A good furnace was also erected in the north part of the county.

East of Bear creek a mountain spur begins at the Yellowstone and rises northward up into the Snowy range, which extends south and east up the east and north sides of the Yellowstone. This spur, called Crevice mountain, is made up of slaty sandstones and granites, which are intersected by some of the best defined veins of quartz ever discovered in this State. They are large and regular in size, but very variable in richness.

The Crevice mine is a regular vein of good quartz, running through the Highland Chief, Mizpah and Summit claims. Another vein, parallel with the last, cuts the Summit and Granite claims forming the Gillis mine. There are large bodies of variable ore in these mines. Farther up to the north are the Legal Tender, Graham, Mountain Chief and Tiptop, which are deemed very valuable mines. The Jo. Brown arastra was erected on Bear creek to work the ores of these mines. It was propelled by water. This arastra worked some thirty tons of the Graham mine and obtained $40 per ton, and about 125 tons of the Legal Tender ore. Another arastra was built on the Highland Chief and worked the ores of the Crevice mines with marked success; but exact figures could not be obtained. A quartz mill called the Pomeroy Pulverizer was erected on Bear creek to work the ores of this district. This mill was run for some time on the Legal Tender ore and on the death occurred when she was in her twenty-ninth year. They resided for some years in Pennsylvania and from there removed to Wisconsin. The father was a worthy citizen and a man of influence in the community in which he resided. He died of cholera and at the time of his death was fifty-four years old.

William Hammond was the second born in his father's family. He was reared in Pennsylvania, was educated in the public schools of that State, and there learned the trade of carpenter. In 1849 he went to Wisconsin, where for sixteen years he worked at his trade. He was married a few years before leaving Pennsylvania and when he went to Wisconsin was accompanied by his family. In 1865 he drove an ox team across the plains to Montana, himself walking more than the whole of the distance. The train with which he traveled consisted of about 300 persons and they were four months in making the trip. His first location in Montana was at Deer Lodge. There he worked at his trade and later he was for a year engaged in mining at Pioneer. In 1870 he returned to Wisconsin for Mrs. Hammond and the children, and came back to Montana by way of Ogden, traveling by rail to that point and from there to Deer Lodge with ox teams. Soon after this they located on a farm near Warm Springs, below Gold creek, where he was engaged in stock-raising five years. In the meantime he also mined at Pioneer and took out considerable gold. Since 1875 they have made their home in Phillipsburg. Here for several years Mr. Hammond was engaged in contracting and building and erected a number of houses in the town. In 1876 he embarked in the livery business, which he continued successfully until 1891 when he retired. During his career as a liveryman he was the owner of a number of fine horses, among which were "Turner," one of the most noted horses in the State, and "Mary Phily," a famous racer that was seldom beaten. Mr. Hammond now resides in one of the pretty cottage homes of the town, which he built, and lives on his rents and the interest of his money.

He was married, December 14, 1844, to Miss Jane House, daughter of Jacob House, of German descent; and all these years she has been a sharer of his joys and sorrows and is still by his side, the comfort of his declining years. Two children were born to them in Pennsylvania and five in Wisconsin, their family record being as follows: Elizabeth, wife of Charles McDonald; Teucer, engaged in farming in Wisconsin; George, who died at the age of forty years, leaving a widow and one child; Henry; Mary, wife of J. A. Hyde; Lucy, wife of William Coleman, Mr. Coleman and Mr. Hyde both being prominent citizens of Montana; and Estella, wife of William Mathews. Mr. Hammond has been a Democrat all his life, but has never sought nor held public office. Few of the early settlers in this part of Montana are better known or more highly respected than he.

ores from the Crevice mines. The mill did not succeed in saving the gold, although a large amount of free gold was found in the tailings by the pan test. This mill was moved to some place near Drummond.

The Thompson is some distance back of the Gillis; and the Empire State is on Pine creek, a branch of Bear. These mines are on strong veins of good quartz, containing oxide of iron rich in free gold. Below permanent water the iron containing the gold will be sulphuret of iron or pyrites. As a result of these practical tests and assays and a large amount of development work, the mines of Crevice mountain are held in high estimation, and a group of them have passed into the hands of an Eastern syndicate, with the prospect of mining commensurate with the richness of mines. The quartz of Crevice mountain will soon aid the placers of Bear creek and Crevice Gulch to keep Montana in the front of the mining States.

Emigrant Gulch is on a tributary of the Yellowstone which comes down from the Snowy mountains above Livingston. The placer mines of Emigrant Gulch acquired a widespread reputation at an early day in the history of Montana mining, and a large amount of gold was taken out by primitive modes, and much more remains to be cleaned up by the more efficient modern appliances. As was to be expected, many quartz veins have been discovered in and above the famous placer deposits of this rich gulch. Miners and experts agree that these quartz veins contain large quantities of rich golden ores, and they certainly add a large amount to the available mineral resources of Park county.

These mines are on Mill creek, a tributary of the Yellowstone, which comes down from the snowy mountains some twenty miles above Livingston. The Silver King, Silver Mountain, Alice, Emma, St. Paul, Genet and other lodes have been consolidated by a company organized to develop the discoveries made in this region. This is a step in the right direction, and those well informed predict a successful issue of this enterprise.

There are mines on Boulder creek, about thirty miles north of Cook City. Placers have been worked here for several years and some remarkable quartz veins have been discovered. The Hidden Treasure is a large vein which has been cleaned off by placer mining 150 feet in length and thirty feet in width. The quartz is very rich in free gold in some places. Some specimens showed numerous particles of gold; in other places the quartz appears to be nearly barren. This is certainly a very "bright prospect," and we may expect to hear pleasant things from the Hidden Treasure on the Boulder of Park county. Judging from what I saw, the name should be Visible Treasure rather than Hidden Treasure.

At Copper, six miles from the Boulder mines, are some copper veins at Camp Copper. These mines are held in high esteem, but not enough work has been done to convert the prospects into good mines. Some quartz veins have been discovered on Rocky Fork creek, six or eight miles southwest of Red Lodge. These discoveries have not been examined, but they are in the midst of low, rounded knobs and ridges similar to the granite and limestone ridges at the head of Stillwater, in which so many good veins have been discovered.

Cook City is in the New World District, which includes many mountains and valleys intersected by numerous large, rich, and in some respects very remarkable, veins and deposits of rich ores.

The geology of a district usually indicates to some considerable degree the nature of its mineral deposits. Productive veins of the precious metals are found in no place save in regions where the rocks have been metamorphosed and more or less crystallized, as is most common in mountains and the adjacent country. But in some places the rocks are metamorphosed far away from the mountains, as in some parts of New England. This is more common where the rocks belong to the oldest formations. But the more recent rocks of the gold and silver regions of the United States are never metamorphosed far away from those influences which elevated, fractured and tilted the rocks which form our mountains. Hence, veins of gold and silver are never found in those regions far away from the mountains and foothills.

But while productive veins of the precious metals are never found in any save metamorphosed and igneous rocks, it is not true that all metamorphosed rocks contain such veins. Some mountains contain but little gold and silver, and even some parts of very productive ranges produce none of the precious metals. But nearly all mountain ranges yield some valuable materials for man's use. While the Ozark mountains have furnished no valuable mines of gold and silver, they have vast deposits of iron, lead, zinc, nickel, cobalt and marble. The northern part of the Alleghanies furnish large quantities of slate, marble and mica, the middle portions, anthracite and iron, and the southern portions, gold, mica and marble. Some have imagined that the most ancient rocks are the richest in the precious metals; but this is a mistake. While the iron mines of the Ozarks and the Adirondacks are in the oldest rocks and mountains of the continent, and the anthracites of the Alleghanies are in mountains more recent; the gold and silver mines of the Rockies are in mountains comparatively new. The whole region of the Rockies, the Sierras and the Cascades was under the Pacific ocean when the Alleghanies were formed. So this whole region of the Rocky mountains and the Pacific slope, so rich in precious metals, is as comparatively recent in the geological ages as its civilization is in the historical times.

The highest mountains about Cook City present a feature which, though common in this part of the Rocky mountains, is seldom seen in the mountains of the Atlantic coast. Mountain ranges and spurs and peaks usually appear as if the central and highest portions had been forced up through the horizontal surface strata, leaving the latter fractured, tilted and lying against the sides of the mountains. In the highest mountains at Cook City, the central and highest peaks have been forced up through the horizontal surface as stated, but, instead of tilting the surface strata, the disturbing forces lifted them bodily to a height of some 8,000 feet and left them in a horizontal position as before they were disturbed.

Another uncommon feature is quite obvious in these high mountains. The horizontal strata which form the sides of the mountains are but little changed on their outer edges, but they are much more metamorphosed and fractured next to the basalts and trachytes or ancient lavas which form the central peaks and ridges. Hence many of the best mines in these mountains are in these metamorphosed rocks near to or in contact veins next to the central basalts or ancient lavas. This is true of the Morning Star, Black Warrior, Homestake, Elkhorn, War Eagle and many other mines.

Other mines in these mountains are what the miners call "blanket veins." They lie nearly horizontal between the rock strata. Others still appear to be irregular veins with vast pockets filled with ore, usually in or adjacent to the limestones. Such is the geological structure of the high mountains known as Miller, Henderson, Woody, Republic, Sheep and Red mountains. These mountains are actually covered with hundreds and hundreds of mineral locations. Some have been so well developed as to show their value and prove them good mines, while the great number have been but little worked and are simply bright prospects.

J. C. Power

At the head of Stillwater and Slough creeks are some low, rounded mountains or foothills, called Granite Range and Limestone Range, which contain many important mines. There are also large areas on the headwaters of Soda-Butte creek, Rocky fork and Clark's fork covered for the most part with low, rounded knobs and ranges, which have been but little explored, though some mines have been discovered in them. This is a promising region, and will be prospected as soon as the railroad whistle startles the deer and the elk and the bear from these wild regions and promises cheap transportation. The picks are already sharpened, the shovels are bright and the donkey and the cayuse are ready to pack the grub

HON. THOMAS C. POWER is one of Montana's most prominent and distinguished citizens, successful in business, influential in politics and respected and honored in all the relations of life. He is a Western man by birth, and with those of the vast territory beyond the Mississippi his interests have always been identified and progress has been largely advanced by his efforts. Holland says that the history of a community is best told in the lives of its citizens, and the record of Mr. Power's career certainly shows forth much of the condition of the localities with which he has been connected.

A native of Dubuque, Iowa, he was born May 22, 1839, and comes of a family of Irish origin. His father, Michael Power, emigrated from the Emerald Isle to this country in his boyhood and settled in Iowa in 1834, becoming one of its pioneers. In 1836, in Dubuque, he married Miss Catharine McLeer, a native of Hagerstown, Maryland, and they began their domestic life on a farm near that city, where, in addition to carrying on agricultural pursuits, Mr. Power was also engaged in selling goods to the Indians. Thus they lived upon the frontier, bearing their part in the work that opens up to civilization a new country. The father died in the fiftieth year of his age, and the mother passed away at the age of seventy-five. Both were devout members of the Catholic Church.

Thomas C. Power was the eldest in a family of four children. Reared amid the wild scenes of pioneer life, it is not strange that a boy possessed of his keen perceptive powers and ambitious disposition should have imbibed much of the spirit of freedom, independence, courage and determination which characterized the Western settlements. In the public schools he received mental training, and his physical development—no less important—was obtained in the fields, where he aided in the plowing, planting and harvesting. Later he pursued a three-years' course of study in the Sinsinawa College in Wisconsin, making a specialty of engineering and the sciences, and on leaving that institution he turned his attention to teaching, which profession he followed for three years during the winter season. This was really his first business venture. In 1860 he put into practice the knowledge gained in college, and engaged in surveying in Iowa and Dakota, walking over the greater part of both States,—receiving $20 per month for his services when at work, but getting nothing for the time he was traveling. For several months he was employed in this way, but found it unprofitable and returned home. In the spring of 1861 he again started for Dakota, where he worked at the carpenter's trade, but shortly after he resumed surveying, being employed to survey town lots and pre-emption localities and doing some field work. Ere winter came he returned to his native State, and in the following spring started out with a larger surveying party than had accompanied him on the previous expedition. This trip proved successful and he did considerable surveying work, going a long distance up the river, where later he engaged in buying and selling land warrants.

The year 1864 witnessed the arrival of Mr. Power in Montana, but at that time he remained for only a short period. In 1866, however, he began sending merchandise from Omaha to Montana, and the following year settled at Fort Benton, Montana, where he became extensively engaged in mercantile pursuits, handling all kinds of merchandise and produce. In 1868 he began freighting, and his business constantly increased, his trade with the Indians being large and remunerative. Many and varied have been the business interests with which he has been connected, and in nearly all he has been eminently successful, for he possesses that determination and perseverance that never succumb to failure.

In 1874, in company with I. G. Baker and other business men of Fort Benton, Mr. Power built the steamer Benton. The following year they loaded this vessel with merchandise at Pittsburg, and for two years made trips from that place to Montana. That was before the day of many railroads in this State, and transportation by steamfor the pioneer miners who shall develop these vast regions whose mineral veins have not yet felt the blows of the prospectors, whose discoveries have covered the Pacific Slope and filled these mountains with civilized States with a rapidity that surpasses all historical records and even the magical results of Aladdin's lamp.

The pioneer prospector may live in his log cabin, his tent or even his brush wicky, but when the true history of America is written he will have a monument quite as creditable as the marble palaces of the millionaires his discoveries have made. This whole region, drained by the waters of the Soda-Butte creek, Clark's fork, Rosebud, Stillwater and Rocky fork, belongs to the New World Mining District. It is believed that fully 1,000 claims have been located in this district since its organization.

Among the mines and bright prospects in the district are the following: On Miller mountain are Morning Star, Shoo Fly, Stump, Novorbis, Nellie, New World, High Ore, Washington, Volunteer, Alta, California, Richmond, Ash, Uncle Sam, White Cross, Comet, Red Cross, Josephine, Talc, Monitor, Exchequer, Big Blue, Pine Nut, Balaam's Ass, Revenge, Yellowstone, Day Light, Rising Sun, Iceberg, Rob Roy, Silver Lead, White Lily, Alta, Chief Justice, Little Judge, Street, Bunker Hill, Harrison, Nevada, Fairview, Albion and many others. On er, when the work was successfully conducted, proved very profitable. In 1867 they built the steamer Helena, in 1878 the Butte, and in 1879 Mr. Power purchased still another steamer, the Black Hills. In 1879 he also established the stage line from Helena to Fort Benton, which he operated for a number of years, and in addition to this and his large freighting business, he carried on his merchandising operations on a larger scale than ever before, establishing branch houses at Bozeman and Helena.

In the year 1875 Mr. Power became a resident of the latter city, which has since been his home, continuing all the while his business at the other places, and having by far the largest mercantile trade of any firm in Montana. He has given considerable attention to stock-raising, and along this line his efforts have been crowned with prosperity.

In 1867 Mr. Power was united in marriage to Miss Mary Flanegan, of Dubuque, Iowa, and they now have one son, Charles Benton, who was born in Dubuque. He was graduated at Georgetown College, Washington, District of Columbia, received the degree of A. B. from Columbia College, and has also recently graduated in the law department of the latter institution.

After becoming a resident of Helena Mr. Power identified himself with the city and its best interests, and has been an important factor in its upbuilding. He has erected several of her best business blocks and one of her finest residences, and has been instrumental in securing the establishment of the railroads which have so largely contributed to the growth and development of the country, making Helena a central point in the commercial world of the Northwest. He was one of the organizers of the American National Bank, of Helena, and has served as its president from the beginning,—his able and careful management making it one of the safe and trusted financial concerns of the State. He is also a stockholder in those companies which have secured to the city its water-works, electric lights and street railways. His splendid ranch of 2,000 acres, which he has put in a fine state of improvement, is not the least of his excellent investments.

Since the organization of the Republican party Mr. Power has supported its principles and stanchly advocated its doctrines. In 1878 he was elected on that ticket to the first Territorial Constitutional Convention, and in 1883 was sent as a delegate to the Republican National Convention. He was honored with the nomination of his party for the office of Governor of Montana in 1888, but was defeated by a small majority, although the State had for some time been quite strongly Democratic. In January, 1889, occurred the election, in the State Legislature, of a United States Senator, and on the 2d day of that month T. C. Power was elected, receiving thirty-five votes against three cast for Lee Mantle, of Silver Bow county. His fitness for the position was unquestioned, and his ability and faithfulness to the trust reposed in him was soon made manifest. He took his seat in the Senate chamber April 18, 1890, his term of office to expire March 3, 1895. He is an efficient and active member of the following committees: Improvement of the Missouri River, Civil Service, Fisheries, Mines and Mining, Public Lands, Railroads, and Transportation and Sale of Meat Products, —serving as chairman of several of these.

In this brief review of the life of Mr. Power only the outlines are given, yet enough has been said to show his chief characteristics. His business ability is of a high order, and he carries forward to successful completion whatever he undertakes. Few have been the idle moments of his life, for his time is always devoted to public or private work. He is a prudent and progressive business man, a wise legislator, a genial, affable gentleman and a valued citizen, whom Montana could ill afford to lose.

The people of Cook City and the New World Mining District belong to the men who have made the country profitable for railroads, and they hope the railroads will speedily come to take their bullion to the Eastern markets at such cheap rates that they can afford to work out the millions and millions now in sight and yet to be developed.

The ores from the Republic, Shoo Fly and New World produced 422 tons of bullion and still the mining and smelting did not pay. The low grade of the bullion and the cost of the transportation have caused the smelters of Cook City to shut down and the miners to quit work, save what is necessary to represent and hold their claims until such time as cheaper transportation will enable them to make a fair profit on the output of their mines and furnaces. Notwithstanding this delay of profitable returns, neither the prospector who discovered the mines nor those who have purchased interests in them have lost faith in the final results; all are holding on for the "whistle of the iron horse." When he comes the New World will be alive with men, teams and smelters, and the railroad will have its train loaded with coke and the bullion of the mines now idle for want of cheaper transportation, provided silver recuperates.

One of the features of this New World District is its extensive dense forests of pine, fur and spruce, with here and there a patch of aspens, willows and alders. From the tops of the mountains about Cook City, one can see a vast area of mountains and valleys covered with dark, thick forests, save the naked mountain peaks and here and there a small prairie on the mountain slopes and in the narrow valleys.

These forests continue for twenty miles to the west down Soda-Butte creek, and for fifty miles along the snowy mountain slopes to Bear creek, and for twenty miles north along the mountains and down the Stillwater and the Rosebud, and for thirty miles east to Rocky fork and Clark's fork, and south as far as vision extends over the headwaters of Clark's fork and the East fork of the Yellowstone. Here we have a vast forest region covering an area of some 2,000 square miles, ample to furnish fuel and timber for the thousand mines which will be worked in this region.

But the timber and fuel are only a small part of the benefits these forests bestow upon this favored region. In the autumn of 1889, after the dryest spring, summer and autumn ever known in Montana, the mountains and valleys of this forest region were literally sparkling with cool springs and running streams.

Timber and water are prime necessities in mining. Both are now abundant in the New World Mining District. Let all insist that the forests and fountains shall be carefully preserved through the thousand years these mines shall be worked. If not, these glorious wooded mountains will soon be made hideous with blackened stumps, naked rocks, spring floods and fountain and streams dry in the summer and autumn. What then will mining be at Cook City?

The old Bitter Root country has many mines, valued mostly for silver, hence mining is now dull in Ravalli county. In better times there was systematic and very successful work on the Curlew mine; the vast quantities of ores taken out, and the yield of what was shipped (sometimes $250 per ton), was sufficient to pay for an excellent plant for extensive mining, a first class mill and concentrator with a capacity for 130 tons per diem. This has inspired the Bitter Root miners with great confidence in their mines and undeveloped discoveries and prospects.

Many lodes have been discovered in the mountains on both sides of the valley. Some eight miles east of Corvallis, in the mountains, several quartz veins have been discovered and numerous claims recorded. All these mountain ranges between Bitter Root and Rock creek and Flint creek seem to be full of mineral veins.

On Bass creek, on the west side of the Bitter Root Valley, and fifteen miles northwest of Stevensville, are located the Domingo, the Renegade and other mines, which have attracted much attention, and have been put into condition to be thoroughly explored and their hidden treasures taken out for man's use. On the Three Mile, a branch of the Bitter Root, there are several quartz locations, and some good placer mines. At the head of Burnt Fork there are several bright prospects partially developed.

The mines of Mineral Hill District are located in the extreme southwest corner of the county. They are seventy-five miles from the terminus of the Bitter Root Railroad. Over most of this distance no wagon road has yet been made. The formation is granite, the ores are galena with zinc and iron sulphides, which run well in gold and silver. The present developments are on the Lent, a 250-foot tunnel; on the Merrill, a 90-foot tunnel; on the Moss-Back, a 50-foot shaft; on the Arkansas Traveler, a 40-foot shaft, and on numerous other properties shafts and tunnels of less extent. Eight Mile District is on the north side of the Bitter Root Valley, sixteen miles from Missoula. Most of the ledges of this district follow the line of contact between porphyry and granite.

Ravalli is ready with her mines and courage to spring into active mining life. The miner can then look down upon growing fruits and vegetables which will tempt his appetite when called from labor to refreshments. The farm, gardens and mines will meet on profitable terms in this beautiful valley.

SILVER BOW COUNTY

Has in some respects a very remarkable history. Some of the quartz mines at Butte were opened at an early day and a furnace was erected to test their ores, but the mines were worked but little for some years. Enterprise and capital came and Butte became the largest mining camp in the world. Fifty mines with 5,000 miners made Butte the busiest city in the world; six mills with 240 stamps made Butte the noisiest city in the world; and nine furnaces, with a capacity of 4,000 tons, made Butte the smokiest city in the world. These furnaces at Butte and those at Anaconda give a smelting capacity of 7,000 tons a day, the year's work looking up into the millions.

To mention the individuals who have made this camp great would be tedious, but the companies and some of the mines may well be noticed. The Butte & Boston Company, the Boston & Montana Company, Anaconda Company, the Clark Brothers, the Walker Brothers, the Colorado Company, the H. M. & R. Company, and other establishments under the care of such able mining men as the Hon. W. A. Clark, Marcus Daly, Thomas Couch, C. H. Palmer, Benjamin Tibbey, W. E. Hall, Charles W. Goodale, J. R. Gilbert and J. B. Trevarthen.

The Anaconda and the Original are the leading copper companies of Butte, and there are the Anaconda, High Ore, Modock, Mountain View, Pennsylvania, Leonard, West Colusa and others.

The Original Mining Company are working the Colusa, Parrot, Stewart and other mines in great numbers, carrying copper and silver; and of the silver mines carrying sufficient quantities of gold to make the working of them profitable, even with the present price of silver, the William Penn, Morning Star and a few others carry sufficient gold to enable them to be worked with profit, but nearly all of the silver mines are shut down and filled with water.

The best properties belonging to the various companies in Silver Bow may be properly mentioned W. A. Clark & Company have the Original, Colusa, Parrot, Stewart, Acquisition, Mount Norich, Black Rock, Elm Orlu, Travonia, Consolidated Morning Star, Neptune, Fraction, Ancient Ella, Spruce, Seymour, Ringgold, Home, Woolman, Joseph, Parrot, Dives and many others.

The Anaconda Company, managed by Marcus Daly, owns the Anaconda, St. Lawrence, High Ore, Bell Mountain Consolidated, Green Mountain, Wake Up Jim and others. The Boston & Montana Company own the Mountain View, Moose, East Colusa, West Colusa, Leonard Shott, Liquidation and others. The Butte & Boston work the Silver Bow Nos. 1 and 2, the East Grey Rock, Orphan Girl and other properties. The Parrot Company is working the Colusa, Parrot, Moscow, Mina and other mines. The Colorado Mining and Smelting Company have the Gagnon, Nettie, Philadelphia; and the Alice Company run the Alice, Magna Charta, Blue Wing and Rising Star. The Alice is developed to the depth of 1,600 feet and the Magna Charta to 800 feet, the Lexington is down 1,500 feet and the Wild Bill 300 feet. The Lexington Company work the Lexington and other mines in this wonderful mining camp. Many other companies and individuals own and work important mines in Silver Bow which deserve a more extended notice.

The Original Mining Company, owned mostly by W. A. Clark and J. K. Clark, has the first mine patented in Silver Bow. It has been worked for fifteen years, and is well developed with shafts and levels to the depth of 800 feet. It carries ores of copper and native silver down to the 400-foot level, when zinc comes in. From the 400-foot level the copper was replaced in part by zinc down to the 600-foot level, where the copper again appears and continues down to the 800-foot level. Deeper work will doubtless give a richer ore. The Colusa-Parrot is another copper-silver mine. The main shaft is down 800 feet and the ore is abundant from end to end and is continuous from the surface level. The Stewart is about 600 feet west of the Anaconda and is on the same vein. The shaft is down about 500 feet, in ores rich in copper and silver. A second vein on this property carries silver and gold. The Acquisition joins the Stewart on the west and the Mount Morris is another extension west. The Acquisition and Mount Morris are partially developed. The Black Rock is due east of the Moulton, and has a shaft down 400 feet. This is a very large vein, the ore, of silver, being sometimes forty feet thick. The Elm Orlu joins the Black Rock on the west and is developed to the depth of 500 feet. The ore is similar to that in the Black Rock, and is sixty feet wide in some places. The Travonia is in the southwest corner of the Butte townsite The ore was rich in gold and silver, and was shipped East. The William Penn and Morning Star are in the old townsite of Butte. They were worked at an early day and the ore, rich in gold and silver, was shipped East. The Neptune is a similar property in the same neighborhood. These mines belong to the Clark Brothers.

The Anaconda Company has worked the Anaconda to the depth of 1,200 feet. It has made the company rich. The Belle is developed with the High Ore and worked through the same three compartment shafts. The High Ore is down 1,200 feet and is well developed. The Mountain Consolidated is well worked to the WILBUR F. SANDERS, of Helena, was born in Leon, Cattaraugus county, New York, May 2, 1834. He was educated in the common and high schools of his native State. He taught school in New York, and afterward, in 1864, removed to Ohio, where he continued in this work. He studied law at Akron, Ohio, and was admitted to the bar in 1856. In 1861 he recruited a company of infantry and a battery, and in October following he was commissioned as First Lieutenant in the Sixty-fourth Ohio, of which regiment he was made adjutant. He served as acting assistant adjutant general on the staff of General James W. Forsyth, and in 1862 assisted in the construction of the defences along the railroad south of Nashville. Ill health compelled his resignation, and he went West, locating in Idaho, now Montana. Here he resumed the practice of law and became an active participant in the many exciting movements and incidents of this Western frontier. Among those whose earlier reminiscences are flavored with a savor of these most exciting periods, probably few who participated in them lived up to the full tension of the movements through which they passed, and of these, few survived them to look back and realize the danger through which they had passed or the results of these earlier happenings. Possibly the survival of the fittest of these echoes the truth of the axiom, certainly the evidences bespeak this to be the fact in the personnel of those leaders who first framed the foundations of the municipality which was to grow up under their fostering care and guidance.

To many who have achieved successes in the course of the natural growth and advancement of the country, little actual credit need be given, as theirs were but the achievements of circumstances and fortunate environment. As the most suitable guardian of the maiden claims of her young Statehood, the people of Montana chose Hon. Wilbur F. Sanders to be her first envoy to the Senatoral chamber of the nation of which it had become an active member On the 12th of September, 1863, Colonel Sanders arrived in Bannack city, Montana, at that time a thrifty mining camp, where he began the practice of law. From his first advent within the borders of the State, Colonel Sanders' career was marked throughout with excitement and momentous occasions. Fearless and intrepid almost to rashness, he very soon cut for himself a position of prominence among his associates, and with his peculiar genius soon adapted himself to the demands of the Western life. Keen in his perceptions, bitter in his sarcasm and fearless in his advocacy of whatever cause he enlisted in, he would prosecute or defend as the case might be, hurling his anathemas of scorn or sounding the subtile sophistries of legal perspicuity with the same dauntlessness that he displayed when he stood upon the wagon in the full vision of a lawless and treacherous mob, on the 21st December, 1863, and moved that George Ives, the road agent, be "hanged by the neck until dead." Many have wondered why Colonel Sanders escaped death at the hands of some beaten adversary or some member of the famous outlaw gang depth of 800 feet. The Green Mountain is worked 700 feet deep and has a double deck cage. The Wake Up Jim belongs to the same company, and is worked to the depth of 800 feet; the 500 and 600 feet levels are connected with the workings of the Green Mountain.

The Boston and Montana Company is working the Mountain View to the depth of 1,100 feet. Pumps are on the 1,000 foot level, on the 800-foot and 400-foot levels. The East Colusa has a connection with the West Colusa. The lower workings were filled with water. The Moose mine was taking a rest. The East Colusa and the West Colusa are connected by the underground workings on the 500 foot levels, and all ores are raised by the same shaft. This company have reduction works at Meaderville and Great Falls.

The Butte and Boston Company have been doing much development work on a number of mines. The Orphan Girl is worked to the depth of 400 feet. The East Grey Rock is down 1,300 feet. The Silver Bow No. 1 has a three compartment shaft down 1,000 feet. The drifting and stoping are extensive. The Parrot has been worked some fourteen years, and the shaft levels and stopes are extensive. This company has a mill and a smelter.

The Glengarry is opened to the depth of 500 500 feet, and the levels and stopes are very extensive. The Mountain Chief is worked to the depth of some 600 feet, and shows a good development of ore. The Lexington mine has been worked for nearly twent years. The main shaft is down 1,500 feet, has a three compartment shaft. Vast quantities of ore have been taken out and worked, but is now closed down. The Lexington mill has sixty stamps. The which he so successfully prosecuted. An explanation may lay in Colonel Sanders' ability to adapt himself to any emergency. It has been said that men have left the court-room ashen with rage and lain in wait for the appearance of Sanders to kill him. Sanders would walk out unabashed, and, discerning at a glance the situation, would deliberately talk the man into a good humor. This peculiar ability certainly entered largely into his marvelous career, and mingled with it the courage of conviction, the eloquence of moral integrity and a keen sense of doing the right thing in the right place. The combination of fearless energy, quick perception and daring, intrepid action, commanded a degree of respect and fear which carried him through these hazardous days of his early career.

Beginning in 1865, he rendered his first public service by going to Washington in behalf of the miners' taxation. In 1872 he was elected a member of the Legislature, serving in this capacity until 1878. He was the Republican candidate for a Delegate to Congress in 1864, '67 and '86; was delegate to the Republican national convention in 1868, '72, '76, and '84. In 1872 he declined the position of United States District Attorney and continued his practice of law. In 1884 he was one of the delegates to the Republican national convention, and in 1886 was defeated as Delegate to Congress by Joseph K. Toole. In 1889 he was nominated by the joint session as Republican candidate for United States Senator, and was elected as one of the first two senators from the State of Montana, receiving a short term and serving until March, 1893.

It will thus be seen that Colonel Sanders has entered very largely into the affairs of this great State of the West. He has occupied some position of prominence or importance in its affairs ever since his arrival in 1863. The Senatorial contests in this State have been the hardest-fought battles known to American politics. In 1890 four candidates contested for the position,—the two organizations convening in separate session, each claiming a quorum, one on the strength of a fraud in one precinct, which, if thrown out, gave it to them, the other side with this precinct still holding the balancing power. After a long, legal controversy, which was carried into the courts, a decision was rendered in favor of the Republican candidates and they were seated by the Republican Senate. In the dead-lock of 1893 Mr. Sanders was a prominent contestant. The first Republican caucus nominated him, giving him the thirty-three Republican votes of the joint assembly. On the last day he received one Democratic vote, but another caucus gave the nomination to Lee Mantle, of Butte, where it remained until the close of session. (The full account of the dead-lock will be found in the general political history, to which chapters are devoted in this volume.) Colonel Sanders has been for twenty-five years president of the Historical Society of Montana, and is president of the Board of Trustees of Montana University. In 1868 he was Grand Master of the Grand Lodge of Free and Accepted Masons.

Gambetta mine is developed to the depth of 500 feet. It has had some bad work, but the good ore has caused improved work.

The Oro Butte, Dispatch, Vulcan and Ophir mines are well developed to the depth of from 300 to 500 feet, and there ores were treated at the Butte Sampling Works and elsewhere.

The Little St. Laurence, Eveline, Germania, Ella, Spur and General Sheridan mines are worked to depths varying from 200 to 500 feet, and fairly well develsped. The Brittania mine, J. O. Hudnut, superintendent, has a shaft down 150 feet, two levels and stopes. The ore was treated by the Butte Sampling Works. Many of the Great mines of Silver Bow are in the surrounding settlements.

The city of Walkerville has the Alice, Moulton, Blue Wing, Lexington, Belle of Butte, Grey Rock, Magna Charta, Black Rock and many others.

Burlington has the Blue Bird, Nettie, Moody & Sankey, Republic and other mines. The Blue Bird mill is at Rocker.

Meaderville has the East Colusa, West Colusa and several of the smelters.

Centerville has the High Ore, Mountain View, Mountain Consolidated and other mines. A visit to this great camp now in the depressed state of the silver interest might surprise one to see so much activity,—so many men in the mines, and so many with money to buy a Butte mine. All still have faith in the "Greatest Mining Camp in the World."

MONTANA COAL.

The coals of Montana, with the exception of some unimportant lignite beds, belong to a series of rocks of great thickness, known as the Lignitic Group. Some call them Cretaceous, while others declare them Tertiary. The plants in them appear to place them in one formation and the animals in the other age. Hence Dana and other geologists place these rocks in an age by themselves, between the Tertiary and Cretacious. Other geologists, ignoring Dana's classification, put these coal rocks in the Cretacious or the Tertiary, as appeared to them the most appropriate.

The development of coal and lignite is very great in many places in Montana, but in none of these numerous places has the full extent of the coal been determined. Large Quantities have been taken out of Sand Coulee and Rock creek, Timberline and Belt creek.

MONTANA COAL FIELDS.

According to the present development the coal areas of Montana are very numerous, but future developments may show that some of these are put parts of the same coal area; as the beds opened on Birch creek and on the Dry fork of the Marias. According to our present knowledge there are coal areas at Buford and coal banks on the Missouri, on Birch creek, on Dry fork of the Marias, and on Sun river, four miles south of Sun River Crossing. In a coulee four miles south of Sun River Crossing, and the same bed in the bluffs of the Missouri three miles further south, the same bed crops out on the northeast side of Sun river for several miles.

It may be most useful to treat the coals of Montana by counties; as locations will be better understood.

CASCADE COUNTY COAL.

Cascade county, while it has a scant supply of timber, save in the Highwood and a part of Little Belt mountains, is favored with a vast amount of excellent coal, well distributed over the county. Coal beds have been opened on both sides of Sun river, below Sun River Crossing; on Muddy creek; in the Missouri river bluffs, north of Ulm; on Willow creek; on Hound creek; on Deep creek, both above and below the mouth of Hound creek; in Sand Coulee; on Belt creek, and on Otter creek.

Following is a comparative analysis:

	Sand Coulee Coal	Connellsville Coal	Pittsburg Coal
Specific gravity	1.24	1.28	1.25
Water at 212 degrees F	3.98	4.50	3.00
Gas or volatile matter	33.15	24.00	33.76
Fixed carbon	57.05	65.00	54 93
Ash white	5.83	6.50	7.07
Coke	62.88	71.50	62.00
Weight per cubic foot	77.50	80.00	78.12

The above table shows the ingredients of the bright coking part of the Sand Coulee coal, together with the very celebrated Connellsville coal of Pennsylvania, so esteemed for making coke for foundry uses, and the well-known Pittsburg coal, so generally used in the gas works of the country.

The same coal bed found on Deep creek and Sand Coulee has been opened in several places on Belt creek at Belt City. The position of the coal bed is nearly horizontal, and sufficiently above the bottom lands to be mined and put in cars and wagons at very low rates, nearly as above described in Sand Coulee coal. The quantity and quality of the coal on Belt creek is the same as that at Sand Coulee. In fact, it seldom happens that the coal in two localities on the same bed so far apart as Sand Coulee and Belt creek, agree so perfectly in position, thickness and character of the vein, and in quantity and quality of the coals, and facilitiies for working.

There are two coal beds in the bluffs on the south side of Sun river, two miles below the Crossing. One of these beds is four feet thick and of medium quality. The other bed is thin and would not pay for working while labor and coal command present prices. These beds are nearly horizontal and sufficiently high above water to be worked with ease. A bed of coal similar to that on Sun river crops out in the bluffs of the Missouri below Ulm. It also comes to the surface in a coulee between Sun river and the Missouri. These facts, in connection with the horizontal position of the rocks between Sun river and the Missouri, indicate the continuation of these beds of coal in the bench of those rivers.

A coal bed also crops out in the bluffs on the northeast side of Sun river in places for several miles. This coal bed doubtless underlies a large area in the bench lands to the north and east.

One or two beds of coal similar to those on Sun river have been opened in several places on Muddy creek, in the northern part of the county. These beds will be useful to supply the local demands for domestic uses.

The coal beds at Belt creek, at Sand Coulee and on Deep creek will yield 6,000,000 tons per square mile. As the area underlaid by this coal at each of these locations has not been determined, it is impossible to tell how many square miles have it.

The Cascade coal mines are situated in the midst of a vast prairie country, which is rapidly filling up with a teeming and industrious population, whose homes must be warmed and lighted, whose factories, whose railroad trains, and whose machinery of all kinds must be propelled by coal. These mines are seventy miles from the nearest timber on the west, and three hundred miles from the nearest available timber en the north, six hundred miles from the nearest accessible bodies of timber in Minnesota, and with very little timber and none to spare even to the Gulf of Mexico on the south. And this in the midst of a building, manufacturing and mining population, and vast systems of railroads, which will soon exhaust all available supplies of timber and be wholly dependent upon our coal beds for fuel. And all this present and prospective growth of populations and industries is under the forty-seventh parallel of north latitude, where we sometimes feel the frozen breath of the polar bear.

CHOTEAU COUNTY.

Milk River coal mines have been worked for several years to supply Fort Assiniboine and other local demands. The coal underlies a large area of country on the northwestern side of Bear Paw mountains and is practically inexhaustible. Some think it the same coal as that at Sand Coulee and Belt creek.

There are several extensive coal beds at Coal Banks on the Missouri. The earliest steamers that ascended the Missouri to Benton used these coals, but they did not prove satisfactory. Future developments will show the value of these extensive deposits of fuel.

Coal is also reported in the Little Rockies. It is said to be good and abundant.

CUSTER COUNTY.

The Miles City coal-field, which lies on the south of the Yellowstone and west of Tongue river, furnishes an abundant supply of cheap fuel for Miles City and the surrounding country. Just how extensive these coal beds are and how much coal they will furnish, is not fully known. They have as yet given no indications of petering out.

The Pumpkin Creek coal-field is another coal area in Custer county on S. L. creek, an eastern branch of Pumpkin creek, and sixty miles south of Miles City. This coal series has one bed of good coal fourteen to sixteen feet thick and several thin beds. This bed is very important in a county of scant timber and it has been opened and worked for local uses.

Pumpkin creek coal gives the following assay, in comparison with Rocky fork coal and Rock Spring coal in Wyoming:

	Pumpkin Creek Coal.	Rocky Fork Coal.....	Rock Spring Coal.....
Specific gravity	1.36	1.32	1.28
Moisture at 212 degrees F....	12.45	2.50	1.30
Volatile matter	47.10	46.12	49.80
Fixed carbon.....	34.45	46.20	42.80
Ash.....	6.00	6.01	7.40
Weight per cubic foot.....	85.00	82.50	80.00

The Little Pumpkin creek coal-field has a coal bed twelve feet thick on Little Pumpkin creek, about twenty miles northwest of the S. L. creek mines.

Powder river coal mines are on Powder river near the boundary between Montana and Wyoming. But little is known of this coal-field. Those who have seen it are favorably impressed.

Coal has been discovered in T. 7 N. R. 41 E., T. 8 N. R. 44 E., and in T. 10 N. R. 48 E., on the north side of the Yellowstone; and in T. 6 N. R. 48 E., east of Tongue river.

Rosebud coal-field is situated in T. 5 N. Rs. 41 and 42 E., and T. 2 N. Rs. 41 and 42 E., on the west side of Rosebud river.

DAWSON COUNTY

Has large areas of coal not yet developed and proved up so as to enable me to give them special mention in these pages. But it is safe to say that the geological structure of Dawson county is such that we can predict an abundant supply of mineral fuel to meet all the future wants of a great grazing and agricultural population.

A coal bed has been opened at the mouth of the Yellowstone, which appears to contain an abundance of good fuel.

DEER LODGE COUNTY.

The Mullan Tunnel coal-bed is in an alpine valley just west of the Mullan Tunnel. The lower part of this coal bed is very similar to that at Sand Coulee. It has been worked and the coal shipped to Helena. This bed is high in the mountains and we would expect it to be changed to anthracite by the heat developed in forming the mountain. But when the mountain was elevated, this coal and the containing rocks were lifted bodily and kept on the surface where internal heat did not reach them in sufficient force to produce metamorphic rocks and change bituminous coal to anthracite. The bed is six or eight feet thick and about half of it is very good.

This coal and the containing rocks formed a part of the horizontal surface strata before the mountains were pushed up through them. Hence we may expect that these same rocks and the coal bed in them still lie in the valleys on both sides of the mountains undisturbed. But, if there, they are covered deep beneath the Tertiary and Quaternary rocks deposited by the lakes that filled these valleys for many ages after the mountains were formed, and which were finally drained through the Gate of the Mountains on the east side and through Hell Gate on the west side.

We have in several places in Montana extensive beds of rocks of nearly the same age as this coal, lying nearly horizontal, high up in the moutains; as may be seen south of Cook City and on the head waters of the Sun river.

FERGUS COUNTY.

There are several very important coal fields in Fergus county. One extending from Folsom creek across Swimming Woman's creek to Careless creek some twenty miles in length; one near Fort Maginnis; one six miles northwest of Maiden; one at Plum creek, north of Moccasin mountain; and another extending from the Judith river across Sage, Willow, Skull and Wolf creeks, in a northwestern direction. These extensive coal regions have been but little explored and worked, but enough has been done to show they contain vast quantities of available coal suitable for all ordinary uses.

The Judith river coal-bed, extending from

ALBERT KLEINSCHMIDT.—We are now permitted to direct attention in a brief way to the life history of one who stands as an honored and representative business man of Helena,—Albert Kleinschmidt, a member of the mercantile firm of Kleinschmidt Brothers.

Our subject was born in the province of Saxony, Prussia, near the old free city of Magdeburg, in the month of July, 1844, being the son of Carl and Elizabeth (Kuphal) Kleinschmidt, the former of whom was born in the Hartz-mountain region of the Prussian province of Hanover, and the latter being also a native of Prussia. The father, who held for many years a prominent official position in the government department of insurance in Prussia, passed his entire life in the land of his birth. The mother with her five children,—Carl, Louis, Bertha, Albert and Reinhold,—left the fatherland in 1856 and emigrated to America, taking passage on the Mariana, and disembarking at Baltimore, Maryland, after having been on the great deep for seven weeks and two days. The family first took up their abode in Allegany county, Maryland, where they remained for a year, after which they removed to Bloomington, Illinois. In 1859 they removed to Herman, Missouri, and in 1860 to Booneville, that State, where they remained for six months. The mother subsequently made several other changes of location.

Albert Kleinschmidt was thirteen years of age when he arrived in the United States, and was twenty-two at the time of his arrival on Montana soil. He came hither from Kansas in 1860, making the long journey across the plains and mountains with twelve ox teams, which were utilized to transport goods such as were in demand in the mining districts. This stock of goods figured as the nucleus of the extensive mercantile business which the Kleinschmidt brothers have developed in the new and favored State of Montana, for since that time they have been continuously identified with the commercial interests of this Northwest country. A sketch of the life of Reinhold H. Kleinschmidt appears on another page of this volume, and both of the brothers are known over a wide range of country as pioneer merchants and enterprising business men, thoroughly in touch at all times with the spirit of progress and ever alive to the furthering of the interests of the State. The two brothers comprise the firm noted, and they have been associated in the commercial enterprises which have brought to them an honorable reputation and an extensive business.

HENRY J. PRICE, long a respected resident of Butte City and a Montana pioneer of 1864, is a native of England, born in London, September 10, 1825, a descendant of one of the ancient English families. During the reign

Judith river to Sage, Willow, Skull and Wolf creek, is the same bed as that at Sand Coulee and Belt creek. Here it varies in thickness from five to ten feet with some shale partings.

The coal has a jointed structure, jet-black color, resinous luster and conchoidal fracture. It is bituminous, burns freely, and gives good satisfaction. This coal field contains immense quantities of good coal.

Plum creek coal lies on Plum creek, at the northeastern end of North Moccasin mountain, and has eight and ten feet of good coal.

The Maiden coal bed opened six miles west northwest of Maiden in sections 31, 32 and 33 of T. 17 N. R. 19 E., has from two to three feet of good bituminous coal. It appears to cover a large area of the country. I have not seen the beds south of Big Snowy mountains and can not speak of the quantity and quality of the coal there; but the facts reported prove these coal beds cover a large area.

Fort Maginnis coal has been opened in several places on the Reservation and in T. 16 N. and R. 20 E. This bed where opened is from two to three feet thick and the coal has a good name among those who have used it. It is a bituminous coal.

Careless creek coal covers a considerable portion of the southern part of the county.

FLATHEAD COUNTY.

The Emerson Tunnel on the Great Northern has exposed nine beds of coal. There have been exposed in all fifteen beds in this Flathead coal basin, which appears to cover an area of many square miles. The examinations made by experts show that these fifteen beds carry over fifty feet of workable coal.

There are in the Flathead basin eighteen or twenty succes ive beds of coal. Nine of these beds range in thickness from two feet to thirteen feet, aggregating forty-eight feet of workable coal in the nine beds. The area covered by these coal beds is not fully known, but these coal-bearing rocks cover a large area in this valley of some 100 square miles, and the probabilities are that they cover a much larger area.

of Charles the First, his ancestry then living resided in Wales, and, being of Cromwell's party, lost their property and removed to London, where many generations of them resided.

Mr. Price's grandfather, Walter Price, was for many years Tide Surveyor of Customs at the East India docks, London. He had three sons, Walter, Henry and John. Walter, the father of Henry J., married Eliza Toosy, of Bristol, and they had five sons and three daughters. He entered the postoffice department in 1830, and held his position there for thirty years, and then retired upon a liberal pension. He died at the age of eighty-four years, and his wife at the age of seventy-six.

Mr. Price, whose name heads this biographical notice, was educated in the historical county of Warwick, the home of Shakespeare, but, against the wishes of his parents, he went to sea in 1842, sailing mainly in East India waters and ports. After four years, by the advice of his father, he procured a situation with a London railroad company, and after three years there he received an appointment for the postoffice.

In 1848 he married Miss Lottie Jennings, and in February, 1850, he resigned his place in the postoffice department. March 1 he sailed for the United States. After a stormy passage of fifty-six days he landed at New York, May 1. Proceeding to Milwaukee he was employed at various things; next was at Peoria, Illinois, for eighteen months; and then went to Henry county, that State, and purchased 160 acres of land and continued on it improving the place and farming until the war interfered with all his arrangements. In 1862 he sold out, and May 1, 1863, he left with a team for Denver, Colorado, making the trip of 1,000 miles in forty days.

At the latter place he entered into a retail grocery business. The next year the flood stagnated trade and he closed his business, and in May left for Alder Gulch by wagon, and came by way of Cheyenne and Bridger's Pass to Montana, a distance of 1,100 miles. Instead of immediately obtaining a mining claim he worked for others, in ground rich with gold. In the spring of 1865 he came to Silver Bow county, where in the course of time he kept hotel, until he was burned out in 1871, losing $3,000. This loss caused him to seek occupation in mining placer ground, and this he followed in the gulch called Price Diggings, where he received only wages; but, with the addition of raising cattle he made a living. The gold taken out by himself and others aggregated about $3,000. Since quartz-mining has taken the place of placer-mining he has resided in Butte, where he owns some city property, on which he can rely for support in his declining years. But May 1, 1885, he lost his wife.

But, if half these beds extend over an area of 100 square miles the quantity of coal is enormous, since one foot of coal will yield 1,000,000 tons to the square mile, and twenty-four feet will yield 24,000,000 tons in 100 square miles. There can be scarcely a doubt that the Flathead coal-field contains this amount of coal probably much more. The coals in this extensive coal basin are truly bituminous and not lignites as represented by some writers. They contain small masses of resin and burn freely like the Lethbridge and Rocky Fork coals.

GALLATIN COUNTY.

There are five or more beds of good coal on Trail creek.

The Timberline mines have been worked for miles and miles to furnish coal for the engines of the Northern Pacific from Spokane to St. Paul. This mine is the great coal bed which follows the mountain range around from Cinnabar on the Yellowstone, and Cokedale to Timberline.

At Mountain Side another opening is made into the coal in the side of the mountain near the railroad.

Chestnut has the same coal bed and has furnished vast quantities of coal for various industries.

Hudson's, Vogel & Bergler's and Thompson's mines are good mines on West Trail creek.

Numerous coal mines have been opened on Bridger creek for a distance of twenty miles up to the divide between Bridger and Sixteen Mile creek.

Cockrill's coal is in the mountains nine miles north of Central Park.

There several coal mines on Sixteen Mile creek on the north border of Gallatin. Coal beds have also been opened in the west part of the county on Spring creek above Pullen Park. Gallatin and Cascade are producing large quantities of good coal. Flathead, Fergus and Custer are prepared to yield as much for the next hundred years. Nor will Teton be very far behind the best coal producing counties according to present indications.

GRANITE COUNTY.

Coal is reported near Stone Station on the Flint creek branch of the Northern Pacific.

JEFFERSON COUNTY.

While Gallatin is full of coal Jefferson has as yet shown but little. On the old wagon road between Boulder and Elkhorn, several beds of coal crop out, and have been worked a little. The beds appeared thin but full of good coals.

LEWIS AND CLARKE COUNTY.

Discoveries of coal have been made in several places on Sun river, some twelve miles above Fort Shaw; around the base of Haystack Butte, on the south fork of Sun river; on the north fork of Sun river; on Flat creek; on the hills between Flat creek and the Dearborn; near Eagle Rock; at and near Dearborn; in the mountains ten miles south of the Dearborn.

Haystack Butte coal-bed has been examined on Sun river, Willow creek, Smith creek, Beaver creek, all tributaries of South Sun river. In all these places the coal is good in quality, but the quantity as yet proved up is not very great. It is used to supply local demands for such coal.

Two thin beds of most excellent coal have been opened on Flat creek, below Hogan, and used for domestic and other local uses. How extensive these beds may prove is not yet determined.

The Eagle Rock coal-bed has been opened in several places on the Benton road near Eagle Rock and in that neighborhood. The bed is about six feet thick, and contains numerous shale or "bone partings." Some of the coal is very good, and is used in that region for domestic and other local purposes.

The Dearborn coal-beds have been opened on both sides of the river, just above the town. Cohn's mine is in the bluffs, on the north side of the river, and Embody's mine is in the hills, on the divide between the Dearborn and Flat creek, four miles north of the river. Several mines have been opened south of the river.

Wolf creek coal has been opened on that creek, a branch of the Prickly Pear at Wolf.

MADISON COUNTY.

Extensive coal-beds have been reported high up on the Madison in this county. Coal has been discovered on Jack creek, a tributary of the Gallatin, and some twenty miles from Red Bluff, which is said to extend across the Madison and thirty-five miles up that river.

MEAGHER COUNTY.

While Meagher county is wonderfully rich in her gold, silver, copper, lead, iron and manganese mines, no very extensive coal veins have been discovered and developed. There are, however, good prospects on Sixteen Mile creek, in the southwest corner of the county, and on Careless creek in the extreme eastern part, and in the Murray District in the western part, and in a large area south of Castle.

MISSOULA COUNTY.

There are several exposures of coal in Missoula. The coal presents a medium quality, but the extent of these coal deposits is not known. One bed is opened some two miles from Missoula.

PARK COUNTY.

The coal mines of Park county have already acquired some of the reputation which they so richly deserve. The Cokedale mines, the Horr mines, the Bear creek mines and the Rocky Fork mines are known to contain enormous quantities of excellent caking and dry coals.

The Horr coal mines are in the foothills of the Cinnabar mountains on the Park Branch Railroad. These mines furnish an excellent caking coal, and have forty coke ovens with a capacity of sixty tons of coke per diem. It is said this plant will be increased.

The Cokedale coal mines are in the great Bozeman coal-bed, which extends from Yellowstone Cañon across the range to Timberline and beyond. The work in these mines is well done and great care is taken to make them safe. They are well timbered and thoroughly ventilated. They now have eighty coke ovens and the plant will soon be increased to 100. The daily output of coal is some 200 tons, which yield about 100 tons of excellent coke. This coke is used in the smelters at Helena, Wickes and Butte.

The Cinnabar coal mines are on the east side of the Yellowstone near Cinnabar, where the same coal beds have been opened and so developed and proved up as to show the coal is well suited for the manufacture of gas and coke. It has been used in the Helena gas works, and coke ovens will be erected there in the near future.

Bear creek coal mines are located on Bear creek, a tributary of Clark's Fork and about six miles east southeast of Red Lodge. These coal mines are in an extension of the great coal field which contains the coal beds on Rocky fork. These mines are in sections 6, 7, 8, 12, 17 and 18 of township 8 south and range 21 east; and they are located on five successive beds of coal from the lowest to the highest as follows:

The first bed contains five feet of coal. Above this bed are about 200 feet of sandstones and shales. Then comes the second bed, which contains four feet of coal; and above it are forty feet of sandstones and shales. Then comes the third bed with nine feet of coal, which contains charcoal partings and numerous globular concretions of impure coal. Above this bed are about 200 feet of sandstones, shales and clays up to the fourth bed with six feet of coal, which is followed by 150 feet of sandstones and shales succeeded by the fifth bed of coal, four feet thick. On this coal rests some 300 feet of shales, sandstones and clays containing several small seams of coal.

Four beds of coal are exposed on section 36 of township 7 south and range 21 east, and sections 31 and 32 of township 7 south and range 21 east. These beds vary from four feet to six feet in thickness and lie between the Bear creek coal-beds and the Rocky fork.

Rocky fork coal mines are located at Red Lodge, at the terminus of the Rocky Fork Railroad. These beds are in the lignitic formation of the cretaceous rocks, and the coal-beds of this formation have been traced all the way from Bear Tooth mountain on the west to Clark's fork on the east. Some twelve different beds of good coal have been opened within a mile of Red Lodge, but only five of these have been worked. The output of these mines now is very large and can be increased to supply any prospective demand.

A coal-bed has been opened near Nye City. Its extent and value are not known.

RAVALLI COUNTY.

Coal beds have been opened in two places in Ravalli county, below Stevensville and on the east side of the valley.

TETON COUNTY.

Very little work has been done on the coal beds of Teton county, but the outcrops are numerous and such as indicate a large area of coal next to the mountains on the west.

Two beds of good coal have been opened in the bluffs of Birch creek, some six miles below the junction of Dupuyer creek. The position of the rocks which contain these coal beds, and the lay of the land indicate that these beds underlie a large area of adjacent country.

Dry Fork coal mines.—South of the above locality, in T. 28 N., R. 5 W., coal appears in two places. As the country is higher than this coal bed on three sides and over a large area, it probably underlies a wide reach of the adjoining bench and bottom lands. What appears to be the same bed crops out again on the Muddy, north of Bynum's in T. 26 N., R. 6 W., section 24. These croppings of coal, all apparently of the same bed as the upper one on Birch creek, indicates that the whole country between the 112th and 113th degrees of west longitude from Greenwich and from the Marias to the Teton, is underlaid by the Birch creek coal beds.

There are several outcrops of coal on the north fork of the Sun river, which indicate an extensive coal area.

VALLEY COUNTY.

Coal has been reported in several places in this unsettled county. There has been but little demand for the coals and they have not been developed.

YELLOWSTONE COUNTY.

The Bull mountain coal-field is the most noted coal deposit in that part of the State. The mountain is composed of horizontal strata of the coal-bearing rocks left by the forces which denuded the surrounding country. It lies between the heads of Wild Horse and Parrot creek, tributaries of the Musselshell and Razor creek, a tributary of the Yellowstone, and nearly half way between the two rivers. It covers an area of some fifty square miles; and this whole area is underlaid with many coal beds: three or four only are thick enough to work. The thickest, or Mammoth Bed, has from ten to fifteen feet of workable coal, and will yield about 500,000,000 tons; and the other beds will yield about 300,000,000 tons more, or in all 800,000,000 tons of available coal in Bull mountains. But this coal is a lignite.

So far as known Beaver Head has shown no workable coal beds. This county must rest its fame upon the wonderful metallic veins in it.

CHAPTER XXVIII

THE INDIANS OF MONTANA—AN APPEAL FOR THEIR PROTECTION—THE WISDOM OF GRANT AND CLEVELAND—INDIANS NOT DYING OUT—A DEMAND FOR AN ARMY OF MOUNTED POLICE IN MONTANA.

PERHAPS the time was not ripe when President Grant proposed to turn the Indian agencies over to the army; but whatever may have been his reason for retreating from this wise proposition he had the grandest opportunity of his administration to do good. That it was within the law, despite the cry to the contrary, when he tried to turn out the agents, the following from the Executive Mansion makes clear. Cleveland has done what Grant desired to do and did not.

Indians respect army officers, but they do not, nor can they, comparatively, respect the average Indian agent from civil ranks. They have found the agent grasping always, often cowardly and untruthful. You might as well hope to have your child improve under the instruction of a teacher it despises as expect an Indian to do any good with the average civilian agent to instruct and control him. But with the army officer this child of nature is changed: his whole bearing is better in his presence. The army officer is, like himself, a soldier, brave and ready to die. He has had it from his fathers, and he believes instinctively that an army officer never lies, by word or deed, nor turns his back in battle to his foes. The little order signed by Grover Cleveland and which means so much to the red man reads thus:

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, June 17, 1893.

Pursuant to a provision of chapter 164 of the laws of the first session of the Fifty-second Congress, passed on the 13th day of July, 1892, which reads as follows:

Provided, That from and after the passage of this act the President shall detail officers of the United States Army to act as Indian agents at all agencies where vacancies from any cause may hereafter occur, who, while acting as such agents, shall be under the orders and direction of the Secretary of the Interior, except at the agencies where, in the opinion of the President, the public service would be better promoted by the appointment of a civilian.

I hereby detail the following officers of the United States Army to act as Indian agents at the agencies set opposite their respective names: * * *

GROVER CLEVELAND.

This important document bore the names of twenty officers. Seven more were soon added, others later; so that now more than half the Indians in the Union are in full charge of the army, according to the official report sent to me from Washington. Pray heaven that there may be no returning from this noble course. It is the most important thing pending in the scales of futurity for Montana.

There are more Indians in, and in striking distance of, Montana to-day, within a half decade of the close of the nineteenth century, than ever before in all their history. I have no means of proving this exactly, for the forty or more reports sent me by the Indian Bureau are more than unreliable, made so by the cupidity of Indian agents who, as a rule, reported many more Indians than were in sight. An agent who could report 500 Indians with, in reality, but one-fifth that number, had a good margin for profits in taking for himself and friends the other four-fifths of supplies and ammunitions; besides, a truthful report might involve a disestablishment of his agency. It will be remembered that attempts to get at the facts by polling the Indians on the great Sioux Reservation only recently caused a rebellion among the Indians there who also had an interest in double and treble rations; and out of this, to some extent, sprung the trouble which ended in the death of Sitting Bull. Still, in the face of all these volumes of statistics, I take the responsibility of saying that there are more Indians in Montana and within easy reach of her bounds to-day than ever before, and they are increasing. Now that the army has entire charge of the Indians and all that concerns them we shall have exact reports year after year, and, barring war or pestilence, they will show an annual increase of numbers.

While a guest of Lord Lorne at Quebec, at the time when he was Governor-General of Canada, I, in the line of this work, found that this was true of the Indians of the British Dominion. Both the Princess Louise and his lordship, humane, observant and equipped with the best means possible of gaining information, assured me that the Indians, when civilization could reach them and keep down their disposition for tribal wars, were better in every way than ever before.*

Let me observe in passing that the British, unlike ourselves, always have a strong arm within reach of the Indians. As to which of the two is the more humane policy no good man will debate.

Having said that there are more Indians in Montana to-day than ever before, I will go a step further and say that there are probably as many on this continent as ever before, possibly more. True, Columbus is quoted by theorists on the Indian theme as having said that seven-eighths of the Indians had perished from the country within his own observation; but even if he ever said such a thing it could not have applied to a land he never saw.

* The word "Nez Perces" is French, and means "pierced noses," and is derived from the fact that, in ancient days, they often pierced the cartilage of the nose, and inserted pieces of bone, and other "jewelry," that might well be considered more ornamental than useful. This beastly practice appears to have been nearly extinct when Lewis and Clarke visited them, and I believe is entirely so now. These Indians are fast becoming civilized, and now farm to a considerable extent, a large proportion of their country being well adapted to agricultural pursuits.

Here is a practical refutation of the time-honored lie, that intercourse with the whites is an injury to Indians. Let any one take Lewis and Clarke's journal, written sixty years ago, when few of the western tribes had ever seen a white man, and follow them in their journey to the mouth of the Columbia, and he will find that the Indians along their route are, almost without exception, ten times better off to-day than they were then. They have more to eat, are infinitely better clothed, have more horses, do not live in such constant fear of their neighbors, and some of them are even beginning to believe that this is so.—Granville Stuart, in Montana As It Is, page 77.

The heart of Mexico city stands to-day where the Montezumas placed it; the cathedral and the president's palace stand where stood the temple to the Sun, reared out of its ruins; yet the cypress tree under which Cortez sat down to weep, out in the wilderness, after having been beaten from the city, stands to-day within the city stores and shops and saloons all around the iron case that protects it. This shows the city to be many times larger than Cortez found it, four-fifths of its inhabitants being Indians. This sort of thing obtains nearly all over Mexico, showing an increase in the number of Indians, despite the Spanish wars.

Go with me one step further. There never were any "mound-builders" on this continent, or mounds, such as theorists believed them to be. The plain fact is that when the waters began to recede down the great incline toward the gulf, leaving Iowa and other coral-covered sea beds with little islands peeping up here and there, from the mountains of the east to the mountains of the west, the nomad came by in his canoe, caught fish, fowl, game, made camps on favored spots where ice had left drift and stone above the water as age on age went by; and so the mounds grew. Pipes, pottery, bones, bits of copper, but everything except their dead scattered about, lost, buried in the debris of camp, through unnumbered thousands of seasons; and even after "the dry land appeared" the mounds grew for ages, from camps during inundations.

This is a new reading of these old pages of bone and stone and potter's field; but not mine.

I took it from the lips of Captain Eades, at his table in New Orleans, with Congressmen Breckenridge of Arkansas and Sumner of California also listening and believing. Later, on going down the delta of the great river where his work called him during one of the perennial inundations, he pointed out mound-builders at their work,—men with derrick and barrow building little islands back in the edge of the woods in some more favored place than the bank and levee on which to save their families and cattle; and these, believe me, outside of the ancient campers, whatever toppling of high-built theories may follow, are the only real mound-builders this continent ever knew. I concede that these campers on the slowly rising islands who hardened copper implements and fashioned pots of stone and clay, like the Toltecs or the Aztecs, or had commerce with nomads who did, were some degrees above the wild men once found in these vast valleys,—that they never, first or last, were numerous. Think of Daniel Boone and his brother spending a whole winter shooting buffalo in Kentucky at a time when to meet an Indian was to kill or be killed! Think of one of the two returning for their families and leaving the other alone for months on months, yet never being seen by savages till the incoming train of voyagers was discerned; then a battle, then the deadly Blue Licks, which gave a name to our language. Like the first chapters in the mighty story of Montana, the Indians were not there, in any numbers to speak of, when the white man came. He came after the white man, as coyotes come after you pitch camp, and they smell the frying bacon. No, the Indians were never numerous on this continent, never, perhaps, more numerous than now, certainly never so numerous in Montana as in these concluding years of the nineteenth century.

But for all his paucity of numbers he has, in the history of this continent, beaten us terribly four times. He beat the Irish general, Braddock, and Colonel George Washington of Virginia; he beat the Scotch general, St. Clair, with his Revolutionary veterans; he beat Daniel Boone with all his kindred and the flower of Kentucky at Blue Licks; and he beat Custer and destroyed the very core of his dashing Seventh.

This brings us back in line and ready for the further assertion that the great, final Indian fight has not yet been made. The danger is not with the 60,000 Indians of the South, who have, more or less, melted into their environments. It never was, even at the worst, so very great in the South. Observe that all these disasters took place far to the north, in line with Montana, and at the end of each disaster the nation cried out the words of Braddock as he moaned all the time that was left to him after his defeat: "Who would have thought it? Ah! Who would have thought it?" In those battles the Indian knew as much about the trade of war, to which he was born, as now, but he was not equipped for it; nor did he then know, as now, the address and divine valor of the white man. But he has everything now, everything.

I have quoted Howard, showing that the Indian will follow his "dreamer" straight into death and against all reason. He simply becomes insane from fasting and "ghost-dancing," and is fit only to fight only as a maniac fights. Look at Sitting Bull and his braves. The dreamer need not necessarily be of any particular tribe or place. All wild, or half wild, Indians will follow any dreamer. And so I again say that the great Indian fight has yet to be fought, unless extreme caution be at once inaugurated and constantly maintained for years; and the battle ground will be Montana. Not that they will ever again inundate the valleys as of old. They are now numbered and named and must keep their places; they are in the best possible hands,—best for the red man and the white; but let a dreamer arise to-morrow and what could a force of 1,600 of the line and four score officers do with thousands of armed and insane savages?* True we could throw in regiment on regiment; we could and would fight and destroy these imaginative creatures at a cost of a few thousand, maybe many thousand, soldiers; but to what good? In the name of humanity, humanity toward the Indian, if you please, give the Indian protection, protection from himself. This is a repetition of what I have before said. Bear with me: the case demands it.

There must be, I repeat it, an army sent into Montana and maintained there equal to the fighting force of the Indians. This is the only real kindness to the Indian. It is the only security for life, property and treasure of this republic. Ignore and despise what I entreat? Do it, and again will go up the wail, "Who would have thought it? Oh, who would have thought it?"

More than that, this army of at least 25,000 should be splendidly mounted, equipped and made up of armies who know the country as Indians know it, so far as possible, and they should be paid as generously at least as the mounted police of Canada. Montana has earned many times over the right to have this army; and, I repeat, it is not only humanity but the only true economy.

*1ST INDORSEMENT.

ADJUTANT GENERAL'S OFFICE, September 15, 1894.—Respectfully returned to the Acting Secretary of War. According to the latest returns received, there are in Montana 84 officers and 1,660 enlisted men.

THOMAS M. VINCENT,
Acting Adjutant General.

2D INDORSEMENT.

WAR DEPARTMENT, September 15, 1894.—Respectfully returned to Mr. Joaquin Miller, Oakland, California, inviting attention to the report of the Acting Adjutant General in the preceding indorsement.

By order of the Acting Secretary of War:

JOHN B. RANDOLPH,
Acting Chief Clerk.

I have spared mention of my last fight. It was long and disastrous. Captain Waymire, now Judge Waymire of San Francisco, commanded the regulars; I commanded the volunteers. We followed the ghost dancers for months and then fought them for days, leaving our dead unburied; but I only set out to say that during the long fight we heard Indians banter and challenge us in nearly every tongue my men had ever heard. General Howard, fighting over this same ground ten years later, tells us that he could not get reliable guides even from the Warm Springs. They had all gone to follow the "dreamer;" and these Warm Springs Indians have been civilized nearly half a century. I repeat again and again, they will do this in Montana. Look at Joseph; the more civilized he became the better he fought and followed his dreamer.

I know prophecy is not history. It will become so in this case if some respect is not paid to what I have gone out of my way and taken the risk of derision to say. I have even introduced much of my own experience with Indians to show that I know them as few do, and you are quite at liberty to laugh at that also and call it egotism if you like. With this prophecy and this appeal for Montana, which has done and endured so much and yet has had so little, I end this book. How far it falls below what I hoped to perform no one can know better than myself; for my theme was the most magnificent that man ever laid hand to. It has dazzled me and I have not done well. I can only say I have, in the brief time allowed me, done my best, and that the faults are not of the heart; and so, leaning heavily on those who have done the better parts of this work, I write

THE END.
